Dir. 14. §. 21. Direct. 14. Remember ſtill that the Time of this ſhort uncertain life is all that ever you ſhall have for your preparation for your endleſs life. When this is ſpent, whether well or ill, you ſhall have no more. God will not try thoſe with another life on earth, that have caſt away and miſpent this. There is no returning hither from the dead, to mend that which here you did amiſs. What good you will do muſt Now be done; And what Grace you would get, muſt Now be got. And what prepiration for Eternity you will ever make, muſt Now be made! 2 Cor. 6. 2. Behold now is the accepted time! Behold now is the day of ſalvation! Heb. 3. 7, 13. Wherefore, as the Holy Ghoſt ſaith, To day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts———But exhort one another daily while it is called to day, leſt any of you be hardened by the deceitfulneſs of ſin. Have you but one life here to live, and will you loſe that one, or any part of it? Your time is already meaſured out: The glaſs is turned upon you: Rev. 10. 5, 6. And the Angel———lifted up his hand to Heaven, and ſware by him that liveth for ever and ever,——that Time ſhould be no longer. Therefore whatever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might: for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wiſdom in the grave whither thou goeſt. Eccleſ. 9. 10. What then remaineth, but that the Time being ſhort, and the faſhion of theſe things paſſing away, you uſe the world as if you uſed it not, and redeem this Time for your eternal happineſs, 1 Cor. 7. 29.

See my Book called Now or Never.

Dir. 15. §. 22. Direct. 15. Remember ſtill that ſin and Satan will loſe no time: and therefore it concerneth you to loſe none: The Devil your adverſary goeth about like a roaring Lyon, ſeeking whom he may devour: 1 Pet. 5.8. Be ſober therefore and viligant to reſiſt him, V. 7, 9. If he be buſie and you be idle, if he be at work in ſpreading his Nets, and laying his ſnares for you, and you be at play and do not mind him, it is eaſie to fore-tell you what will be the iſſue. If your enemies be fighting while you ſit ſtill or ſleep, it is eaſie to prognoſticate who will have the Victory. The weeds of corruption are continually growing: ſin like a conſtant ſpring is ſtill running: The world is ſtill enticing; and the fleſh is ſtill inclining to its prohibited delights: None of theſe Enemies will make a Truce, or a Ceſſation with you, to ſit as long as you ſit ſtill! So far are they from forbearing you, while you are idle, or gratifying the fleſh, that even this is the fruit and evidence of their induſtry and ſucceſs. Loſe no Time then, and admit of no interruptions of your work, till you can perſwade your enemies to do the like.

§. 23. Direct. 16. Conſider what a ſenſeleſs contradiction it is of you, to overlove your Lives, and yet to caſt away your Time. What is your Time but the duration of your lives? You are loth to dye, and loth your Time ſhould be at an end: and yet you can as prodigally caſt it away, as if you were weary of it, or longed to be rid of it. Is it only the laſt hours, that you are loth to loſe? Are not the middle parts as precious, and to be ſpared and improved? Or is it only to have Time, and not to uſe it, that you deſire? No means is good for any thing, but to further the attainment of the end: It is not good to you, if it do you no good. To have food or rayment without any uſe of them, is as bad as not to have them. If you ſaw a man tremble with fear leſt his purſe be taken from him, and yet take out his mony himſelf, and caſt it away, or give it all for a ſtraw or feather, what would you think of that mans wit? And do not you do the like and worſe, when you are afraid leſt Death ſhould end your Time, and yet you your ſelves will idle it away, and play it away, and give it for a little worldly pelf? But I know how it is with you. It is for the preſent pleaſure of the fleſh, and for the ſweetneſs of life it ſelf, that you value life, and are ſo loth to die, and not for any higher ends: but this is to be bruitiſh, and to unman your ſelves, and ſimply to vilifie your lives, while you idolize them: Such mad contradictions ſin infers. You make your Life your ultimate end, and deſire to Live but for Life it ſelf, or the pleaſures of life, and ſo you make it inſtead of God and Heaven, which ſhould be intended as your proper end: And yet while you refer it not to theſe higher ends, and uſe it but for the preſent pleaſure; you vilifie your ſelves and it, as if Man did differ from a Dog or other Brute, but in ſome poor degree of preſent pleaſure. Dir. 16.

§. 24. Direct. 17. Conſider that in your loſs of Time, you loſe all the mercies of that time. For Time is pregnant with great unvaluable mercies: It is the Cabinet that containeth the Jewels: If you throw away the purſe, you throw away the mony that is in it: O what might you get in thoſe precious hours which you caſt away? How much better a treaſure than mony might you win? How much ſweeter a pleaſure than all your Games and Sports might you enjoy? You might be ſolliciting God for life eternal! You might be uſing and increaſing grace! You might be viewing by faith, the bleſſed place and company in which you may abide for ever. All this and more, you are loſing while you are loſing time. You chooſe as a pleaſure that heavy curſe, Lev. 26. 20. Your ſtrength ſhall be ſpent in vain. Why do you not alſo take it for a pleaſure, to caſt away your gold, or health? I tell you, a very little time, is worth a great deal of Gold and Silver. You caſt away a more precious commodity. Dir. 17.

§. 25. Direct. 18. Think ſeriouſly how Chriſt and his Apoſtles, and holieſt ſervants in all ages ſpent their Time. They ſpent it in praying, and preaching, and holy conference, and in doing good, and in the works of their outward callings in ſubſerviency to theſe: But not in Cards, or Dice, or Dancing, or Stage-plays, Dir. 18.

plays, or pampering the flesh, nor in the pursuit of the profits and honours of the world. I read where Christ was all night in praying, Luke 6. 12. but not where he spent an hour in playing. I know you will say, that you expect not to reach their degree of holiness. But let me remember you, that he is not sincere that desireth not to be perfect. And that he is graceless, who wilfully keepeth any beloved sin, which he had not rather be delivered from; and that wilfully refuseth any duty, and had not rather perform it as he ought. And that you are the more needy, tho' Christ, and his Apostles, and Servants, were the more Holy! And that the poor have more need to beg, and work, and be sparing of what they have, than the rich: And therefore if Christ and his holiest servants, were sparing of their time, and spent it in works of holiness and obedience, have not you greater need to do so than they? Have not you more need to pray and learn Gods Word, and prepare for death, than Christ and his Apostles? Are you not more behind hand, as having lost much time? Let your wants instruct you.

Dir. 19. §. 26. Direct. 19. Forget not that a spending time may come, when you will think all too little, that now you can provide, by the most diligent redeeming of your time. If a Garrison expect a Siege, so sharp and long as will spend up their provisions, they will prepare accordingly that they perish not by famine. Temptations may be stronger, and then you will find that you should now have gathered strength to overcome them; and have bestirred you in the getting day, that you might be able to stand in the evil day, Eph. 6. 13. It is those that now loyter and lose their time, and gather not knowledge and strength of grace, who fall in tryal: when sufferings for righteousness sake, shall be as a siege to you, and when poverty, wrongs, provocations, sickness and the face of death shall be as a siege to you, then you will find all your faith, and hope, and love and comfort to be too little; and then you will wish that you had now bestir'd you, and laid in better provision, and laid up a good foundation or treasure in store for the time to come. 1 Tim. 6. 19.

Dir. 20. §. 27. Direct. 20. Lastly, forget not how Time is esteemed by the damned, whose time and hope is gone for ever; and how thou wilt value it thy self if thou sin thy soul into that woful state. What thinkest thou would those miserable creatures now give (if they had it) but for one days time, upon those terms of mercy which thou dost now enjoy it? Would they sleep it away, or be at their games and merriments, while God is offering them Christ and Grace? Dost thou think they set not a higher price on Time and mercy, than sinners upon earth? Doth it not tear their very hearts for ever, to think how madly they consumed their lives? and wasted the only Time that was given them to prepare for their salvation? Do those in Hell now think them wise, that are idling or playing away their time on earth? O no! their feeling and experience sufficiently confuteth all that Time-wasters now plead for their sottish prodigallity. I do not believe that thou canst at once believe the Word of God, concerning the state of damned souls, and yet believe that thy idle, and vain expence of Time, would not vex thy conscience, and make thee even rage against thy self, if ever sin should bring thee thither! O then thou wouldst see, that thou hadst greater matters to have spent thy time in, and that it deserved a higher estimation and improvment. O man! beseech the Lord to prevent such a conviction, and to give thee a heart to prize thy time before it is gone; and to know the worth of it, before thou know the want of it.

Tit. 2. Directions Contemplative for Redeeming Opportunity.

See the many aggravations of sinful Delay in my Directions for found Conversion.

§. 28. OPportunity or Season is the flower of Time! All Time is precious; but the season is most precious: The present Time is the season to works of present necessity: And for others, they have all their particular seasons, which must not be let slipt.

Direct. 1. Remember that it is the great difference between the happy Saint and the unhappy world, that one is wise in time, and the other is wise too late: The godly know while knowledge will do good: The wicked know when knowledge will but torment them. All those that you see now so exceedingly contrary in their judgement to the godly, will be of the very same opinion shortly, when it will do them no good. Bear with their difference and contradiction; for it will be but a very little while. There is not one man that now is the furious enemy of holiness, but will confess ere long, that Holiness was best: Do they now despise it as tedious fantastical hypocrisie? They will shortly know that it was but the cure of a distracted mind, and the necessary duty to God, which Religion and right reason do command: Do they now say of sin, What harm is in it? They will shortly know that it is the poyson of the soul, and worse than any misery or death. They will think more highly of the worth of Christ, of the necessity of all possible diligence for our souls, of the preciousness of Time, of the wisdom of the Godly, of the excellencies of Heaven, and of the Word of God and all holy Means, than any of those do that are now reproached by them, for being of this mind. But what the better will they be for this? No more than Adam for knowing good and evil. No more than it will profit a man when he is dead, to know of what disease he dyed. No more than it will profit a man to know what is poyson, when he hath taken it and is past remedy. The Thief will be wise at the Gallows; and the Spend-thrift prodigal when all is gone. But they that will be safe and happy, must be wise in Time. The godly know the worth of Heaven before it is lost: and the misery of damnation, before they feel it; and the necessity of a Saviour while he is willing to be a Saviour unto them; and the evil of sin before it hath undone them; and the preciousness of Time before it is gone; and the worth of mercy while mercy may be had; and the need of praying, while praying may prevail: They sleep not till the door is shut, and then knock and cry, Lord open to us, as the foolish ones, Mat. 25. They are not like the miserable world, that will not believe, till they come where Devils believe and tremble; nor Repent till torment force them to repent. As ever you would escape the dear-bought experience of fools, be wise in time; and leave not Conscience to answer all your cries, and moans, and fruitless wishes, with this doleful peal, Too late! Too late! Do but know now by an effectual faith, what wicked men will know by feeling and experience when it is too late, and you shall not perish. Do but live now as those enemies of Holiness will wish that they had liv'd when it is too late, and you will be happy. Now God may be found: Seek the Lord while he may be found, and call upon him while he is near: Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him, and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon, Isa. 55. 6, 7. Read but the doleful lamentation of Christ over Jerusalem, Luke 19. 41, 42. and then bethink you, what it is to neglect the season of mercy and salvation: He beheld the City and wept over it, saying, If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! But now they are hidden from thine eyes!

Dir. 1.

§. 29. Direct. 2. Remember that the neglecting of the season is the frustrating and destroying of the work. When the season is past, the work cannot be done. If you sow not in the time of sowing, it will be in vain at another time: If you reap not, and gather not in harvest, it will be too late in Winter to hope for fruit. If you stay till the Tide is gone, or take not the Wind that fits your turn, it may be in vain to attempt your Voyage. All works cannot be done at all times: Christ himself saith, I must work while it is day: the night cometh when none can work, John 9.4. Say not then, The next day may serve the turn: The next day is for another work: and you must do both.

Dir. 3. §. 30. Direct. 3. Consider that if the work should not be impossible, yet it will be difficult, out of season; when in its season it might be done with ease. How easily may you swim with the Tide? and sail with the Wind? and form the Iron if you hammer it while it is hot? How easily may many a disease be cured, if it be taken in time, which afterwards is uncurable? How easily may you bend a tender Twig, and pluck up a Plant, which will neither be pluckt up nor bended when it is grown up to be a Tree? When you complain of difficulties in Religion, bethink you whether your loss of the fittest season, and acquainting your selves no sooner with God, be not the cause?

Dir. 4. §. 31. Direct. 4. Consider that your work out of season is not so good or acceptable, if you could do it. Numb. 9. 2, 3, 7, 13. Every thing is beautiful in its season, Eccles. 3. 11. Exod. 13. 10. To speak a word in season to the weary is the skill of the faithful messengers of peace: Isa. 50. 4. When out of season good may be turned into evil. Who will thank you for giving Physick, or food, or clothing to the dead? Or pitying the poor when it is too late? In Time all this may be accepted.

Dir. 5. §. 32. Direct. 5. Remember that if thou omit the season, thou art left to uncertainties both for time, and means, and grace. Lose this Time, and for ought thou knowest, thou losest all. Or if thou have Time, it may be curst with barrenness, and never fruit may more grow on it: Preachers may be taken from thee: And gracious company may be taken from thee. Helps and means may be turned into hinderances and oppositon and strong temptations: And then you will find what it was to neglect the season! Or if you have the continuance of all helps and means, how know you that God will set in by his grace, and bless them to you, and move your hearts? He may resolve that if you resist him now, his Spirit shall strive with you no more? If while it is called to day, you will harden your hearts, he may resolve to leave you to the hardness of Pharaoh, and to get himself a name upon you, and use you as vessels of wrath prepared by your neglect and obstinacy for destruction.

Dir. 6. §. 33. Direct. 6. Bethink you how all the Creatures keep their proper seasons, in the service Deut. 28. 12. which God hath appointed them for you. The Jer 5. 24. Sun riseth and setteth in its season, and keepeth Jer. 33. 20. its diary and annual course; and misseth not a minute. So do the Cœlestial motions. You have day and night, and seed-time and harvest, Summer and Winter, Spring and Fall, and all exactly in their seasons: Jer. 8. 7. Yea the Stork in the Heavens knoweth her appointed time, and the Turtle and the Crane, and the Swallow observe the time of their coming: But my people know not the judgement of the Lord. Shall only man neglect his season?

Dir. 7. §. 34. Direct. 7. Consider, how you know and observe the season for your worldly labours, and should you not much more do so in greater things? You will not Plow when you should Reap; nor do the work of the Summer in the Winter: You will not lye in bed all day, and go about your business in the night. You will be inquisitive that you may be skilful in the seasons for your benefit or safety in the world: and should you not much more be so for a better world? Matth. 16. 3. O ye hypocrites! ye can discern the face of the skie! Luke 20. 10. but can ye not discern the signs of the times? As at Harvest you look for the fruit of your Land, so doth God in season expect fruit from you, Mark 12. 2. The godly are like a Tree that's planted by the Rivers side, which bringeth forth its fruit in season, Psal. 1. 3. Shall worldlings know their season, and shall not we?

§. 35. Direct. 8. Consider how vigilant the wicked are to know and take their season to do evil! And how much more should we be so in doing good? Seducers will take the opportunity to deceive. The Thief and the Adulterer will take the season of secresie and darkness: The Ambitious and Covetous will take the season for profit and preferment: The Malicious watch their seasons of revenge: And have we not more need and more encouragement than they? Is it Time for them to be building their Hag. 1, 2, 3. own houses, and growing great by covetousness and oppression, and is it not Time for you to be honouring God, and providing for your endless life? They cannot sleep unless they do Evil, Prov. 4. 16. and can you sleep securely while your Time passeth away and your work is undone? Dir. 8.

§. 36. Direct. 9. Remember that the Devil watcheth the season of Temptation to destroy you: He prevaileth much by taking the time: when he seeth you disarmed, forgetting God, in secure prosperity, fittest to hearken to his temptations: The same temptations out of season might not prevail. And will you let your enemy out-do you? Dir. 9.

§. 37. Direct. 10. Consider how earnest you are with God in your necessities and distress, not only to relieve and help you, but to do it speedily and in season. You would rather have him prevent the season, than to let it pass. You are impatient till deliverance come, and can hardly stay the time till it be ripe. When you are in pain and sickness, you would be delivered speedily: you are ready to cry, How long Lord, how long! Pfal. 70. 5. And as David, Psal. 102. 13. The time, yea the set time is come: Psal. 40. 17. Make no longer tarrying O my God! It would not satisfie you if God should say, I will ease you of your pain the next year. Why then should you neglect the Time of duty, and use so many delays with God? He giveth you all your mercies in their season? why then do you not in season, give up your selves to his love and service? when you have his promise, that you shall reap in due season if you do not faint, Gal. 6. 9. Dir. 10. 1 Sam. 13. 8, 9. Lev. 26. 4. Jer. 5. 24.

Tit. 3. Directions Practical for Redeeming Time.

§. 38. Direct. 1. THE first point in the art of Redeeming Time, is, to dispatch first with greatest care and diligence, the greatest works of absolute necessity, which must be done, or else we are undone for ever. First see that the great work of a sound conversion or sanctification be certainly wrought within you: Make sure of your saving interest in Christ: get proof of your adoption and peace with God, and right to everlasting life: Be able to prove to your Consciences from the word of God, and from your Regenerate Heavenly hearts and lives, that your souls are justified and safe; and may comfortably receive the news of death, when ever it shall be sent to call you hence: And then, when you have done but so much of your work, you will incur no such loss of Time, as will prove Dir. 1.

prove the loss of your souls or happiness. Though still there is much more work to do, for your selves and others, yet when this much is soundly done, you have secured the main. If you lose the Time in which you should be renewed by the spirit of Christ, and in which you should lay up your treasure in Heaven, you are lost for ever. Be sure therefore that you look first to this: And then if you lose but the Time in which you might have grown rich or got preferment; your loss is tolerable; you know the worst of it: You may see to the end of it. Yea, if you lose the Time in which you should increase in Holiness, and edifie others, the loss is grievous; but yet it will not lose you Heaven: Therefore as Solomon directeth the Husbandman, Prov. 24. 27. Prepare thy work without and make it fit for thy self in the field; and afterwards build thy house: So I advise you, to see first that the necessary work be done: when that's done, and well done, you may go quietly and cheerfully about the rest: seek first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness; O what a deal is done when this is done?

Dir. 2. §. 39. Direct. 2. Learn to understand well the degrees of duties, which is the greater and which the less, that when two seem to require your Time at once, you may know which of them to prefer. Not only to know which is simply and in it self the greatest, but which is the greatest for you, and at that season, and as considered in all the circumstances. A great part of the art of Redeeming Time, consisteth in the wise discerning and performing of this; to give precedency to the greatest duty. He loseth his time, who is getting a penny when he might get a pound, who is visiting his Neighbour, when he should be attending his Prince. Who is weeding his Garden, when he should be quenching a fire in his house, tho' he be doing that which in it self is good. So is he losing his time that is preferring his body before his soul; or man before God; or indifferent things before necessary; or private duties before publick; or less edifying before the more edifying; or Sacrifice before necessary mercy. The order of good works I have shewed you before, Chap. 3. Dir. 10. which you may peruse.

Dir. 3. §. 40. Direct. 3. Be acquainted with the season of every duty, and the duty of each season; and take them in their Time. And thus one duty will help on another: whereas misplacing them and disordering them, sets them one against another, and takes up your time with distracting difficulties, and loseth you in confusion. As he that takes the morning hour for prayer, or the fittest vacant hour, shall do it quietly, without the disturbance of his other affairs; when if the season be omitted, you shall scarce at all perform it, or almost as ill as if you did it not at all: so is it in point of Conscience, reproof, reading, hearing, meditating and every duty: A wise and well skilled Christian should bring his matters into such order, that every ordinary duty should know his place, and all should be as the links of one chain which draw on one another; or as the parts of a Clock or other Engine, which must be all conjunct, and each right placed: A workman that hath all his Tools on a heap or out of place, spends much of the day in which he should be working in looking his Tools: When he that knoweth the place of every one, can presently take it, and lose no time. If my Books be thrown together on a heap, I may spend half the day in looking for them when I should use them: but if they be set in order I know their places, it spares me that time. So is it in the right Timing of our duties.

Dir. 4. §. 41. Direct. 4. Live continually as under the Government of God; and keep Conscience tender, and in the performance of its office; and always be ready to render an account to God and Conscience of what you do. If you live as under the Government of God, you will be still doing his work; you will be remembring his judgment; you will be trying your work whether it be such as he approveth: This will keep you from all time-wasting vanities. If you keep Conscience tender, it will presently check and reprehend you for your sin: and when you lose but a minute of Time, it will tell you of the loss: whereas a seared Conscience is past feeling, and will give you over to lasciviousness, Ephes. 4. 19. 1 Tim. 4 2. and will make but a jest at the loss of time; or at least will not effectually tell you either of the sin or loss: If you keep Conscience to its office, it will ask you frequently, what you are doing? and try your works: It will take account of Time when it is spent, and ask you, what have you been doing? and how you have spent every day and hour: And (as Seneca could say) He will be the more careful what he doth, and how he spends the day, who looks to be called to a reckoning for it every night. This will make the foreseen day of Judgement have such a continual awe upon you, as if you were presently going to it; while conscience, with respect to it, is continually fore judging you. Whereas they that have silenced or discarded Conscience, are like School-boys that bolt their Master out of doors, who do it with a design to spend the time in play, which they should have spent in learning: But the after-reckoning pays for all.

§. 42. Here for the further Direction of your Consciences, I shall lay you down a few Rules, for the right spending of your Time. 1. Spend it in nothing (as a deliberate moral act) which is not truly directly or remotely an act of obedience to some Law of God: (of meer natural acts, which are no objects of moral choice, I speak not.) 2. Spend it in nothing which you know must be Repented of. 3. Spend it in nothing which you dare not, or may not warrantably pray for a blessing on from God. 4. Spend it in nothing which you would not review at the hour of death, by an awakened well-informed mind. 5. Spend it in nothing which you would not hear of in the day of judgment. 6. Spend it in nothing which you cannot safely and comfortably be found doing, if death should surprize you in the act. 7. Spend it in nothing which flesh-pleasing perswadeth you to, against your Consciences, or with a secret grudge or doubting of your Consciences. 8. Spend it in nothing which hath not some tendency, directly or remotely to your ultimate end, the pleasing of God, and enjoying him in Love for ever. 9. Spend it in nothing which tendeth to do more hurt than good: that would do a great hurt to your self or others, under pretence of doing some little good, which perhaps may better be done another way. 10. Lastly, spend it in nothing which is but a smaller good, when a greater should be done.

Rules to know what Time must be spent in.

§. 43. Direct. 5. Do your best to settle your selves where there are the greatest helps and smallest hinderances to the Redeeming of your Time: And labour more to accommodate your habitation, condition, and Employments to the great ends of your life and time, than to your worldly honour, ease or wealth. Live where is best trading for the soul: You may get more by Gods ordinary blessing in one year, in a godly family, or in fruitful company, and under an able godly Minister, than in many years in a barren soil, among the ignorant, dead-hearted, or prophane, where we must say as David, I held my peace even from good, while the wicked is before me — Psal. 39. 1, 2. And when we must do all the good we do thro' much opposition; and meet with great disadvantages and difficulties, which may quickly stop such dull and backward hearts as ours: If you will prefer your profit before your souls in the choice of your condition, and will plunge your selves into distracting business and company, your Time will run in a wrong unprofitable chanel.

Dir. 5.

Dir. 6. §. 44. Direct. 6. Contrive before hand with the beſt of your skill for the preventing of Impediments, and for the moſt ſucceſsful performance of your work. If you leave all to the very time of doing, you will have many hindrances riſe before you, and make you loſe your Time, which prudent forecaſt might have prevented. As for the improving of the Lords Day, if you do not beforehand ſo order your buſineſs, that all things may give place to holy duties, you will meet with ſo many diſturbances and temptations, as will loſe you much of your Time and benefit: ſo for family duties, and ſecret duties; and meditation and ſtudies, and the works of your callings; If you do not forecaſt what hinderance is like to meet you, that you may prevent it before the time, you muſt loſe much Time, and ſuffer much diſappointment.

Dir. 7. § 45. Direct. 7. Endure patiently ſome ſmaller inconvenience and loſs, for the avoiding of greater, and for the Redeeming of Time for greater duties; and let little things be reſolutely caſt out of your way, when they would draw out your Time by inſenſible degrees. The Devil would cunningly ſteal that from you by drops, which he cannot get you to caſt away profuſely at once: He that will not ſpend prodigally by the pounds, may run out by not regarding pence. You ſhall have the pretences of decency and ſeemlineſs, and civility, and good manners, and avoiding offence, and cenſure, and of ſome neceſſity too, to draw out your precious Time from you by little and little; and if you are ſo eaſie as to yield, it will almoſt all be waſted by this Temptation. As if you be Miniſters of Chriſt, whoſe time muſt be ſpent in your ſtudies and pulpits, and in conference with your People, and viſiting them and watching over them, and it is your daily groans, that Time is ſhort and work is long, and that you are forced to omit ſo many needful ſtudies, and paſs by ſo many needy ſouls, for want of time; yet if you look not well about you, and will not bear ſome cenſure and offence, you ſhall loſe even the reſt of the Time, which now you do improve. Your friends about you will be tempting and telling you, O this Friend muſt needs be viſited, and the other friend muſt be civilly treated; you muſt not ſhake them off ſo quickly: They look for more of your time and company: you are much obliged to them: they will ſay you are uncivil and moroſe; ſuch a ſcholar comes to be acquainted with you; and he will take it ill; and miſrepreſent you to others, if you allow him not time for ſome familiar Diſcourſe. It's one that never was with you before; and never took up any of your time: (And ſo ſaith the next and the next as well as he.) Such a one viſited you, and you muſt needs viſit him again. There is this journey or that which muſt needs be gone: and this buſineſs and that which muſt needs be done: Yea ones very family-occaſions will ſteal away all his time if he watch not narrowly: we ſhall have this ſervant to talk to, and the other to hear, and our relations to reſpect, and abundance of little things to mind, ſo little as not to be named by themſelves, about meat and drink, and cloaths and dreſſing, and houſe, and goods, and ſervants, and work, and tradeſmen and meſſengers, and marketing, and payments, and cattle, and a hundred things not to be reckoned up, that will every one take up a little of your time, and theſe littles ſet together will be all. As the covetous Uſurer that to purchaſe a place of Honour, agreed for a month, to give a penny to every one that asked him: which being quickly noiſed abroad in the City, there came ſo many for their pence, as took all that he had, and made him quit his place of Honour, becauſe he had nothing left to maintain it. So perhaps you are an eminent much valued Miniſter; and this draweth upon you ſuch a multitude of acquaintance, every one expecting a little of your time, that among them all, they leave you almoſt none for your ſtudies, whereby not only your Conſcience is wounded, but your parts are quenched, and your work is ſtarved and poorly done, and ſo your admirers themſelves begin to ſet as light by you as by others, for that which is the Effect of their own importunity. And as in our yearly expences of our money, there goeth near as much in little matters not to be named by themſelves, and incidental unexpected charges, of which no account can be given beforehand, as doth in food and rayment, and the ordinary charges which we foreknow and reckon upon; juſt ſo it will be with your precious Time, if you be not very thrifty and reſolute, and look not well to it: you will have ſuch abundance of little matters, ſcarce fit to be named, which will every one require a little, and one begin where the other endeth, that you will find in the Review, when time is gone, that Satan was too cunning for you, and cheated you by drawing you into ſeeming neceſſities. This is the grand Reaſon why Marriage and Houſekeeping are ſo greatly inconvenient to a Paſtor of the Church, that can avoid them, becauſe they bring upon him ſuch abundance of theſe little diverſions which cannot be foreſeen. In this caſe a conſcionable man (in what calling ſoever) muſt be reſolute: And when he hath endeavoured with Reaſon to ſatisfie expectants, and put by diverſions, if that will not ſerve, he muſt neglect them, and caſt them off, and break away, tho' he loſe by it in his Eſtate, or his repute, or his peace it ſelf, and tho' he be cenſured for it to be imprudent, uncivil, moroſe, or neglective of his friends: God muſt be pleaſed who ever be diſpleaſed: we muſt ſatisfy our minds with his alone Approbation, inſtead of all: Time muſt be ſpared whatever be loſt or waſted: and the Great things muſt be done whatever become of the leſs: Though where both may be done, and the leſſer hinder not the greater, and rob us not of Time from neceſſary things, there we muſt have a care of both.

Dir. 8. §. 46. Direct. 8. Labour to go always furniſhed and well provided for the Performance of every duty which may occur. As he that will not loſe his Time in Preaching, muſt be well provided; ſo he that will not loſe his time in Solitarineſs muſt be always furniſhed with matter for profitable meditation: And he that would redeem his Time in company, muſt be always furniſhed with matter for profitable diſcourſe: He that is full, will be ready to pour out to others; and not be ſilent and loſe his Time for want of matter, or skill, or zeal: for in all theſe three your Proviſion doth conſiſt. An ignorant empty perſon wants matter for his thoughts and words: An Imprudent perſon wants skill, to uſe it. A careleſs cold indifferent perſon, wants life to ſet his faculties on motion; and oil and poiſe to ſet the wheels of his Soul and Body a going. Bethink you in the morning what company you are like to meet, and what occaſions of duty you are like to have; and provide your ſelves accordingly before you go, with matter and reſolution. Beſides the general preparative of habitual knowledge, charity and zeal, which is the chief; you ſhould alſo have your particular preparations for the duties of each day: A workman that is ſtrong and healthful, and hath all his tools in readineſs and order, will do more in a day, than a ſick man, or one that wanteth tools, or keeps them dull and unfit for uſe, will do in many. Pſalm 37. 30, 31. The Mouth of the Righteous ſpeaketh wiſdom, and his tongue talketh of Judgment: (And no wonder, when) The Law of his God is in his Heart: none of his ſteps ſhall ſlide. Out of the abundance of the Heart the mouth ſpeaketh: A good man out of the good Treaſure of his heart, bring- bringeth forth good things: Matth. 12. 35. Every Scribe which is inſtructed to the Kingdom of Heaven, is like a man that is an houſholder that bringeth forth out of his Treaſure things new and old. Matth. 13. 52.

Dir. 8. §. 47. Direct. 8. Promiſe not long life to your ſelves, but live as thoſe that are always uncertain of another day, and certain to be ſhortly gone from hence. The groundleſs expectation of long life, is a very great hindrance to the redeeming of our time. Men will ſpend prodigally out of a full purſe, who would be ſparing if they knew they had but a little, or were like to come to want themſelves. Young people and healthful People are under the greateſt temptation to the loſs of time. They are apt to think that they have time enough before them, and that though it's poſſible that they may die quickly, yet it is more likely that they ſhall live long; and ſo putting the day of death far from them, they want all thoſe awakenings, which the face of death doth bring to them that ſtill expect it: and therefore want the wiſdom, zeal and diligence which is neceſſary to the Redemption of their time. Pray therefore as Pſalm 90. 12. So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts to wiſdom. Dream not of reſt and plenty for many years, when you have no promiſe to live till the next morning. Luke 12. 19, 20. When they perceive death is at hand, and time is near an end, almoſt all men ſeem highly to eſteem of time, and promiſe to ſpend it better if God would but try them once again. Do you therefore continually perceive that death is even at hand, and time near an end, and then it will make you continually more wiſe, than death maketh the moſt; and to redeem your time as others purpoſe to Redeem it when it is too late.

Dir. 9. §. 48. Direct. 9. Sanctifie all to God that you have and do, and let Holineſs to the Lord, be written upon all: whether you eat or drink let it be intended and ordered ultimately to his glory: Make all your civil relations, poſſeſſions, and employments, thus Holy; deſigning them to the ſervice and pleaſing of God, and to the everlaſting good of your ſelves or others, and mixing holy meditation and prayer with them all in ſeaſon: And thus we are bid, to pray continually, and in all things give thanks. 1 Theſ. 5. 17, 18. And in all things to make known our requeſts to God, in prayer, ſupplication and giving of thanks. Phil. 4. 6. And all things are ſanctified by the word and prayer: This ſacred Alchymie, that turneth all our converſation, and Poſſeſſions and Actions into Holy, is an excellent part of the art of Redeeming Time.

Dir. 10. §. 49. Direct. 10. Laſtly, be acquainted with the great Thieves that rob men of their Time, and with the Devils methods in enticing them to loſe it, and live in continual watchfulneſs againſt them. It is a more neceſſary thriftineſs to be ſparing and ſaving of your time, than of your Money. It more concerneth you to keep a continual watch, againſt the things which would rob you of your time, than againſt thoſe Thieves that would break your houſe, and rob you by the high way. Thoſe Perſons that would tempt you to the loſs of time, are to be taken as your Enemies, and avoided. I ſhall here recite the names of theſe Thieves, and Time-waſters, that you may deteſt them, and ſave your Time and ſouls from their deceits.

Tit. 4. The Thieves or Time-Waſters to be watchfully avoided.

Thief 1. §. 50. Th. 1. ONe of the greateſt Time waſting ſins is idleneſs, or ſloth. The ſlothful ſee their time paſs away, and their Work undone, and can hear of the neceſſity of Redeeming it, and yet they have not hearts to ſtir: When they are convinced that duty muſt be done, they are ſtill delaying, and putting it off from day to day, and ſaying ſtill, I will do it to morrow or hereafter. To morrow is ſtill the ſluggards working day; and to day is his idle day. He ſpendeth his Time in fruitleſs wiſhes, He layeth in bed, or ſitteth idly, and wiſheth, Would this were labouring: he teaſteth his fleſh, and wiſheth that this were faſting: He followeth his Sports and Pleaſures, and wiſheth that this were prayer, and a mortified life. He lets his heart run after luſt, or pride, or covetouſneſs, and wiſheth that this were heavenly mindedneſs, and a laying up a treaſure above. Thus the ſoul of the ſluggard deſireth and hath nothing: but the ſoul of the diligent ſhall be made fat, Prov. 13. 4. Prov. 21. 25. The deſire of the ſlothful killeth him; for his hands refuſe to labour. Every little oppoſition or difficulty will put him by a duty: Prov. 20. 4. The ſluggard will not plow by reaſon of the cold: therefore ſhall he beg in harveſt, and have nothing: Prov. 22. 13. The ſlothful man ſaith, There is a Lion without: I ſhall be ſlain in the ſtreets. Prov. 26. 14, 15, 16. As the door turneth upon his hinges, ſo doth the ſlothful upon his bed: The ſlothful hideth his hand in his boſom: it grieveth him to bring it again to his mouth. And at laſt his ſloth depraves his reaſon, and bribeth it to plead the cauſe of his negligence: The ſluggard is wiſer in his own conceit, than ſeven men that can render a reaſon: Time will ſlide on, and duty will be undone, and your ſouls undone, if impious ſlothfulneſs be predominant. Prov. 15. 19. The way of the ſlothful man is as a hedge of thorns; but the way of the righteous is made plain. You ſeem ſtil to go thro' ſo many difficulties, that you will never make a ſucceſsful journey of it. Yea, when he is in duty, the ſlothful is ſtill loſing Time. He prayeth as if he prayed not, and laboureth as if he laboured not; as if the fruit of holineſs paſt away, as haſtily as worldly pleaſures. He is as ſlow as a Snail; and rids ſo little ground, and doth ſo little work, and ſo poorly reſiſteth oppoſition, that he makes little of it, and all is but next to ſitting ſtill and doing nothing. It is a ſad thing that men ſhould not only loſe their time in ſinful pleaſures; but they muſt loſe it alſo in reading, and hearing, and praying, by doing all in a heartleſs drowſineſs! Thus he alſo that is ſlothful in his Work, is brother to him that is a great waſter, Prov. 18. 9. If he begin in the Spirit, and for a ſpurt ſeem to be earneſt, he flags, and tireth, and endeth in the fleſh: Prov. 12. 27. The ſlothful roſteth not that which he took in hunting: but the Subſtance of a diligent man is precious. If he ſee and confeſs a vice, he hath not a heart to riſe againſt it, and reſolutely reſiſt it, and uſe the means by which it muſt be overcome. Prov. 24. 30, 31, 32, 33, 34. I went by the field of the ſlothful, and by the Vineyard of the man void of underſtanding; and lo it was all grown over with thorns, and Nettles had covered the face thereof, and the ſtone wall thereof was broken down. Then I ſaw and conſidered it well, I looked upon it and received inſtruction. Yet a little ſleep, a little ſlumber, a little folding of the hands to ſleep. So ſhall thy Poverty come as one that travelleth, and thy want as an armed man. Shake off then this unmanly ſluggiſhneſs: Remember that you run for the immortal Crown: and therefore ſee that you loſe no time, and look not at the things that are behind; that is, do not caſt an eye, or lend an ear to any perſon or thing that would call you back or ſtop you: Heaven is before you, Judg. 18. 9. We have ſeen the Land, and behold it is very good: and are ye ſtill? be not ſlothful to go and to enter, and poſſeſs the Land, (as the five Dantie Spies ſaid to their brethren.) Abhor a ſluggiſh habit of mind:

Phil. 3. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15.

mind: Go cheerfully about what you have to do: and do it diligently, and with your might: Even about your lawful worldly buſineſs, it is a Time-waſting ſin to be ſlothful: If you are ſervants or Labourers you rob your Maſters and thoſe that hire you; who hired you to work and not to be idle. Whatever you are, you rob God of your ſervice, and your ſelves of your precious Time, and all that you might get therein. It's they that are lazy in their Callings, that can find no time for holy duties: Ply your Buſineſs the reſt of the day, and you may the better redeem ſome time for prayer and reading Scripture. Work hard on the Week days, and you may the better ſpend the Lords Day entirely for your ſouls. Idle Perſons (ſervants or others) do caſt themſelves behind hand in their work, and then ſay they have no time to pray or read the Scripture: Sloth robbeth Multitudes of a great part of their Lives: Prov. 19. 15. Slothfulneſs caſteth into a deep ſleep: and an idle Soul ſhall ſuffer hunger. You cannot ſay, No Man hath hired you, when you are ask'd, Why ſtand you idle, Matth. 20. 3, 6. See how ſharply Paul reproveth idleneſs, 2 Theſſ. 3. determining, that they that will not work ſhould not eat; and that they be avoided as unfit for Chriſtian ſociety: And 1 Tim. 5. 13 he ſharply rebuketh ſome Women that learnt to be idle, wandring about from Houſe to Houſe. And Rom. 12. 11. Not ſlothful in buſineſs, but fervent in Spirit, ſerving the Lord. A painful diligent perſon is ſtill redeeming time, while he doth that which is good: and a ſlothful Perſon is always loſing it.

Thief 2. §. 51. Th. 2. The ſecond Thief or Time-waſter is, Exceſs of ſleep. Neceſſity cureth moſt of the poor of this: but many of the rich are guilty of it. If you ask me, What is exceſs? I anſwer, All that is more than is needful to our health and buſineſs. So much as is neceſſary to theſe, I reprehend not; And therefore the infirm may take more than the healthful; and the old more than the young: And thoſe that find that an hours ſleep more will not hinder them, but further them in their work, ſo that they ſhall do the more, and not the leſs, as being unfit without it, may uſe it as a means to the after improvement of their Time. But when ſluggiſh Perſons ſpend hours in bed, which neither their health nor labours need, meerly out of a ſwiniſh love of ſleep; yea, when they will have no work to do, or Calling to employ them, but what ſhall give place to their ſleepy diſeaſe, and think they may ſleep longer than is neceſſary, becauſe they are rich and can afford it, and have no neceſſary buſineſs to call them up; theſe think they may conſume their precious time, and ſin more, and wrong their ſouls more, becauſe God hath given them more than others: As if their ſervants ſhould plead that he may ſleep more than others, becauſe he hath more wages than others. O did theſe drowſie wretches know, what work they have to do for God, and their poor ſouls, and thoſe about them, it would quickly awake them, and make them ſtir: Did they but know how earneſtly they will ſhortly wiſh, that they had all thoſe hours to ſpend again, they would ſpend them better now than in drowzineſs! Did they but know what a woful account it will be, when they muſt be anſwerable for all their time, to ſay, we ſpent ſo many hours every week or morning in exceſs of ſleep; they would be rouſed from their Sty, and find ſome better uſe for their time, which will be ſweeter in the review, when time is ended, and muſt be no more.

Thief 3. §. 52. Th 3. The next Thief or Time-waſter is inordinate adorning of the Body. The poor may thank God that they are free alſo from the temptations to this; and can quickly dreſs them and go about their buſineſs: But many Ladies and Gallants are ſo guilty of this Vice, that I wonder conſcience is ſo patient with them. O poor neglected, undreſt ſouls! O filthy conſciences, never cleanſed from your Pollutions, by the Spirit or blood of Chriſt! Have you not better uſe for precious hours, than to be waſhing, and pinning, and dreſſing, and curling, and ſpotting, and powdering, till ten or eleven a clock in the morning, when honeſt labourers have done one half of their days work! While you are in health, were not ſix a clock in the morning a fitter hour for you, to be dreſt, that you might draw near to the moſt Holy God in holy prayer, and read his word, and ſet your ſouls, and then your families, in order for the Duties of the following day? I do not ſay that you may go no neater than poor labouring people, or that you may beſtow no more time than they in dreſſing you? But I ſay, that for your ſouls, and in your callings, you are bound by God to be as diligent as they: and have no more Time given you to loſe than they, and that you ſhould ſpend as little of it in neatifying you as you can: and be ſenſible that elſe the loſs is your own: And that abundance of precious hours which your Pride conſumeth, will lie heavy one day upon your conſciences: And then you ſhall confeſs, I ſay you ſhall confeſs it with aking hearts, that the Duties you owed to God and Man, and the care of your ſouls, and of your Families, ſhould have been preferred before your appearing neat and ſpruce to men: If you have but a journey to go, you can riſe earlier and be ſooner dreſt: But for the good of your ſouls, and the redeeming of your precious time, you cannot: O that God would but ſhew you what greater work you have to do with thoſe precious hours! and how it will cut your hearts to think of them at laſt! If you lay but hopeleſly ſick of a Conſumption, you would be cured it is like of this proud diſeaſe, and beſtow leſs of your time in adorning the fleſh, which is haſting to the grave and rottenneſs! And cannot you now ſee how time and life conſumes? And what cauſe you have with all your care and diligence, to uſe it better before it is gone? I know they that are ſo much worſe than childiſh, as prodigally to caſt away ſo many hours in making themſelves fine for the ſight of Men, and be not aſhamed to come forth and ſhew their ſin to others, will ſcarce want words to excuſe their crime, and prove it lawful, (be they ſenſe or nonſenſe.) But conſcience it ſelf ſhall anſwer all, when Time is gone, and make you wiſh you had been wiſer. You know not, Ladies and Gallants, how precious a thing Time is! You little feel what a price your ſelves will ſet upon it at the laſt: You little conſider what you have to do with it: You ſee not how it haſteth, and how near you ſtand to vaſt eternity! You little know how deſpiſed Time will look a wakened Conſcience in the face! Or what it is to be found unready to die: I know you lay not to heart theſe things: For if you did, you could not, I ſay, you could not, ſo lightly caſt away your Time. If all were true that you ſay, that indeed your place and honour requireth, that your precious morning Hours be thus ſpent, I profeſs to you, I ſhould pity you more than Gally-ſlaves, and I would bleſs me from ſuch a Place and Honour, and make haſte into the courſe and company of the poor, and think them happy that may better ſpend their time. But indeed your excuſes are frivolous and untrue, and do but ſhew that Pride hath prevailed to captivate your Reaſon to its ſervice. For we know Lords and Ladies, as great as the reſt of you, (though alas, too few) that can quickly be up and dreſt, and ſpend their early hours in prayer and adorn-adorning their souls, and can be content to come forth in a plain, and incurious attire; and yet are so far from being derided, or thought the worse by any whose judgment is much to be regarded, that they are taken justly for the honour of their order: And if it were not that some few such keep up the honour of your rank, I will not tell you how little in point of Morality it would be honoured!

Thief 4. Nihil mihi magis quam pompa displicet; non solum quia mala, & humilitati contraria, sed quia difficilis, & quieti adversa est. Petrarch. in vita sua

§. 53. Th. 4. Another Time-wasting Thief is Unnecessary pomp and curiosity in retinue, attendance, house, furniture, provision and entertainments, together with excess of complement and ceremony, and servitude to the humours and expectations of Time-wasters. I crowd them all together, because they are all but wheels of the same Engine, to avoid prolixity. Here also I must prevent the cavils of the guilty, by telling you that I reprove not all that in the rich, which I would reprove if it were in the poor: I intend not to level them, and judge them by the same measure. The rich are not so happy as to be so free as the poor, either from the temptation, or the seeming necessity and obligation. Let others pity the poor: I'll pity the Rich, who seem to be pinched with harder Necessities than the poor: even this seeming Necessity of wasting their precious Time in complement, curiosity and pomp; which the happy Poor may spend in the honest labours of their Callings; wherein they may at once be profitable to the Common-wealth, and maintain themselves, and meditate or confer of holy things: But yet I must say, that the Rich shall give an account of Time, and shall pay dear for that which unnecessary excesses do devour: And that instead of envying the state and curiosity of others, and seeking to excel or equal them to avoid their obloquy, they should contract and bring down all customs of excess, and shew their high esteem of time, and detestation of time-wasting curiosity; and imitate the most sober, grave and holy; and be a pattern to others of employing Time in needful, great and manly things; I say Manly; for so childish is this Vice, that men of gravity and business do abhor it: and usually men of Vanity that are guilty of it, lay it all on the Women, as if they were ashamed of it, or it were below them. What abundance of precious Time is spent, in unnecessary state of attendance, and provisions? What abundance under pretence of cleanliness and neatness is spent in needless curiosity about rooms, and furniture, and accommodations, and matters of meer pride, vainglory and ostentation, covered with the honest name of decency? What abundance is wasted in entertainments, and unnecessary visits, complements, ceremony, and servitude to the humours of men of Vanity? I speak not for nastiness, and uncleanness, and uncomeliness: I speak not for a Cynical morosity or unsociableness: When Conscience is awakened, and you come to your selves, and approaching death shall better acquaint you with the worth of Time, you will see a mean between these two; and you will wish you had most feared the time-wasting prodigal extream. Methinks you should freely give me leave to say, that though Martha had a better excuse than you, and was cumbered about many things for the entertainment of such a guest as Christ himself with all his followers! who lookt for no curiosity, yet Mary is more approved of by Christ, who neglected all this, to Redeem the time for the good of her soul, by setting at his feet to hear his Word: she chose the better part, which shall not be taken from her. Remember I pray you, that One thing is necessary: I hope I may have leave to tell you, that if by you or your servants, God, and your souls, and prayer, and reading the Scriptures, and the profitable labours of an honest Calling, be all or any of them neglected, while you or they are neatifying this room, or washing out that little spot, or setting straight the other wrinkle, or are taken up with feminine trifling, proud curiosities, this is preferring of dust before Gold, of the least before the greatest things: And to say, that decency is commendable, is no excuse for neglecting God, your Souls, or Family, or leaving undone any one greater work, which you or your servants might have been doing that while: I say, any work that is greater all things considered. O that you and your families would but live, as those that see how fast Death cometh! how fast Time goeth? and what you have to do? and what your unready souls yet want? This is all that I desire of you: And then I warrant you, it would save you many a precious hour, and cut short your works of curiosity, and deliver you from your slavery to Pride, and the esteem of vain time-wasters.

Nimia omnia nimium exhibent negotium.

Abundance of little things that have all their conveniences have all their inconveniences also, and take up our time, and so would shut our greater things, if they be not cast aside themselves, and would become great sins by such a consumption of our Time, Luke 10. 42.

§. 54. Th. 5. Another Time wasting sin, is needless and tedious feastings, gluttony and tipling: which being of the same litter, I set together. I speak not against moderate, seasonable, and charitable Feasts: But alas, in this luxurious sensual age, how commonly do men sit two hours at a Feast, and spend two more in attending it before and after, and not improving the Time in any pious or profitable discourse: yea, the Rich spend an hour ordinarily in a common Meal, while every Meal is a Feast indeed, and they fare as their predecessour, Luke 16. deliciously or sumptuously every day. Happy are the poor, that are free also from this temptation: You spend not so much time in the daily addresses of your souls to God, and reading his Word, and taking an account of the affairs of conscience, and preparing for death, as you do in stuffing your guts, perhaps at one Meal. And in Taverns and Ale-houses among the pots, how much Time is wasted by Rich and poor? O remember while you are eating and drinking, what a corruptible piece of flesh you are feeding and serving, and how quickly those mouths will be filled with dust? and that a soul that is posting so fast unto eternity, should find no time to spare for vanity: And that you have important work enough to do, which if performed, will afford you a sweeter and a longer Feast!

Thief 5.

Convivia, quæ dicuntur (cum sint commissationes modestiæ & bonis moribus inimicæ) semper mihi displicuerunt; Laboriosum, & inutile ratus vocare & vocari, &c. Idem.

§. 55. Th. 6. Another Time-wasting sin is idle Talk: What abundance of precious Time doth this consume: Hearken to most mens discourse when they are sitting together, or working together, or travelling together, and you shall hear how little of it is any better than silence: (and if not better, it is worse:) So full are those persons of Vanity who are empty, even to silence, of any thing that is good, that they can find and feed a discourse of nothing, many hours and days together, and as they think, with such fecundity and floridness of style, as deserveth acceptance if not applause. I have marvelled oft at some wordy Preachers, with how little matter they can handsomly fill up an hour! But one would wonder more to hear people fill up, not an hour, but a great part of their day, and of their lives, and that without any study at all, and without any holy and substantial Subject, with words, which if you should write them all down and peruse them, you would find that the sum and conclusion of them is nothing! How self applaudingly and pleasingly they can ex tempore talk idly and of nothing a great part of their lives! I have heard many of them marvel at a poor unlearned Christian, that can pray ex tempore many hours together in very good order and well composed words: But are they not more to be marvelled at that can very handsomly talk talk of nothing ten times as long, with greater copiousness, and without repetitions, and that ex tempore, when they have not that variety of great commanding Subjects to be the matter of their Speech? I tell you, when Time must be reviewed, the consumption of so much in idle talk, will appear to have been no such venial sin, as empty careless sinners now imagine.

Thief 7. §. 56. Th. 7. Another Thief which by the aforesaid means would steal your Time, is Vain and sinful company. Among whom a spiritual Physician that goeth to cure them, or a holy person that is full and resolute to bear down vain discourse, I confess may well employ his Time, when he is cast upon it, or called to it. But to dwell with such, or choose them as our familiars, or causelessly, or for complacency keep among them, will unavoidably lose abundance of your time! If you would do good, they will hinder you: If you will speak of good, they will divert you, or reproach you, or wrangle and cavil with you, or some way or other stop your mouths. They will by a stream of vain discourse, either bear down, and carry you on with them, or fill your ears, and interrupt and hinder the very thoughts of your minds, by which you desire to profit your selves, when they will not let you be profitable to others.

Thief 8. §. 57. Th. 8. Another notorious Time-wasting Thief, is needless, inordinate sports and games, which are commonly stigmatized by the offenders themselves, with the infamous name of PASTIMES; and masked with the deceitful title of Recreations: such as are Cards and Dice, and Stage-plays, and Dancings, and Revellings, and excesses in the most lawful sports, especially in Hunting, and Hawking, and Bowling, &c. Whether all these are lawful or unlawful in themselves, is nothing to the present question: but I am sure that the precious hours which they take up, might have been improved to the saving of many a thousand souls, that by the loss of Time are now undone and past recovery. Except malicious enemies of Godliness, I scarce know a wretcheder sort of people on the earth, and more to be lamented, than those fleshly persons, who through the love of sensual pleasure, do waste many hours day after day, in Plays and Gaming and Voluptuous courses; while their miserable souls are dead in sin, enslaved to their fleshly lusts, unreconciled to God, and find no delight in him, or in his service, and cannot make recreation of any Heavenly work. How will it torment these unhappy souls, to think how they plaid away those hours, in which they might have been pleasing God, and preventing misery, and laying up a treasure in Heaven? And to think that they sold that precious time, for a little fleshly sport, in which they should have been working out their salvation, and making their calling and election sure? But I have more to say to these anon.

Laertius saith of Solon, that Thespian tragœdias agere & docere prohibuit, inutilem eas falsiloquentiam vocans.

Thief 9. §. 58. Th. 9. Another Time-wasting Thief is, excess of worldly cares and business. These do not only as some more disgraced sins, pollute the soul with deep stains in a little time, and then recede, but they dwell upon the mind, and keep possession and keep out good: They take up the greatest part of the lives of those that are guilty of them. The world is first in the morning in their thoughts, and last at night, and almost all the day: The world will not give them leave, to entertain any sober fixed thoughts, of the world to come, nor to do the work which all works should give place to. The World devoureth all the time almost that God and their souls should have: It will not give them leave to Pray, or Read, or Meditate, or Discourse of holy things: even when they seem to be praying or hearing the Word of God, the World is in their thoughts: And as it's said, Ezek. 33.31. They come unto thee as the people cometh, and they sit before thee as my people, and they hear thy words, but they will not do them: for with their mouth they shew much love; but their heart goeth after their Covetousness: In most families there is almost no talk nor doings but all for the world: These also will know, that they had greater works for their precious time, which should have always had the precedency of the World.

§. 59. Th. 10. Another Time-waster is, vain unThief 10. governed and sinful thoughts. When men are wearied with vain works and sports, they continue unwearied in vain thoughts; when they want company for vain Discourse and Games, they can waste the time in idle, or lustful, or ambitious, or Covetous thoughts alone without any company. In the very night time while they wake, and as they travail by the way, yea, while they seem to be serving God; they will be wasting the time in useless thoughts: so that this devoureth a greater proportion of precious time, than any of the former: when time must be reckoned for, what abundance will be found upon most mens accounts, as spent in idle sinful thoughts! O watch this thief; and remember, though you may think that a vain thought is but a little sin, yet time is not a little or contemptible commodity, nor to be cast away on so little a thing as idle thoughts: and to vilifie thus so choice a treasure is not a little sin: And that it is not a little work that you have to do in the time which you thus waste. And a daily course of idle thoughts doth waste so great a measure of time, that this aggravation maketh it more heinous, than many sins of greater infamy. But of this more in the next part.

§. 60. Th. 11. Another dangerous Time-wasting Thief 11. sin, is the Reading of vain Books, Play books, Romances and feigned Histories; and also unprofitable studies, undertaken but for vain glory, or the pleasing of a carnal or curious mind. Of this I have spoken in my Book of Self-denyal. I speak not here how pernicious this vice is by corrupting the fancy and affections, and breeding a diseased appetite, and putting you out of relish to necessary things. But bethink you before you spend another hour in any such Books, whether you can comfortably give an account of it unto God! and how precious the Time is, which you are wasting on such Childish toys. You think the Reading of such things is lawful: but is it lawful to lose your precious time? You say that your petty studies are desirable and laudable; but the neglect of far greater necessary things, is not laudable: I discourage no man from labouring to know all that God hath any way revealed to be known. But I say as Seneca, We are ignorant of things necessary, because we learn things superfluous and unnecessary: Art is long and life is short: And he that hath not time for all, should make sure of the greatest matters; and if he be ignorant of any thing, let it be of that which the Love of God and our own and other mens salvation, and the publick good, do least require, and can best spare. It's a pitiful thing to see a man waste his time in criticizing, or growing wise in the less necessary Sciences and Arts while he is yet a slave of pride or worldliness, and hath an unrenewed soul, and hath not learned the mysteries necessary to his own salvation. But yet these studies are laudable in their season: But the Fanatick studies of those that would pry into unrevealed things, and the lascivious employment of those that read Love-books, and Play-books, and vain stories, will one day appear, to have been but an unwise expence of time, for those that had so much better and more needful work to do with it. I think there is few of those that plead for it, that would be found with such Books in their hands at death, or will then find any pleasure in the remembrance of them.

Thief 12. §. 61. Th. 12. But the Maſter-Thief that robs men of their Time, is an unſanctified, ungodly heart; for it's loſeth Time whatever men are doing: Becauſe they never truly intend the Glory of God: and have not a right principle or a right end, their whole courſe is Hell-wards; and whatever they do, they are not working out their ſalvation: And therefore they are ſtill loſing their Time, as to themſelves, however God may uſe the Time and Gifts of ſome of them, as a mercy to others. Therefore a New and Holy Heart, with a Heavenly intention and deſign of Life, is the great thing neceſſary to all that will ſavingly Redeem their Time.

Tit. 3. On whom this Duty of Redeeming Time, is principally incumbent.

§. 62. THough the Redeeming of Time be a Duty of grand importance and neceſſity to all, yet all theſe ſorts following have ſpecial obligations to it.

Sort 1. Sort 1. Thoſe that are in the Youth and Vigour of their Time, nature is not yet ſo much corrupted in you, as in old accuſtomed ſinners: your hearts are not ſo much hardened: ſin is not ſo deeply rooted and confirmed: Satan hath not triumphed in ſo many victories: you are not yet plunged ſo deep as others, into worldly incumbrances and cares: your underſtanding, memory, and ſtrength are in their vigour and do not yet fail you: And who ſhould go faſteſt, or work hardeſt but he that hath the greateſt ſtrength? You may now get more by diligence in a a day, than hereafter you can get in many: How few prove good Scholars, or wiſe men that begin not to learn till they are old? Fly youthful Luſts therefore, 2 Tim. 2. 22. Remember your Creator in the days of your Youth, Eccleſ. 12. 1. If you be now trained up in the way you ſhould go, you will not depart from it when you are old, Prov. 22. 6. O that you could but know what an unſpeakable advantage, and benefit, and comfort it is, to come to a ripe age with the proviſions and furniture of that wiſdom, and holineſs, and acquaintance with God, which ſhould be attained in your youth? and what a miſery it is to be then to learn that which ſhould have been many years before in practiſing, and to be then to begin to live when you muſt make an end? much more to be caſt to Hell, if death ſhould find you unready in your youth? or to be forſaken of God to a hardned Age! Happy they that with Timothy and Obadiah, do learn the Scripture and fear God in their Childhood, and from their youth, 1 Kings 18. 12. 2 Tim. 3. 15.

Sort 2. §. 63. Sort 2. Neceſſity maketh it incumbent on the weak and ſick and aged in a ſpecial manner to Redeem their Time. If they will not make much of it that are ſure to have but a little; and if they will trifle and loiter it away, that know they are near their journeys end, and ready to give up their accounts, they are unexcuſable above all others. A Thief or Murderer will pray and ſpeak good words when he is going out of the World. Well may it be ſaid to you, as Paul doth, Rom. 13. 11, 12. Now is it high time to awake you out of ſleep; when your ſalvation or damnation is ſo near! It is high time for that man to look about him, and prepare his ſoul, and loſe no time, that is ſo ſpeedily to appear before the moſt Holy God, and be uſed for ever as he hath lived here.

Sort 3. §. 64. Sort 3. It is ſpecially incumbent on them to Redeem the Time, who have loytered and miſpent much time already. If Conſcience tell you that you have loſt your youth in ignorance and vanity, and much of your age in negligence and worldlineſs, it is a double crime in you, if you redeem not diligently the time that is left. The juſt care of your ſalvation requireth it, unleſs you are willing to be damned: Ingenuity and duty to God requireth it; unleſs you will defie him, and reſolve to abuſe and deſpiſe him to the utmoſt, and ſpend all the time againſt him which he ſhall give you. The nature of true Repentance requireth it; unleſs you will know none but the Repentance of the damned; and begin to Repent the miſpending of your time, when it's gone, and all is too late.

1 Pet. 4. 3.

§. 65. Sort 4. It is ſpecially their duty to redeem the Time, who are ſcanted of time through poverty, ſervice or reſtraint. If poor people that muſt labour all the Day, will not Redeem the Lords day, and thoſe few hours which they have, they will then have no time at all for things ſpiritual, ſervants that be not Maſters of their time, and are held cloſe to their work, had need to be very diligent in Redeeming thoſe few hours which are allowed them for higher things. Sort 4.

§. 66. Sort 5. Thoſe that enjoy any ſpecial helps, either publick or private, muſt be ſpecially careful to improve them and Redeem the Time. Do you live under a convincing powerful Miniſtry: O improve it, and Redeem the Time; for you know not how ſoon they may be taken from you, or you from them. Do you live with Godly Relations, Parents, Husband, Wife, Maſters in a Godly Family, or with godly fellow-ſervants, friends or Neighbours? Redeem the time: get ſomewhat by them every day: you know not how ſhort this ſeaſon will be. Do you live where you have Books and Leiſure? Redeem the time: This alſo may not be long. Had not Joſhua been horribly unexcuſable if he would have loitered when God made the Sun ſtand ſtill, while he purſued his enemies? O loiter not you, while the Sun of mercy, patience, means and helps do all attend you. Sort 5.

§. 67. Sort 6. Thoſe muſt eſpecially Redeem the Time, who are ignorant, or graceleſs, or weak in grace, and have ſtrong corruptions, and little or no aſſurance of ſalvation, and are unready to die, and have yet all or moſt of their own work to do: If theſe loiter, they are doubly to blame: ſure the time paſt of your lives may ſuffice to have loitered and done evil, 1 Pet. 4. 3. Hath not the Devil had too much already? Will ye ſtand all the day idle? Mat. 20. 6. Look home and ſee what you have yet to do? How much you want to a ſafe and comfortable death? Hoſ. 10. 12. Sow to your ſelves in righteouſneſs: reap in mercy: break up your fallow ground; for it is time to ſeek the Lord, till he come and rain righteouſneſs upon you. Sort 6. Eph. 5. 2.

§. 68. Sort 7. It much concerneth them to Redeem the Time, who are in any office, or have any opportunity of doing any ſpecial or publick good, eſpecially Magiſtrates and Miniſters of Chriſt. Your life will not be long: your office will not be long: O beſtir you againſt ſin and Satan, and for Chriſt and holineſs while you may: God will try you but a time. Let Obadiah hide and feed the Prophets when he is called to it, and while he may, that God may hide him, and not think to ſhift off duty, and ſave himſelf to a better time: ſaith Mordechai to Eſther, Eſth. 9. 13, 14. Think not with thy ſelf that thou ſhalt eſcape in the Kings houſe more than all the Jews: For if thou altogether holdeſt thy peace at this time, then ſhall there enlargement and deliverances ariſe from another place, but thou and thy Fathers houſe ſhall be deſtroyed: and who knoweth whether thou art come to the Kingdom for ſuch a time as this? Are you Miniſters? O preach the Goſpel while you may: Redeem the time: All times are your ſeaſon: ſo great a work and the worth of ſouls, commandeth you to do it in ſeaſon and out of ſeaſon, 2 Tim. 4. 2. A man that is to ſave many others from drowning, or to quench a fire in the City, is unex- Sort 7.

cusable above all men, if he Redeem not Time, by his greatest diligence and speed.

Sect 8. §. 69. Sect 8. Lastly, it is specially incumbent on them to Redeem the Time, who being recovered from sickness, or saved from any danger, are under the obligation both of special mercy and special promises of their own: who have promised God in the time of sickness or distress, that if he would but spare them and try them once again, they would amend their lives, and live more holily, and spend their time more carefully and diligently for their souls, and shew all about them the truth of their Repentance, by the greatness of their change, and an exemplary life. O it is a most dangerous terrible thing to return to security, sloth and sin, and break such promises to God! such are often given over to woful hard-heartedness or despair: for God will not be mocked with delusory words.

§. 70. Thus I have opened this great duty of Redeeming Time the more largely, because it is of unspeakable importance, and my soul is frequently amazed with admiration, that the sluggish world can so insensibly and impenitently go on in wasting precious time, so near Eternity, and in so needy and dangerous a case. Tho' I bless my God, that I have not wholly lost my Time, but have long lived in a sense of the odiousness of that sin, yet I wonder at my self that such over-powring motives compel me not to make continual battle, and to be still at work with all my might, in a case of everlasting consequence.

CHAP. VI.

Directions for the Government of the Thoughts.

I Have shewed you in my Treatise of walking with God, how much mans Thoughts are regarded by God, and should be regarded by himself, and what agents and instruments they are of very much Good or Evil: This therefore I shall suppose and not repeat; but only Direct you in the Governing of them. The work having three parts they must have several Directions. 1. For the avoiding of evil thoughts: 2. For the exercise of good thoughts: 3. For the improvement of good thoughts, that they may be effectual.

Tit. 1. Directions against evil and idle Thoughts.

Dir. 1. §. 2. Direct. 1. KNow which are evil Thoughts, and retain such an odious Character of them continually on your minds, as may provoke you still to meet them with abhorrence. Evil thoughts are such as these: 1. All thoughts against the Being or Attributes, or Relations, or honour, or works of God: Atheistical and Blasphemous, Idolatrous and unbelieving thoughts: All thoughts that tend to disobedience or oppostion to the will or word of God: And all that savour of unthankfulness or want of Love to God: or of discontent and distrust, or want of the fear of God, or that tend to any of these: Also sinful, selfish, covetous, proud studies: to make a meer trade of the Ministry for gain: to be able to overtalk others: Searching into unrevealed forbidden things: Inordinate curiosity, and hasty conceitedness of your own opinions about Gods Decrees, or obscure Prophecies, Prodigies, Providence, mentioned before about Pride of our understandings.

All thoughts against any particular word, or truth, or precept of God, or against any particular duty; against any part of the worship and ordinances of God: that tend to unreverent neglects of the name, or Holy Day of God: All impious thoughts against publick duty, or family duty, or secret duty; and all that would hinder or marr any one duty: All thoughts of dishonour, contempt, neglect, or disobedience to the authority or higher powers set over us by God, either Magistrates, Pastors, Parents, Masters or any other Superiours. All thoughts of Pride, self-exalting ambition, self seeking Covetousness: Voluptuous sensual Thoughts, proceeding from or tending to the corrupt inordinate pleasures of the flesh: Thoughts which are unjust and tend to the hurt and wrong of others: Envious, malicious, reproachful, injurious, contemptuous, wrathful, revengeful thoughts: Lustful, wanton filthy thoughts: Drunken, gluttonous, fleshly thoughts: Inordinate, careful, fearful, anxious, vexatious discomposing thoughts: Presumptuous and secure, despairing and dejecting thoughts: Slothful, delaying, negligent and discouraging thoughts: Uncharitable, cruel, false, censorious unmerciful thoughts: And idle unprofitable thoughts. Hate all these as the Devils spawn.

Dir. 2. §. 3. Direct. 2. Be not insensible what a great deal of Duty or sin is in the Thoughts, and of how dangerous a signification and consequence a course of evil thoughts is to your souls. They shew what a Man is as much as his words or actions do. For as he thinketh in his heart, so is he, Prov. 23. 7. A good man or evil is denominated by the good or evil treasure of the heart, though known to men but by the fruits. O the vile and numerous sins that are committed in mens thoughts, and proceed from mens thoughts! O the precious Time that is lost in idle and other sinful thoughts? O the good that is hindered hereby both in heart and life! But of this having spoken in the treatise aforementioned, I proceed.

Dir. 3. §. 4. Direct. 3. Above all be sure that you cleanse the Fountain, and destroy those sinful inclinations of the heart, from which your evil thoughts proceed. In vain else will you strive to stop the streams. Or if you should stop them, that very Heart it self will be loathsom in the eyes of God. Are your Thoughts all upon the world, either coveting, or caring, or grieving for what you want, or pleasing your selves with what you have or hope for? Get down your deceived estimation of the world: cast it under your feet, and out of your heart; and count all with Paul, but as loss and dung, for the excellent knowledge of God in Christ: For till the world be dead in you, your worldly thoughts will not be dead: But all will stand still, when once this poise is taken off: Crucifie it, and this breath and pulse will cease. So if your thoughts do run upon matter of preferment or honour, disgrace or contempt, or if you are pleased with your own preheminence or applause; Mortifie your Pride, and beg of God a humble self-denying contrite heart. For till Pride be dead, you will never be quiet for it; but it will stir up swarms of self-exalting and yet self-vexing thoughts, which make you hateful in the eyes of God. So if your thoughts be running out upon your back and belly, what you shall eat or drink, or how to please your appetite or sense; Mortifie the flesh, and subdue its desires, and master your appetite, and bring them into full obedience unto reason, and get a habit of temperance; or else your thoughts will be still upon your guts and throats: For they will obey the ruling power: And a violent passion and desire doth so powerfully move them, that it is hard for the reason and will to rule them. So if your thoughts are wanton and filthy, you must cleanse that unclean and lustful heart, and get Christ to cast out the unclean spirit, and become chaste within, before you will keep out your unchaste cogitations. So if you have confusion and vanity in your thoughts, you must get a well-furnished and well composed mind and heart, before you will well cure the malady of your thoughts.

Dir. 4. §. 5. Direct. 4. Keep at a ſufficient diſtance from thoſe tempting objects, which are the fuel and incentives of your evil thoughts. Can you expect that the Drunkard ſhould rule his thoughts, whilſt he is in the ALE-houſe or Tavern, and ſeeth the drink? Or that the Glutton ſhould rule his thoughts, while the pleaſing diſh is in his ſight? Or that the Luſtful perſon ſhould keep chaſte his thoughts, in the preſence of his enamouring toy? Or that the wrathful perſon rule his thoughts, among contentious paſſionate words? Or that the Proud perſon rule his thoughts in the midſt of honour and applauſe? Away with this fuel: Fly from this infectious air if you would be ſafe.

Dir. 5. §. 6. Direct. 5. At leaſt make a Covenant with your ſenſes, and keep them in obedience, if you will have obedient thoughts. For all know by experience how potently the ſenſes move the thoughts: Job ſaith, I made a Covenant with my eyes, why then ſhould I think upon a Maid: Mark how the Covenant with his eyes, is made the means to rule his thoughts. Pray with David, turn away mine eyes from beholding vanity: Pſal 119. 37. Keep a guard upon your eyes, and ears, and taſte, and touch, if you will keep a guard upon your thoughts: Let not that come into theſe outer parts, which you deſire ſhould go no furrher. Open not the door to them, if you would not let them in.

Dir. 6. §. 7. Direct. 6. Remember how near kin the Thought is to the deed; and what a tendency it hath to it. Let Chriſt himſelf tell you, Matth. 7. 22. But I ſay unto you that whoſoever is angry with his brother without a cauſe, ſhall be in danger of the Judgement; verſ. 28. I ſay unto you that whoſoever looketh on a woman to luſt after her, hath committed adultery with her already in his heart. A malicious thought and a malicious deed are from the ſame ſpring, and have the ſame nature: Only the deed is the riper ſerpent, that can ſting another, when the Thought is as the younger ſerpent that hath only the venemous nature in it ſelf. A luſtful thought is from the ſame defiled puddle, as actual filthineſs: And the thought is but the paſſage to the action: It is but the ſame ſin in its minority, tending to maturity.

Dir. 7. §. 8. Direct. 7. Keep out, or quickly caſt out all inordinate paſſions: For Paſſions do violently preſs the thoughts, and forcibly carry them away. If anger, or grief, or fear, or any carnal Love, or joy or pleaſure be admitted, they will command your thoughts to run out upon their ſeveral objects. And when you rebuke your thoughts, and call them in, they will not hear you, till you get them out of the crowd and noiſe of paſſion. As in the heat of civil wars no Government is well exerciſed in a Kingdom: And as violent ſtorms diſable the marriners to govern the ſhip, and ſave it and themſelves; ſo paſſions are too ſtormy a Region for the Thoughts to be well Governed in: Till your ſouls be reduced to a calm condition, your thoughts will be tumultuating, and hurried that way that the tempeſts drive them. Till theſe warrs be ended, your Thoughts will be licentious, and partakers in the rebellion.

Dir. 8. §. 9. Direct. 8. Keep your ſouls in a conſtant and careful obedience unto God: Obſerve his Law: Be continually ſenſible that you are under his Government; and awed by his authority: Man judgeth not your Thoughts: If you are ſubject to man only, your Thoughts muſt be ungoverned: But the Heart is the firſt Object of Gods Government, and that which he principally regardeth. His Laws extend to all your thoughts: And therefore if you know what Obedience to God is, you muſt know what the obedience of your Thoughts to him is: For he that obeyeth God as God, will obey him in one thing as well as another; and will obey him as the Governour and Judge of Thoughts: The powerful ſearching word of Chriſt is a diſcerner of the thoughts and intentions of the heart, and as a two edged ſword is ſharp and quick, and will pierce and cut as deep as the very ſoul and ſpirit, Heb. 4. 12, 13. It caſteth down every imagination, and bringeth into captivity every thought to the obedience of Chriſt. 2 Cor. 10. 5. Therefore David ſaith to God, ſearch me O God, and know my heart, try me and know my thoughts; and ſee if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlaſting. Pſal. 139. 23, 24. And you find Gods laws and reproofs extending to the thoughts: Iſa. 59. 7. Their thoughts are thoughts of iniquity. The fools heart-atheiſm is rebuked, Pſal. 14. 1. He reproveth a rebellious people, for walking in a way that is not good after their own thoughts, Iſa. 65. 2. See how Chriſt openeth the heart, Mat. 15. 9. He chargeth them, Deut. 15. 9. to beware that there be not a thought in their wicked hearts againſt the mercy which they muſt ſhew to the poor. Pſalm 49. 11. He detecteth the inward thought of the worldling, that their houſes ſhall continue for ever. Pſal. 24. 9. He ſaith, The thoughts of fooliſhneſs is ſin: The old world was condemned becauſe the imaginations of their hearts were only evil continually, Gen. 6. 5. And when God calleth a ſinner to converſion, he ſaith, Let the wicked forſake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him. Iſa. 55. 6, 7. You ſee then if you are ſubject to God, your Thoughts muſt be obedient.

Dir. 9. §. 10. Direct. 9. Remember Gods continual preſence; that all your thoughts are in his ſight. He ſeeth every filthy thought, and every covetous, and proud, and ambitious thought, and every uncharitable malicious thought. If you be not Atheiſts, the remembrance of this will ſomewhat check and controul your thoughts; that God beholdeth them. He underſtandeth your thoughts afar off, Pſal. 139. 2? Doth not he that pondereth the heart conſider it, Prov. 24. 12. Wherefore think ye evil in your hearts. ſaith Chriſt, Matth. 9. 4.

Dir. 10. §. 11. Direct. 10. Bethink you ſeriouſly what a Government you would keep upon your thoughts if they were but written on your foreheads, or ſeen to all that ſee you, yea or but open to ſome perſon whom you reverence. O how aſhamed would you then be, that men ſhould ſee your filthy thoughts, your malicious thoughts, your covetousand deceiving thoughts? And is not the eye of God ten thouſand times more to be reverenced and regarded? And is not man your God, if you are awed more by man than by God? And if the eye of man can do more to reſtrain you?

Dir. 11. §. 12. Direct. 11. Keep tender your Conſciences that they may not be regardleſs or inſenſible of the ſmalleſt ſin. A tender conſcience feareth evil and idle thoughts: and will ſmart in the penitent review of thoughts: But a ſeared Conſcience feeleth nothing except ſome grievous crying ſins. A tender Conſcience obeyeth that precept, Prov. 30. 32. If thou haſt done fooliſhly in lifting up thy ſelf, or if thou haſt thought evil, lay thy hand upon thy mouth.

Dir. 12. §. 13. Direct. 12. Caſt out vain and ſinful thoughts in the beginning, before they ſettle themſelves and make a dwelling of thy heart. They are eaſilieſt and ſafelieſt reſiſted in the entrance: Thy heart will give them rooting and grow familiar with them, if they make any ſtay: Beſides, it ſhews the greater ſin, becauſe there is theleſs reſiſtance and the more conſent: If the will were againſt them, would not let them alone ſo long. Yea and their continuance tendeth to your ruin: It is like the continuance of poyſon in your bowels, or fire in your thatch, or a ſpie in an army: As long as they ſtay they are working toward your greater miſchief: If theſe flies ſtay long, they will blow and multiply: They will make their neſts, and breed their young, and you will quickly have a ſwarm of ſins.

Dir. 13. §. 14. Direct. 13. Take heed lest any practical error corrupt your understandings: or lest you be engaged in any ill design: For these will command your thoughts into a course of sinful attendance and service to their ends. He that erreth and thinks his sin is his virtue or his duty, will indulge the thoughts of it without controul: Yea, he will drive on his mind to such cogitations; and steal from the authority and word of God, the motives and incentives of his sin: As false prophets speak against God in the name of God, and against his word as by the pretended authority of his word; so an erring mind will fetch its arguments from God, and from the Scripture, for those sinful thoughts which are against God and Scripture. And if evil thoughts will so hardly be kept out when we plead the authority of God and his word against them, and do the best we can to hinder them; how will they prevail when they plead the authority of God and the sacred Scriptures for them, and take it to be your duty to kindle and promote them? For instance; all the sinful thoughts by which the Romish Clergy are contriving the support of their Kingdom of darkness in the world, and the continuance of their tyranny in their Church, are but the products of their error, which tells them that all this should be done, as pleasing to God, and profitable to the Church. All the bloody thoughts of persecutors, against the Church and holy ways of Christ, have been cherished by this erroneous thought, John 16. 23. The time cometh that whoever killeth you, will Think that he doth God service: and these things they will do unto you, because they have not known the Father nor me. All Pauls bloody contrivances and practices against the Church, did come from this, Acts 26. 9. I verily thought with my self that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth, which thing I also did.——All the scornful and reproachful thoughts and speeches of many of the ungodly, against a holy life are hence, 1 Pet. 4. 4. They think it strange that you run not with them to excess of riot, speaking evil of you: The vain babling of hypocrites, who cheat their souls with idle lip-labour, instead of the spiritual service from the heart, and the sacrifice of fools, who offer God some outward thing, while they deny him their hearts, and holy obedience, do proceed from this, that They think to be heard for their much babling, Matth. 6. 7. and they consider not that they do evil, Eccl. 5. 1. All the filthiness and presumption of the ungodly, and consequently all their ungodly lives, are much from their erroneous thoughts: He that thinketh he is something when he is nothing, deceiveth himself, Gal. 6. 3. O come into the light, and forsake your darkness: For sinful thoughts are like hobgoblins and hags, that fly from the light, and like worms and serpents, that creep into holes and crawl and gender in the dark.

Dir. 14. §. 15 Direct. 14. Remembring what an opening of thoughts there will be when you come into the light, either here by conviction, or at the furthest at the day of judgement. Then you will be ashamed to see what filth and vanity you entertained; and with what dross and rubbish you stuft your minds. When the light comes in, what abundance of things will you see to your astonishment, in the dungeon of your hearts, which now you take no notice of? Remember, that all your hidden thoughts must one day be brought into the open light: Say not that this is a thing impossible, because they are so numerous: For God who seeth them all at once, and causeth his sun to illuminate so many millions at once can make you see them all at once, and yet distinctly; and see the shame and filthiness of every one of them.

§. 16. Direct. 15. When you find that some thoughts of sin and vanity are following you still, for all that you can do, you must not therefore plunge your souls into so much sollicitousness, fear and trouble, as may discourage and distract your mind; but wait on God in the complacential and obedential way of cure. It is the Tempters method to keep sinners utterly careless of their thoughts, and senseless of any sin that is in them, as long as he can; and when that hope faileth him, he will labour to make a humble obedient soul so sensible of the sin of his thoughts, and so careful about them, as to confound him, and cast him into melancholy, discouragement, and despair; and then he will have no command of his thoughts at all; but they will be as much ungoverned another way, and feed continually upon terror. The end of this Temptation is to distract you and confound you: The pretence of the Tempter will be contrary to his end: For while he driveth you with terrors to think of nothing else, but what you have been or are thinking on, and to make your own thoughts the only or principal matter of your thoughts, he will confound you, and make you undisposed to all good, and unable to govern your thoughts at all: But if you principally study the excellencies of God and Godliness, and take the course which tends to make Religion pleasant to you, and withal keep up an awful obedience to God, this Complacential obedience will best prevail. Dir. 15.

§. 17. Direct. 16. Therefore deliver up your hearts to Christ in Love and duty, and consecrate your thoughts entirely to his service, and keep them still exercised on him, or in his work: and this will most effectually cure them of vanity and sin. If you have a friend that you love entirely, you will not feed swine in the room that must entertain him: You will not leave it nasty and unclean: You will not leave it common to every dirty unsuitable companion, to intrude at pleasure and disturb your friend: So Love and Pleasure will be readily and composedly careful, to keep clean the heart, and shut out vain and filthy thoughts; and say, This room is for a better guest; Nothing shall come here, which my Lord abhorreth: Is he willing so wonderfully to condescend, as to take up so mean a habitation, and shall I straighten him, or offend him, by letting in his noysome enemies? Will he dwell in my heart, and shall I suffer thoughts of pride, or lust, or malice, to dwell with him, or to enter in? Are these fit companions for the spirit of grace? Do I delight to grieve him? I know as soon as ever they come in, he will either resist them till he drive them out again, or he will go out himself: And shall I drive away so dear a friend, for the love of a filthy pernicious enemy? Or do I delight in war? Would I have a continual combat in my heart? Shall I put the Spirit of Christ to fight for his habitation, against such an ignominious foe?—Indeed there is no true cure for sinful, vain, unprofitable thoughts, but by the contrary: by calling up the thoughts unto their proper work, and finding them more profitable employment: And this is by consecrating the Heart and them entirely to the Love and service of him, that hath by the wonders of his Love, and by the strange design of his purchase and merits, so well deserved them. Let Christ come in, and deliver him the Key, and pray him to keep thy heart as his own, and he will cast out buyers and sellers from his temple, and will not suffer his house of prayer to be a den of thieves. But if you receive Christ with reserves, and keep up designs for the world and flesh, marvel not if Christ will be no partners with them, but leave all to those guests, which you would not leave for him. Dir. 16.

Sicut ignis in aquâ durare non potest, ita neque turpis cogitatio in Dei amante: Quoniam omnis qui Dei amator est, etiam laboris amans est: Cæterum labor voluntarius, naturaliter voluptati inimicus existit. Marcus Aurem.

Tit. 2. Directions to furnish the Mind with good Thoughts.

TO have the mind well furnished with Matter for holy and profitable thoughts, is necessary to all to have the use of Reason, though not to all alike: But I shall here present you only with such materials as are necessary to a holy life, and to be used in our daily walk with God; and not meddle with such as are proper to Pastors, Magistrates, or other special callings, though I may give some general Directions also for Students in the End of this.

Dir. 1. 1. Our own Interest, and End.

§. 1. Direct. 1. Understand well your own Interest and great Concernments, and be well resolved what you live for, and what is your true felicity and End: and then this will command your Thoughts to serve it. The End is it that the Means are all chosen for, and used for. A mans estimation directeth his Intention and designs: And his Intention and designs command his thoughts. These will certainly have the first and chiefest, the most serious, and practical, and effectual thoughts; though some by thoughts may run out another way: As the Miller will be sure to keep so much water as is necessary to grind his grist, though he may let that run by which he thinks he hath no need of: As you gather in all your Corn and Fruit for your selves at harvest, though perhaps you will leave some scatterings which you do not value much for any that will to gather: so whatever a man taketh for his ultimate end and true felicity, will have the store and stream of his cogitations, though he may scatter some few upon other things, when he thinks he may do it, without any detriment to his main design. As a travellers face is ordinarily towards his journeys end, though so far as he thinks it doth not stop him, he may look behind him or on each side: so our main end will in the main carry on our thoughts. And therefore unholy souls that know not practically any higher end, than the prosperity and pleasure of the flesh, and the plenty and honour of the world, cannot possibly exercise any holy Government over their thoughts; but their minds and consciences are defiled, and their thoughts made carnal as is their end: Nor is there any possibility of curing their vicious wicked thoughts, and of ordering them acceptably to God, but by curing their worldly carnal minds, and causing them to change their designs and ends. And this must be by understanding what is their interest. Know well but what it is that is most Necessary for you, and Best for you, and it will change your hearts, and save your souls. Know this, and your Thoughts will never want matter to be employed on: nor will they be suffered to wander much abroad. Therefore it is that the expectation of death, and the thought of coming presently to judgment, do use more effectually to supply the mind, with the wisest and most useful thoughts, than the learnedst Book or ordinary means can. That which tells a man best, what he hath to do, doth best tell him what he hath to think on: But the approach of death, and the appearance of eternity, doth best tell a dull and fleshly sinner, what he hath to do: This tells, and tells him roundly, that he must presently search his heart and life, and judge himself as one that is going to the final judgment; and that it is high time for him to look out for the remedy for his sin and misery, &c. And therefore it will command his thoughts this way. Ask any Lawyer, Physician, or Tradesman what commands his Thoughts; and you will find that his Interest, and his Ends, and work command them. Know what it is to have an immortal soul, that must live in Joy or Wo for ever, and what it is to be always so near to the irreversible determining sentence, and what it is to have this short uncertain time and no more, to make our preparation in, and then it's easie to foretel which way your thoughts will go. A man that knoweth his house is on fire, will be thinking how to quench it: A man that knoweth he is entring into a mortal sickness, will be thinking how to cure it. There is no better way to have your Thoughts both furnished and acted aright, than to know your Interest, and right End.

§. 2. Direct. 2. Know God aright, and behold him by the eye of an effectual faith, and you shall never want matter for holy thoughts: His Greatness and continual presence with you, may command your thoughts, and awe them, and keep them from masterless vagaries: His wisdom will find them continual employment, upon the various, excellent and delectable subjects, of his natural and supernatural revelation; but no where so much as upon himself: In God thou maist find matter for thy cogitations and affections, most high and excellent, delighting the mind with a continual suavity, affording still fresh delights, though thou meditate on him a thousand years, or to all eternity: Thou maist better say, that the Ocean hath not water enough for thee to swim in, or that the Earth hath not room enough for thee to tread upon, then that there is not matter enough in God, for thy longest Meditations, and most delighting satisfying thoughts. The blessed Angels and Saints in Heaven, will find enough in God alone, to employ their minds to all eternity: O horrid darkness and Atheism that yet remaineth on our hearts! that we should want matter for our thoughts, to keep them from feeding upon air or filth! or want matter for our delight, to keep our minds from begging it at the creatures door, or hungring for the husks that feed the Swine! when we have the Infinite God, Omnipotent, Omniscient, most good and bountiful, our life, and hope, and happiness to think on with delight. 2. God.

Dir. 3. 3. The world to come.

§. 3. Direct. 3. If you have but an eye of faith, to see the things of the unseen world, as revealed in the sacred word, you cannot want matter to employ your thoughts. Scripture is the glass in which you may see the other world: There you may see the Antient of Days, the Eternal Majesty shining in his Glory, for the felicitating of holy glorified Spirits: There you may see the humane nature advanced above Angels, and enjoying the highest Glory next to the uncreated Majesty; and Christ reigning as the King of all the world, and all the Angels of God obeying, honouring and worshipping him: you may see him sending his Angels on his gracious messages, to the lowest members of his body, the little ones of his flock on earth: you may see him interceding for all his Saints, and procuring their peace and entertainment with the Father, and preparing for their reception when they pass into those mansions, and welcoming them one by one as they pass hence: There you may see the glorious celestial society attending, admiring, extolling, worshipping the Great Creator, the Gracious Redeemer, and the Eternal Spirit, with uncessant, glorious, and harmonious Praise: you may see them burning in the delicious flames of holy Love, drawn out by the Vision of the face of God, and by the streams of Love which he continually poureth out upon them: you may see the magnetick attraction of the uncreated Love, and the felicitating closure of the attracted Love of holy Spirits, thus united unto God by Christ, and feasting everlastingly upon him: you may see the ravishments of joy, and the unspeakable pleasures which all these blessed Spirits have in this transporting Sight, and Love, and Praise. You may see the ecstasies of Joy which possess the souls of those that are newly passed from the

the Body, and escaped the sins and miseries of this world; and find there such sudden ravishing entertainment, unspeakably beyond their former expectations, conceivings or belief. You may see there with what wonder, what pity, what loathing and detestation, those holy glorified souls look down upon earth, on the negligence, contempt, sensuality, and profaneness of the dreaming and distracted world! You may see there, what you shall be for ever, if you be the holy ones of Christ, and where you must dwell, and what you must do, and what you shall enjoy. All this you may so know by sound believing, as to be carried to it as sincerely as if your eyes had seen it, Heb. 11. 1. 2 Cor. 5. 7. And yet can your thoughts be idle, or carnal, or worldly and sinful for want of work? Are your meditations dry and barren for want of matter to employ them. Doth the fire of Love or other holy affections go out for want of fuel to feed it? Is not Heaven and Eternity spacious enough for your minds to expatiate in? Is not such a world as that, sufficient for you to study, with fresh and delectable variety of discoveries from day to day? or that which is more delightful than variety? Would you have more matter, or higher and more excellent matter, or sweeter and more pleasant matter, or matter which doth nearlier concern your selves! Get that faith which all that shall be saved Live by, which makes things absent as operative (in some measure) as if they were present, and that which will be, as if it now were, and that which is unseen, as if it were now open to your eyes; and then your Thoughts will want neither matter to work upon, nor altogether an actuating excitation.

See in my Tract. on Heb. 11.1. called, The Life of Faith.

If this were not enough, I might tell you what Faith can see also in Hell, which is not unworthy of your serious Thoughts! What work is there; what direful complaints and lamentations; what self-tormentings, and what sense of Gods displeasure, and for what: But I will wholly pass this by, that you may see, there is delightful work enough for your thoughts, and that I set you no unpleasant task.

Dir. 4. 4. The work of Love.

§. 4. Direct. 4. Get but the Love of God well kindled in your Heart, and it will find employment, even the most high and sweet employment, for your Thoughts. Your selves shall be the Judges, whether your Love doth not for the most part, rule your thoughts; assigning them their work, and directing them when, and how long to think on it? See but how a lustful lover is carried after a beloved silly piece of flesh? Their thoughts will so easily and so constantly run after it, that they need no spur! Mark in what a stream it carrieth them! how it feedeth and quickneth their invention, and elevateth an ordinary fancy into a Poetical and passionate strain? What abundance of matter can a Lover find, in the narrow compass of a dirty Corpse for his thoughts to work on night and day? And will not the Love of God then, much more fill and feast your thoughts? How easily can the Love of mony, find matter for the thoughts of the worldling from one year to another? It's easie to think of any thing which you love. O what a happy spring of meditation, is a rooted predominant Love of God? Love him strongly and you cannot forget him: You will then see him in every thing that meets you, and hear him in every one that speaketh to you: If you miss him, or have offended him, you will think on him with grief: If you taste of his Love, you will think of him with Delight: If you have but hope, you will think of him with Desire, and your Minds will be taken up in seeking him, and in understanding and using the Means by which you may come to enjoy him Love is ingenious, and full, and quick, and active, and resolute: It is valiant, and patient, and exceeding industrious, and delighteth to encounter difficulties, and to appear in labours, and to shew it self in advantageous sufferings: and therefore it maketh the mind in which it reigneth, exceeding busie; and findeth the thoughts a world of work. If God be not in all the thoughts of the ungodly, Psal. 10. 4. it is because he is not in his heart. He may be nigh their mouths, but is far from their reins, Jer. 12. 2. Do those men believe themselves, or would they be believed by any one that is wise, who say, they Love God above all, and yet neither think of him, nor love to think of him? but are unwearied in thinking of their wealth, and honours, and the pleasures of their flesh? Consider this ye that forget God, lest he tear you in pieces, and there be none to deliver you, Psal. 50. 22.

Dir. 5. 5. Jesus Christ and all the work of Redemption.

§. 5. Direct. 5. Soundly understand the wonderful mysteries of mans Redemption, and know Jesus Christ, and you need not want employment for your thoughts. For in him are hid all the Treasures of wisdom and knowledge, Col. 2. 3. He is the Power of God, and the Wisdom of God, 1 Cor. 1. 24. If the study of Aristotle, Plato, Plotinus, and their numerous followers and Commentators, can find work; for the thoughts of men that would know the works of God, or would be accounted good Philosophers, even for many years together, or a great part of their lives, what work then may a Christian find for his Thoughts in Jesus Christ, who of God is made to us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption, 1 Cor. 1. 30. For it pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell, Col. 1. 19. And therefore in him there is fulness of matter for our meditations; As Paul determined to know nothing (or make ostentation of no other knowledge) but Christ crucified, 1 Cor. 2. 2. So if your thoughts had nothing to work upon many years together, but Christ crucified, they need not stand still a moment for want of most suitable and delightful matter. The mystery of the Incarnation alone, may find you work to search and admire many ages! But if thence you proceed to that world of wonderful matter which you may find in his Doctrine, Miracles, example, sufferings, temptations, victories, resurrection, ascention, and in his Kingly, Prophetical and Priestly Offices, and in all the benefits which he hath purchased for his flock, O what full and pleasant work is here for the daily thoughts of a believer! The soul may dwell here with continual delight, till it say with Paul, Gal. 2. 20. I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live: yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me. Therefore daily bow your knees to the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in Heaven and earth is named, that he will grant you according to the Riches of his Glory, to be strengthned with might by his Spirit in the inner man, that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith, that being rooted and grounded in Love, you may be able to comprehend with all Saints, what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height, and to know the Love of Christ which passeth knowledge, that ye may be filled with all the fulness of God, Ephes. 3. 14. to 20.

Dir. 6. 6. The holy Scriptures.

§. 6. Direct. 6. Search the holy Scriptures, and acquaint your selves well with the Oracles of God, which are able to make you wise unto salvation, and you will find abundant matter for your thoughts. If you cannot find work enough for your minds, among all those heights and depths, those excellencies and difficulties, it is because you never understood them, or never set your hearts to search them. What mysterious Doctrines! how sublime and heavenly are there for you to meditate on as long as you live? What a perfect Law! a system of precepts most spiritual and pure! What terrible threatnings against offenders, are there to be matter of your meditations? What wonderful histories of Love and Mercy! What holy examples! What a treasury of precious promises promises, on which lyeth our hope of life eternal! What full and free expressions of grace! What a joyful act of pardon and oblivion to penitent believing sinners! In a word, the character of our inheritance, and the Law which we must be governed and judged by, is there before us for our daily Meditation! David that had much less of it than we, saith, O how I love thy Law! it is my meditation all the day! Psal. 119. 97. And God said to Joshua, (1. 8.) This Book of the Law shall not depart out of thy mouth, but thou shalt meditate therein day and night, that thou maist observe to do according to all that is written therein. And Moses commanded the Israelites, that these words should be in their hearts, and that they teach them diligently to their children, and talk of them when they sate in their houses, and when they walked by the way, and when they lay down, and when they rose up, and to write them on the posts of their houses, and on their gates, &c. that they might be sure to remember them, Deut. 6. 7.

Dir. 7. 7. Our selves as we are Gods work.

§. 7. Direct. 7. Know thy self as well as thou art the work of God, and in thy self thou wilt find abundant matter for thy meditations. There thou hast the natural Image of God to meditate on and admire; even the noble faculties of thy understanding and free will, and executive power: And thou hast his Moral or Spiritual Image to meditate on, if thou be not unregenerate: even thy holy Wisdom, Will and Power, or thy holy Light, and Love, and Power with promptitude for holy practice; and all in the Unity of holy Life. And there thou hast his Relative Image to meditate on; even thy being. 1. The Lord or Owner. 2. The Ruler. 3. The Benefactor to the inferiour creatures, and their End. O the world of mysteries which thou carriest continually about thee in that little room. What abundance of wonders are in thy body! which is fearfully and wonderfully made! And the greater wonders in thy soul! Thou art thy self the clearest glass that God is to be seen in under Heaven! as thou art a man and a Saint! And therefore the worthiest matter for thy own Meditations (except that holy Word, which is thy Rule, and the Holy Church, which is but a coalition of many such.) What a shame is it, that almost all men do Live and dye such strangers to themselves, as to be utterly unacquainted with the innumerable excellencies and mysteries, which God hath laid up in them; and yet to let their thoughts run out upon vanities and toys, and complain of their barrenness, and want of matter, to feed their better Meditations?

See my Book of the Mischiefs of Self-ignorance.

Dir. 8. 8. Our sins and wants.

§. 8. Direct. 8. Be not a stranger to the many sins, and wants, and weaknesses of thy soul, and thou never needest to be empty of matter for thy meditations. And though these thoughts be not the sweetest, yet thy own folly hath made them necessary. If thou be dangerously sick, or but painfully sore, thou canst scarce forget it: If poverty afflict thee with pinching wants, thy Thoughts are taken up with cares and trouble day and night. If another wrong thee, thou canst easily think on it. And hast thou so often wronged thy God and Saviour, and so unkindly vilified his mercy, and so unthankfully set light by saving Grace, and so presumptuously and securely ventured on his wrath, and yet dost thou find a scarcity of matter for thy meditations? Hast thou all the sins of thy youth, and ignorance to think on, and all the sins of thy rashness and sensuality, and of thy negligence and sloth, and of thy worldliness and selfishness, ambition and pride, thy passions and thy omissions; and all thy sinful thoughts and words, and yet art thou scanted of matter for thy thoughts? Dost thou carry about thee such a body of death? so much selfishness, pride, worldliness, and carnality; so much ignorance, unbelief, averseness to God, and backwardness to all that is spiritual and holy; so much passion, and readiness to sin; and yet dost thou not find enough to think on? Look over the sins of all thy life: see them in all their aggravations: as they have been committed against knowledge, or means and helps, against mercies, and judgments and thy own vows or promises; in prosperity and under affliction it self; in secret and with others; in thy general and particular calling, and in all thy relations; in every place, and time, and condition that thou hast lived in! thy sins against God directly, and thy injuries or neglects of man! sins against holy duties, and sins in holy duties: in prayer, hearing, reading, Sacraments, meditation, conference, reproofs, and receiving of reproofs from others: thy negligent preparations for death and judgment, the strangeness of thy soul to God and Heaven——— Is not here work enough for thy Meditations? certainly if thou think so, it is because thy heart never felt the bitterness of sin, nor was ever yet acquainted with true Repentance, but the time is yet to come, that Light must shew thee what sin is, and what thou art, and what thou hast done, and how full thy heart is of the Serpents brood, and that thy sin must find thee out! Dost thou not know that thy sins are as the Sands of the Shore, or as the hairs upon thy head for number, and that every sin hath deadly poyson in it, and malignant enmity to God and holiness; and yet are they not enough to keep thy Thoughts from being idle? Judge by their language whether it be so with penitents? Psal. 51. 2, 3. Wash me throughly from my wickedness, and cleanse me from my sin: for I acknowledge my transgressions, and my sin is ever before me, Psal 40. 12. For innumerable evils have compassed me about: mine iniquities have taken hold upon me, so that I am not able to look up: they are more than the hairs of my head: therefore my heart faileth me. Psal. 119. 57. I thought on my ways, and turned my feet unto thy testimonies. True Repentance is thus described, Ezek. 36. 31. Then shall ye remember your own evil ways, and your doings that were not good, and shall loath your selves in your own sight, for your own iniquities, and for your abominations. Yea Gods forgiving and forgetting your sins, must not make you forget them, Ezek. 16. 60, 61, 62, 63. I will establish to thee an everlasting Covenant; Then thou shalt remember thy ways and be ashamed——— And I will establish my Covenant with thee——That thou maist remember and be confounded, and never open thy mouth any more, because of thy shame, when I am pacified towards thee for all that thou hast done, saith the Lord God of Hosts.

Thus God may be made the object and occasion of good: it is good to meditate on evil to hate it, and avoid it. Keep acquaintance with Conscience, & read over its Books, and it will furnish your thoughts with humbling matter.

Dir. 9. 9. Satans Temptations.

§. 9. Direct. 9. Be not a stranger to the methods and subtelties and diligence of Satan in his Temptations to undo thy soul, and thou wilt find matter enough to keep thy thoughts from idleness, He is thinking how to deceive thee and destroy thee; and doth it not concern thee to think how to defeat him and escape and save thy self? If the Hare run not as fast as the Dog, he is like to dye for it. O that thy eyes were but opened to see the snares that are laid for thee in thy nature, in thy temperature and passions, in thy interests, thy relations, thy friends and acquaintance, and ordinary company; in thy businesses, and possessions, thy house, and goods, and lands, and cattle, and tenants, and servants, and all that thou tradest with, or hast to do with in thine apparel and recreations; in thy meat and drink, and sleep, and ease, in prosperity and adversity; in mens good thoughts, or bad thoughts of thee, in their praise and in their dispraise; in their benefits and their wrongs; their favour and in their falling out; in their pleasing or displeasing thee: in thy thinking and in thy speaking; speaking, and in every thing that thou hast to do with! Didst thou but see all these temptations and also see to what they tend, and whether they would bring thee, thou wouldst find matter to cure the idleness or impertinencies of thy thoughts.

Dir. 10. 10. The whole World.

§. 10. Direct. 10. The world and every creature in it, which thou daily seest, and which revealeth to thee the great Creator, might be enough to keep thy Thoughts from idleness. If Sun and Moon and Stars, if Heaven and Earth and all therein be not enough to employ thy thoughts, let thy idleness have some excuse. I know thou wilt say, that it is upon some of these things that thou dost employ them: Yea: but dost thou not first destroy, and mortifie, and make nonsense of that on which thou meditatest? Dost thou not first separate it from God, who is the life, and glory, and end, and meaning of every creature? Thou killest it, and turnest out the soul, and thinkest only on the Corps! or on the Creature made another thing, as food for thy sensual desires! As the Kite thinketh on the Birds and Chickens, to devour them to satisfy her greedy appetite: Thus you can think of all Gods works, so far as they accommodate your flesh. But the World is Gods Book, which he set man at first to read; and every Creature is a Letter, or Syllable, or Word, or Sentence, more or less, declaring the name and will of God. There you may behold his wonderful Almightiness, his unsearchable Wisdom, his unmeasurable Goodness, mercy and compassions; and his singular regard of the sons of men! Though the ungodly, proud and carnal Wits do but play with, and study the shape, and comeliness, and order of the Letters, Syllables and Words, without understanding the Sense and End; yet those that with holy and illuminated Minds come thither to behold the footsteps of the Great and Wise and bountiful Creator, may find not only matter to employ, but to profit and delight their Thoughts; They may be wrapt up by the things that are seen, into the Sacred Admirations, Reverence, Love and Praise, of the glorious Maker of all who is unseen; And thus to the sanctified all things will be sanctified; and the study of common things will be to them Divine and Holy.

Dir. 11. 11. Providence about the World.

§. 11. Direct. 11. Be not a stranger to, or neglectful Disregarder of the Wonders of Providence in Gods Administrations in the World, and thou wilt find store of matter for thy Thoughts. The dreadfulness of Judgments, the delightfulness of mercies, the misteriousness of all, will be matter of daily search and admiration to thee. Think of the strange Preservations of the Church! of a people hated by all the world! how such a flock of Lambs is kept in safety, among so many ravenous Wolves. Think of Gods sharp afflictions of his offending people! of his severe consuming judgments exercised sometimes upon the wicked, when he means to set up here and there a monument of his justice, for the Warning of presumptuous sinners. Go see how the wicked Prov. 1. 32. are deceived by befooling Pleasures, and how the Prosperity of fools destroyeth them; how they flou- Psal. 37. rish to day as a green Bay-tree, or as the flower of the field; and then go into the Sanctuary and see their end, how to morrow they are cut down and withered, and the place of their abode doth know them no more. Go see how God delighteth to abase the proud, and to scatter them in the imagination of their Hearts; to put down the mighty from their Seats, and to exalt them of low degree: to fill the hungry with good things; and to send the Rich empty away, Luke 1. 51, 52, 53. How great are his signs, and how mighty are his wonders? His Kingdom is an everlasting Kingdom, Dan. 4. 3. He ruleth in the Kingdom of men and giveth it to whomsoever he will, vers. 26. 32. For wisdom and might are his; and he changeth the times and the seasons: he removeth Kings and setteth up Kings: he giveth wisdom to the wise, and knowledge to them that know understanding, Dan. 2. 20, 21, 22. He revealeth the deep and secret things: he knoweth what is in darkness, and the light dwelleth with him. The Lord is known by the judgments which he executeth; the wicked is snared in the work of his own hand, Psal. 9. 16. Mark how the upright are afflicted daily, and how the feet of violence trample on them; and yet how they rejoice, and adhere to that God who doth afflict them, and pity and pray for their miserable Persecutors and Oppressors; and how all things do work together for their good, Rom. 8. 28. Wonderful are all the Works of God, sought out of them that have Pleasure therein, Psal. 111. 2. The Histories of former ages, and the observation of the present, may shew thee a World of matter for thy thought.

Psal. 105. 22. See Psal. 104. & 105. & 106. & 107. & 122. & 124. & 135. & 136. & 145. & 147. & 148. & 149.

Dir. 12. 12. Gods Image.

§. 12. Direct. 12. Understand all the Lineaments and Beauty of Gods Image upon a holy Soul, the excellency and use of every Grace, and the harmony of all; and thou wilt have store of profitable Matter for thy thoughts. Know the Nature of every Grace, and the place and order of it, and the office, use, and exercise of it; and the means and motives, the opposites, dangers and preservatives of it: Know it as Gods Image, and see and Love thy Maker and Redeemer and Regenerator in it: Know how God loveth it, and how useful it is to our serving and honouring him in the world; and how deformed and vile a thing the soul is, that is without it: Know well what Faith is; what wisdom and prudence are! what Repentance and humility, and mortification are! what Hope and fear, and desire, and obedience and meekness, and temperance, and sobriety, and chastity and contentation, and justice, and self-denyal are; especially know the nature and force of Love to God, and to his servants, and to neighbours, and to enemies; Know what a holy resignation and devotedness to God is: and what is watchfulness, diligence, zeal, fortitude, and perseverance, patience, submission and peace: Know what the worth, and use, the helps and hinderances of all these are, and then your Thoughts will not be idle.

Dir. 13. 13. The daily motions of the spirit.

§. 13 Direct. 13. If thou be not a stranger to the spirit of grace, or a neglecter of his daily motions and perswasions and operations on thy heart, the attendance and improvement of them will keep thy thoughts from rusty idleness and a vagrant course. It is not a small matter to be daily entertaining so noble a guest, and daily observing the offers and motions of so great a benefactor; and daily receiving the gifts of so bountiful a Lord, and daily accepting his necessary helps; and daily obeying the saving precepts of so great and beneficent a God! If you know how insufficient you are without him, to will or to do, to perform or to think, or purpose any good, and that all your sufficiency is of him! If you knew that it is the great skill and diligence requisite in all that will sail successfully to the desired Land of Rest, to know the Winds of the Spirits helps, and to set all your Sails to the right improvement of them, and to bestir you while such gales continue, you would find greater work than wandering for your thoughts.

Phil. 2. 13. 2 Cor. 3. 5. 2 Cor. 12. 9.

Dir. 14. 14. All our Duty to God and Man.

§. 14. Direct. 14. Be not ignorant or neglective of that frame and course of holy duty to God and man, in which all your lives should be employed, and you cannot want matter to employ your thoughts upon. Your pulse and breath, and natural motions, will hold on whether you think of them or not: But so will not moral holy motion, for that must be rational and voluntary. You have all the powers of soul and body, to exercise either upon God or for God. You must know him, fear him, love him, obey obey him, truſt him, worſhip him. pray to him, praiſe him, give thanks to him, bewail your ſins, and hear his Word, and reverently uſe his Name and Day! And is not the underſtanding and learning how to do all this, and the ſeaſonable ſerious practice of it all, ſufficient to keep the Thoughts from idleneſs. O what a deal of work doth a ſerious Chriſtian find for his thoughts, about ſome one of theſe? about praying aright, or hearing, or receiving the Sacrament of Chriſts Body and Blood aright! But beſides all theſe, what a deal of duty have you to perform, to Magiſtrates, Paſtors, Parents, Maſters, and other ſuperiors? to ſubjects, people, children, ſervants and other inferiors? to every neighbour, for his ſoul, his body, his eſtate and name; and to do all as you would be done by? And beſides all this, how much have you to do directly for your ſelves; for your ſouls, and bodies, and families, and eſtates! Againſt your ignorance, infidelity, pride, ſelfiſhneſs, ſenſuality, worldlineſs, paſſion, ſloth, intemperance, cowardice, luſt, uncharitableneſs, &c. Is not here matter for your thoughts?

Dir. 15. 15. All our particular Mercies.

§. 15. Direct. 15. Overlook not that life full of particular mercies, which God hath beſtowed on your ſelves, and you will find pleaſant and profitable matter for your thoughts. To ſpare me the labour of repeating them look back to Chap. 3. Dir. 14. Think of that mercy which brought you into the world, and choſe your Parents, your place, and your condition: which brought you up, and bore with you patiently in all your ſins, and cloſely warned you of every danger: which ſeaſonably afflicted you, and ſeaſonably delivered you; and heard your Prayers in many a diſtreſs: which hath yet kept the worſt of you from death and Hell: and hath Regenerated, juſtified, adopted and ſanctified thoſe that he hath fitted for eternal life! How many ſins he hath forgiven! How many he hath in part ſubdued! How many and ſuitable helps he hath vouchſafed you? From how many Enemies he hath ſaved you? how oft he hath delighted you by his word and grace? what comforts you have had in his Servants and ordinances, in your relations and callings? His mercies are innumerable, and yet do your meditations want matter to ſupply them! If I ſhould but recite the words of David in many thankful Pſalms, you would think Mercy found his Thoughts employment.

Dir. 16. 16. The account at Judgement.

§. 16. Direct. 16. Foreſee that exact and righteous judgement, which ſhortly you have to undergo, and it will do much to find you employment for your thoughts. A man that muſt give an account to God of all that he hath done both good and evil, and knoweth not how ſoon, for ought he knows before to morrow, methinks ſhould find himſelf ſome thing better than vanity to think on! Is it nothing to be ready for ſo great a day? To have your juſtification ready! your accounts made up! Your Conſciences cleanſed and quieted on good grounds! To know what anſwer to make for your ſelves againſt the accuſer! To be clear and ſure that you are indeed Regenerate, and have a part in Chriſt, and are waſhed in his blood, and reconciled to God, and ſhall not prove hypocrites and ſelf-deceivers in that trying day! when it is a ſentence that muſt finally decide the queſtion, whether we ſhall be ſaved or damned; and muſt determine us to Heaven or Hell for ever, and you have ſo ſhort and uncertain a time for your preparation, will not this adminiſter matter to your Thoughts? If you were going to a Judgement for your lives or all your eſtates, you would think it ſufficient to provide you matter for your thoughts by the way! How much more this final dreadful judgement.

Dir. 17. 17. Our Afflictions.

§. 17. Direct. 17. If all this will not ſerve the turn, it's ſtrange if God call not home your thoughts, by ſharp afflictions: and methinks the improvement of them, and the removal of them ſhould find ſome employment for your thoughts. It's time then to ſearch and try your ways, and turn again unto the Lord, Lam. 3. 4. To find out the Achan that troubleth your peace, and know the voice of the rod, and what God is angry at, and what it is that he calleth you to mind! To know what root it is that beareth theſe bitter fruits: and how they may be ſanctified to make you conformable to Chriſt and partakers of his holineſs, Heb. 12. 10. Beſides the exerciſe of holy patience and ſubmiſſion, there is a great deal of work to be done in ſufferings; to exerciſe faith, to honour God and the good cauſe of our ſuffering; and to humble our ſelves for the evil cauſe; and to get the benefit. And if you will not meditate of the Duty, you ſhall meditate of the pain whether you will or not; and ſay as Lam. 3. 17, 18, 19, 20. I forgat proſperity, and I ſaid, My ſtrength and my hope is periſhed from the Lord; Remembring my affliction and my miſery, the wormwood and the gall: My ſoul hath them ſtill in remembrance, and is humbled in me. Put not God to remember you by his ſpur, and help your meditations by ſo ſharp a means! Pſal. 78. 33, 34, 35. Therefore did he conſume their days in vanity, and their years in trouble: when he ſlew them then they ſought him, and they returned and enquired early after God; and they remembred that God was their Rock, and the high God their Redeemer.

Dir. 18. 18. The buſineſs of your Callings.

§. 18. Direct. 18. Be diligent in your callings and ſpend no time in idleneſs, and perform your labours with holy minds, to the glory of God, and in obedience to his commands, and then your thoughts will have the leſs leiſure and liberty for vanity or idleneſs. Employments of the body will employ the thoughts: They that have much to do have much to think on: For they muſt do it prudently and skilfully and carefully, that they may do it ſucceſsfully: And therefore muſt think how to do it: And the urgency and neceſſity of buſineſs will almoſt neceſſitate the thoughts, and ſo carry them on and find them work (Tho' ſome employments more than others) And let none think that theſe Thoughts are bad or vain becauſe they are about worldly things: For if our Labours themſelves be not bad or vain, then neither are thoſe thoughts which are needful to the well-doing of our work. Nor let any worldling pleaſe himſelf with this, and ſay, My thoughts are taken up about my calling: For his calling it ſelf is perverted by him, and made a carnal work to carnal ends, when it ſhould be ſanctified. That the thoughts about your labours may be good, 1. Your Labours themſelves muſt be good, performed in obedience to God, and for the good of others, and to his glory. 2. Your Labours and thoughts muſt keep their bounds, and the higher things muſt be ſtill preferred, and ſought and thought on in the firſt place: And your Labours muſt ſo far employ your thoughts as is needful to the well-doing of them: but better things muſt be thought on, in ſuch labours as leave a vacancy to the Thoughts. But diligence in your calling is a very great help to keep out ſinful thoughts, and to furniſh us with thoughts which in their place are good.

Dir. 19. 19. All Ordinances and Means of Grace.

§. 19. Direct. 19. You have all Gods ſpiritual helps and holy ordinances to feed your meditations, and to quicken them, which ſhould be uſed when your minds grow dull or barren. When your minds are empty and you cannot pump up plentiful matter for holy thoughts, the reading of a ſeaſonable book, or conference with a full experienced Chriſtian, will furniſh you with matter: ſo will the hearing of a profitable Sermon, and ſometime prayer will do more than meditation. And weak headed perſons, of ſmall knowledge and ſhallow memories, must fetch the matter of their meditations thus more frequently from reading and conference than others need to do: As they can hold but a little at a time, so they must go the ofter: As he that goeth to the Water with a spoon or Dish, must go ofter than they that go with a more capacious vessel. Others can carry a store-house of meditation still about them; but persons of very small knowledge and memory, must have their meditations fed by others, as infants by the spoon. Therefore a little and often, is the best way both for their Reading or hearing, and for their holy thoughts. How great a mercy is it, that weak Christians have such store of helps? that when their heads are empty, they have books and friends that are not empty, from whence they may fetch help as they want it: and that their hearts are not empty of the Love of God, which enclineth them to do more, than their parts enable them to do.

Dir. 20. 20. The miserable sinful world.

§. 20. Direct. 20. If all these do not sufficiently furnish your meditations, look through the world, and see what a multitude of miserable souls do call for your compassion and daily prayers for their relief. Think on the many nations that lie in the darkness of Idolatry and Infidelity! It is not past the sixth part of the world that are Christians, of any sort. The other five parts are Heathens and Mahometans and so are few Jews. And of this sixth part, it's but a small part that are Reformed from Popery, and such corruptions as the Eastern and Southern Christians also are too much defiled with. And in the Reformed Churches, how common is profaneness and worldliness, and how few are acquainted with the power of Godliness! What abundance of ignorant, and ungodly persons be there, who hate the power and practice of that Religion which they profess themselves they hope to be sav'd by, (as if they hoped to be saved for hating, persecuting and disobeying it.) And among those that seem more serious and obedient, how many are hypocrites? And how may are possest with pride and self-conceitedness, which breaketh forth into unrulineſs, contentions, and uncharitableness, factions, and divisions in the Church? How many Christians are ignorant, passionate, weak, unprofitable, and too many scandalous? And how few are judicious, prudent, heavenly, charitable, peaceable, humble, meek, laborious and fruitful, who set themselves wholly to be good and to do good? And of these few, how few are there that are not exercised under heavy afflictions from God, or cruel persecutions from ungodly men! What tiranny is exercised by the Turk without, and the Pope within, upon the sincerest followers of Christ? Set all this together and tell me, whether thy compassionate Thoughts or thy Prayers, do need to go out for want of fewel, or matter to feed upon from day to day?

Tit. 3. Directions how to make good Thoughts effectual: or, General Directions for Meditation.

HEre some Directions are preparatory, and some about the Work it self.

§. 1. Direct. 1. Be sure that reason maintain its Authority in the Command and Government of your Thoughts; and that they be not left Masterless to fancy and passion, and Objects to carry them which way they please. Diseased melancholy and crazed Persons have almost no Power over their own Thoughts: they cannot command them to what they would have them exercised about, nor call them off from any thing that they run out upon; but they are like an unruly horse, that hath a weak rider, or hath cast the rider; or like a masterless Dog, that will not go or come at your command. Whereas our Thoughts should be at the Direction of our Reason, and the Command of the Will, to go and come off as soon as they are bid. As you see a student can rule his Thoughts all day: he can appoint them what they shall meditate on, and in what order, and how long: So can a Lawyer, a Physician, and all sorts of men about the matters of their arts and callings. And so it should be with a Christian about the matters of his soul: All Rules of Direction are to little purpose, with them whose Reason hath lost its power, in governing their Thoughts. If I tell a man that is deeply melancholy, Thus and thus you must order your Thoughts! He will tell me that he cannot: His thoughts are not in his power. If you would give never so much he is not able to forbear thinking of that which is his disturbance, nor to command his thoughts to that which you direct him, nor to think but as he doth, even as his disease and trouble moveth him. And what good will precepts do to such? Grace and Doctrine and exhortation work by Reason and the commanding will. If a holy Person could manage his practical heart-raising meditations, but as orderly, and constantly, and easily as a carnal covetous Preacher can manage his thoughts in studying the same things, for carnal ends (to make a gain of them or to win applause) how happily would our work go on? And is it not sad to think that carnal ends should do so much more than spiritual, about the same things?

§. 2. Direct. 2. Carefully avoid the disease of melancholy: for that disableth Reason, and disableth it to rule the thoughts. Distraction wholly disableth: but melancholly disableth only in part, according to the measure of its prevalency: and therefore leaveth some room for advice. Dir. 2.

§. 3. Direct. 3. Take heed of sloth and negligence of the Will, whereby the Directions of Reason will be unexecuted, for want of Resolution and Command; and so every temptation will carry away the thoughts. A lazy Coachman will let the Horses go which way they list, because he will not strive with them; and will break his neck to save his labour. If when you feel unclean or worldly thoughts invade your minds, you will not give your wills the alarm, and rise up against them, and resolutely command them out; you will be like a lazy person that lieth in bed while he seeth Thieves robbing his house, and will let all go rather than he will rise and make resistance (A sign that he hath no great riches to lose, or else he would stir for it): And if you see your duty, on what your Thoughts should be employed, and will not resolutely call them up, and command them to their work, you will be like a sluggard that will let all his servants lie in bed, as well as he, because he will not speak to call them. You see by daily experience, that a mans Thoughts are much in the Power of his Will, and made to obey it: If money and honour, or the delight of knowing can cause a wicked Preacher to command his own thoughts, on good things, as aforesaid; you may command yours to the same things, if you will but as resolutely exercise your authority over them. Dir. 3.

§. 4. Direct. 4. Use not your Thoughts to take their liberty, and be ungoverned: For use will make them head-strong and not regard the Voice of Reason; and it will make Reason careless and remiss. Use and Custom hath great Power on our Minds: where we use to go, our path is plain; but where there is no use, there is no way. Where the water useth to run there is a chanel: It's hard ruling those that are used to be unruly. If use will do so much with the Tongue, (as we find in some that use to curse and swear, and speak vainly, and in others that use to speak soberly and religiously; in some that by use can speak well in conference, preaching or praying many hours together, when others that use it not can do almost nothing that way); why may it not much prevail with the Thoughts? Dir. 4.

Dir. 5. §. 5. Direct. 5. Take heed leſt the ſenſes and appetite grow too ſtrong, and maſter Reaſon; for if they do they will at once diſpoſſeſs it of the government of the thoughts, and will bruitiſhly uſurp the power themſelves. As when a rebellious army depoſeth a King, they do not only caſt off the yoak of ſubjection themſelves, but diſſolve the Government as to all other ſubjects, and uſually uſurp it themſelves and make themſelves Governors. If once you be ſervants to your fleſhly appetites, and ſenſe, your Thoughts will have no other work to do, and another way to go, when you call them to holy and neceſſary things: Eſpecially when the enticing objects are at hand. You may as well expect a clod to aſcend like fire, or a ſwine to delight in temperance, as a glutton, or drunkard, or fornicator, to delight in holy contemplation. Reaſon and Fleſh cannot both be the Governors.

Dir. 6. §. 6. Direct. 6. Keep under paſſions, that they depoſe not Reaſon from the Government of your thoughts. I told you before how they cauſe evil thoughts: and as much will they hinder good. Four paſſions are eſpecial enemies to meditation: 1. Anger 2. Perplexing Grief: 3. Diſturbing Fear: 4. But above all, exceſs of Pleaſure in any worldly fleſhly thing. Who can think that the mind is fit for holy contemplation, when it flames with wrath, or is diſtracted with grief and care, or trembleth with fear, or is drunk with pleaſure? Grief and fear are the moſt harmleſs of the four; yet all hinder Reaſon from governing the thoughts.

Dir. 7. §. 7. Direct. 7. Evil habits are another great hinderance of Reaſons command over our thoughts: Labour therefore diligently for the cure of this diſeaſe. Though Habits do not neceſſitate, they ſtrongly encline: And when every good thought muſt go againſt a ſtrong and conſtant inclination, it will weary Reaſon to drive on the ſoul, and you can expect but ſmall ſucceſs.

Dir. 8. §. 8. Direct. 8. Urgent and oppreſſing buſineſs doth almoſt neceſſitate the thoughts: Therefore avoid as much as you can ſuch urgencies when you would be free for meditation. Let your thoughts have as little diverting matter as may be, at thoſe times when you would have them entire and free for God.

Dir. 9. §. 9. Direct. 9. Crowds and ill company are no friends to meditation: Chooſe therefore the quietneſs of ſolitude when you would do much in this. As it is ill ſtudying in a croud, and unſeaſonable before a multitude to be at ſecret prayer (except ſome ſhort ejaculations); ſo is it as unmeet a ſeaſon for holy meditation. The mind that is fixedly employed with God, or about things ſpiritual, had need of all poſſible freedom and peace, to retire into it ſelf, and abſtract it ſelf from alien things, and ſeriouſly intend its greater work.

Dir. 10. §. 10. Direct. 10. Above all take heed of ſinful Intereſts and deſigns; for theſe are the garriſon of Satan, and muſt be battered down before any holy cogitations can take place. He that is ſet upon a deſign of riſing, or of growing rich, hath ſomething elſe to do, than to entertain thoſe ſober thoughts of things eternal, which are deſtructive of his carnal deſign.

Dir. 11. §. 11. Direct. 11. The impediments of Reaſons authority being thus removed, diſtinguiſh between your occaſional, and your ſtated ordinary courſe of thoughts! And as your hands have their ordinary ſtated courſe of labour, and every day hath its employment which you fore-expect, ſo let your Thoughts know where is their proper chanel, and their every days work: and let holy prudence appoint out proportionable time and ſervice for them. What a life will that man live that hath no known courſe of labour, but only ſuch as he is accidentally called to? His work muſt needs be uncertain, various, unprofitable, and uncomfortable, and next to none. And he that hath not a ſtated courſe of employment for his thoughts, will have them to do him little ſervice. Conſider firſt how much of the day is uſually to be ſpent in common buſineſs: And then conſider, whether it be ſuch, as taketh up your thoughts as well as your hands, or ſuch as leaveth your thoughts at liberty: as a Lawyer, a Phyſician, a Merchant, and moſt Tradeſmen, muſt employ their Thoughts to the well-doing of their work: And theſe muſt be the more deſirous of a ſeaſonable vacant hour for meditation, becauſe their thoughts muſt be otherwiſe employed all the reſt of the day: But a Weaver, a Taylor, and ſome other Tradeſmen, and day-labourers, may do their work well, and yet have their thoughts free for better things, a great part of the day: Theſe muſt contrive an ordinary way of employment for their thoughts, when their work doth not require them: and they need no other time for meditation. The reſt muſt entertain ſome ſhort occaſional meditations intermixt with their buſineſs; but they cannot then have time for more ſolemn meditation (which differeth from the other as a ſet prayer from a ſhort ejaculation; or a Sermon from an occaſional ſhort diſcourſe): They that have more time for their thoughts muſt beforehand prudently conſider, how much time it is beſt to ſpend in meditation, for the increaſe of knowledge, and how much for the exerciſe of holy affections; and on what ſubject, and in what order; and ſo to know their ordinary work.

Dir. 12. §. 12. Direct. 12. Lay your ſelves under the urgency of neceſſity, and the power of thoſe motives which ſhould moſt effectually engage your thoughts. In the aforeſaid inſtance, what is it that makes a wicked preacher that he can ſtudy Divine things orderly from year to year, but that he is ſtill under the power of his carnal motives, profit and honour and ſome delight? And if you will put your ſelves habitually and ſtatedly alſo, under the ſenſe and power of your far greater motives, as always perceiving how much it doth concern you, for your ſelves and others, and the honour of God, this would be a conſtant poiſe and ſpring, which being duly wound up, would keep the wheels in equal motion.

Dir. 13. §. 13. Direct. 13. Thus you muſt make the ſervice of your Maſter, and the ſaving of your ſelves and others, your buſineſs in the world, which you follow daily as your ordinary calling, and then it will carry on your thoughts. Whereas he that ſerveth God but on the by, with ſome occaſional ſervice, will think on him or his work but on the by, with ſome occaſional Thoughts. A cloſe and diligent courſe of holy living, is the beſt help to keep a conſtant profitable courſe of holy thinking.

Dir. 14. §. 14. Direct. 14. The chief point of ſkill and holy wiſdom, for this and other religious duties, is, to take that courſe which tends to make Religion pleaſant, and to draw your ſouls to delight in God; and to take heed of that which would make all grievous to you. It will be eaſie and ſweet to think of that which you take pleaſure in. But if Satan can make all irkſome and unpleaſant to you, your thoughts will avoid it, as you do a Carrion, when you ſtop your noſe and haſt away. Directions about the work it ſelf.

Dir. 15. §. 15. Direct. 1. As you muſt never be unfurniſhed of holy ſtore, ſo you muſt prudently make choice of your particular ſubject. As the choice of a fit

Text is half a good Sermon; so the choise of the fittest matter for you, is much of a good meditation. Which requireth some good acquaintance both with the Truth, and with your selves.

Dir. 2. §. 16. Direct. 2. To this end you must know in their several degrees, what subjects are in themselves most excellent to be meditated on. As the first and highest is the most blessed God himself, and the glorious Person of our Redeemer, and the New Jerusalem, or Heaven of Glory where he is revealed to his Saints: And then, the blessed society which there enjoyeth him, and the holy Vision, Love, and Joy, by which he is enjoyed: And next is the wonderful work of mans Redemption, and the Covenant of Grace, and the sanctifying Operations of the Holy Ghost, and all the Graces that make up Gods image on the soul! And then is, the state and priviledges of the Church, which is the Body of Christ, for whom all this is done and prepared. And next, is, the work of the Gospel by which this Church is gathered, edified and saved: And then, the matter of our own Salvation, and our State of Grace, and way to life. And then, the salvation of others: And then the common publick good, in temporal respects: And then, our personal bodily welfare: And next, the Bodily welfare of our neighbours: And lastly, those things that do but remotely tend to these. This is the order of desireableness and worth, which will tell you what should have estimative precedency in your thoughts and Prayers.

☞ The order of Subjects to be meditated on, as to their excellency.

Dir. 3. §. 17. Direct. 3. You must also know what Subject is then most seasonable for your Thoughts, and refuse even an unseasonable good. For good may be used by unseasonableness to do hurt. It may be thrust in by the Tempter, on purpose to divert you from some greater good, or to mar some other duty in hand: So he will oft put in some good meditation to turn you from a better, or in the midst of Sermon, or Prayer: or if he see you out of temper to perform a duty of meditation, or that you have no leisure, without neglecting your more proper work, he will then drive you on, that by the issue he may discourage and hurt you, and make the duty unprofitable and grievous to you, and make you more averse to it afterwards. Untimely duty may be no duty, but a sin, which is covered with the material good. As the Pharisees Sabbath-rest was, when Mercy called them to violate it.

Dir. 4. §. 18. Direct. 4. Examine well, and determine of the End and Use of your Meditations before you set upon them, and then labour to fit them to that special End. The End is first in the intention, and from the Love of it the means are chosen and used. If it be knowledge that you are to encrease, it is evidence of Truth, with the Matter to be known, in a convincing scientifical way, that you must meditate on: If it be Divine belief that is to be encreased or exercised, it is Divine Revelations, both matter and evidence of credibility which you have to meditate on: if you would excite the Fear of God, you have his Greatness, and terribleness, his Justice and threatnings to meditate on: If you would excite the Love of God, you have his Goodness, Mercy, Christ and Promises to meditate on: If you would prepare for death and judgment, you have your hearts to try, your Lives to repent of, your graces to discover, and revive, and exercise, and your souls diseases to feel, and the remedies to apply: so when ever you mean to make any thing of a set meditation, determine first of the End, and by it of the means.

Dir. 5. §. 19. Direct. 5. Clear up the Truth of things to your Minds as you can, before you take much Pains to work them on your affections lest you find after that you did but misinform your selves, and bestow all your labour in vain, to make deluding Images on your minds, and bring your affections to bow before them. As many have done by espousing errors who have laid out their zeal upon them many years together, and made them the reason of hatred, and contention and bitter censurings of opposing brethren; and have made parties, and divisions, and disturbances in the Church for them, and after so many years zealous sinning, have found them to be but like Michol's Image, a man of straw instead of David, and that they made all this filthy pudder but in a dream.

§ 20. Direct. 6. Next labour to perceive the weight of every thing you think on, be it Good or Evil: And to that end be sure, that God and Eternity be taken in, in every Meditation, and all things judged of as they stand related to God, and to your Eternal state; which only can give you the true estimate and sense of Good and Evil: There will still the Life and Soul, and Power be wanting in your most excellent Meditations, further than God is in them, and they are Divine. When you meditate on any Scripture-truth, think of it as a beam from the eternal Light; indited by the Holy Ghost, to lead men by obedience to felicity: Behold it with reverence as a Letter or Message sent from Heaven: and as a thing of grand importance to your souls. When you meditate of any Grace, think on it as a part of the Image of God, implanted and actuated by the Holy Ghost, to advance the Soul into communion with God, and prepare it for him. When you meditate on any Duty, remember who commandeth it, and whom you are chiefly to respect in your obedience; and what will be the end of obeying or disobeying. When you meditate on any sin, remember that it is the defacing or privation of Gods image, and the rebel that riseth up against him in all his Attributes, to depose him from the Government of the soul and the world; and foresee the end to which it tendeth. Take in God, if you would feel Life and Power in all that you meditate on. Dir. 6.

§. 21. Direct. 7. Let your ordinary Meditations be on the Great and Necessary things; and think less frequently on the less Necessary matters. Meditation is but a means to a further end: It is to work some good upon the soul: Use therefore those subjects which are most powerful and fit to work it. Great truths will do great Works upon the heart. They are usually the surest and most past controversie and doubt: There is more weight, and substance, and power in one Article of the Creed, or one Petition in the Lords Prayer, or one Commandment in the Decalogue, to benefit the soul, than in abundance of the controverted opinions which men have troubled themselves and others with in all ages. As one purse of Gold, will buy more than a great quantity of Farthings. Meditating on Great and weighty truths, makes Great and weighty Christians. And meditating inordinately on light and controverted Opinions, makes light, opinionative, contentious professors. Little things may have their time and place, but it must be but little time and the last place: except when God maketh any little thing to be the matter of our lawful calling and employment, (as all the common matters of the world are little): And then they may have a larger proportion of our time, though still they must have the lowest place in our estimation and in our hearts. Dir. 7.

§. 22. Direct. 8. When ever you are called to meditate on any smaller truth or thing, see that you take it not as separated from the greater, but still behold it as connexed to them, and planted and growing in them, and receiving their life and Beauty from them; so that you may still preserve the life and interest of the greatest Matters in your hearts, and may not mortine the least, and turn it into a Deceit or Idol. We are to climb upwards, Dir. 8.

and not to descend downwards: and therefore we begin at the Body of the Tree, and so pass up to the few and greatest boughs: and thence to the smaller numerous branches, which as they are hard to be discerned, numbred and remembred, so are they not all strong enough to bear us; but are fitted rather to be looked on, than trodden and rested on: But if you take them not as growing from the greater Boughs, but cut them off, they lose their life, and beauty, and fruitfulness. If all the Controversies in the Church had been managed, with due Honour and Preservation of Holiness, Charity, Unity, Peace, and greater Truths; and if all the Circumstantials in Religion had been ordered with a salvo, and due regard, and just subserviency to the Power and Spirituality of holy Worship, the Christian World would have had more Life, and strength, and fruitfulness, and less imagery, unholy ludicrous complement, and hypocrisie.

Dir. 9. §. 23. Direct. 9. Let the end and order of your meditations be first for the setling of your judgments, and next for the resolving and setling of your Wills, and thirdly for the reforming and bettering of your lives; and but in the fourth place after all these for the raising of your holy passions or lively feeling; which must have but its proper Room and Place. But indeed where some of these are done already, they may be supposed, and we may proceed to that which is yet to do. As if you know what is sin and duty but do it not, your meditation must be, not to make you know what you knew not, but first to consider well of what you know, and set the powerful truth before you; and then labour hereby to bring your wills to a fixed Resolution of obedience: But if it be a truth whose principal use is on the Will and Affections (as to draw up the heart to the Love of God, by the meditating on his attractive excellencies:) then the most pains must there be taken. Of which see Chap. 3. Direct. 11.

Dir. 10. §. 24. Direct. 10. Turn your Cogitations often into Soliloquies; methodically and earnestly preaching to your own hearts, as you would do on that Subject to others if it were to save their Souls. As this will keep you in order, from rambling and running out, and will also find you continual matter (For method is a wonderful help both to invention, memory, and delight) so it will bring things soonest to your affections: An earnest pleading of convincing reasons with our own Hearts, is a powerful way to make the fire burn, and to kindle desire, fear, love, Hatred, Repentings, shame, sorrow, joy, resolution, or any good effect. Convictions, upbraidings, expostulations, reprehensions, and self-perswasions may be very powerful: when a dull way of bare thinking is but like a dull way of Preaching, without any lively application, which little stirs the hearers. Learn purposely of the liveliest Books you read, and of the best and liveliest Preachers you hear, to preach to your hearts, and use it orderly; and you will find it a most powerful way of meditating.

Of this see the fourth part of my Saints Rest more fully.

Dir. 11. §. 25. Direct. 11. Turn your meditations often into ejaculatory Prayers and Addresses unto God: For that will keep you reverent, serious and awake, and make all the more powerful, because the more Divine. When you meditate on sin, turn sometimes to God by penitent lamentation, and say, Lord what a wretch and rebel was I to entertain such an Enemy of thine into my heart? and for nothing to offend thee, and violate thy Laws! O pardon, O cleanse me, O strengthen me! Conquer and cast out this odious enemy of thee and me. So when you are seeking to excite or exercise any grace, send up a fervent request to God to shew his Love and power upon thy dead and sluggish heart, and to be the principal agent in a work which is so much his own. Prayer is a most holy duty, in which the soul hath so nearly to do with God, that if there be any holy seriousness in the heart, it will be thus excited: A dull and wandring mind will bear some reverence to God; and therefore interest him in all.

§. 26. Direct. 12. Let every meditation be undertaken in a humble sense of thy own insufficiency, with a believing dependance on thy Head and Saviour, to guide and quicken thee by his holy Spirit, and to cover the Infirmities of thy holiest Thoughts. Whatever good is written upon our hearts, must be written by the Spirit of the living God: and this trust we must have thro' Christ to Godward: not that we are sufficient of our selves to think any thing as of our selves: but our sufficiency is of God. 2 Cor. 3. 3,4,5. How heavily will all go on, or rather how certainly shall we labour in vain, and cast off all, if Christ cast us off, and leave us to our selves? Think not that your life and strength is radically in your selves: Go to him by renewed acts of Faith, by whom you must be quickned. Dir. 12.

§. 27. Direct. 13. Let not your holy Thoughts be so seldom as to keep you strange to the matter of your meditations, nor so short as to be gone before you have made any thing of it. Now and then a cursory thought, will not acquaint the soul with God, nor bring it to a habit and temperament of holiness. Whereas that which you think on frequently and seriously, as your business and delight, will become the nutriment and nature of your souls: As the air which we daily breath in, and the food which we daily live upon, doth to our bodies. And you will find that as use will breed skill and strength, so it will cause such acquaintance and familiarity, as will very much tend to the fruit and comfort of the work. Whereas they that only cast now and then a look at God and holiness, or are seldom and short in holy thoughts, do lose so quickly the little which they get, that it makes no great alteration on them. Dir. 13.

§. 28. Direct. 14. Yet do not over do in point of violence or length; but carry on the Work sincerely according to the Abilities of your Minds and Bodies; lest going beyond your strength, you craze your brains, and discompose your Minds, and disable your selves to do any thing at all. Though we cannot estimatively love God too much, yet is it possible to think of him with too much passion, or too long at once: Because it may be more than the Spirits and brain can bear: And if once they be overstrained, if they break not, like a lute-string screwed too high, they will be like a leg that is out of joint, that can pain you, but not bear you. While the soul rideth on so lame or dull a Horse, as the body is, it must not go the pace which it desireth, but which the body can bear; or else it may quickly be dismounted, or like one that rideth on a tired Horse: It is not the Horse that goeth at first with chafing heat, and violence, which will travel best: But you must put on in the pace that you are able to hold out. You little know how lamentable and distressed a case you will be in, or how great an advantage the Tempter hath, if once he do but tire you by overdoing! Dir. 14.

§. 29. Direct. 15. Choose not unnecessarily or ordinarily the bittrest or most unpleasant Subjects for your meditation, lest you make it grow a Burden to you; but dwell most on the sweet delightful thoughts of the infinite Love of God revealed by Christ, and the eternal glory purchased by him, and the wonderful helps and mercies in the way. As it is the Gospel which Christs Ministers must preach to others, so it is the Gospel which in your Meditations, you must preach most to your selves. It's Love and Pleasure which you must principally endeavour to excite: And you must do it by contemplating Dir. 15.

amiableneſs and felicity, the Objects of Love and Pleaſure. For the Thoughts of terror, and wrath, and miſery, are unfit to ſtir up theſe: Though to the unconverted, dull, ſecure, preſumptuous, or ſenſual ſinner, ſuch thoughts are very neceſſary to awake him, and prepare him for the thoughts of love and peace. It is the principal part of this art, to keep off loathing and averſneſs, and to keep up readineſs and delight.

Dir. 16. §. 30. Direct. 16. When you are in company, let out the Fruit of your Secret Meditations, in Holy edifying Diſcourſe. Gather not for your ſelves only, but that you may communicate to others. The good Scribe inſtructed to the Kingdom of God, muſt bring forth out of his Treaſure things new and old, Matth. 13. 52. That is Good which doth good: God is communicative; and the beſt men are likeſt to him: Nay, a fluent Diſcourſe ſometimes is a great Inſtructer to our ſelves, and bringeth thoſe things into our minds with clearneſs, which long meditation would not have done: For one thing leadeth in another; and in a warm diſcourſe the Spirits are excited, and the Underſtanding and Memory are engaged to a cloſe attention: ſo that juſt in the ſpeaking, we have oftentimes ſuch a ſudden appearance of ſome truth, which before we took no notice of, that we find it is no ſmall addition to our knowledge, which comes in this way. As ſome find that vocal prayer doth more excite them, and keep the mind from wandring, than meer mental prayer doth: ſo free diſcourſe is but a vocal meditation: And what mans thoughts are not more guilty of diſorder, vagaries and interruptions, than his diſcourſe is?

Dir. 17. §. 31. Direct. 17. Obey all that God revealeth to you in your Meditations, and turn them all into faithful practice; and make not thinking the end of thinking. Elſe you will but do as the ungodly, and diſobedient in their Prayers, Eccleſ. 5. 1, 2. who offer to God the Sacrifice of Fools, and conſider not that they do evil. Away with the ſin, and do the duty, on which you think.

Dir. 18. §. 32. Direct. 18. Think not that the ſame meaſure of contemplation and ſtriving with their own affections, is neceſſary to all; but that an obedient active life may be as acceptable to God, when he calleth men to it, as a more contemplative life. This leadeth me neceſſarily to give you ſome Directions about the difference of theſe ways.

Tit. 4. The Difference between a Contemplative life, and an obedient active life, with Directions concerning them.

THis task will be beſt performed by anſwering thoſe Queſtions which here need a Solution.

Queſt. 1. What is a contemplative life. §. 1. Queſt. 1. What is a contemplative Life? and what is an active obedient life?

Anſw. Every active Chriſtian is bound to ſomewhat of contemplation: and all contemplative perſons are bound to Obedience to God, and to ſo much of Action as may anſwer their abilities and opportunities. But yet ſome are much more called to the one, and ſome to the other: And we denominate from that which is moſt eminent and the chief. We call that a Contemplative life, when a mans ſtate and calling alloweth and requireth him, to make the exerciſes of his mind on things ſublime and holy, and the affecting of his heart with them, to be his principal buſineſs, which taketh up the moſt of his time. And we call that an Active obediential life, when a Mans ſtate and calling requireth him to ſpend the chief part of his time, in ſome external labour or vocation, tending to the good of our ſelves and others: As Artificers, Tradeſmen, Husbandmen, Labourers, Phiſicians, Lawyers, Paſtors and Preachers of the Goſpel, Soldiers and Magiſtrates, all live an active life, which ſhould be a life of obedience to God. Though among theſe, ſome have much more time for contemplation than others. And ſome few there are that are exempt from both theſe, and are called to live a Paſſive obediential life: that is, ſuch a life in which their obedient bearing of the Croſs, and patient ſuffering, and ſubmiſſion to the chaſtiſing or trying will of God, is the moſt eminent and principal ſervice they can do him, above Contemplation or Action.

Queſt. 2. §. 2. Queſt. 2. Muſt every Man do his beſt to caſt off all worldly and external Labours, and to retire himſelf to a contemplative life as the moſt excellent?

Anſw. No: No Man ſhould do ſo without a ſpecial neceſſity or call: For there are general precepts on all that are able, that we live to the Benefit of others, and prefer the common good, and as we have opportunity to do good to all Men, and love our neighbours as our ſelves, and do as we would be done by (which will put us upon much action) and that we labour before we eat. And for a Man unneceſſarily to caſt off all the ſervice of his life, in which he may be profitable to others, is a burying or hiding his Maſters talents, and a neglect of charity, and a ſinning greatly againſt the Law of Love. As we have Bodies, ſo they muſt have their work, as well as our Souls. Gal. 6. 10. 2 Theſſ. 3.

Queſt. 3. §. 3. Queſt. 3. Is a life of Contemplation then lawful to any Man? and to whom?

Anſw. It is lawful, and a duty, and a great mercy to ſome, to live almoſt wholly, yea, altogether in contemplation, and prayer, and ſuch holy exerciſes. And that in theſe caſes following: 1. In caſe that Age hath diſabled a Man to be ſerviceable to others by an active life: and when a man hath already ſpent his days and ſtrength in doing all the good he can; and being now diſabled, hath ſpecial reaſon to improve the reſt of his (decrepite) age, in more than ordinary Preparations for his death, and in holy communion with God. 2. So alſo when we are diſabled by ſickneſs: 3. And when impriſonment reſtraineth us from an active Life, or profiting others: 4. And when perſecution forceth Chriſtians to retire into Solitudes and Deſerts, to reſerve themſelves for better times and places; or when prudence telleth them, that their Prayers in ſolitude may do more good, than at that time their Martyrdom were like to do. 5. When a Student is preparing himſelf for the Miniſtry, or other active life, to which a contemplative life is the way. 6. When Poverty, or Wars, or the rage of Enemies, diſableth a Man from all publick converſe, and driveth him into Solitude by unavoidable neceſſity. 7. When the number of thoſe that are fit for action, is ſo ſufficient, and the parts of the perſon are ſo inſufficient, and ſo the need and uſe of them in an active life ſo ſmall, that all things conſidered, holy impartial prudence telleth him, that the good which he could do to others by an active life, is not like to countervail the Loſſes which he ſhould himſelf receive, and the good which his very example of a holy and heavenly life might do, and his occaſional counſels, and precepts, and reſolutions, to thoſe who come to him for advice, being drawn by the eſtimation of his holy life; in this caſe, it is lawful to give up ones ſelf to a contemplative life: For that which maketh moſt to his own good and to others, is paſt doubt lawful and a duty. Anna departed not from the Temple, but ſerved God with Faſting and Prayer Night and Day, Luke 2. 36, 37. Whether the meaning be, that ſhe ſtrictly kept the hours of prayer in the Temple, and the faſting twice a Week, or frequently, or whether ther ſhe took up her Habitation in the Houſes of ſome of the Officers of the Temple, devoting her ſelf to the ſervice of the Temple; it is plain that either way ſhe did ſomething beſides praying and faſting: Even as the Widows under the Goſpel who were alſo to continue in Prayer and Supplication night and day, 1 Tim. 5. 5. and yet were employed in the Service of the Church, in over-ſeeing the Younger, and teaching them to be ſober, &c. Tit. 2. 4. which is an active life. But however Anna's practice be expounded, if this much that I have granted would pleaſe the Monaſticks, we would not differ with them.

Who are called to a contemplative Life.

See Dr. Hammond on the place, and on 1 Tim. 5. and on Tit. 2.

Queſt. 4. §. 4. Queſt. 4. How far are thoſe in an active life, to uſe Contemplation?

How far contemplation is neceſſary.

Anſw. With very great difference: 1. According to the difference of their Callings in the world, and the Offices in which they are ordinarily to ſerve God: 2. And according to the difference of their Abilities and fitneſs, for Contemplation or for Action: 3. According to the difference of their particular opportunities: 4. According to the difference of the neceſſities of others which may require their help. 5. And of their own neceſſities of Action or Contemplation. Which I ſhall more particularly determine in certain Rules.

Rule 1. §. 5. 1. Every Chriſtian muſt uſe ſo much contemplation as is neceſſary to the Loving of God above all, and to the worſhipping of him in Spirit and in truth, and to a heavenly mind and converſation, and to his due Preparation for Death and Judgment, and to the referring all his common works to the glory and pleaſing of God, that Holineſs to the Lord may be written upon all, and all that he hath may be ſanctified, or devoted with himſelf to God.

Rule 2. §. 6. 2. The calling of a Miniſter of the Goſpel, is ſo perfectly mixt of Contemplation and Action, (though Action denominate it, as being the End and Chief) yet he muſt be excellent in both. If they be not excellent in contemplation, they will not be meet to ſtand ſo much nearer to God than the People do? and to ſanctify him when they draw near him, and glorify him before all the people: nor will they be fit for the opening of the heavenly myſteries, and working that on the Peoples Hearts which never was on their own. And if they be not Excellent in an Active Life, they will betray the peoples Souls, and never go thro' that painful diligence, and preaching in ſeaſon and out of ſeaſon, publickly, and from houſe to houſe, day and night with tears, which Paul commandeth them, Acts 20. & Epiſt. Tim.

Rule 3. §. 7. 3. The work of a Magiſtrate, a Lawyer, a Phyſician, and ſuch like, is principally in doing good in their ſeveral Callings, which muſt not be neglected for Contemplation. Yet ſo, that all theſe, and all others, muſt allow Gods ſervice and holy thoughts, their due place in the beginning, and middle, and end of all their actions: As Magiſtrates muſt read and meditate day and night in the Word of God, Joh. 1. 8, 10. So the Eunuch, Cornelius, &c. Acts 8. & 10.

Rule 4. §. 8. 4. Some perſons in the ſame Calling, whoſe Callings are not ſo urgent on them, by any neceſſities of themſelves or others, and who may have more vacant time, muſt gladly take it for the good of their ſouls, in the uſe of Contemplation and other holy duties. And others that are under greater neceſſities, urgencies, Obligations, or cannot be ſpared from the ſervice of others (as Phyſicians, Lawyers, &c.) muſt be leſs in contemplation, and prefer the greateſt good.

Rule 5. §. 9. 5. Publick neceſſities or ſervice may with ſome be ſo great as to diſpenſe with all ſecret duty both of prayer and contemplation (except ſhort mental ejaculations) for ſome days together. So in Wars it oft falls out that neceſſity forbiddeth all ſet or ſolemn holy ſervice for many days together, (even on the Lords Day): So a Phyſician may ſometime be tied to ſo cloſe attendance on his Patients, as will not allow him time for a ſet prayer: ſo ſometime a Preacher may be ſo taken up in preaching, and exhorting, and reſolving Peoples weighty doubts, that they ſhall ſcarce have time for ſecret duties, for ſome days together: (Though ſuch happy impediments are rare:) In theſe caſes to do the leſſer is a ſin, when the greater is neglected.

§. 10. 6. Servants, who are not Maſters of their time, muſt be faithful in employing it to their Maſters ſervice, and take none for holy duty from that part, which they ſhould work in; but rather from their reſt ſo far as they are able; intermixing Meditations with their Labours when they can: But redeeming ſuch time as is allowed them, the more diligently, becauſe their opportunities are ſo rare and ſhort. Rule 6.

§. 11. 7. The Lords day (excepting works of neceſſity) and ſuch Vacancies as hinder not other work (as when they travel on the way, or work, or wake in the night, &c.) are every mans own time, which he is not to alienate to anothers ſervice, but to reſerve and uſe for the ſervice of God, and for his ſoul, in holy duties. Rule 7.

§. 12. 8. Some Perſons cannot bear much contemplation, eſpecially Melancholy and weak-headed people; and ſuch muſt ſerve God ſo much the more in other duties which they are able for; and muſt not tire out and diſtract themſelves, with ſtriving to do that which they are not able to undergo. But others feel no inconvenience by it at all, as I can ſpeak by my own experience: my weakneſs and decay of Spirits inclining me moſt to a dulneſs of mind, I find that the moſt exciting ſerious ſtudies and contemplations, in the greateſt ſolitude, are ſo far from hurting me by any abatement of health or hilarity or ſerenity of mind, that they ſeem rather a help to all. Thoſe that can thus bear long ſolitude and contemplation, ought to be the more exerciſed in it, except when greater duties muſt take place: But to melancholy perſons it is to be avoided as a hurt. Rule 8.

§. 13. 9. To the ſame Perſons, ſometimes their own neceſſities require contemplation moſt, and ſometime action; and ſo that which is at one time a duty, may at another time be none. Rule 9.

§. 14. 10. A meer ſinful backwardneſs is not to be indulged: A diſeaſed diſability (ſuch as comes from melancholy, weak-headedneſs, or decay of memory) muſt be endured, and not too much accuſed; when Chriſt excuſed worſe in his Diſciples, ſaying, The Spirit is willing, but the fleſh is weak. But a ſinful backwardneſs in caſes of abſolute neceſſity, is not at all to be endured, but ſtriven againſt with all your power whatever it coſt you: As to bring your ſelves to ſo much ſerious Conſideration, as is neceſſary to your Repentance and unfeigned faith, and godly converſation, this muſt be done whatever follow; Tho' the Devil perſwade you that it will make you melancholy or mad: For without it, you are far worſe than mad. Rule 10.

§. 15. 11. The moſt deſirable life, to thoſe that have their choice, is that which joineth together Contemplation and Action: ſo as there ſhall be convenient leiſure for the moſt high and ſerious Contemplation, and this improved to fit us for the moſt great and profitable Action. And ſuch is the life of a faithful Miniſter of Chriſt: And therefore no ſort of men on earth are more obliged to thankfulneſs than they. Rule 11.

§. 16. 12. Servants and poor men, and diſeaſed men and others, that are called off from much contemplation, and employed in a life of obedient Action, yea, or ſuffering, by the providence of God, and not by their own ſinful choice, muſt underſtand, that Rule 12.

their Labour and Patience is the way of their acceptable attendance upon God, in the expence of moſt part of their Time: And though it is madneſs in thoſe that hope God will accept of their Labours, inſtead of true Faith and Repentance and a godly life (for theſe muſt go together, and hinder not each other) yet inſtead of ſuch further contemplations as are not neceſſary to the being of a godly life, a true Chriſtian may believe that his obedient labours and ſufferings ſhall be accepted. If you ſet one ſervant to caſt up an account, and another to ſweep your Chimney or Channels, you will not accept the former, and reject the latter, for the difference of their works: But you will rather think that he hath moſt merited your acceptance, who yielded without grudging to the baſeſt ſervice. And doubtleſs it is an aggravation of acceptable obedience, when we readily and willingly ſerve God in the loweſt meaneſt work. He is too fine to ſerve him, who ſaith, I will ſerve thee in the Magiſtracy or Miniſtry, but not at Plow or Cart, or any ſuch drudgery. And if thou be but in Gods way, he can make thy very obedience a ſtate of greater holineſs and ſafety, than if thou hadſt ſpent all that time in the ſtudy of holy things, as you ſee many ungodly Miniſters do all their life time, and are never the better for it. It is not the quality of the work, but Gods bleſſing, that makes it do you good. Nor is he moſt beloved of God, who hath rolled over the greateſt number of good thoughts in his mind, or of good words in his mouth, no nor he that hath ſtirred up the ſtrongeſt paſſions hereabouts; but he that Loveth God and Heaven beſt, and hateth ſin moſt, and whoſe will is moſt confirmed for Holineſs of life. He that goeth about his labour in obedience to God, may have as much comfort as another that is meditating or praying. But neither labour nor prayer is matter of comfort to an ungodly carnal heart.

Petrarch ſpeaking of his intimacy and eſteem with Kings and Princes, addeth, Multos tamen eorum quos valde amabam effugi: tantus mihi fuit inſitus amor libertatis; ut cujus vel nomenipſum libertati, vel illi eſſe contrarium videretur, omni ſtudio declinarem. In vita ſua.

Yea, if decay of memory or natural ability take you off both Action and Contemplation, you may have as much acceptance, and ſolid comfort, in a patient bearing of the Croſs, and an obedient cheerful ſubmiſſion to the holy Will of God.

Tit. 5. Directions to the Melancholy about their Thoughts.

Read more after, Part 3. againſt Deſpair.

IT is ſo eaſie and ordinary a thing for ſome weak-headed perſons, to caſt themſelves into Melancholy by over-ſtraining either their Thoughts or their Affections, and the caſe of ſuch is ſo exceeding lamentable, that I think it requiſite to give ſuch ſome particular Directions by themſelves. And the rather becauſe I ſee ſome Perſons that are unacquainted with the nature of this and other diſeaſes, exceedingly abuſe the name of God, and bring the profeſſion of Religion into ſcorn, by imputing all the effects and ſpeeches of ſuch Melancholy perſons to ſome great and notable operations of the ſpirit of God, and thence draw obſervations of the methods and workings of God upon the ſoul, and of the nature of the legal workings of the ſpirit of bondage. (As ſome other ſuch have divulged the prophecies, the poſſeſſions and diſpoſſeſſing of Hyſterical Women, as I have read eſpecially in the Writings of the Fryars.) I do not call thoſe Melancholy, who are rationally ſorrowful for ſin, and ſenſible of their miſery, and ſollicitous about their recovery and ſalvation, though it be with as great ſeriouſneſs as the faculties can bear; as long as they have ſound Reaſon, and the imagination, fantaſie or thinking faculty is not crazed or diſeaſed: But by Melancholy I mean this diſeaſed crazineſs, hurt, or errour of the imagination, and conſequently of the underſtanding, which is known by theſe following ſigns, (which yet are not all in every Melancholy perſon)

Stoici dicunt ſapientem nunquam ſanitate mentis excidere: Incidere tamen aliquando in imaginationes abſurdas propter atræ bilis redundantiam, ſive ob delirationem non quidem deviatione rationis, verum ex imbecillitate naturæ. Laert. in Zenone.

§. 2. 1. They are commonly exceeding fearful, cauſeſſly or beyond what there is cauſe for: every thing which they hear or ſee is ready to increaſe their fears, eſpecially if fear was the firſt cauſe, as ordinarily it is. 2. Their fantaſie moſt erreth in aggravating their ſin, or dangers, or unhappineſs: every ordinary infirmity they are ready to ſpeak of with amazement as a heinous ſin. And every poſſible danger, they take for probable, and every probable one for certain: and every little danger for a great one: and every calamity for an utter undoing. 3. They are ſtill addicted to exceſs of ſadneſs, ſome weeping they know not why, and ſome thinking it ought to be ſo: and if they ſhould ſmile or ſpeak merrily, their hearts ſmite them for it, as if they had done amiſs. 4. They place moſt of their Religion in ſorrowing and auſterities to the fleſh. 5. They are continual ſelf-accuſers: turning all manner of accuſation againſt themſelves, which they hear, or read, or ſee, or think of: quarrelling with themſelves for every thing they do, as a contentious perſon doth with others. 6. They are ſtill apprehending themſelves forſaken of God, and are prone to deſpair: They are juſt like a man in a Wilderneſs, forſaken of all his friends and comforts; forlorn and deſolate: their continual thought is, I am undone, undone, undone! 7. They are ſtill thinking that the day of Grace is paſt, and that it is now too late to repent or to find mercy: If you tell them of the tenour of the Goſpel and offers of free pardon to every penitent believer, they cry out ſtill, too late, too late, my day is paſt; not conſidering that every ſoul that truly repenteth in this life is certainly forgiven. 8. They are oft tempted to gather deſpairing thoughts from the doctrine of Predeſtination, and to think that if God have reprobated them, or have not elected them, all that they can do, or that all the world can do, cannot ſave them, and next they ſtrongly conceit that they are not elected, and ſo that they are paſt help or hope, not knowing that God electeth not any man ſeparately or ſimply to be ſaved, but conjunctly to believe, repent, and to be ſaved; and ſo to the end and means together; and that all that will repent and chooſe Chriſt and a holy life are elected to ſalvation, becauſe they are elected to the means and condition of ſalvation, which if they perſevere they ſhall enjoy. To Repent is the beſt way to prove that I am elected to Repent. 9. They never read or hear of any miſerable inſtance, but they are thinking that this is their caſe! If they hear of Cain, of Pharoah given up to hardneſs of heart, or do but read that ſome are veſſels of wrath fitted to deſtruction, or that they have eyes and ſee not, ears and hear not, hearts and underſtand not, they think, This is all ſpoken of me; or this is juſt my caſe: If they hear of any terrible example of Gods judgments on any, they think, it will be ſo with them: If any dye ſuddenly, or a houſe be burnt, or any be diſtracted, or dye in deſpair, they think it will be ſo with them. The reading of Spira's caſe cauſeth or increaſeth Melancholy in many; the ignorant Author having deſcribed a plain Melancholy, contradicted by the trouble of ſinning againſt Conſcience, as if it were a damnable deſpair of a ſound underſtanding; 10. And yet they think that never any one was as they are; I have had abundance in a few weeks with me, almoſt juſt in the ſame caſe, and yet every one ſay that never any one was as they. 11. They are utterly unable to Rejoyce in any thing: They cannot apprehend, believe or think of any thing that is comfortable to them. They read all the threatnings of the word with quick

quick ſenſe and application, but the Promiſes they read over and over without taking notice of them, as if they had not read them; or elſe ſay, They do not belong to me: The greater the mercy of God is, and the riches of grace, the more miſerable am I that have no part in them. They are like a man in continual pain or ſickneſs, that cannot rejoyce, becauſe the feeling of his pain forbiddeth him. They look on Husband, wife, friends, children, houſe, goods and all without any comfort; as one would do that is going to be executed for ſome crime. 12. Their conſciences are quick in telling them of ſin, and putting them upon any dejection as a duty: but they are dead to all duties that tend to conſolation; as to Thankſgiving for mercies, Praiſes of God, meditating on his Love and grace and Chriſt and promiſes: Put them never ſo hard on theſe, and they feel not their duty, nor make no conſcience of it, but think it is a duty for others but unſuitable to them. 13. They alway ſay that they cannot believe, and therefore think they cannot be ſaved: Becauſe that commonly they miſtake the nature of faith, and take it to be a Believing that they themſelves are forgiven and in favour with God, and ſhall be ſaved: And becauſe they cannot believe this (which their diſeaſe will not ſuffer them to believe,) therefore they think that they are no believers: whereas ſaving faith is nothing but ſuch a Belief that the Goſpel is true and Chriſt is the Saviour to be truſted with our ſouls, as cauſeth our Wills to Conſent that he be ours and that we be his, and ſo to ſubſcribe the Covenant of Grace. Yet while they thus conſent, and would give a world to be ſure that Chriſt were theirs, and to be perfectly holy, yet they think they believe not, becauſe they believe not that he will forgive or ſave them. 14. They are ſtill diſpleaſed and diſcontented with themſelves: juſt as a peviſh froward perſon is apt to be with others: ſee one that is hard to be pleaſed, and is finding fault with every thing that they ſee or hear, and offended at every one that comes in their way, and ſuſpicious of every body that they ſee whiſpering; and juſt ſo is a Melancholy perſon againſt himſelf; ſuſpecting, and diſpleaſed and finding fault with all. 15. They are much addicted to ſolitarineſs, and weary of company for the moſt part. 16. They are given up to fixed muſings, and long poring thoughts to little purpoſe: ſo that deep muſings and thinkings are their chief employments, and much of their diſeaſe. 17. They are much averſe to the labours of their callings, and given to idleneſs; either to lye in bed, or ſit thinking unprofitably by themſelves. 18. Their thoughts are moſt upon themſelves, like the mill-ſtones that grind on themſelves, when they have no griſt: ſo one thought begets another: Their thoughts are taken up about their thoughts: when they have been thinking irregularly, they think again what they have been thinking on: They meditate not much on God, (unleſs on his wrath) nor Heaven, nor Chriſt, nor the ſtate of the Church, nor any thing without them (ordinarily); but all their thoughts are contracted and turned inwards on themſelves: ſelf-troubling is the ſum of their thoughts and lives. 19. Their thoughts are all perplexed like ravelled Yarn or Silk; or like a man in a maze, or wilderneſs, or that hath loſt himſelf and his way in the night: He is poring and groping about, and can make little of any thing, but is bewildred, and moithered and entangled the more: full of doubts, and difficulties, out of which he cannot find the way. 20. He is endleſs in his ſcruples: afraid leſt he ſin in every word he ſpeaketh, and in every thought, and every look, and every meal he eateth, and all the Cloaths he weareth: And if he think to amend them, he is ſtill ſcrupling his ſuppoſed amendments: He dare neither travel, nor ſtay at home; neither ſpeak nor be ſilent; but he is ſcrupling all: as if he were wholly compoſed of ſelf-perplexing ſcruples. 21. Hence it comes to paſs that he is greatly addicted to ſuperſtition; to make many Laws to himſelf that God never made him; and to enſnare himſelf with needleſs Vows, and reſolutions, and hurtful auſterities, Touch not, taſte not, handle not; and to place his Religion much in ſuch Outward ſelf-impoſed tasks: to ſpend ſo many hours in this or that act of devotion, to wear ſuch cloaths, and forbear other that are finer; to forbear all dyet that pleaſeth the appetite, with much of the like: A great deal of the Perfection of Popiſh devotion proceeded from Melancholy, though their Government come from Pride and Covetouſneſs. 22. They have loſt the power of Governing their thoughts by Reaſon: ſo that if you convince them that they ſhould caſt out their ſelf-perplexing unprofitable thoughts, and turn their thoughts to other ſubjects, or be vacant; they are not able to obey you: they ſeem to be under a neceſſity or conſtraint: They cannot caſt out their troubleſome thoughts: They cannot turn away their minds: They cannot think of Love and mercy: They can think of nothing but what they do think of, no more than a man in the Tooth-ache can forbear to think of his pain. 23. They uſually grow hence to a diſability to any private prayer or meditation: Their thoughts are preſently caſt all into a confuſion, when they ſhould pray or meditate: They ſcatter abroad a hundred wayes; and they cannot keep them upon any thing: For this is the very point of their diſeaſe; a diſtempered confuſed fantaſie, with a weak reaſon which cannot govern it. Sometime terrour driveth them from Prayer: They dare not hope, and therefore dare not pray: And uſually they dare not receive the Lords Supper; here they are fearfulleſt of all: And if they do receive it, they are caſt down with terrours, fearing that they have taken their own damnation, by receiving unworthily. 24. Hence they grow to a great averſeneſs to all holy duty: Fear and diſpair make them go to prayer, hearing, reading, as a Bear to the ſtake: And then they think they are haters of God and Godlineſs, imputing the effects of their diſeaſe to their ſouls: when yet at the ſame time, thoſe of them that are Godly, would rather be freed from all their ſins, and be perfectly holy, than have all the riches or honour in the world. 25. They are uſually ſo taken up with buſie and earneſt thoughts (which being all perplexed do but ſtrive with themſelves, and contradict one another,) that they feel it juſt as if ſomething were ſpeaking within them, and all their own violent thoughts were the pleadings and impulſe of ſome other: And therefore they are wont to impute all their fantaſies, either to ſome extraordinary actings of the Devil, or to ſome extraordinary motions of the ſpirit of God: And they are uſed to expreſs themſelves in ſuch words as theſe [It was ſet upon my heart, or it was ſaid to me that I muſt do thus and thus: and then it was ſaid I muſt not do this or that; and I was told I muſt do ſo or ſo]. And they think that their own imagination is ſomething talking in them, and ſaying to them all that they are thinking. 26. When Melancholy groweth ſtrong, they are almoſt alwayes troubled with hideous Blaſphemous temptations, againſt God or Chriſt, or the Scripture, and againſt the immortality of the ſoul: which cometh partly from their own fears, which make them think moſt (againſt their will) of that which they are moſt afraid of thinking: As the Spirits and blood will have recourſe to the part that is hurt. The very pain of their fears doth draw their thoughts to what they fear. As he that is over-deſirous to ſleep, and afraid leſt he ſhall ſleep, sleep, is sure to wake: because his fears and desires keep him waking: so do the fears and desires of the Melancholy cross themselves. And withall, the malice of the Devil plainly here interposeth, and taketh advantage by this disease, to tempt and trouble them, and to shew his hatred to God. and Christ, and Scripture and to them. For as he can much easier tempt a cholerick person to anger, than another; and a flegmatick fleshly person to sloth, and a sanguine or hot tempered person to lust and wantonness; so also a melancholy person to thoughts of blasphemy, infidelity and despair. And oft-times they feel a vehement urgency, as if something within them urged them to speak such or such a blasphemous or foolish word; and they can have no rest unless they yield in this and other such cases to what they are urged to! And some are ready to yield in a temptation to be quiet: and when they have done, they are tempted utterly to despair because they have committed so great a sin: and when the Devil hath got this advantage of them, he is still setting it before them. 27. Hereupon they are further tempted to think they have committed the sin against the Holy Ghost; not understanding what that sin is, but fearing it is theirs, because it is a fearful sin: At least they think they shall not be forgiven: not considering that a temptation is one thing, and a sin another; and that no man hath less cause to fear being condemned for his sin, than he that is least willing of it, and most hateth it. And no man can be less willing of any sin, than these poor souls are of the hideous blasphemous thoughts which they complain of. 28. Hereupon some of them grow to think that they are possessed of Devils; and if it do but enter into their fantasie how possessed persons use to act, the very strength of imagination will make them do so too: so that I have known those that will swear, and curse, and blaspheme, and imitate an inward aliene voice, thinking themselves that it is the Devil in them that doth all this. But these that go so far are but few. 29. Some of them that are near distraction, verily think that they hear voices, and see lights and apparitions, that the Curtains are opened on them, that something meets them, and saith this or that to them, when all is but the error of a crazed brain, and sick imagination. 30. Many of them are a weary of their lives, through the constant tiring perplexities of their minds: and yet afraid of dying: some of them resolutely famish themselves: some are strongly tempted to murder themselves, and they are haunted with the temptation so restlesly, that they can go no whither but they feel as if somewhat within them, put them on, and said, Do it, do it: so that many poor creatures yield, and make away with themselves. 31. Many of them are restlesly vexed with fears of want and poverty, and misery to their families; and of imprisonment or banishment; and lest some body will kill them: and every one that they see whisper, they think is plotting to take away their lives. 32. Some of them lay a law upon themselves that they will not speak, and so live long in resolute silence. 33. All of them are intractable, and stiff in their own conceits, and hardly perswaded out of them, be they never so irrational. 34. Few of them are the better for any Reason, conviction or Counsel that is given them: If it seem to satisfie and quiet and rejoyce them at the present, to morrow they are as bad again: it being the nature of their disease, to think as they do think; and their thoughts are not cured while the disease is uncured. 35. Yet in all this distemper, few of them will believe that they are melancholy; but abhor to hear men tell them so, and say it is but the rational sense of their unhappiness, and the forsakings and heavy wrath of God. And therefore they are hardly perswaded to take any Physick or use any means for the cure of their bodies, saying that they are well, and being confident that it is only their souls that are distressed.

Col. 2. 18, 20, 21, 22, 23.

This is the miserable case of these poor people, greatly to be pitied; and not to be despised by any. I have spoken nothing but what I have often seen and known. And let none despise such, for men of all sorts do fall into this misery: learned and unlearned, high and low, good and bad, yea, some that have lived in greatest jollity and sensuality, when God hath made them feel their folly.

§. 3. The causes of it are, 1. Most commonly some worldly loss, or cross, or grief, or care, which made too deep an impression on them. 2. Sometime excess of fear upon any common occasion of danger. 3. Sometime over-hard and unintermitted studies, or thoughts which screw up and rack the fantasie too much. 4. Sometime too deep fears, or too constant and serious and passionate thoughts and cares about the danger of the soul. 5. The great preparatives to it, (which are indeed the principal cause) are a weak Head, and Reason joyned with strong Passion: which are oftest found in Women, and those to whom it is natural. 6. And in some it is brought in by some heinous sin, the sight of which they cannot bear, when Conscience is but once awakened.

§. 4. When this disease is gone very far, Directions to the persons themselves are vain, because they have not Reason and free-will to practice them, but it is their friends about them that must have the Directions. But because with the most of them, and at first, there is some Power of Reason left, I give Directions for the use of such.

§. 5. Direct. 1. See that no error in Religion be the cause of your distress: especially understand well the Covenant of Grace, and the Riches of mercy manifested in Christ. Among others it will be useful to you to understand these following truths. Dir. 1.

1. That our thoughts of the Infinite Goodness of God, should bear proportion with our thoughts concerning his Infinite Power and Wisdom. Special Truths to be known for preventing causeless troubles.

2. That the Mercy of God hath provided for all mankind so sufficient a Saviour, that no sinner shall perish for want of a sufficient satisfaction made for his sins by Christ, nor is it made the condition of any mans salvation, or pardon, that he satisfie for his own sins.

3. That Christ hath in his Gospel-Covenant (which is an Act of oblivion) made over himself with pardon and salvation, to all that will penitently and believingly accept the offer. And that none perish that hear the Gospel, but the final obstinate refusers of Christ and life.

4. That he that so far believeth the truth of the Gospel, as to Consent to the Covenant of Grace, even that God the Father be his Lord and Reconciled Father, and Christ his Saviour, and the Holy Ghost his sanctifier, hath true saving faith, and right to the blessing of the Covenant.

5. That the day of Grace is so far commensurate or equal to our Life time, that whosoever truly Repenteth and Consenteth to the Covenant of Grace, before his death, is certainly pardoned, and in a state of life: and that it is every mans duty so to do, that pardon may be theirs.

6. That Satans temptations are none of our sins, but only our yielding to them.

7. That the effects of natural sickness or diseasedness, is not (in it self) a sin.

8. That those are the smallest sins (formally) and least like to condemn us, which we are most unwilling of, and are least in Love or liking of.

9. That no sin shall condemn us which we hate more than love, and which we had rather leave and be delivered from, than keep: For this is true Repentance.

10. That he is truly sanctified who had rather be perfect in Holiness of heart and life, in loving God, and Living by Faith, than to have the greatest pleasures, riches or honours of the world; taking in the Means also by which both are attained.

11. That he who hath this Grace and desire may know that he is elect, and the making of our Calling sure by our Consenting to the holy Covenant, is the making of our Election sure.

12. That the same thing which is a great duty to others, may be no duty to one who by bodily distemper (as Feavors, Phrensies, Melancholy) is unable to perform it.

Dir. 2. §. 6. Direct. 2. Take heed of worldly cares, and sorrows, and discontents: Set not so much by earthly things, as to enable them to disquiet you: But learn to cast your cares on God. You can have less peace in any affliction which cometh by such a carnal sinful means. It's much more safe to be distracted with cares for Heaven than for Earth.

Dir. 3. §. 7. Direct. 3. Meditation is no duty at all for a melancholy person, except some few that are able to bear a diverting meditation, which must be of something farthest from the matter which troubleth them: Or except it be short meditations like ejaculatory prayers. A set and serious meditation will but confound you, and disturb you, and disable you to other duties. If a man have a broken leg, he must not go on it, till it's knit, lest all the body fare the worse. It is your Thinking faculty, or your Imagination which is the broken pained part: and therefore you must not use it, about the things that trouble you. Perhaps you'll say, That this is to be prophane and forget God and your soul, and let the Tempter have his will. But I answer; No: It is but to forbear that which you cannot do at present, that by doing other things which you can do, you may come again to do this which you now cannot do: It is but to forbear attempting that which will but make you less able to do all other duties. And at the present, you may conduct the affairs of your soul by holy Reason; I perswade you not from Repenting or Believing, but from set, and long, and deep Meditations, which will but hurt you.

Dir. 4. §. 8. Direct. 4. Be not too long in any secret duty which you find you are not able to bear: Prayer it self, when you are unable, must be performed but as you can: Short confessions and requests to God, must serve instead of longer secret prayers, when you are unable to do more. If sickness may excuse a man for being short, where nature will not hold out, the case is the same here, in the sickness of the brain and spirits. God hath appointed no means to do you hurt.

Dir. 5. §. 9. Direct. 5. Where you find your selves unable for a secret duty, struggle not too hard with your selves, but go that pace that you are able to go quietly. For as every striving doth not enable you, but vex you, and make duty wearisome to you, and disable you more, by increasing your disease: Like an Ox that draweth unquietly, and a Horse that chafeth himself, that quickly tireth. Preserve your willingness to duty, and avoid that which makes it grievous to you. As to a sick stomach, it is not eating much, but digesting well that tends to health, and little must be eaten, when much cannot be digested: So it is here in case of your meditations and secret prayers.

Dir. 6. §. 10. Direct. 6. Be most in those duties which you are best able to bear, which with most is, Prayer with others, hearing and good discourse. As a sick man whose stomach is against other meats, must eat of that which he can eat of. And God hath provided variety of means, that one may do the work, when the other are wanting. Do not misunderstand me: In cases of absolute necessity, I say again, you must strive to do it whatever come of it. If you are backward to believe, to Repent, to Love God and your neighbour, to live soberly, righteously and godly, to pray at all; here you must strive, and not excuse it by any backwardness; for it is that which must needs be done, or you are lost. But a man that cannot read, may be saved without his reading, and a man in prison or sickness may be saved without hearing the word, and without the Church-communion of Saints: And so a man disabled by melancholy may be saved by shorter thoughts and ejaculations, without set and long meditations and secret prayers: And other duties which he is able for, will supply the want of these. Even as nature hath provided two eyes, and two ears, and two nostrils, and two reins, and lungs, that when one is stopt or faulty, the other may supply its wants for a time: So it is here.

Dir. 7. §. 11. Direct. 7. Avoid all unnecessary solitariness, and be as much as possible in honest chearful company. You have need of others; and are not sufficient for your selves: And God will use and honour others, as his hands, to deliver us his blessings. Solitariness is to those that are fit for it, an excellent season for meditation and converse with God and with our hearts: But to you it is the season of temptation and danger. If Satan tempted Christ himself, when he had him fasting and solitary in a wilderness, much more will he take this as his opportunity against you. Solitude is the season of musings and thoughtfulness, which are the things which you must fly from, if you will not be deprived of all.

Dir. 8. §. 12. Direct. 8. When blasphemous or disturbing thoughts look in, or fruitless musings, presently meet them, and use that authority of Reason which is left you, to cast them and command them out. If you have not lost it, Reason and the will have a command over the thoughts as well as over the tongue, or hands or feet. And as you would be ashamed to run up and down, or fight with your hands, and say, I cannot help it; or to let your tongue run all day, and say, I cannot stop it: so should you be ashamed to let your Thoughts run at random or on hurtful things, and say, I cannot help it. Do you do the best you can to help it? Cannot you bid them be gone? Cannot you turn your thoughts to something else? Or cannot you rowze up your self, and shake them off? Some by catting a little cold water in their own faces, or bidding another do it, can rowze themselves from melancholy musings as from sleep. Or cannot you get out of the room and set your self about some business which will devert you? You might do more than you do, if you were but willing, and know how much it is your duty.

Dir. 9. §. 13. Direct. 9. When you do think of any holy things, let it be of the best things; of God and Grace and Christ and Heaven: Or of your brethren, or the Church, and carry all your meditations outward; but be sure you pore not on your selves, and spend not your thoughts upon your thoughts. As we have need to call the Thoughts of careless sinners inwards, and turn them from the Creature and sin, upon themselves; so we have need to call the Thoughts of self perplexing melancholy persons outwards; For it is their disease to be still grinding upon themselves. Remember that it is a far higher, nobler and sweeter work to think of God, and Christ, and Heaven, than of such worms as we our selves are. When we go up to God, we go to Love, and Light and Liberty: But when we look down into our selves we look into a dungeon, a prison, a wilderness, a place of darkness, horror, filthiness, misery and confusion. Therefore (though such thoughts be needful so far as without them our Repentance and due watchfulneſs cannot be maintained) yet they are grievous, ignoble, yea, and barren, in compariſon of our thoughts of God. When you are poring on your hearts, to ſearch whether the Love of God be there or no, it were wiſer to be thinking of the infinite Amiableneſs of God; and that will cauſe it, whether it were there before or not. So inſtead of poring on your hearts, to know whether they are ſet on Heaven, lift up your thoughts to Heaven, and think of its Glory, and that will raiſe them thither, and give you, and ſhew you that which you were ſearching for. Beſtow that time in planting holy deſires in the garden of your hearts, which you beſtow in routing and puzling your ſelves in ſearching whether it be there already. We are ſuch dark confuſed things, that the ſight of our ſelves is enough to raiſe a loathing and a horror in our minds, and make them melancholy: But in God and Glory, there is nothing to diſcourage our thoughts, but all to delight them, if Satan do not miſ-repreſent him to us.

Dir. 10. §. 14. Direct. 10. Overlook not the Miracle of Love which God hath ſhewed us in the wonderful incarnation, office, life, death, reſurrection, aſcenſion and reign of our Redeemer: But ſteep your thoughts moſt in theſe wonders of mercy, propoſed by God to be the chief matter of your thoughts. You ſhould in reaſon lay out many thoughts of Chriſt and Grace for one that you lay out on your ſin and miſery. God requireth you to ſee your ſin and miſery, but ſo much as tendeth to magnifie the remedy, and cauſe you to accept it: Never think of Sin and Hell alone: but as the way to the thoughts of Chriſt and Grace. This is the duty even of the worſt. Are your ſins ever before you? Why is not pardoning grace in Chriſt before you? Is Hell open before you? Why is not the Redeemer alſo before you? Do you ſay, Becauſe that ſin and Hell are yours, but Chriſt, and Holineſs, and Heaven are none of yours? I anſwer you, It is then becauſe you will have it ſo: If you would not have it ſo, it is not ſo. God hath ſet Life firſt before you, and not only Death. He hath put Chriſt, and Holineſs and Heaven in his end of the ballance; and the Devil puts the pleaſure of ſin for a ſeaſon in the other end: That which you chooſe unfeignedly is yours: For God hath given you your choice. Nothing is truer, than that God hath ſo far made over Chriſt and Life to all that hear the Goſpel, that nothing but their final obſtinate refuſal can condemn them: Chriſt and Life are brought to the will and choice of all, though all have not wills to accept and chooſe him. And if you would not have Chriſt and Life and Holineſs, what would you rather have? And why complain you?

Joh. 3. 16. 1 John 5. 10, 11, 12. Rev. 22. 17. John 5. 40.

Dir. 11. §. 15. Direct. 11. Think and ſpeak as much of the Mercy which you have received, as of the ſin you have committed; and of the mercy which is offered you, as of what you want. You dare not ſay that the mercy you have you received, is no more worthy to be remembred and mentioned than all your ſins? Shall God do ſo much for you, and ſhall it be overlooked, extenuated and made nothing of? As if his mercies had been a bare bone, or a barren wilderneſs, which would yield no ſuſtenance to your thoughts? Be not guilty of ſo great unthankfulneſs. Thoughts of Love and mercy, would breed Love and ſweetneſs in the ſoul: while thoughts of ſin and wrath only breed averſneſs, terror, bitterneſs, perplexity, and drive away the heart from God.

Dir. 12. §. 16. Direct. 12. Tye your ſelves daily to ſpend as great a part of your Time in your prayers, in the confeſſing of mercy received, as in confeſſing ſin committed: and in the Praiſes of God, as in the lamenting of your own miſeries. You dare not deny but this is your duty, if you underſtand your duty: Thankſgiving and praiſe are a greater duty, than confeſſing ſin and miſery: Reſolve then that they ſhall have the largeſt ſhare of Time. If you will but do this much, (which you can do if you will) it will in time take off the bitterneſs of your ſpirits, and the very frequent mention of ſweeter things, will ſweeten your minds and change their temperature and habit, as change of dyet changeth the temperature of the body. I beſeech you reſolve and try this courſe. If you cannot mention mercy ſo Thankfully as you would, nor mention Gods excellencies ſo holily and praiſefully as you would, yet do what you can, and mention them as you are able. You may command your Time (what ſhall have the greateſt ſhare in prayer) though not your affections: You will find the benefit very great, if you will but do this.

Dir. 13. §. 17. Direct. 13. Overvalue not the paſſionate part of duty, but know that Judgment, Will and Practice; a high eſteem of God and holineſs, a reſolved choice, and a ſincere endeavour are the life of Grace and duty, when feeling Paſſions are but lower uncertain things: You know not what you do, when you lay ſo much on the paſſionate part: Nor when you ſtrive ſo much for deep and tranſporting apprehenſions: Theſe are not the great things, nor eſſentials of Holineſs: Too much of this feeling may diſtract you. God knoweth how much you are able to bear. Paſſionate feelings depend much upon nature. Some perſons are more ſenſible than others: A little thing goeth deep with ſome: The wiſeſt and weighteſt perſons are uſually leaſt paſſionate; and the weakeſt hardly moderate their paſſions. God is not an object of ſenſe, and therefore more fit for the underſtanding and will, than the paſſions to work upon. That is the holieſt ſoul which is moſt inclined to God, and reſolved for him, and conformed to his will, and not that which is affected with the deepeſt griefs, and fears and joys, and other ſuch tranſporting paſſions: Though it were beſt, if even holy paſſions could be raiſed at the wills command in that meaſure which fitteth us beſt for duty. But I have known many complain for want of deeper feeling, who if their feeling (as they called their paſſion) had been more, it might have diſtracted them. I had rather be that Chriſtian that loaths himſelf for ſin, reſolveth againſt it, and forſaketh it, though he cannot weep for it, than one of thoſe that can weep to day, and ſin again to morrow; and whoſe ſinful paſſions are quickly ſtirred, as well as their better paſſions.

Dir. 14. §. 18. Direct. 14. Make not too great a matter of your own thoughts; and take not too much notice of them: but if Satan caſt in moleſting thoughts, if you cannot caſt them out, ſet light by them, and take leſs notice of them. Making a great matter of every Thought that is caſt into your mind, will keep thoſe thoughts in your mind the longer: For that which we are moſt ſenſible of, we moſt think on: And that which we leaſt regard, we leaſt remember: If you would never be rid of them, the way is to be ſtill noting them, and making too great a matter of them. Theſe troubleſome thoughts are like troubleſome ſcolds, that if you regard them and anſwer them, will never have done with you: But if you let them talk, and take no notice of them, nor make no anſwer to them, they will be weary and give over. The Devils deſign is to vex and diſquiet you: And if he ſee you will not be vexed and diſquieted, he will give over attempting it. I know you'll ſay, ſhould I be ſo ungodly as to make light of ſuch ſinful thoughts? I anſwer, make not ſo light of them as to be indifferent what thoughts are in your mind, nor ſo as to take the ſmall ſin to be none: But make ſo light of them as not to take them for greater nor more dangerous ſins than they are. And ſo light of them as not take diſtinct particular notice of them; nor to diſquiet your ſelves about them: For if you do, you will have no room in your thoughts for Chriſt and Heaven, and that which ſhould take up your thoughts; but the Devil will rejoice to ſee how he employeth you in thinking over your own thoughts, or rather, his temptations; and that he can employ you all the day in hearkning to all that he will ſay to you, and in thinking of his motions inſtead of thinking on the works of God. There are none of Gods ſervants without irregularities and ſin of thoughts: Which they muſt daily ask forgiveneſs of, and rejoyce to think that they have a ſufficient Saviour and remedy, and that ſin ſhall but occaſion the magnifying of grace: But if they ſhould exceſſively obſerve and be troubled at every unwarrantable thought, it would be a ſnare to take them off almoſt all their greater duties. Would you like it in your ſervant, if he ſhould ſtop in obſerving and troubling himſelf about every ordinary imperfection in his work, inſtead of going on to do it?

Dir. 15. §. 19. Direct. 15. Remember that it is no ſin to be tempted, but only to yield to the temptation: and that Chriſt himſelf was carried about and tempted blaſphemouſly by the Devil, even to fall down and worſhip him: and yet he made theſe temptations but an advantage to the glory of his victory. Take not the Devils ſin to be yours. Are your temptations more horrid and odious than Chriſts were? What if the Devil had carried you to the pinacle of the Temple as he did Chriſt? Would you not have thought that God had forſaken you, and given you up to the power of Satan? But you'll ſay, that you yield to the temptation, and ſo did not Chriſt: I anſwer, It cannot be expected that ſinful man ſhould bear a temptation as innocently as Chriſt did? Satan found nothing in Chriſt to comply with him; but in us he findeth a ſinful nature! Wax will receive an impreſſion when Marble will not. But it is not every ſinful taint that is a conſent to the ſin to which we are tempted.

Dir. 16. §. 20. Direct. 16. Conſider how far you are from Loving, delighting in or being loath to leave theſe ſinful thoughts: and that no ſin condemneth, but that which is ſo loved and delighted in, as that you had rather keep than leave it. Would you not fain be delivered from all theſe horrid thoughts and ſins? Could you not be willing to live in diſgrace, or want or baniſhment, ſo you might but be free from ſin? If ſo, why doubt you of the pardon of it? Can you have any ſurer ſign of Repentance, or that your ſin is not a Reigning unpardoned ſin, than that it is not Loved and deſired by you? The leſs will, the leſs ſin, and the more will, the more ſin. The Covetous man Loveth his mony: and the Fornicator loveth his luſt, and the proud man loveth his honour, and the drunkard loveth his cups, and the glutton loveth to ſatisfie his appetite; and ſo love theſe that they will not leave them. But do you love your diſturbing, confuſed or blaſphemous thoughts? Are you not ſo weary of them, as to be even a weary of your lives becauſe of them? would you not be glad and thankful never to be troubled with them more? And yet do you doubt of pardon?

Dir. 17. §. 21. Direct. 17. Charge not your ſouls any deeper than there is cauſe with the effects of your diſeaſe. Indeed remotely a man that in diſtraction thinks or ſpeaks amiſs, may be ſaid to be faulty, ſo far as his ſin did cauſe his diſeaſe: but directly and of it ſelf, the involuntary effects of ſickneſs are no ſin: Melancholy is a meer diſeaſe in the ſpirits and imagination, though you feel no ſickneſs: And it is as natural for a melancholy perſon to be hurryed and moleſted with doubts and fears and deſpairing thoughts, and blaſphemous temptations, as it is for a man to talk idly in a feaver when his underſtanding faileth; or to think of and deſire drink, when his Feaver kindleth vehement thirſt. And how much would you have a man in the feaver accuſe himſelf for ſuch a thriſt, or ſuch thoughts, deſire or talk? If you had thoſe hideous thoughts in your dreams, which you have when you are awake, would you think them unpardoned ſins, or rather unavoidable infirmities? why your diſtemper makes them to be to you, but almoſt as dreams.

§. 22. Direct. 18. Be ſure that you keep your ſelf conſtantly imployed (as far as your ſtrength will bear) in the diligent labours of a lawful calling; and ſpend none of your precious time in idleneſs. Dir. 18. Idleneſs is the tide time of the Tempter: when you are idle, you invite the Devil to come and vex you. Then you can have while to hearken to him, and think on all that he will put into your minds, and then to think over all thoſe thoughts again! when you have nothing elſe to do, the Devil will find you ſuch work: Then you muſt ſit ſtill and muſe; and your thoughts muſt be ſtirring in the mud of your own diſtempers, as children lye padling in the dirt. And idleneſs is a ſin, which God will not favour: He hath commanded you to Labour ſix days, and in the ſweat of your brows to eat your bread; and he that will not labour is unworthy to eat, 2 Theſ. 3. Remember that Time is precious, and doth haſte away, and God hath given you none in vain. Therefore as you are troubled for other ſins, make Conſcience of this ſin, and waſte not one quarter of an hours time, in your idle profitable muſings: It is juſt with God to make your ſin it ſelf to be your puniſhment, and your own idle Thoughts to chaſtize you daily, when you will not get up and go about your lawful buſineſs: Nor will pretences of Prayer or any devotion excuſe your idleneſs, for it is againſt the Law of God. Above all that I have ſaid to you, let me intreat you therefore to obey this one Direction: I have known deſpairing Melancholy perſons cured by ſetting themſelves reſolutely and diligently about their callings (and changing air and company, and riding abroad.) If you will ſit muſing in a corner, and ſin againſt God by idleneſs and loſs of time, and increaſe your own miſeries withall, rather than you will rouze up your ſelf, and ply your buſineſs, your calamity is juſt. Say not, that you have little or nothing to do: For God hath made it the duty of all, be they never ſo rich, to labour in ſuch employment as is ſuitable to their place and ſtrength.

§. 23. Direct. 19. Do but mark well how much the Devil gets by keeping you in ſad deſpondent thoughts: and then you may eaſily ſee that it cannot be your duty nor beſt for you, which is ſo gainful and pleaſing to the Devil. Dir. 20. By keeping you in theſe ſelf perplexing doubts and fears, he robs God of the Thanks and Praiſe which you owe him for all his mercies: Theſe higheſt duties you caſt aſide, as if they did not belong to you: You give not God the honour of his moſt miraculous mercy, in our Redemption; nor do you ſtudy, or reliſh, or admire, or magnifie, the riches of Grace in Jeſus Chriſt! you have poor low thoughts of the infinite Love of God, and are unfit to judge of it or perceive it, being like a cholerick ſtomach which puts a continual bitterneſs in the mouth, which hinders it from taſting any ſweetneſs in their meat. It hereby unfitteth you for the Love of God, and more enclineth you to hate him, or fly from him as an enemy, while the Devil repreſenteth him to you as one that hateth you: It loſeth your Time: It depriveth you of all your willingneſs to duty and delight in duty, and maketh all Gods ſervice a burden and vexation to you. It is very contrary to the ſpirit of adoption, and to the whole frame of Evangelical worſhip and obedience. And will you, under pretence of being being more humbled, and ſorrowful, and ſenſible, thus gratifie Satan, and wrong God and your ſelves?

Dir. 20. §. 24. Direct. 20. Truſt not to your own judgment, in your melancholy ſtate, either as to the condition of your ſouls, or the choice and conduct of your Thoughts or ways; but commit your ſelves to the judgment and direction of ſome experienced faithful guide. You are no fit judges of your own condition, nor of the way of your duty, in this dark diſtempered condition that you are in: Either your mind and imagination is well or ill: If it be well, why complain you of all thoſe diſturbances, and confuſions, and diſability to meditate and pray? If it be ill, why will you be ſo ſelf-conceited as to think your ſelves able to judge of your ſelves, with ſuch a diſtempered phantaſie or mind. It is one of the worſt things in Melancholy perſons, that commonly they are moſt wiſe in their own eyes, and ſtiff in their own conceits, when their brains are ſickeſt, and their underſtanding weakeſt: And that they are confident, and unruly, and unperſwadable, as if they were proud of thoſe pitible underſtandings; and thought no body knows ſo well as they. O ſay they, you know not my caſe? Am not I liker to know your caſe, who have ſeen ſo many ſcore in that caſe, than you are that never knew it in any but your ſelf? A man that ſtands by may better know the caſe of a man that is in a dream, than he can know his own. You ſay that others feel not what you feel! no more doth the Phyſician feel what a man in a Feaver, or Falling ſickneſs, or diſtraction feeleth; and yet by the report of what you ſay you feel, and by what he feeleth, he far better knoweth your diſeaſe, the nature and the cure of it, than you that feel it. Therefore as a wiſe man when he is ſick will truſt himſelf, under God, to the direction of his Phyſician and the help of his friends about him, and not lye wrangling againſt their help and counſel, and wilfully refuſe it, becauſe they adviſe him contrary to his feeling; ſo will you do, if you are wiſe; Truſt your ſelf with ſome fit director; and deſpiſe not his judgment either about your ſtate, or about your duty. You think you are loſt and there is no hope: Hear what he ſaith that is now fitter to judge. Set not your weak wit too wilfully againſt him. Do you think he is ſo fooliſh as to miſtake? ſhould not humility make you rather think ſo of your ſelf? Be adviſed by him about the matter of your thoughts, the manner and length of your ſecret duties, and all your ſcruples that you need advice in. Will you anſwer me this one queſtion? Do you know any body that is wiſer than your ſelf? and fitter to judge of your condition and adviſe you? If you ſay, No, how proud are you of ſuch a crazed wit? If you ſay, Yea, Then believe and truſt that perſon, and reſolve to follow his Direction. And I would ask you: were you not once of another judgment concerning your ſelf? If ſo, then were you not as ſound and able to judge, and liker to be in the right than you are now?

Dir. 21. §. 25. Direct. 21. My laſt advice is, to look out for the cure of your diſeaſe, and commit your ſelf to the care of your Phyſician, and obey him: And do not as moſt melancholy perſons do, that will not believe that Phyſick will do them good, but that it is only their ſoul that is afflicted: For it is the ſpirits, imagination and paſſions that are diſeaſed, and ſo the ſoul is like an eye that looketh through a coloured glaſs, and thinks all things are of the ſame colour as the glaſs is. I have ſeen abundance cured by Phyſick, and till the body be cured, the mind will hardly ever be cured, but the cleareſt Reaſons will be all in vain.

Tit. 6. Directions for young Students, for the moſt profitable ordering of their ſtudying Thoughts.

§. 1. Direct. 1. LET it be your firſt and moſt ſerious ſtudy to make ſure, that you are regenerate, and ſanctified by the Holy Ghoſt, and juſtified by faith in Chriſt, and Love God above all, as your reconciled Father, and ſo have right to the Heavenly inheritance. Dir. 1.

§. 2. For 1. You are neareſt to your ſelves, and your everlaſting happineſs is your neareſt and your higheſt intereſt: what will it profit you to know all the world, and to loſe your own ſouls? To know as much as Devils, and be for ever miſerable with Devils?

§. 3. 2. It is a moſt doleful employment to be all day at work in Satans Chains! To ſit ſtudying God and the Holy Scriptures, while you are in the power of the Devil, and have hearts that are at enmity to the Holineſs of that God and that Scripture which you are ſtudying. It is a moſt prepoſterous and incongruous courſe of ſtudy, if you firſt ſtudy not your own deliverance. And if you knew your caſe, and ſaw your chains, your trembling would diſturb your ſtudies.

§. 4. 3. Till you are renewed you ſtudy in the dark, and without that internal ſight and ſenſe, by which the life and ſpirit and kernel of all that you ſtudy, muſt be known. All that the Scripture ſaith of the darkneſs of a ſtate of ſin, and of the illumination of the ſpirit, and of the marvellous light of regenerate ſouls, and of the natural mans not receiving the things of the ſpirit, and of the carnal mind that is enmity againſt God, and is not ſubject to his Law, nor can be; all theſe and ſuch other paſſages are not inſignificant, but moſt conſiderable truths from the ſpirit of truth. You have only that Light that will ſhew you the ſhell, and the dead letter, but not the ſoul, and quickning ſenſe, of any practical holy truth. As the eye knoweth meat which we never taſted, or as a meer Grammarian, or Logician readeth a Law book or Phyſick book who gather nothing out of them that will ſave a mans eſtate or life, ſo will you proſecute all your ſtudies. Act. 26. 18. Eph. 1. 18, 19. Col. 1. 13. 1 Pet. 2. 9. Rom. 8. 7. 1 Cor. 2. 14, 15.

§. 5. 4. You are like to have but ill ſucceſs in your ſtudies, when the Devil is your Maſter, who hateth both you, and the holy things which you are ſtudying. He will blind you, and pervert you, and poſſeſs your minds with falſe conceits, and put diverting ſenſual thoughts into you, and will keep your own ſouls from being ever the better for it all.

§. 6. 5. You will want the true end of all right ſtudies; and ſet up wrong ends; and therefore whatever be the matter of your ſtudies, you are ſtill out of your way, and know nothing rightly, becauſe you know it not as a Means to the true end. (But of this anon.)

§. 7. Direct. 2. When you have firſt laid this foundation, and have the true Principle and End of all right Studies, be ſure that you intend this End in all (even the Everlaſting Sight and Love of God, and the promoting his Glory, and pleaſing his holy will.) And that you never meddle with any ſtudies ſeparated from this end, but as a means thereto, and as animated thereby.

§. 8. If every ſtep in your journey is but loſs of time and labour, which is not directed to your journeys end; and if all that you have to mind or do in the world, be only about your End or the Means; and all creatures and actions can have no other moral Goodneſs, than to be the means of God your ultimate end; then you may eaſily ſee, that when ever you leave out God as the end of any of your ſtudies, you are but ſinning; or doting, for

in

in those Studies there can be no Moral Good, though they may tend to your knowledge of Natural Good and Evil. And when you think you grow wise and learned men, and can dispute and talk of many things, which make to your renown, while your wills consent not to the wholsome words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the doctrine which is according to Godliness; you are proud, knowing nothing, but doting about questions and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railing, evil surmisings, perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds supposing that gain is Godliness: from such turn away. As there is no knowledge but from God, so it is not knowledge but dotage if it lead not unto God.

1 Tim. 6. 3, 4, 5, 6.

Dir. 3. §. 9. Direct. 3. See therefore that you choose all your studies according to their tendency to God your end, and use them still under the notion of means, and that you estimate your knowledge by this End, and judge your selves to know no more indeed, than you know of God and for God: And so let practical Divinity be the soul of all your Studies.

Therefore, when Life is too short for the Studies of all things which we desire to know, make sure of the chief things, and prefer those studies which make most to your End; spend not your time on things unprofitable to this end: And spend not your first and chiefest time on things unnecessary to it: For the near connexion to God the end, it is that ennobleth the matter of your studies. All true knowledge leads to God; but not all alike: The neerest to him is the best.

Nos autem nec subito capimus philosophari, nec mediocrem à primo tempore ætatis in eo studio operam curamque consumpsimus, & cum minime videbamur tum maxime philosophabamur. Cicero de nat. deor. page 5.

Dir. 10. §. 10. Direct. 4. Remember that the chief part of your growth in knowledge, is not in knowing many smaller things, of no necessity; but in a growing downwards in a clearer insight into the foundation of the Christian faith, and in taking better Rooting than you had at your first believing; and in growing upward into a greater knowledge of God, and into a greater Love of him, and heavenly mindedness, and then in growing up to greater skill and ability and readiness to do him service in the world.

Know as much as you can know, of the works of God, and of the languages and customs of the world: but still remember that to know God in Christ better, is the growth which you must daily study: And when you know them most, you have still much more need to know better these great things which you know already; than to know more things, which you never knew: The Roots of faith may still increase, and the branches and fruits of Love may be still greater and sweeter! As long as you live, you may still know better the Reasons of your Religion (though not better Reasons) and you may know better how to use your knowledge. And whatever you know, let it be that you may be led up to Know God more, or Love him more, or serve him better.

Dir. 11. §. 11. Direct. 5. With fear and detestation watch and resolve against all carnal worldly ends; and see that your hearts be not captivated by your fleshly interest; nor grow not to a high esteem of the pleasures, or profits or honours of this world, nor to relish any fleshly accommodations, as very pleasant and desirable: but that you take up with God and the hopes of Glory as your satisfying portion, and follow Christ as Cross-bearers, denying your selves, and dead to the world, and resolved and prepared to forsake all for his sake.

Dir. 12. §. 12. These are words that you can easily say your selves: But these are things that are so hardly learnt, that many of the most Learned and Reverend perish for want of being better acquainted with them: (And I shall never take that man to be wisely learned, that hath not learnt to scape damnation,) Christs Cross is to be learned before your Alphabet. To impose the Cross is quickly learnt, but to learn to bear it is the difficulty. To lay the Cross on others is to be the followers of Pilate: But to bear it when it is laid on us, is to be the followers of Christ. If you grow corrupted with a love of honour and riches and preferment, and come to the study of Divinity with a fleshly worldly mind and End, you will but serve Satan while you seem to be seeking after God, and damn your souls among the doctrines and means of salvation, and go to God for materials to chain you faster to the Devil, and steal a nail from Divinity to fasten your ears unto his door. And you little know how Judas's gain will gripe and torment the awakened Conscience! and how the rust will witness against you, and how it will eat your flesh as fire, Jam. 5. 3.

Dir. 6. §. 13. Direct. 6. Digest all that you know, and turn it into holy Habits, and expell that success first on your selves, which if you were to Preach you would expect in others. Remembring that knowing is not the end of knowing; but it is as eating to the body where health, and strength and service is the end. Primum contemplativæ sapientiæ rudimentum est meditari, condiscere, & loquitari dedicere: Paul. Scalig. Thes. P. 730.

§. 14. Every Truth of God is his candle which he sets up for you to work by: It is as food that is for Life and action. You lose all the knowledge which ends in knowing. To fill your head and common-place-book is not all that you have to do. But to fortifie and quicken and enflame your hearts. Good habits are the best provision for a Preacher. The habits of Mind are better than the best library. But if the habits of Heavenly Love and life in the heart do not concur, the Heart and life of a Preacher and a Scholar is wanting still, for all your knowledge. Study Pauls words, 1 Cor. 8. 1. Knowledge puffeth up, but Charity edifieth: If he had said that knowledge edifieth others and charity saveth our selves, he would have said nothing that is strange: But even as to edification charity hath the precedency.

Dir. 7. §. 15. Direct. 7. Yea, see that you excell the unlearned as much in Holiness as you do in knowledge: unless you will perswade them that your knowledge is a useless worthless thing; and unless you would be judged as unprofitable servants.

§. 16. Every degree of Knowledge is for a further degree of Holiness: Ten Talents must be improved to ten more. They that know and do not, are beaten with many stripes. The Devils Scholars look on the godly that are unlearned, with hatred and disdain, and preach to their discouragement and disgrace, and strive to set and keep true Godliness in the stocks: But Christs Ministers love Holiness where ever they see it, and are ashamed to think that the unlearned should be more holy and heavenly than they; and strive to go beyond them as much in the use and ends of knowledge, as in knowledge it self: And with Austin lament that while the unlearned take Heaven by violence, the learned are thrust out into Hell, as thinking it is their part to know and teach, and other mens to practice.

Dir. 8. §. 17. Direct. 8. Cast not away a moment of your precious time, in idleness, or impertinencies; but follow your work diligently, and with all your might.

§. 18. I mean not that you should over-do and over-throw your brains and bodies, nor forbear such sober exercise as is most necessary to your health: For a sick body is an ill companion for a Student; and much more a crazed brain. But time-wasters are Lovers of pleasure or idleness, more than of knowledge and holiness: and wisdom falleth not into idle sluggish dreaming souls. If you think it not worth your paintfullest and closest studies, you must must take up with idle ignorance, and go abroad with swelling Titles and empty brains, as the deceivers and the scourgers of the Church.

Dir. 9. §. 19. Direct. 9. Keep up a Delight in all your Studies, and carry them not on in an unwilling weariness: And, if it be not by notable Error in Matter or Method, gratify your Delight with such things as you are best pleased with, tho' they bring some smaller Inconvenience: because else your Weariness may bring much more.

§. 20. I know that a delight in sin and vanity is not to be gratified: and force must be used with a backward mind in case of necessity and weight. But if it be but in the Variety of Subjects, and the choice of pleasing studies which are profitable, though simply some other might be fitter, something is to be yielded to delight. But especially the heart must be got to a delight in holy things: And then, time will be improved: the memory will be helped; much will be done; and you will persevere: And it will preserve the mind from temptations to needless recreations, and from the deadly plague of youthful lusts, when your daily labour is a greater pleasure to you.

Dir. 10. §. 21. Direct. 10. Get some judicious Man to draw you up the Titles of a Threefold Common-place Book: One part for Definitions, Axioms, and necessary Doctrines: Another part for what is useful for Ornament and Oratory: And another for References as a common Index to all the Books of that Science which you read: For memory will not serve for all.

§. 22. Ordinarily Students have not Judgment enough to form their own Common place Books till they are old in Studies, and have read most of the Authors which they would remember: And therefore the young must here have a judicious helper. And when they have done, injudiciousness will be apt to fill it with less necessary things, and to make an unmeet choice of matter, if they have not care and an Instructer.

Dir. 11. §. 23. Direct. 11. Highly esteem of a just Method in Divinity, and in all your studies: and labour to get an accurate Scheme or Skeleton, where at once, you may see every part in its proper place. But remember that if it be not sound, it will be a snare; and one errour in your Scheme or Method will be apt to introduce abundance more.

Since the writing of this, I have begun a Methodus Theologiæ.

§. 24. It's a poor and pitiful kind of Knowledge, to know many loose parcels, and broken Members of truth, without knowing the whole, or the place and relation which they have to the rest. To know letters and not syllables, or syllables and not words, or words and not sentences, or sentences and not the scope of the discourse, are all but an unprofitable knowledge. He knoweth no Science rightly that hath not anatomized it, and carrieth not a true Scheme or Method of it in his Mind. But among the many that are extant, to commend any one to you which I most esteem, or take to be without Error, is more than I dare do.

Dir. 12. §. 25. Direct. 12. Still keep the primitive Fundamental Verities in your Mind, and see every other Truth which you learning as spiring out of them, and receiving their Life and Nourishment from them: And still keep in your Minds a clear distinction between the Truths of several degrees, both of Necessity, and Certainty, always reducing the less Necessary to the more Necessary, and the less certain to the more certain, and not contrarily.

Read well Vincentius Lirinensis.

§. 26. If God had made all Points of Faith, or Scripture Revelation of equal necessity, our Baptism would not only have mention'd our Belief in the Father, the Son and the holy Ghost: nor should we ever have seen the antient Creed; nor the Ten Commandments. And if all Points were of equal Evidence, and plainness, and certainty to us, we should not have some so much controverted above others: Some things in Scripture are hard to be understood, but not all things, 2 Pet. 3. 16. To pretend that any Truth is more necessary than it is, doth tend to uncharitableness and contention; And to say that any is less necessary than it is, doth tend to the neglect of it, and to the danger of souls: To pretend any point to be more plain and certain than it is, doth but shew our pride and ignorance. But to set up uncertain and unnecessary points, and make a Religion of them, and reduce things certain or necessary to them, this is the method of turbulent Hereticks.

§. 27. Direct. 13. Take nothing as universally necessary in Religion, which was not so taken in the Days of the Apostles, and Primitive Church; and take that for the safest way to Heaven which the Apostles went who certainly are there: value the Apostolical purity simplicity, charity and unity: and follow not them that by being wise and pious overmuch, corrupt our sacred pattern by their additions, and fill the Church with uncharitableness and strife. Dir. 13.

§. 28. If it were not a thing too evident, that Dominion and Riches go for Religion with them, and gain for Godliness, and Honour and Money instead of Argument, it would be a most stupendious Wonder that so many learned Men should be found among Christians in the World, to hinder the Peace and Unity of the Church, as do it vehemently and implacably in the Church of Rome; when so easie a thing and so reasonable, would unite almost all the Christian world, as is, the requiring no more as necessary to our Union, than what was made necessary in the Days of the Apostles, and the obtruding nothing as necessary to Salvation, which the Apostles and primitive Church were saved without. This easie reasonable thing, which no Man hath any thing of seeming sense and weight to speak against, would end all the ruinating differences among Christians.

§. 29. Direct. 14. Be desirous to know all that God would have you know, and be willing to be ignorant of all that God would have you ignorant of: and pry not into unrevealed things; and much less make them the matter of any uncharitable Strife. Dir. 14.

§. 30. Abundance of contentious Volumes between the Dominicans, and Jesuits, and many others, are stuft with bold Inquiries, Wranglings, or determinations of unsearchable Mysteries, utterly unknown to those that voluminously debate them, and never revealed in the Word or Works of God. Keep off with reverence from concealed misteries: Talk not as boldly of the Divine Influx, and the priority, posteriority, dependance or reason of Gods Decrees, as if you were talking of your common Affairs. Come with great reverence when you are called of God to search into those high and holy Truths, which he hath revealed. But pretend not to know that which is not to be known. For you will but discover your ignorance and arrogance, and know never the more, when you have doted about Questions never so long.

§. 31. Direct. 15. Avoid both extreams, of them that study no more, but to know what others have written and held before them; and of them that little regarded the Discoveries of others: Learn all of your Teachers and Authors that they can teach you; but make all your own, and see things in their proper evidence; and improve their Discoveries by the utmost of your Diligence; abhorring a proud desire of singularity, or to seem wiser than you are. Dir. 15.

§. 32. Most Students through slothfulness look no further for Knowledge, than into their Books; and their learning lieth but in knowing what others have written, or said, or held before them; especially where the least differing from the Judgment of the Party which is uppermost or in reputation, doth doth tend to hazzard a mans honour, or preferments, there men think it dangerous to seem to know more than is commonly known; and therefore think it needless to study to know it: Men are backward to take much pains to know that which tendeth to their ruine to be known, but doth them no harm while they can but keep themselves ignorant of it: Which makes the opposed Truth have so few entertainers or Students among the Papists, or any that persecute or reproach it. And others discerning this extream, do run into the contrary; and under pretence of the lovelinesse of Truth, and the need of liberty of judging, do think the edifying way is first to pull down all that others have built before them, and little regard the judgement of their predecessors, but think they must take nothing on trust from others, but begin all from the very ground themselves. And usually their Pride makes them so little regard the most approved Authors, that they have not patience to read them till they throughly understand them; but reject that which is received, before they understand it, meerly because it was the received way: And while they say, that nothing must be taken upon trust, they presently take upon trust themselves that very opinion, and with it the other opinions of those Novelists that teach them this. And believing what such say in disgrace of others, withal they believe what they hold in opposition to those that they have disgraced. But it is easie to see how sad a case mankind were in, if every man must be a fabricator of all his knowledge himself, and posterity should be never the better for the discoveries of their ancestors; and the greatest labours of the wisest men, and their highest attainments must be no profit to any but themselves. Why do they use a Teacher, if they must do all themselves? If they believe not their Tutors, and take nothing on trust, it seems they must know every Truth before they will learn it: And what difference is there between believing a Tutor and an Author? And is not that more credible which upon long experience is approved by many Nations and Ages, than that which is recommended to you but by one or few? These Students should have made themselvs an Alphabet or Grammer, and not have taken the common ones on trust. It is easier to add to other mens inventions, than to begin and carry on all our selves. By their course of study, the world would never grow wiser; but every age and person be still beginning, and none proceed beyond their rudiments.

Dir. 16. § 33. Direct. 16. Be sure you make choice of meet Teachers and companions for your studies and your lives: That they be such as will assist you in the holy practice of what you know, as well as in your knowledge: And shun as a plague the familiarity 1. Of sensual, idle, brutish persons; 2. And of carnal ambitious ones, who know no higher end than preferment and applause; 3. And of proud heretical contentious wits, whose wisdom and Religion is nothing but censuring, reproaching and vilifying them that are wiser and better than themselves.

§. 34. Bad company is the common ruine of youth: Their own sensuality is easily stirred up by the temptations of the sensual; and their consciences over born by the examples of other mens voluptuous lives. It emboldneth them to sin, to see others sin before them: as Cowards themselves are drawn on in an Army to run upon the face of death, by seeing others do it, and to avoid the reproach of cowardize: And the noise of mirth and ranting language, are the Drums and Trumpets of the Devils, by which their ears are kept from hearing the cryes of wounded dying men, the lamentations of those that have found the error of that way. And there is in corrupted nature, so strong an inclination to the prosperity and vain glory of the world, that makes them quickly take the bait, especially when the Devil doth offer it them by a fit instrument, which shall not deter them, as it would do, if he had offered it them himself. It is a pleasant thing to flesh and blood to be rich and great, and generally applauded: and a grievous thing to be poor, and despised, and afflicted. The rawness and unsetledness of youth, who want the well furnished understandings and experience, is a great advantage to Hereticks and deceivers, who still sweep many such away, where-ever they come and have but opportunity. Children are easily tost up and down, and carried to and fro with every wind of doctrine, by the cunning slight and subtilty of them that lye in wait to deceive, Ephes. 4. 14. Deceivers have their Methods; and Methods are the common instruments of deceit; which are not easily detected by the unexperienced. On the contrary, the benefit of wise, and staid, and sober, and peaceable, meek, humble, holy heavenly companions, is exceeding great, especially to youth! Such will lead them in safe paths, and be still preserving them, and promoting the most necessary parts of knowledge, and quickning them to holy practice, which is the End of all.

Sum quisque studeat rerum peritia & experientia pariter & Laert.

§ 35. Direct. 17. In all your studies be jealous of both extreams, and distinctly discern which are the extreams, that you run not into one, while you avoid the other: And be specially careful, that you imagine not co-ordinates or subordinates to be opposites, and throw not away every truth, which you cannot presently place rightly in the frame, and see it fall in agreeable with the rest: For a further insight into true Method (attained but by very few) may reconcile you to that which now offendeth you: What God hath joyned together be sure that you never put asunder: Though yet you cannot find their proper places. Dir. 17

Cum opiniones tam variæ, tam inter se dissidentes, alterum fieri potest, ut earum nulla, alterum certè non potest, ut plus una vera sit. Cicero de Nat. Deor. page 5.

§. 36. There is scarce any error more common among Students than supposing those Truths to be inconsistent, which indeed have a necessary dependance on each other; and a casting truth away as error, because they cannot reconcile it to some other truth: And there is nothing so much causeth this, as want of a true Method: He that hath no Method considerable, or after much curious labour hath fallen upon a false Method, or a Method that in any one considerable point is out of joynt, will deal thus by many certain truths: As an ignorant person that is to set all the scattered parts of a Clock or Watch together, if he misplace one, will be unable rightly to place all the rest; and then when he finds that they fit not the place which he thinks they must be in, he casteth them away, and thinks they are not the right, and is searching for, or making something else to fit that Place. False Method rejecteth many a truth.

§. 37. And unless it be in Loving God, or other acts of the superior faculties, about their ultimate end and highest object, there is scarce any thing in mortality but hath its extreams. And where they are not discerned, they are seldom well avoided. And usually narrow sighted persons are fearful only of one extream, and see no danger but on one side; and therefore are easily carried, by avoiding that, into the contrary.

§. 38. I think it not unprofitable to instance in several particular Cautions, that you imitate not them that put asunder what God hath conjoyned, and cast not away Truth as oft as you are puzzled in the right placing or methodizing it.

§. 39. Inst. 1. The first and second Causes are conjoyned in their operations, and therefore must not Inst. 1. be be put asunder. If the way of influx, concourse, or co-operation be dark and unsearchable to you, do not deny that it is, because you see not how it is. The Honour of the first and second Cause also are conjunct, according to their several Interests in the effects: Do not therefore imagine, that all the honour ascribed to the Second Cause is denied or taken away from the first: For then you understand not their Order: Otherwise you would see, that as the second causeth independence on the first, and in subordination to it, and hath no power but what is communicated by it, so it hath no honour but what is received from it: and that it is no less honour for the first cause to operate mediately by the second, than immediately by it self: And that there is no less of the Power, Wisdom or Goodness of God in an effect produced by means and second Causes, than in that which he produceth of himself only without them: And that it is his Goodness to communicate a power of doing good to his creatures, and the honour of working and causing under him: but he never loseth any thing by communicating, nor hath the less himself by giving to his Creatures: For if all that honour that is given to the Creature were taken injuriously from God, then God would never have made the world, nor made a Saint; and then the worst creatures would least dishonour God: Then he would not shine by the Sun, but by himself immediately: And then he would never Glorify either Saint or Angel. But on the contrary, it is Gods honour to work by adapted means: And all their honour is truly his. As all the commendation of a Clock or Watch is given to the Workman. And though God do not all so immediately as to use no means or second Causes; yet is he never the further from the effect, but immediatione virtutis & suppositi is himself as near, as if he used none.

Inst. 2. §. 40. Inst. 2. The Special Providence of God, and his being the first Universal cause, are conjunct with the culpability of sinners; and no Man must put these asunder. Those that cannot see just how they are conjoined, may be sure that they are conjoyned. It is no dishonour to an Engineer that he can make a Watch which shall go longer than he is moving it with his finger: Nor is it a dishonour to our Creator, that he can make a Creature which can Morally determine it self to an action as commanded or forbidden, without the predetermination of his Maker, though not without his universal concourse necessary to action as action. If Adam could not do this through the natural impossibility of it, then the Law was, that he should dye the death if he did not overcome God, or do that which was naturally impossible; and this was the nature of his sin. Few dare say, that God cannot make a free self-determining agent: And if he can, we shall easily prove that he hath; and the force of their opposition then is vanished.

Inst. 3. §. 41. Inst. 3. The Omniscience of God and his Dominion, Government and Decrees, are conjunct with the liberty and sin of man; yet these by many are put asunder: As if God must either be Ignorant or be the Author of sin! As if he made one poor, by Decreeing to make another Rich! As if he cannot be a perfect Governour, unless he procure all his Subjects perfectly to keep his Laws! As if all the fault of those that break the Law were to be laid upon the Maker of the Law: As if all God's Will de debito were not effective of its proper work, unless man fulfil it in the Event! And as if it were possible for any Creature to comprehend the way of the Creators Knowledge.

Inst. 4. §. 42. Inst. 4. Many would separate Nature and Grace which God the author of both conjoineth. When Grace supposeth Nature, and in her Garden soweth all her seed, and exciteth and rectifieth all her powers; yet these men talk as if Nature had been annihilated, or Grace came to annihilate it, and not to cure it. As if the Leprosie and Disease of Nature were Nature it self! And as if Natural Good had been lost as much as Moral Good! As if Man were not Man, till Grace make him a man.

Inst. 5. §. 43. Inst. 5. Many separate the Natural Power of a sinner from his Moral Impotency, and his natural freedom of will from his Moral Servitude; as if they were inconsistent, when they are conjunct. As if the Natural Faculty might not consist with an evil disposition: or a natural Power with an habitual unwillingness to exercise it aright! And as if a sinner were not still a man!

Inst. 6. §. 44. Inst. 6. Many separate General and Special Grace and Redemption, as inconstant, when they are conjunct: when the General is the proper way and means of accomplishing the ends of the special Grace; and is still supposed: As if God could not give more to some, if he give any thing to all! Or as if he gave nothing to all if he give more to any! As if he could not deal equally and without difference with all as a Legislator, and righteously with all as a judge, unless he deal equally and without difference with all as a Benefactor in the free distribution of his gifts! As if he were obliged to make every Worm and Beast a man, and every Man a King, and every King an Angel, and every Clod a Star, and every Star a Sun!

Inst. 7. §. 45. Inst. 7. Many separate the Glory of God and mans salvation, God and man, in assigning the ultimate end of man! As if a moral Intention might not take in both! As if it were not finis amantis! and the end of a lover were not union in mutual Love! As if Love to God may not be for ever the final act, and God himself the final Object! and as if in this magnetick closure, though both may be called the End, yet there might not in the closing Parties, be an infinite disproportion, and only one be finis ultimatè ultimus.

Inst. 8. §. 46. Inst. 8. Yea many would separate God from God, while they would separate God from Heaven, and say that we must be content to be shut out of Heaven for the Love of God! When our Heaven is the perfect Love of God: And so they say in effect, that for the Love of God we must be content to be shut out from the Love of God.

Inst. 9. §. 47. Inst. 9. Thus also the vulgar separate the Mercy and the Justice of God! As if God knew not better than man to whom his mercy should extend! And as if God be not merciful, if he will be a righteous Governour, and unless he will suffer all the World to spit in his face and blaspheme him, and let his enemies go all unpunished?

Inst. 10. §. 48. Inst. 10. Thus many separate Threatnings and Promises, Fear and Love, a perfect Law and a pardoning Gospel: As if he that is a Man, and hath both Fear and Love in his nature, must not make use of both for God and his salvation! and the Law-giver might not fit his Laws to work on both? As if Hell may not be feared, and Heaven loved at once.

Inst. 11. §. 49. Inst. 11. Thus hypocrites separate in conceit their seeming Holiness and devotion to God from duties of Justice and Charity to men: As if they could serve God acceptably, and disobey him wilfully! Or as if they could love him whom they never saw, and not love his Image in his works and children whom they daily see! As if they could hate and persecute Christ in his little ones, or at least neglect him, and yet sincerely love him in himself.

Inst. 12. §. 50. Inst. 12. Thus by many Scripture and Tradition, Divine faith and human faith are commonly opposed: Because the Papists have set Tradition in a wrong place, many cast it away because it sits not that place: When mans Tradition and Ministerial Revelation, is necessary to make known and bring down Gods Revelation to us: And a ſubſervient Tradition is no diſparagement to Scripture, though a ſupplemental Tradition be: And man muſt be believed as man, though not as God! And he that will not believe man as man, ſhall ſcarce know what he hath to believe from God.

Inſt. 13. §. 51. Inſt. 13. Thus many ſeparate the ſufficiency of the Law and Rule from the uſefulneſs of an Officer, Miniſter and Judge! As if the Law muſt be imperfect, or elſe need no Execution, and no Judge for execution! Or as if the Judges execution were a ſupplement or addition to the Law! As if the Queſtion, Who ſhall be the Judge? did argue the Law of inſufficiency! and the promulgation, and execution were not ſuppoſed!

Inſt. 14. §. 52. Inſt. 14. Thus alſo many ſeparate the neceſſity of a publick Judge, from the lawfulneſs and neceſſity of a private Judgement, or diſcerning in all the rational ſubjects! As if God and man did govern only Brutes! or we could obey a Law, and not judge it to be a Law, and to be obeyed! and not underſtand the ſenſe of it, and what it doth command us! As if fools and mad men were the only ſubjects! As if our learning of Chriſt as his Diſciples, and meditating day and night in his Law and ſearching for Wiſdom in his Word, were a diſobeying him as our King! As if it were a poſſible thing for ſubjects to obey, without a private judgement of diſcretion! Or as if there were any repugnancy between my judging what is the Kings Law, and his judging whether I am puniſhable for diſobeying it! or as if judging our ſelves, contradicted our being judged of God!

Inſt. 15. §. 53. Inſt. 15. So, many ſeperate between the operation of the Word and Spirit, the Miniſter and Chriſt: As if the Spirit did not uſually work by the Word; and Chriſt did not preach to us by his Miniſters and Embaſſadors! And as if they might deſpiſe his Meſſengers, and not be taken for deſpiſers of himſelf! Or might throw away the diſh and keep the milk.

Inſt. 16. §. 54. Inſt. 16. Thus many ſeparate the ſpecial Love of Saints from the common Love of man as man: As if they could not love a Saint, unleſs they may hate an enemy, and deſpiſe all others, and deny them the Love which is anſwerable to their Natural Goodneſs.

Inſt. 17. §. 55. Inſt. 17. Thus many ſeparate Univerſal or Catholick Union and Communion from particular. And ſome underſtand no Communion but the Univerſal, and ſome none but the particular. Some ſay we ſeparate from them as to Catholick Communion, if we hold not local particular Communion with them; yea if we joyn not with them in every mode! As if I could be perſonally in ten thouſand thouſand Congregations at once, or elſe did ſeparate from them all! Or as if I ſeparated from all mankind, if I differed from all men in my viſage or complexion? Or as if I cannot be abſent from many thouſand Churches, and yet honour them as true Churches of Chriſt, and hold Catholick communion with them in Faith, Hope and Love! Yea, though I durſt not joyn with them perſonally in Worſhip for fear of ſome ſinful condition which they impoſe! Or as if I need not be a member of any ordered worſhipping Congregation, becauſe I have a Catholick faith and love to all the Chriſtians in the world!

Inſt. 18. §. 56. Inſt. 18. Thus are the outward and inward worſhip ſeparated by many, who think that all which the Body performeth is againſt the due ſpirituality; or that the ſpirituality is but fanſie and contrary to the form or outward part: As if the heart and the knee may not fitly bow together; nor decency of order concur with Spirit and truth.

Inſt. 19. §. 57. Inſt. 19. Thus many ſeparate faith and obedience; Pauls Juſtification by faith without the works of the Law, from James's Juſtification by works, and not by faith only, and Chriſts Juſtification by our words, Matth. 12. 37. And thus they ſeparate free grace and Juſtification from any neceſſary condition, and from the rewardableneſs of obedience (which the Antients called Merit): But of this at large elſewhere.

§. 58. Inſt. 20. And many ſeparate Prudence and zeal, meekneſs and reſolution, the wiſdom of the Serpent and the innocency of the Dove! yielding to no ſin, and yet yielding in things lawful; maintaining our Chriſtian liberty, and yet becoming all things to all men, if by any means we may ſave ſome. Theſe Inſtances are enough; I will add no more. Inſt. 20.

§. 59. Direct. 18. Take heed of falling into factions and parties in Religion, (be the party great or ſmall, high or low, in honour or diſhonour), and take heed leſt you be infected with a factious, cenſorious, uncharitable hurting zeal: For theſe are much contrary to the intereſt, Will and Spirit of Chriſt: Therefore among all your readings, deeply ſuck in the doctrine of charity and peace; and read much Reconciling moderating Authors: Such as Dury, Hall, Davenant, Crocius, Bergius, Martinius, Amyraldus, Dallæus, Teſtardus, Calixtus, Hottonus, Junius, Paræus and Burroughs their Irenicons. Dir. 18.

§. 60. The reading of ſuch books extinguiſheth the conſuming flame of that infernal envious zeal deſcribed James 3. and kindleth charity, and meekneſs, and mellowneſs, and moderation in the heart; and cureth thoſe blood-ſhotten eyes which are uncurable till cured to diſcern the truth: It helpeth us to knowledge; and to that which is more edifying, and keepeth knowledge from puffing us up. And experience will tell you at long running, that among Antients and Moderns, Greeks and Latines, Papiſts and Proteſtants, Lutherans, and Calviniſts, Remonſtrants and Contra-remonſtrants, Prelatiſts, Presbyterians, Independants, &c. commonly the Moderators are not only the beſt and moſt charitable, but the wiſeſt, moſt judicious men.

§. 61. Direct. 19. With all your Readings ſtill joyn the Reading of the Scriptures, and of the moſt holy and practical Divines; not fantaſtical Enthuſiaſtick counterfeits; Paracelſian Divines; but thoſe that lead you up by the ſolid Doctrine of Faith and Love to true Devotion, and Heavenly mindedneſs and Converſation. Dir. 19.

§. 62. This muſt be your bread and drink; your daily and ſubſtantial food: without this you may ſoon be filled with air that cannot nouriſh you, and prove in the end as ſounding Braſs and tinkling Cymbals: Theſe will breed ſtrength, and peace, and joy, and help you in your Communion with God, and hopes of Heaven, and ſo promote the end of all your Studies! There is more life and ſweetneſs in theſe, than in the things that are more remote from God and Heaven.

§. 63. Direct. 20. Laſtly, Do all as dying men, promiſe not your ſelves long life, leſt it tempt you to waſte your time on things leſs neceſſary, and to loiter it away; or leſt you loſe the quickning benefit, which the ſight of death and eternity would yield you, in all your ſtudies. Dir. 20.

§. 64. The nearer you apprehend your ſelves to death and Heaven, the greater help you have to be mortified and Heavenly: This will make you ſerious, and keep up right intentions, and keep out wrong ones, and powerfully help you againſt temptations, that when you have ſtudied to ſave others, you may not be caſt-aways, nor be cheated by the Devil with the ſhell, and leaves, and flowers, while you go without the ſaving fruit.

§. 65. I have ſpoken the more on this ſubject of Governing the Thoughts, becauſe it is ſo great and excellent a part of the work of man, and God doth ſo much regard the heart; and the ſpirit of Christ and Satan so much strive for it; and grace is so much employed about it: and our Happiness or Misery, Joy or Sorrow, is greatly promoted by our Thoughts. And more I would have said, but that in the third Chapter, and in my Treatise of the Divine Life there is much said already. And for a Method and Directions for particular Meditations, I have given it at large in the fourth Part of the Saints Rest, from whence it may easily be taken, and applyed to other Subjects, as it is there to Heaven: It is eahe to write and read Directions: but I fear lest slothfulness thro' the Difficulty of Practice, will frustrate my Directions to the most. But if any Profit by them, my labour is not lost.

CHAP. VII.

Directions for the Government of the Passions.

§. 1. THE Passions are to be considered, 1. As in themselves, and the Sin of them as respecting God and our selves only: And so I am to speak of them here. 2. As they are a wrong to others, and a Breach of the Commandments which require Love and Duty towards our Neighbour: And so I shall speak of them after.

§. 2. Passions are not sinful in themselves; for God hath given them to us for his service: And there is none of them but may be sanctified and used for him: But they are sinful, 1. When they are misguided and placed on wrong objects: 2. When they darken reason and delude the mind, and keep out truth, and seduce to errour. 3. When they rebel against the Government of the Will, and trouble it and hinder it in its choice or prosecution of good, or urge it violently, to follow their brutish inclination. 4. When they are unseasonable. 5. Or immoderate and excessive in degree. 6 Or of too long continuance. 7. And when they tend to evil effects, as to unseemly Speeches or Actions, or to wrong another.

§. 3. Passions are Holy when they are devoted to God, and exercised upon him or for him: They are Good when, 1. They have right objects, 2. And are guided by reason, 3. And are obedient to the well-guided will, 4. And quicken and awake the Reason and the will to do their duty, 5. And tend to good Effects, exciting all the other Powers to their office, 6. And exceed not in degree, so as to disturb the Brain or Body.

Tit. 1. Directions against all sinful Passions in general.

§. 4. Direct. 1. TRust not to any present actual resistance, without any due Habitual mortification of Passions, and Fortification of the Soul against them. Look most to the holy constitution of your Mind and Life, and then sinful Passions will fall off like Scabs from a healthful Body when the Blood is purified.

§. 5. No wonder if an unholy Soul be a slave to Passion, when the Body is inclined to it: For such a one is under the power of selfishness, carnality and worldliness; and from under the Government of Christ and his Spirit; and wanteth that Life of Grace by which he should cure and subdue the corruptions of nature. The way for such a one to master passion, is not to strive by natural selfish principles and reasons, which are partial, poor and weak; but to look first to the main, and to seek with speed and earnestness for a New and sanctified heart, and get Gods Image, and his Spirit and renewing quickning Grace: This is the only effectual conqueror of Nature. A dull and gentle disposition may seem without this to conquer that which never much assaulted it: (the Trial of such Persons being some other way): But none conquereth Satan indeed but the spirit of Christ. And if you should be free from Passion, and not be free from an unholy carnal worldly heart, you must perish at last if you seemed the calmest persons upon earth. Begin therefore at the Foundation, and see that the Body of sin be mortified, and that the whole Tree be rooted up which beareth these evil bitter fruits; and that the Holy victorious new nature be within you; and then you will resist sin with Light and Life, which others still resist but as in their sleep.

§. 6. Direct. 2. More particularly, let your Souls be still possessed with the fear of God, and live as in his family under his Eye and Government, that his Authority may be more powerful than Temptations, and your holy converse with him may make him still more regarded by you than Men or any Creatures. And then this Sun will put out the lesser Lights, and the thunder of his voice will drown the whisperers that would provoke you, and the humming of those wasps which make you so impatient: God would make the creature nothing, and then it would do nothing to disturb you, or carry you into sin. Dir. 2.

§. 7. Direct. 3. Dwell in the Delightful Love of God, and in the sweet Contemplation of his Love in Christ, and rowl over his tender Mercies in your thoughts, and let your conversation be with the Holy ones in Heaven, and your work be Thanksgivings and Praise to God: And this will habituate your Souls to such a sweetness, and mellowness, and stability, as will resist sinful passion even as heat resisteth cold. Dir. 3.

§. 8. Direct. 4. Keep your Consciences continually tender, and then they will check the first appearance of sinful passions; and will smart more with the sin than your passionate natures do with the Provocation: A seared Conscience, and a hardened senseless heart is to every sin, as a man that's fast asleep is to thieves: They may come in and do what they will, so they do not awaken him: But a tender Conscience is alwaysawake. Dir. 4.

§. 9. Direct. 5. Labour after Wisdom, strength of Reason, and a solid Judgment: for Passion is cherished by folly: Children are easily overthrown, and leaves are easily shaken with every little wind; when men keep their way, and rocks and mountains are not shaken. Women and Children, and old, and weak, and sick people are usually most passionate. If a wise Man should have a passionate Nature, he hath that which can do much to controle it: When folly is a Weather cock at the winds command. Dir. 5.

§. 10. Direct. 6. See that the Will be confirmed and resolute, and then it will soon command down Passion. Men can do much against Passion if they will. Nature hath set the will in the Throne of the soul: It is the sinful connivance and negligence of the will, which is the guilty cause of all the rebellion: As the connivance of the Commanders is the common cause of mutinies in an Army. The Will either consenteth or is remiss in its office, and in forbidding and repressing the rage of passion: when I say you can do it if you will, you think this is not true, because you are willing, and yet passion yieldeth not to your Wills command: But I mean not that every kind of Willingness will serve: It is not a sluggish wish that will do it: But if the Will were resolute without any compliance or connivance or negligence in its proper office, no sinful Passion could remain: For it is no further sin, than it is voluntary, either by the wills compliance or omission and neglect. Therefore let most of your labour be to weaken and confirm the Will; and then it will command down passion. Dir. 6.

Set Plutarch of Tranquillity of mind.

§. 11. Direct. 7. Labour after holy Fortitude, courage and magnanimity: Great minds are above all troubles, desires or commotions about little things: A poor, Dir. 7.

base, low, and childish mind, is never quiet longer than it is rockt asleep or flattered.

Dir. 8. §. 12. Direct. 8. Especially see that you want not self denial, and that worldlinesse and fleshly-mindedness be throughly mortified: For sinful passion is the very breath and pulse of a selfish, fleshly worldly mind. It is not more natural for dogs to fight about a bone than for such to snarl and quarrel, or be in some distempered Passion, about their selfish carnal-interest. Covetousness will not let the mind be quiet. It is as natural for a selfish man to be under the power of sinful Passions, as for a man to shake that hath an ague or to fear that is melancholy: fleshly men have a Canine appetite, and feaverish thirst continually upon them, after some flesh-pleasing toy or other.

Dir. 9. §. 13. Direct. 9. Keep a Court of Justice in your souls, and call your selves daily to account, and let no passion scape without such a censure as is due. If Reason and Conscience thus exercise and maintain their authority, and Passion be every day soundly rebuked, it will wither like a Plant that is cropt as fast as it springeth.

Dir. 10. §. 14. Direct. 10. Deliberate and foresee the end: examin whether passion tend to that which will be approvable when it's past. Looking to the end doth shame all sinful passions: They are blind, and moved only by things present: They cannot endure the sight of the time to come, nor to be examined whither they go, or where is their home.

Dir. 11. §. 15. Direct. 11. Keep a continual apprehension of the Danger and Odiousness of sinful Passions, by knowing how full they are of the spawn of many other sins. See the evil of them in the effects. Mark what passion doth in others and your selves: what abundance of evil thoughts and words and deeds do come from sinful passions?

Dir. 12. §. 16. Direct. 12. Observe the immediate troublesome effects, and the Disorders of your Soul, and so turn the Fruit of Passions against themselves. Mark how they discompose you, and disturb your Reason, and make your minds like muddied waters; and breed a diseased unquietness in you, unfitting you for your works, and breaking your peace; so that you can neither know, or use, nor enjoy your selves.

Dir. 13. §. 17. Direct. 13. Let Death look your Passions frequently in the face. It hath a mortifying vertue, and as it sheweth us the vanity of the creature, so it taketh down those passions, which creature-interest and deceit have caused. It exciteth reason, and restoreth it to its dominion, and silenceth the rebellion of the senses: A man that is to die to morrow, and knoweth it, would easilier repel to day a temptation to lust, or covetousness, or drunkenness, or revenge, than at another time he could have done: one look into eternity will powerfully rebuke all carnal passions.

Dir. 14. §. 18. Direct. 14. Remember still that God is present: Will you behave your selves passionately before him? When the presence of your Prince would calm you? Shall God and his holy Angels see thee like a Bedlam lay by thy reason and mis-behave thy self?

Dir. 15. §. 19 Direct. 15. Have still some pertinent scripture ready to rebuke thy Passions: That thou mayest say as Christ to Satan, Thus it is written. Speak to it in the name and word of God: Tho' the bare words will not charm these evil spirits, yet the authority will curb them. For this word is quick and powerful, a discerner of the thoughts, Heb. 4. 12. mighty thro' God, to the pulling down of strong holds, casting down Imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth it self against the knowledge of God, and bringeth into captivity every thought to the Obedience of Christ. 2 Cor. 10. 4, 5.

Dir. 16. §. 20. Direct. 16. Set Christ continually before you as your pattern, who calleth you to learn of him to be meek and lowly: Matth. 11. 29. Who desired not the wealth or glory of the world: who loved his own that were in the world, but loved not the things of the world: who never was lifted up or sinfully cast down: who never despised or envied man, nor never feared man: who never was over-merry or over-sad: who being reviled, reviled not again; but was dumb as a lamb before the shearers. 1 Pet. 2. 21, 22, 23, 24. Isa. 53.

Dir. 17. §. 21. Direct. 17. Keep as far from all occasions of your Passions as other duties will allow you: And contrive your affairs and occasions into as great an opposition as may be to the temptation. Run not into Temptation if you would be delivered from evil: Much might be done by a willing prudent man, by the very ordering of his affairs: God and Satan work by means: let the means then be regarded.

Dir. 18. §. 22. Direct. 18. Have a due care of your bodies that no distemper be cherished in them which causeth the distemper of the soul. Passions have a very great dependance on the temperament of the body: And much of the cure of them lieth (when it is possible) in the bodies emendation.

Dir. 19. §. 23. Direct. 19. Turn all your Passions into the right chanel, and make them all Holy, using them for God upon the greatest thing. This is the true cure: The bare restraint of them is but a palliate cure; like the easing of pain by a dose of Opium. Cure the fear of man, by the fear of God, and the Love of the creature, by the Love of God, and the cares for the body by caring for the soul, and earthly fleshly Desires and Delights, by spiritual Desires and Delights, and worldly sorrow, by profitable godly sorrow.

Dir. 20. §. 24. Direct. 20. Controul the Effects, and frustrate your passions of what they would have; and that will ere long destroy the Cause. Cross your selves of the things which carnal Love and desire would have: Forbear the things which carnal mirth or anger would provoke you to, and the fire will go out for want of fewel. (Of which more in the particulars).

Tit. 2. Directions against sinful Love of Creatures.

§. 1. LOve is the Master Passion of the Soul, because it hath the chiefest Object, even Goodness which is the Object of the will: And simple love is nothing but Complacency, which is nothing but the simple Volition of Good; And it is a Passionate Volition or Complacency which we call the Passion of Love. When this is Good and when it's sinful I shewed before. But yet because the one half of the cure here lieth in the conviction, and it is so hard a thing to make any Lover perceive a sinfulness in his Love, I shall first help you in the tryal of your Love, to shew the sinfulness of it: when I have first named the Objects of it.

Solus Amor facit hominem bonum vel malum. Paul Scaliger. Thes. p. 721.

§. 2. Any creature which seemeth Good to us, may possibly be the object of sinful Love: As Honour, Greatness, authority, praises, money, houses, lands, cattle, meat, drink, sleep, apparel, sports, friends, relations, and life it self. As for Lustful Love I shall speak of it anon.

Helps for discovering of sinful Love.

Dir. 1. §. 3. Direct. 1. Make Gods interest and his word the standard to judge of all affections by. That which is against the Love of God, and would abate or hinder it, yea, which doth not directly or indirectly tend to further it, is certainly a sinful Love: And so is all that is against his Word. For the Love of God is our final act upon our ultimate end, and therefore all that tends not to it, is a sin against our very end, and so against our nature and the use of our Faculties.

Dir. 2. §. 4. Direct. 2. Therefore whatever creature is Loved ultimately for it self, and not for a higher end, even for God, his service, his honour, his relation to it, or his excellency appearing in it, is sinfully loved. For it is made our God when it is Loved ultimately for it self.

Dir. 3. §. 5. Direct. 3. Suspect all Love to Creatures which is very strong and violent, and easily kindled, and hardly moderated or quieted: Tho' you might think it is for ſome ſpiritual end or excellency, that you Love any Perſon or any thing, yet ſuſpect it if it be ſo eaſie and ſtrong: Becauſe that which is truly and purely ſpiritual is againſt corrupted nature, and comes from Grace which is but weak: we find no ſuch eaſineſs to Love God, and Scripture and prayer, and holineſs: nor are our affections ſo violent to theſe. It's well if all the fewel and blowing we can uſe will keep them alive. It's two to one that the fleſh and the Devil have put in ſome of their fewel or gunpowder, if it be fierce.

and

Dir. 4. §. 6. Direct. 4. Suſpect all that Love which ſelfiſhneſs and fleſhly intereſt have a hand in. Is it ſome bodily pleaſure and delight that you love ſo much? Or is it a good book or other help for your ſoul? we are ſo much apter to exceed and ſin in carnal fleſhly mindedneſs, than in Loving what is good for our ſouls, that there we would be much more ſuſpicious. If it be violent and for the body, it's ten to one there is ſin in it.

Dir. 5. §. 7. Direct. 5. Suſpect all that Love to creatures which your Reaſon can give no good account of, nor ſhew you a juſtifiable cauſe. If you Love one place or perſon much more than others, and know not why, but Love them becauſe you cannot chooſe, this is much to be ſuſpected: Tho' God may ſometime kindle a ſecret Love between friends, from an unexpreſſible unity or ſimilitude of minds, beyond what reaſon will undertake to juſtify, yet this is rare, and commonly fanſie or folly or carnality is the cauſe: However it is more to be ſuſpected and tryed, than Rational Love.

Dir. 6. §. 8. Direct. 6. Suſpect all that fervent Love to any Creature which is haſty before ſufficient tryal: for commonly both Perſons and things have the beſt ſide outward, and ſeem better at the firſt appearance than they prove. Not but that a moderate Love may be taken up upon the firſt appearance of any excellency, eſpecially ſpiritual: But ſo as to allow for a poſſibility of being deceived, and finding more faultineſs upon a fuller trial than we at firſt perceive. Have you dwelt in the houſe with the Perſons whom you ſo much admire? and have you tried them in their converſations? and ſeen them tried by croſſes, loſſes, injuries, adverſity, proſperity, or the offers of Preferment or Plenty in the world? you would little think what lurketh undiſcovered in the hearts of many, that have excellent parts, till trial manifeſt it!

Dir. 7. §. 9. Direct. 7. Try your affections in prayer before God, whether they be ſuch as you dare boldly pray God either to increaſe or continue and bleſs; and whether they be ſuch as conſcience hath no quarrel againſt. If they endure not this tryal, be the more ſuſpicious, and ſearch more narrowly: The name and preſence of God in prayer, doth much diſpel the frauds of carnal reaſonings. Yet perſons who be Melancholy are caſt into diſeaſed fears and ſcrupoſities, are uncapable of this way of tryal.

Dir. 8. §. 10. Direct. 8. Conſult with wiſe impartial Perſons: and open your caſe to them without deceit, before affection have gone ſo far as to blind you, or leave you uncapable of help. In this caſe if in any caſe, the Judgment of a ſtranger by that's faithful and impartial is uſually to be preferred before your own. For we are too near our ſelves; and judgment will be bribed and biaſſed even in the beſt and wiſeſt Perſons.

Dir. 9. §. 11. Direct. 9. Yet caſt not away all becauſe you diſcover much exceſs or carnality in your affections: For frequently there is mixture both in the cauſe of Love, and in the Love it ſelf of good and evil. And when you have but taken out all that was ſelfiſh and carnal and erroneous in the cauſe, the carnal violent Love will ceaſe; but not all Love: For ſtill there will and muſt remain the moderate rational and holy Love, which is proportioned to the creatures worth and merit, and is terminated ultimately on God: The ſeparation being made, this part muſt be preſerved.

Dir. 10. §. 12. Direct. 10. Meer Natural appetite in it ſelf is neither morally good or evil: But as it is well placed and ordered it is good, and as unruled or ill-ruled it is evil.

Helps to mortify ſinful Love.

Dir. 1. §. 13. Direct. 1. The greateſt of all means to caſt out all ſinful Love, is to keep the Soul in the Love of God, Jud. 21. wholly taken up in admiring him, ſerving him, praiſing him, and rejoicing in him: of which ſee Chap. 3. Dir. 11. We ſee that they that are taken up in the Love and Service of one perſon, are not apt to be taken much with any other. But it is not only by Diverſion, nor only by prepoſſeſſing and employing all our Love, that the Love of God doth cure ſinful Love; but beſides theſe there is alſo a Majeſty in his objective preſence which aweth the ſoul, and commandeth all things elſe to keep their diſtance: And there is an unſpeakable ſplendour and excellency in him, which obſcureth and annihilateth all things elſe: (though they are more near, and clearly ſeen and known.) And there is a celeſtial kind of ſweetneſs in his Love which puts the Soul that hath taſted it out of reliſh with tranſitory inferiour good. As he that hath converſed with wiſe and learned men, will no more admire the wit of fools: And as he that hath been employed in the Government of a Kingdom or the ſublimeſt ſtudies, will be no more in love with Childrens games and paddling in the dirt.

Nuptial Love maketh mankind: Friendly Love perfecteth it, (much more DivineLove): but wanton Love corrupteth and embaſeth it. Lord Bacon, Eſſay 10.

Dir. 2. §. 14. Direct. 2. The next help is to ſee that the Creature deceive you not; and therefore that you be not raſh and haſty; but ſtay while you come nearer it, and ſee it unclothed of borrowed or affected ornaments: and ſee it not only in the dreſs in which it appeareth abroad, which often covereth great deformities, but in its homely habit and night attire. Bring it to the light; and if it may be alſo ſee it when it hath endured the fire, which hath taken off the paint and removed the dreſs. Moſt of your inordinate Love to creatures is by miſtake and raſhneſs. The Devil tricks them up and paints them, that you may fall in love with them: or elſe he ſheweth you only the outſide of ſome common good and hideth the emptineſs or rottenneſs within. Come nearer therefore and ſtay longer, and prevent your ſhame and diſappointments. Is it not a ſhame to ſee you dote on that place, or office, or thing this year, which you are weary of before the next? Or to ſee two Perſons impatiently fond of each other till they are married, and then to live in ſtrife as aweary of each other? How few perſons or things have been too violently loved, that were but ſufficiently firſt tried?

Biasin Lartio: Ita amandum quaſi odio ſimus habituri: plurimos enim eſſe malos. Quam tamen ſententiam Cicero in Lælio ſapiente dicit eſſe non magnum. Amicos ſequere quos non pudeat etegiſſe. Idem Ibid.

Dir. 3. §. 15. Direct. 3. The next great help is to deſtroy ſelf-love, (as carnal and inordinate.) For this is the Parent, life and root of all other ſinful love whatever. Why doth the Worldling over-love his wealth, and the proud man his greatneſs and repute, and the ſenſualiſt his pleaſures, but becauſe they firſt overlove that fleſh and ſelf which all theſe are but the proviſion for. Why doth a dividing Sectary over-value and over-love all the party or Sect that are of his own opinion; but becauſe he firſt over-valueth and over-loveth himſelf? Why do you love thoſe above their worth who think highly of you, and are on your ſide, and uſe to praiſe you behind your back, or that do you a good turn, but becauſe you firſt over-love your ſelves? Why doth Luſtful Love enflame you, or the Love of meat and drink, and ſport, and bravery, carry you into ſuch a glaring form, but that firſt you over-love your fleſhly pleaſure? What enſnareth you in fondneſs to any perſon, but that you think they love you, or are ſuitable to your carnal end. See therefore that you mortify the fleſh.

See before Chap. 4. Part. 7.

Dir. 4. §. 16 Direct. 4. Still remember how jealous God is of your Love, and how much he is wronged when any creature encroacheth upon his right. 1. You are his own by Creation: and did he give you Love to lay out on others, and deny it to himself? 2. He daily and hourly maintaineth you; he giveth you every breath and bit and mercy that you live upon, and will you love the creature with his part of your love? 3. How dearly hath he bought your Love in your Redemption? 4. He hath adopted you and brought you into the neareſt relation to him that you may love him. 5. He hath pardoned all your ſins and ſaved you from Hell (if you are his own) that you may Love him. 6. He hath promiſed you eternal glory with himſelf that you may Love him. 7. His excellency beſt deſerveth your love. 8. His creatures have nothing but from him, and were purpoſely ſent to beſpeak your love for him rather than for themſelves. And yet after all this, ſhall they encroach upon his part? If you ſay, It is not Gods part that you give them, but their own; I tell you All that Love which you give the creature above its due, you take from God. But if it be ſuch a Love to the creature as exceedeth not its worth, and is intended ultimately for God, and maketh you not Love him the leſs but the more, it is not it that I am ſpeaking againſt, or perſwading you to mortifie.

Dir. 5. §. 17. Direct. 5. Look on the worſt of the creatures with the beſt, and foreſee what it will be when it withereth, and what it will appear to you at the laſt. I have applyed this againſt worldlineſs before Chap. 4. Part 6. and I ſhall afterwards apply it to the luſtful love. Bring your beloved creature to the grave, and ſee it as it will appear at laſt, and much of the folly of your Love will vaniſh.

Dir. 6. §. 18. Direct. 6. Underſtand well the moſt that it will do for you, and how ſhort a time you muſt enjoy it, and flatter not your ſelves with the hopes of a longer poſſeſſion than you have reaſon to expect. If men conſidered for how ſhort a time they muſt poſſeſs what they dote upon, it would ſomewhat cool their fond affections.

Dir. 7. §. 19. Direct. 7. Remember that too much Love hath the preſent trouble of too much care, and the future trouble of too much grief, when you come to part with what you love. Nothing more createth care and grief to us, than inordinate Love. You foreknow that you muſt part with it, and will you now be ſo glued to it, that then it may tear your fleſh and heart. Remember you cauſed all that your ſelves.

Dir. 8. §. 20. Direct. 8. Remember that you provoke God to deprive you of what you overlove, or to ſuffer it to grow unlovely to you. Many a mans horſe that he over loved hath broke his neck: And many a mans child that he over-loved hath dyed quickly, or lived to be his ſcourge and ſorrow: And many a Husband or Wife that was over-loved, hath been quickly ſnatcht away or proved a thorn, or a continual grief and miſery.

Dir. 9. §. 21. Direct. 9. If there be no other means left, prudently and moderately embitter to thy ſelf the creature which thou art fond on: which may be done many ways, according to the nature of it. By the ſeldomer or more abſtemious uſe of it: or by uſing it more to benefit than delight: or by mixing ſome mortifying humbling exerciſes: or mixing ſome ſelf-denying acts, and minding more the good of others, &c.

Dir. 10. § 22. Direct. 10. In the practice of all Directions of this nature, there muſt abundance of difference be made between a carnal voluptuous heart that is hardly taken off from ſenſual Love, and a mortified, melancholy, or over-ſcrupulous perſon, who is running into the contrary extream, and is afraid of every bit they eat, or of all they poſſeſs, or wear or uſe, and ſometime of their very children and relations, and ready to over run their mercies, or neglect their duties, ſuſpecting that all is too much loved. And it is a very hard thing for us ſo to Write or Preach to one party, but the other will miſ-apply it to themſelves, and make an ill uſe of it. All that we can write or ſay is too litle to mortifie the fleſhly mans affections: And yet ſpeak as cautelouſly as we can, the troubled ſoul will turn it into gall, to the increaſe of his trouble: And what we ſpeak to his peace and ſettlement, though it prove too little and uneffectual, yet will be effectual to harden the miſ-applying ſenſualiſt in the ſinful affections and liberty which he uſeth. Therefore it is beſt in ſuch caſes to have ſtill a wiſe experienced faithful guide, to help you in the application in caſes of difficulty and weight.

Tit. 3. Directions againſt ſinful Deſires and Diſcontent.

§. 1. I Shall ſay but little here of this ſubject, becauſe I have already treated ſo largely of it, in my Book of ſelf-denyal, and in that of Crucifying the World; and here before in Chap. 4 Part. 6. & 7. againſt Worldlineſs and Fleſh-pleaſing, and here againſt ſinful Love which is the cauſe. Read Mr. Burrough's excellent Treatiſe called The Cure of Contentment. And that excellent Tract of a Heathen, Plutarch de tranquillitate animi.

§. 2. How ſinful Deſires may be known, you may gather from the diſcoveries of ſinful Love: As, 1. When you deſire that which is forbidden you. 2. Or that which will do you no good, upon a miſconceit that it is better or more needful than it is. 3. Or when you deſire it too eagerly, and muſt needs have it, or elſe you will be impatient and diſcontented, and cannot quietly be ruled and diſpoſed of by God, but are murmuring at his providence, and your lot. 4. Or when you deſire it too haſtily, and cannot ſtay Gods time. 5. Or elſe too greedily as to the meaſure, being not content with Gods allowance, but muſt needs have more than he thinks fit for you. 6. Or ſpecially when your deſires are perverſe, preferring leſſer things before greater; deſiring bodily and tranſitory things more than the mercies for your ſouls which will be everlaſting. 7. When you deſire any thing ultimately and meerly for the fleſh, without referring it to God, it is a ſin. Even your daily bread and all your comforts, muſt be deſired but as Provender for your Horſe, that he may the better go his journey, even as Proviſion for your bodies, to fit them to the better and more chearful ſervice of your ſouls and God. 8. Much more when your deſires are for wicked ends (as to ſerve your luſt or pride or covetouſneſs or revenge) they are wicked deſires. 9. And when they are injurious to others.

§. 3. Direct. 1. Be well acquainted with your own Condition, and conſider what it is that you have moſt need of; and then you will find that you have ſo much grace and mercy to deſire for your ſouls, without which you are loſt for ever, and, that you have a Chriſt to deſire, and an endleſs life with God to deſire, that it will quench all your thirſt after the things below. This if any thing will make you wiſer, when you ſee you have the greater things to mind. A man that is in preſent danger of his life, will not be ſollicitous for pins or fool gawds: And the hopes of a Lordſhip or a Kingdom will cure the deſire of little things: A man that needeth a Physician for the Dropsie or Consumption, will scarce long for Childrens balls or tops. And methinks a man that is going to Heaven or Hell, should have somewhat greater than worldly things to long for. O what a vain and doting thing is a carnal mind; that hath pardon and grace and Christ and Heaven and God to think of, and that with speed before it be too late; and can forget them all, or not regard them, and eagerly long for some little inconsiderate trifle; as if they said, I must needs taste of such a dish before I dye: I must needs have such a house, or a Child, or friend before I go to another world: O study what need thy distressed soul hath of a Christ, and of peace with God, and preparation for Eternity, and what need thy darkened mind hath of more knowledge, and thy dead and carnal heart of more life and tenderness and Love to God, and communion with him: Feel these as thou hast cause, and the eagerness of thy carnal Desires will be gone.

Dir. 2. §. 4. Direct. 2. Remember how much your carnal Desires do aggravate the weakness of your spiritual desires and make the sin more odious and unexcusable. Are you so eager for a Husband, a Wife, a Child, for wealth, for preferment or such things, while you are so cold and indifferent in your desires after God and grace and glory? Your desires after these are not so earnest! They make you not so importunate and restless: They take not up your thoughts both day and night: They set you not so much on contrivances and endeavours: You can live as quietly without more grace or assurance of salvation or communion with God, as if you were indifferent in the business: But you must needs have that which you desire in the world, or there is no quiet with you. Do you consider what a horrible contempt of God and grace and Heaven is manifested by this? Either you are Regenerated or unregenerate. If you are Regenerate, all your instructions, and all your experiences of the worth of spiritual things, and the vanity of things temporal, do make it a heinous sin in you to be now so eager for those things which you have so often called vanity, while you are so cold towards God whose Goodness you have had so great experience of. Do you know no better yet the difference between the creature and the Creator? Do you yet no better understand your necessities and interest, and what it is that you live upon and must trust to, for your everlasting blessedness and content? If you are unregenerated (as all are that Love any thing better than God) what a madness is it for one that is condemned in Law to endless torments, and shall be quickly there, if he be not regenerate and justified by Christ, to be thirsting so eagerly for this or that thing or person upon earth, when he should presently bestir him with all his might to save his soul from endless misery! How incongruous are these Desires to the good and bad?

Dir. 3. §. 5. Direct. 3. Let every sinful Desire humble you, for the worldliness and fleshliness which it discovereth to be yet unmortified in you; and turn your Desires to the mortifying of that flesh and concupiscence which is the cause. If you did not yet love 1 Joh. 2 15. the world, and the things that are in the world, you would not be so eager for them. If you were not too carnal, and did not mind too much the things of the flesh, you would not be so earnest for them as you are. It should be a grievous thing to your hearts to consider, what worldliness and fleshliness this sheweth to be yet there. That you should set so much by the creature, as to be unable to bear the want of it: Is this renouncing the world and flesh? The thing you need is not that which you so much desire, but a better heart, to know the Vanity of the Creature, to be dead to the world, and to be able to bear the want or loss of any thing in it, and a fuller mortification of the flesh, mortifying and not satisfying it, is your work.

Dir. 4. §. 6. Direct. 4. Ask your hearts seriously whether God in Christ be enough for them, or not? If they say no; they renounce him and all their hope of Heaven: For no man takes God for his God that takes him not for his portion, and as enough for him: If they say, yea; then you have enough to stop the mouth of your fleshly desires, while your hearts confess that they have enough in God. Should that soul that hath a filial interest in God, and an inheritance in eternal life, be eager for any conveniencies and contentments to the flesh? If God be not enough for you, you will never have enough. Turn to him more, and know him better, if you would have a satisfied mind.

Dir. 5. §. 7. Direct 5. Remember that every sinful desire is a rebelling of your wills against the will of God; and that it is his will that must govern and dispose of all, and your wills must be conform to his; yea, that you must take pleasure and rest in the will of God. Reason the case with your hearts, and say; who is it that is the Governour of the World? and who is to rule me, and dispose of my affairs, Is it I or God? whose will is it that must lead, and whose must follow? whose will is better guided? Gods or mine? Either it is his will that I shall have what I desire, or not: If it be, I need not be so eager, for I shall have it in his time and way: If it be not his will, is it fit for me to murmur and strive against him? Remember that your discontents and carnal desires are so many accusations brought in against God: As if you said, thou hast not dealt well or wisely or mercifully by me: I must have it better: I will not stand to thy will and government, I must have it as I will, and have the disposal of my self.

Dir. 6 §. 8. Direct. 6. Observe how your eager Desires are condemned by your selves in your daily prayers, or else they make your prayers themselves condemnable: If you pray that the will of God may be done, why do your wills rebel against it, and your desires contradict your prayers? And if you ask no more than your daily bread; why thirst you after more? But if you pray as you desire, Lord let my will be done, and my selfish carnal desire be fulfilled, for I must needs have this or that, then what an abominable Prayer is this? Desire as you must Pray.

Dir. 7. §. 9. Direct. 7. Remember what Covenant you have made with God, that you renounced the world and the flesh, and took him for your Lord and King, and Father, and yielded up our selves as his own, as his Subject, and as his Child to be disposed of, ruled, and provided for by him: And this Covenant is essential not only to your Christianity, but to your taking him for your God. And do you repent of it? or will you break it, and forfeit all the benefits of the Covenant? If you will needs have the disposal of your selves, you discharge God of his Covenant and Fatherly care for you: and then what will become of you, if he so forsake you?

Dir. 8. §. 10. Direct. 8. Bethink you how unmeet you are to be the choosers of your own condition. You foresee not what that person or thing or place will prove to you, which you so eagerly desire: For ought you know it may be your undoing, or the greatest misery that ever befel you: Many a one hath cryed with Rachel; Give me Children or else I dye, Gen. 30. 1. that hath dyed by the wickedness and unkindness of their Children. Many a one hath been violent in their desires of a Husband or a Wife, that afterwards have broken their hearts, or proved a greater affliction to them, than any enemy they had in the world: many a one hath been eager for riches and prosperity and preferment, that hath been ensnared by them, to the damnation of his soul. Many a one hath been earnest for some office, dignity, or place of trust, which hath made it a great increase of his sin and misery. And it is flesh and self that is the eager desirer of things that are against the will of God, and nothing is so blind and partial as self and flesh. You think not your Child a competent judge of what is best for him, and make not his desires but your own understanding, the guide and rule of your dealings with him, or disposals of him. And are you fitter choosers for your selves in comparison of God, than your Child is in comparison of you? Either you take God for your Father, or you do not. If you do not, call him not Father, and hope not for Mercy and Salvation from him: If you do, is he not wise and good enough to dispose of you, and to determine what is best for you, and to choose for you?

Dir. 9. §. 11. Direct. 9. Remember that it is one of the greatest plagues on this side Hell, to be given up to our own Desires, and that by your eagerness and discontents you provoke God thus to give you up, Psal. 81. 12. So I gave them up to their own hearts lust, and they walked in their own Counsels: O that my people had hearkned to me, &c. Rom. 1. 24. 26. wherefore God also gave them up to uncleanness, through the lusts of their own hearts, &c. For this cause God gave them up to vile affections ——verse 28. And even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind, to do those things which are not convenient, 2 Thes. 2. 10, 11. 12. God may give you that which you so eagerly desire, as he gave Israel a King, even in his anger, Hos. 13. 10, 11. or as he gave the Israelites their own desire, even flesh which he rained upon them as dust, and feathered fowles as the Sand of the Sea, they were not estranged from their lust: But while their meat was yet in their mouths, the wrath of God came upon them, and slew the fattest of them, Psal. 78. 27, 29, 30, 31. They lusted exceedingly in the Wilderness, and tempted God in the desert, and he gave them their request, but sent leanness into their souls, Psal. 106. 14, 15. God may say, Follow your own lust, & if you are so eager, take that which you desire, take that person, that thing, that dignity which you are so earnest for; but take my curse and vengeance with it; never let it do you good, but be a snare and torment to you. Let a fire come out of the bramble and devour you, Jud. 9. 15.

Dir. 10. §. 12. Direct. 10. Take heed lest concupiscence and partiality entice you to justifie your sinful desires and take them to be lawful. For if you do so, you will not repent of them, you will not confess them to God, nor beg pardon of them, nor beg help against them, nor use the means to extinguish them; but will cherish them, and be angry with all that are against them, and love those tempters best that encourage them. And how dangerous a case is this? And yet nothing is more ordinary among sinners, than to be blinded by their own affections, and think that they have sufficient reason to desire that which they do desire. And affection maketh them very witty and resolute to deceive themselves. It setteth them on studying all that can be said to defend their enemy, and put a deceitful gloss upon their cause. Try your Desires well (as I before directed you) Q. 1. Is the thing that you desire a thing that God hath bid you desire, or promised in his word to give you (as grace, Christ and Heaven?) If it be so, then desire it and spare not: But if not so, Q. 2. Why then are you so eager for it when you should at most have but a submissive conditional desire after it? Q. 3. Nay is it not something which you are forbidden to desire? If so, dare you excuse it?

Dir. 11. §. 13. Direct. 11. Remember that Concupiscence or sinful desire is the beginning of all sin of commission, and leadeth directly to the act. Theft, Adultery, Murder, Fraud, Contention, and all such mischiefs begin in inordinate desires. For every one is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and inticed: That when lust hath conceived it bringeth forth sin; and sin when it is finished bringeth forth death, Jam. 1. 14, 15. By lust is meant, any fleshly desire or will. Therefore when the Apostle forbiddeth gluttony and drunkenness, chambering and wantonness, strife and envying, he strikes at the root of all in this one word, Make no provision for the flesh to satisfie its lusts (or wills.) Rom. 13. 13, 14.

§. 14. Direct. 12. Pull off the deceiving vizor, and see that which you so eagerly desire, as it is. Dir. 12. What will it be to you at the last? It is now in its Spring or Summer: but see it in its fall and winter? It is now in its youth; but see it withered to skin and bone in its decrepit age: It is now in its clean and curious ornaments, but see it in its uncleanness and in its homeless dress: Cure your deceit, and your desire is cured.

§. 15. Direct. 13. Promise not your selves long life, but live as dying men, with your grave and winding sheet always in your eye; and it will cure your thirst after the creature when you are sensible how short a time you must enjoy it; and especially how near you are unto eternity: This is the Apostles method, 1 Cor. 7. 29, 30, 31. But this I say brethren, the time is short: It remaineth that both they that have Wives be as though they had none; and they that weep as though they wept not; and they that rejoice as though they rejoiced not; and they that buy as though they possessed not: and they that use the world as not abusing it (or as if they used it not) for the fashion of this world passeth away. So you will desire as if you desired not, when you perceive well how quickly the thing desired will pass away. Dir. 13.

§. 16. Direct. 14. In all your Desires, remember the account as well as the thing desired. Think not only what it is now at hand, but what account you must make to God of it: For to whom men give or commit much, of them they require the more, Luke 12. 48. Will you thirst after more power, more honour, more wealth, when you remember that you have the more to give account of? Matth. 25. Have you not enough to reckon for already, unless you had hearts to use it better? Dir. 14.

§. 17. Direct. 15. Keep your selves to the holy use of all your mercies, and let not the flesh devour them nor any inordinate appetite fare ever the better for them when you have them, and this will powerfully extinguish the inordinate desire it self. We are in little danger of being over eager after things spiritual and holy, for the honour of God: Resolve therefore that all you have shall be thus sanctified to God, and used for him, and not at all to satisfie any inordinate desire of the flesh, and then the flesh will cease its suit, when it finds it fares never the better for it. You are able to do much in this way if you will. If you cannot presently suppress the Desire, you may presently resolve to deny the flesh the thing desired, (As David would not drink the water, though he longed for it, 2 Sam. 23. 15, 17.) and you may presently deny it, the more of that you have. If you cannot forbear your thirst, you can forbear to drink: If you cannot forbear to be hungry, you can forbear to eat whatever is forbidden or unfit: If Eve must needs have an appetite to the forbidden fruit, yet she might have commanded her hands and teeth, and not have eaten it. If you cannot otherwise cool your Desire of curious Apparel, wear that which is somewhat homelier than else you would have worn, on purpose to rebuke and controul that desire: If you cannot otherwise quench your Covetous desires, give so much the more to the poor to cross that desire. You cannot say that the outward act is out of your power, if you be but willing. Dir. 15.

§. 18. Direct. 16. When your Desires are over-eager, bethink you of the mercies which you have received already and do possess: Hath God done so Dir. 16.

much for you, and are you still calling for more, even of that which is unnecessary, when you should be giving thanks for what you have? This unthankful greediness is an odious sin. Think what you have already for soul and body, estate and friends; and will not all this quiet you, (even with this Christ and Heaven) unless you have the other lust or fansie satisfied; and unless God humour you in your sick desires?

Dir. 17. §. 19. Direct. 17. Understand how little it will satisfie you, if God should give you all that you earnestly desire. When you have it, it will not quiet you nor answer your expectations. You think it will make you happy, and be exceeding sweet to you, but it deceiveth you, and you promise your selves, you know not what, and therefore desire you know not what? It would be to you but like a dreaming feast, which would leave you hungry in the morning.

Isa. 29. 8.

Dir. 18. §. 20. Direct. 18. Remember still that the greatest hurt that the Creature can do thee is in being over-loved and desired, and it is never so dangerous to thee as when it seemeth most desirable. If you remembred this aright, you would be cast into the greatest fear and caution when any thing below is presented very pleasing and desirable to you.

Dir. 19. §. 21. Direct. 19. Consider that your desires do but make those wants a burden and misery to you which otherwise would be none. Thirst makes the want of drink a torment, which to another is no pain or trouble at all. The lustful wanton is ready to dye for love of the desired mate, which no body else cares for, nor is ever the worse for being without. A proud ambitious Haman thinks himself undone if he be not honoured, and is vexed if he be but cast down into the mean condition of a Farmer: When many thousand honest contented men live merrily and quietly in as low a condition. It is mens own Desires and not their real wants which do torment them.

Dir. 20. §. 22. Direct. 20. Remember that when you have done all, if God love you he will be the chooser, and will not grant your sick desires, but will correct you for them till they are cured. If your child cry for a knife or for unwholesome meat, or any thing that would hurt him, you will quiet him with the rod, if he give not over. And it is a sign some rod of God is near you, when you are sick for this or that or the other thing, and will not be quiet and content unless your fansie and concupiscence be humoured.

Tit. 4. Directions against sinful Mirth and Pleasure.

Stoici sic cum vitiosos affectus, quod negabant omnino adhibendos, tum voluptatem alias ad voluptatem dicta admittunt. Epicurus & ejus qui adrationem severi incantus quo ad medicamenta potius quam ad [illegible] Zenone.

§. 1. MIrth is sinful, 1. When men rejoyce in that which is evil; as in the hurt of others or in their sin, or in the sufferings of Gods servants, or the afflictions of the Church, or the success or prosperity of the enemies of Christ, (or of any evil doers.) This is one of the greatest sins in the world, and one of the greatest signs of wickedness, when wickedness is it that they rejoyce in. 2. When it is unseasonable or in an unmeet subject: As to be merry in the time and place of mourning; or to feast when we should fast: or for an unsanctified miserable soul to be taken up with mirth, that is in in the power of sin and Satan and near to Hell. 3. Mirth is sinful when it tendeth to the committing of sin, or is managed by sin: As to make merry with lies and fables and tempting unnecessary time-wasting dances, plays or recreations; or with the ill matter or abuse of others; or with drunkenness, gluttony or excess. 4. Mirth is sinful when it is a [illegible] duty and unfitteth the soul for the exercise of that grace, which is most suitable to its estate. As when it hindereth a sinners conviction and humiliation, and resisteth the spirit of God, and bawleth down the calls of grace, and the voice of conscience, that they cannot be heard: And when it banisheth all sober consideration about the matters that we should most regard, and will not give men leave to think with fixedness and sobriety upon God and upon themselves, their sin and danger upon death and judgement and the life to come: when it makes the soul more unfit to take reproof, to profit by a Sermon, to call upon God. This drunken mirth which shuts out Reason, and silenceth Conscience, and laughs at God, and jesteth at Damnation, and doth but intoxicate the brain, and make men mad in the matters where they should most shew their wisdom, I say this mirth is the Devils sport, and the sinners misery, and the wise mans pity: Of which Solomon speaketh, Eccles. 2. 2. I said of laughter, it is mad, and of mirth, what doth it? Prov. 26. 18, 19. As a mad man who casteth fire-brands, arrows and death, so is the man that deceiveth his neighbour and saith, Am I not sport? Prov. 10. 23. It is a sport to a fool to do mischief. 5. But mirth is most horridly odious when it is blasphemous and profane: when incarnate Devils do make themselves merry with jesting and mocking at Scripture, or at the judgements of God, or the duties of Religion; or in horrid Oaths and cursed speeches, against the servants of the Lord.

§. 2. Direct. 1. First see that thou be a person fit for mirth, and that thou be not a miserable slave of Satan in an unregenerate, unholy, unjustified state. Thou wouldst scarce think the innocent games or sports were becoming a malefactor that must dye to morrow. An unregenerate unholy person, is sure whenever he dyeth such, to be damned: If he believe not this, he must deny God or the Gospel to be true. And he is not sure to live an hour: And he is sure that he shall dye ere long. And now if you have not fool'd away your Reason, tell me whether your Reason can justifie the mirth of such a man? Dost thou ask, what harm is it to be merry? None at all for one that hath cause to be merry, and rejoyceth in the Lord. But for a man to be merry in the way to Hell, and that so near it, for a man to be merry, before his soul be sanctified, and his sin be pardoned, or before he seeketh it with all his heart, this is harm, if folly, and unbelief, and contempt of God and his dreadful justice be any harm. O hearken to the calls of God, abhor thy sins, and set thy heart on Heaven and Holiness, and then God and Conscience will allow thee to be merry. Get a renewed Heart and life, and get the pardon of thy sins, and a title to Heaven, and a readiness to die, and then there is reason and wisdom in thy mirth. Then thy mirth will be honourable and warrantable; better than the lame mans that was healed, Acts 3. 8. That went with Peter and John into the Temple, walking and leaping and praising God. But it is a most pitiful sight to see an ungodly unregenerate sinner, to laugh, and sport, and play, and live merrily, as if he knew not what evil is near to him! It would draw tears from the eyes of a believer that knoweth him, and thinketh where he is like to dwell for ever. I remember the credible narrative of one that lived not far from me, that in his profaneness was wont to wish that he might see the Devil; who at last appeared to him to his terror; and sometime he smiled on him: And the man was wont to say that he never seemed so ugly and terrible as when he smiled (and the man was affrighted by it into a reformed life). So though a servant of the Devil be never comely, yet he never seemeth so ghastly as when he is most merry in his misery.

Pro 19.10. Delight is not seemly for a fool.

Dir. 1.

Siquis est quem flentem mori deceat, ridere dedecuit vivente: cum instare, semperque supra verticem videret, unde mors fiendum sciret. Risum illum haud dubie fletus hic non longo sejunctus spacio sequebatur. Petrach. Dial. 119. li. 2.

§. 3. Direct. 2. Yet do not destroy nature by overmuch heaviness, under pretence that thou hast no right to be merry. For, 1. The very discovery of thy misery puts thee into the fairer hopes of mercy. 2. And many of Gods children live long without assurance

assurance of their justification, and yet should not therefore cast away all joy. 3. And so much ease and quiet of mind must be kept up by the unsanctified themselves as is necessary to preserve their natures, that they may have time continued, and may wait on God till they obtain his grace. Above all men, they have reason to value their lives, lest they die and be lost, before they be recovered: And therefore as they must not famish themselves by forbearing meat or drink, so their sorrows must not be such as may destroy their bodies (of which more anon).

Dir. 3. The true method of Rejoycing.

§. 4. Direct. 3. See that you first settle the Peace of your souls upon solid grounds, and get such evidences of your special interest in Christ and Heaven, as will rationally warrant you to rejoyce; and then make it the business of your lives to Rejoyce and delight your selves in God, and take this as the principal part of grace and Godliness, and not as a small or indifferent thing, and so let all lawful natural mirth be taken in, as animated and sanctified by this holy delight and joy, and know that this natural sanctified mirth is not only lawful, but a duty exceeding congruous and comely for a thankful believer in his way to everlasting joy.

See my Sermon at Paul's called Right Rejoycing. And here before Chap. 3. Dir. 13.

§. 5. This is the true method of rejoycing: Tho' as I said, so much quietness may be kept up by the unregenerate as is needful to keep up life and health, and the Gospel where it cometh is tydings of great joy to those that hear it: Yet no man can live a truly comfortable merry life, but in this method; but all his mirth beside that which either supporteth nature, or meeteth mercy in his returning to God, will be justly chargeable with Madness; and maketh him a more pitiful sight.

§. 6. The first thing therefore to be done, is to lay the Groundwork of true mirth. And this is done by unfeigned Repenting, and turning to God by faith in Christ, and becoming new creatures, a sanctified peculiar people, and being justified and adopted to be the children of God; and then by discerning (upon sober tryal) the evidences and witness of all this in our selves, that we may know that we have passed from death to life.

§. 7. And though there are several Degrees both of Grace and of the Discerning of it, some having but little holiness, and some but little discerning of it in themselves, yet the least may afford much comfort to the soul upon justifiable grounds, though not so much as the greater degrees of grace, and clearer discerning of it may do.

§. 8. The foundation being thus laid, it must be our next endeavour to build upon it a setled peace of Conscience, and quietness of soul: For till we can attain to Joy, it is a great mercy to have Peace, and to be free from the accusations, fears and griefs which belong to the unjustified: And Peace must be the temper more ordinary than much joy, to be expected in this our frail condition.

§. 9. Thirdly Peace being thus setled we must endeavour to rise up daily into Joy, as our great duty and our great felicity on earth: It being frequently and earnestly commanded in the Scriptures, that we Rejoyce in the Lord always, and shout for joy, all that are upright in Heart, Psalm 33. 1. Phil. 3. 1. & 4. 4. Deut. 12. 12, 18. & 27. 7. Thus he that proveth his own work, may have Rejoycing in himself, Gal. 6. 4. Even in the testimony of his Conscience of his own simplicity and godly-sincerity, 2 Cor. 1. 12. And this all believers should maintain and actuate in themselves.

§. 10. Fourthly, with this Rejoycing in God our lawful natural mirth must be taken in, as subordinate or sanctified; that is, we must further our holy joy by natural mirth and cheerfulness, and by the comforts of our Bodies in Gods lower mercies, promote the service and the comforts of our soul. And this is the right Place for this mirth to come in, and this is the true Method of rejoycing.

§. 11. Direct. 4. Mark well the usefulness and tendency of all thy Mirth: and if it be useful to fit thee for thy duty, and intended by thee to that end (though you alway observe not that intention at the time,) and if it tend to do thee good, or help thee to do good, without a greater hurt or danger, then cherish and promote it: But if it tend to carry thee away from God, to any creature, and to unfit thy soul for the dutys of thy place, and to carry thee into sin, then avoid it as thy hurt. Still remembring that the necessary support of nature must not be avoided by good or bad. A Christian that hath any acquaintance with himself, and with the work of holy watchfulness, may discern what his mirth is by the tendency and effects, and know whether it doth him good or harm. Dir. 4.

§. 12. Direct. 5. Take heed that the flesh defile not your mirth, by dropping in any obscene or ribbald talk, or by stirring up fleshly lust and sin. Which it will quickly do, if not well watcht, and holy mirth and cheerfulness is very apt to degenerate on a sudden into sinful mirth. Dir. 5.

§. 13. Direct. 6. Consider what your mirth is like to prove to others as well as your selves. If it be like to stir up sin in others, or to be offensive to them, you must the more avoid it in their presence, or manage it with the greater caution: If it be needful to cheer up the drooping minds of those you converse with, or to remove their prejudice against a holy life, you must the more give place to it: For it is good or bad as it tendeth unto good or bad. Dir. 6.

§. 14. Direct. 7. Never leave out Reason or Godliness from any of your mirth. Abhor that mirth that maketh a man a fool, or playeth the fool: And take heed of that ungodliness which maketh a man merriest when he is furthest from God, like the Horse or Ox that leapeth and playeth for gladness when he is unyoaked or loosed from his labour. Something of God and Heaven should appear or be dropped into all our mirth, to sweeten and sanctifie it. Dir. 7

§. 15. Direct. 8. Watch your tongues in all your mirth; for they are very apt to take liberty then to sin. Mirth is to the tongue as Holidays and Playdays to idle scholars; who are glad of them as a time in which they think they have liberty to game and fight and do amiss. Dir. 8.

§. 16. Direct. 9. If a word break forth from your selves or your companions to the wrong of others in your mirth, as of backbiting, evil speaking, jearing, scorning, defaming (yea though it be your enemy) rebuke it, and cast it out, as dirt or dung that falleth into your dish or cup. Dir. 9.

§. 17. Direct. 10. If Profaneness intrude, and any make merry with jesting at Scripture, Religion or the slanders or scorns of godly persons, with a tendency to make religion odious or contemptible; if they are such as you may speak to, reprove them with reverent seriousness to their terror: If they are not, then shew your abhorrence of it by turning your backs and quitting the place and company of such deviliſh enemies of God. Be not silent or seemingly consenting witnesses of such odious mirth, against your maker. Dir. 10.

§. 18. Direct. 11. If the mirth of others in your company begin to grow insipid, frothy, fooliſh, wanton, impious or otherwise corrupt, drop in some holy salt to season; and something that is serious and divine to awe it and repress it. As to remember them of Gods presence, or to recite such a text as Ephes. 5. 3, 4. But fornication and all uncleanness or covetousness, let it not once be named amongst you as becometh Saints: Neither filthiness, nor fooliſh talking, nor jesting; which are not convenient: But rather giving of thanks. Dir. 11.

§. 19. Direct. 12. If mirth grow immoderate and exceed in measure, and carry you away from God Dir. 12.

Considerations to repress excessive mirth.

and duty by the very carnal pleasure of it, have always at hand these following considerations to repress it. 1. Remember that God is present; and levity is not comely in his sight. 2. Remember that death and Judgment are at hand, when all this levity will be turned into seriousness. 3. Remember that your souls are yet under a great deal of sin and wants and danger, and you have a great deal of serious work to do. 4. Look on Jesus Christ, and remember what an example he gave you upon earth: Whether he laught, and plaid, and jested, and taught you immoderate or carnal mirth: And whether you live like the Disciples of a Crucified Christ. 5. Think on the ordinary way to Heaven, described in Scripture; which is through many tribulations, afflictions, fastings, temptations, humiliations, sufferings and mortifications: And think whether a wanton, jesting, playful life be like to this. 6. Think of the course of the ancient and excellent Christians, who went to Heaven through labour, and watchings, and fasting, and poverty, and cruel persecutions, and not thro' carnal mirth and sport. 7. Think of the many calamitous objects of sorrow that are now abroad in the world! Of the millions of Heathens and Mahometans and other strangers or Enemies to Christ! Of the obstinate Jews; of the dark corrupted lamentable state of the Greek, Armenian, Ethiopian and Roman Churches, where Religion is so wofully obscured and dishonoured by ignorance, error, superstition, and prophaneness: Of the Papal tyranny and usurpation: and of the divided state of all the Churches, and the prophaneness, and persecution, and uncharitableness, and contentions, and mutual reproaches and revilings which make havock for the Devil among the members of Christ.

Tit. 5. Directions against sinful Hopes.

HOPE is nothing but a Desirous expectation: Therefore the Directions given before against sinful Love and Desire may suffice also against sinful Hopes, save only for the expecting part. Hope is sinful, 1. When it is placed ultimately upon a forbidden object; as to Hope for some evil to your selves which you mistakingly think is good: To hope for Felicity in the Creature, or to hope for more from it, than it can afford you? To hope for the hurt of other men; for the ruin of your enemies; for the hinderance of the Gospel, and injury to the Church of Christ. 2. When you hope for a Good thing by evil means; as to Hope to please God, or to come to Heaven by persecuting his servants, or by ignorance or superstition, or schism, or heresie, or any sin. 3. To Hope ungroundedly for that from God which he never promised. 4. To Hope deceitfully for that from God which he hath declared he will never give. All these are sinful Hopes: But it is not these last that I shall here say much to, because I have said so much already of them in many other writings.

Doth any man doubt that if there were taken out of mens minds, vain opinions, flattering hopes, false valuations, imaginations, &c. but it would leave the minds of a number of men, poor shrunken things, full of melancholy and indisposition and uncomfortable to themselves? Lord Bacon's Essay, of Lies.

Dir. 1. §. 2. Direct. 1. Hope for nothing from God against faith or without faith; that is, for nothing which he hath said he will not give, nor for any thing which he hath not promised to give, or given you some reason to expect. To hope for that which God hath told us he will not give, or that which is against the Holiness and Justice of God to give, this is but to Hope that God will prove a liar, or unholy, or unjust, which are wicked and blaspheming hopes. Such are the Hopes which abundance of ignorant and ungodly persons have; who hope to be saved without regeneration, and without true Holiness of heart or life; and hope to be saved in their wilful impenitence and beloved sins: who hope that God forgiveth them those sins, which they hate not, nor will not be perswaded to forsake: And hope that the saying over some Words of Prayer, or doing something which they call a Good Work, shall save them though they have not the Spirit of Christ: Or that hope to be saved, though they are unsanctified, because they are not so bad as some others, and live not in any notorious disgraceful sin: All these believe the Devil who tells them that an unholy person may be saved, and believe that the Gospel is false which saith, without Holiness none shall see the Lord, Heb. 12. 14. and they hope that God will prove unholy, unjust, and false to save them, and yet this they call a Hoping in God. Hope for that which God hath promised, and spare not; but not for that which he hath said he will not do, yea protested cannot be, John 3. 3, 5.

Dir. 2. §. 3. Direct. 2. When thou Hopest for any Evil to others, or thy self, remember what a monstrous thing it is to make evil the object of thy Hope, and how those Hopes are but thy hastening unto chosen misery, and contradict themselves. For thou Hopest for it as Good; and to be greedy for evil on supposition that it's good, doth shew thy folly that wilt try no better the objects of thy Hopes: Like a sick Man that longs and hopeth for that which if he take it will be his death: Thus sinners hope for the poisoned bait.

Dir. 3. §. 4. Direct. 3. Understand how much of the Root of Worldliness consisteth in your worldly Hopes. Poor Worldlings have little in Possession to delight in: but they keep up a Hope of more within them. Many a covetous, or ambitious wretch, that never reacheth that which he desireth, yet liveth upon the Hopes of it: And Hope is it that setteth and keepeth men at work in the service of the World, the Flesh and the Devil; as Divine Hope doth set and keep Men at work for Heaven, for their Souls, and for Jesus Christ. And many an Hypocrite that loseth much upon the account of his Religion, yet sheweth his Rottenness by keeping up his Worldly Hopes, and going no further than will stand with those.

Dir. 4. §. 5. Direct. 4. Hath not the World deceived all that have hoped in it unto this day? Consider what is become of them and of their Hopes? What hath it done for them, and where hath it left them? And wilt thou place thy Hopes in that which hath deceived so many Generations of Men already?

Dir. 5. §. 6. Direct. 5. Remember that thy worldly Hopes are a sin so fully condemned by natural demonstration, that thou art utterly left without excuse. Thou art certain before-hand that thou must die: Thou knowest how vain the World will be then to thee: and how little it can do for thee; and yet thou art hoping for more of the World?

Dir. 6. §. 7. Direct. 6. Consider that the World declareth its vanity in the very hopes of Worldlings. In that it is still drawing them by Hopes, and never giveth them satisfaction and content. Almost all the life of a worldlings pleasure is in his Hopes: The very thing which he hopeth for, doth not prove so sweet to him in the possession, as it was in his hopes. A Hoping and Hoping still for that which they never shall attain, is the Worldlings life.

Dir. 7. §. 8. Direct. 7. O turn your Souls to those blessed Hopes of life eternal, which are sent you from Heaven by Jesus Christ, and set before you in the holy Scriptures, and proclaimed to you by the Messengers of Grace. Doth God offer you sure well-grounded hopes, of living for ever in his Joy and Glory? And do you neglect them, and lie hoping for that felicity in the world which cannot be attained, and which will give no content when you have attained it? This is more foolish than to toyl and impoverish your selves in Hope to find the Philosophers stone, and refuse a Kingdom freely offered.

Tit.

Of Hatred to men I shall speak anon.

Tit. 6. Directions against sinful Hatred, Aversation or Backwardness towards God.

§. 1. THe hatred to God and backwardness to his service, which is the chief part of this sin, is to be cured according to the Directions in the first Chapter, as a state of wickedness is: and more I shall say anon, about the Worship of God: and Chap. 3. Direct. 11. containeth the cure also. Only here I shall add a few Directions to a God-hating Generation.

Dir. 1. §. 2. Direct. 1. The first thing you have to do, is to discover this to be your sin: For you are confident that you love God above all, while you hate him above all, even above the Devil? You will confess, that this is horrid wickedness, where it is found, and well deserveth damnation: Take heed lest thy own confession judge thee. Remember then that it is not the bare Name that we now speak of: I know that Gods Name is most honoured, and the Devils name is most hated. Nor is it every thing in God that is hated: None hateth his Mercifulness and Goodness as such: Nor is it every thing in the Devil that is loved: None love his hatred to man, nor his cruelty in tormenting men. But the Holiness of God, which is it that man must receive the Image of, and be conformed to, is hated by the unholy: And the Devils unholiness, and friendship to mens sin and sensuality is loved by the sensual and unholy. And this hatred of God (and Love of the Devil) one would think you might easily perceive.

§. 3. 1. In that you had rather God were not so Just and Holy; you had rather he had never commanded you to be Holy, but left you to live as your flesh would have you: you had rather God were indifferent as to your sins, and would give you leave to follow your lusts. Such a God you would have: And a God that will damn you unless you be holy, and hate your sins and forsake them, you like not, you cannot abide, but indeed do hate him.

Malunt nescire, quia jam oderunt. Tertul. Apologet. c. 1.

§. 4. 2. Therefore you will not believe that God is such a holy sin-hating God: because you would not have him so, you will not believe he is so; and so hate his nature, while you believe that you love him; and love but an Idol of your unholy fantasies. Psal. 50. 21, 22. These things hast thou done, and I kept silence: thou thoughtest that I was altogether such a one as thy self: but I will reprove thee, and set them in order before thy eyes: Now consider this ye that forget God, lest I tear you in pieces, and there be none to deliver.

§. 5. 3. You love not the Holiness of the Word of God, which beareth his Image: You love not these strict and holy passages in it, Joh. 3. 3, 5. Luke 14. 26, 33. Mat. 18. 3. Rom. 8. 13. Col. 3. 1, 2, 3, 4. 2 Cor. 5. 17. with abundance more. You had rather have had a Scripture that would have left you your ambition, covetousness, lust and appetite to their liberties; and that had said nothing for the absolute necessity of Holiness, nor had condemned the ungodly.

§. 6. 4. You love not the holiest Ministers or servants of Christ, that most powerfully preach his holy Word, or that most carefully, seriously and zealously obey it; your hearts rise against them, when they bring in the Light, which sheweth that your deeds and you are evil, John 3. 19, 20. They are an eye-sore to you: your hearts rise not so much against Whoremongers, Swearers, Lyars, Drunkards, Atheists, or Infidels, as against them. What sort of persons on the face of the earth, are so hated by the ungodly in all Nations and of all degrees, and used by them so cruelly, and pursued by them so implacably, as the holiest servants of the Lord are?

§. 7. 5. You love not to call upon God in serious fervent spiritual prayer, praises and thanksgiving: You are quickly weary of it: you had rather be at a Play, or Gaming, or a Feast: your hearts rise against holy Worship as a tedious irksom thing.

§. 8. 6. You love not holy edifying discourse of God, and of heavenly things. Your hearts rise against it, and you hate and scorn it, as if all serious talk of God were but hypocrisie, and God were to be banished out of our discourse.

§. 9. 7. You cannot abide the serious frequent Thoughts of God in secret; but had rather thrust your minds with thoughts of your Horses, or Hawks, or bravery, or honour, or preferments, or sports, or entertainments, or business and labours in the world: So that one hour of a thousand or ten thousand was never spent in serious delightful thoughts of God, his holy truths, or works, or Kingdom.

§. 10. 8. You love not the blessed day of Judgment, when Christ will come with his holy Angels to judge the world, to justify his accused and abused servants, to be glorified in his Saints and admired in all them that do believe, 2 Thess. 1. 8, 9, 10, 11. And can you be so blind after all this, as not to see that you are HATERS OF GOD?

Dir. 2. §. 11. Direct. 2. Know God better and thou canst not hate him: especially know the Beauty and Glorious Excellency of that Holiness and Justice which thou hatest. Should the Sun be darkened or disgraced because sore eyes cannot endure its light? Must Kings and Judges be all corrupt, or change their Laws, and turn all men loose to do what they list, because Malefactors and licentious men would have it so?

Dir. 3. §. 12. Direct. 3. Know God and Holiness as they are to thee thy self; and then thou wilt know them not only to be Best for thee, as the Sun is to the World, and as life and health is to thy body, but to be thy only good and happiness: and then thou canst not choose but love them. Thy prejudice and false conceits of God Holiness cause thy hatred.

Dir. 4. §. 13. Direct. 4. Cast away thy cursed unbelief: If thou believe not what the Scripture saith of God and man, and of the Souls immortality and the life to come, thou wilt then hate all that is holy as a deceit, and needless troubler of the world: But if once thou believe well the Word of God, and the life everlasting, thou wilt have another heart.

Dir. 5. §. 14. Direct. 5. Away with thy beastly blinding sensuality: While thou art a slave to thy flesh, and lusts, and appetite, and its interest reigneth in thee, thou canst not choose but hate that Holiness which is against it, and hate that God that forbiddeth it, and tells thee that he will judge thee and damn thee for it if thou forsake it not: This is the true cause of the Hatred of God and Godliness in the World. Gods Laws condemn the very life and pleasure of the fleshly man: Godliness is unreconcileable to con cupiscence and carnal interest: Lay by thy fleshly mind and interest, or as sure as thou art a man, thou wilt be judged and damned as an enemy to God: Dost thou not feel that this is the cause of thy enmity, that God putteth thee on unpleasing (holy) courses, and will not let thee please thy flesh, but affrighteth thee with the threatnings of Hell? Rom. 8. 6, 7, 8. For to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace: Because the carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the Law of God, neither indeed can be so: so then they that are in the flesh cannot please God. Ver. 13. If ye live after the flesh ye shall die. It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks, Acts 9. 5. Woe to him that striveth with his Maker! Isa. 45. 9. Read Luke 19. 27.

Pene omnis sermo Divinus habet æmules suos: Quot genera præceptorum sunt, tot adversariorum: si largitatem esse in omnibus jubet Dominus, avarus inscitur: si parsimoniam exigit, prodigus execratur: Sermones sacros, improbi, hostes suos dicunt. Salvian. li. 4. ad Eccles. Cath. Non ego tibi inimicus, sed tu veritati. Hieron. in Gal. 5.

Dir. 6. §. 15. Direct. 6. Draw near and accustom thy soul to serious thoughts of God: For it is strangeness that maketh thee the more averse to him: We have less pleasure in the company of strangers than of familiar familiar acquaintance. Reconcliation must be made by coming nearer, and not by keeping at a distance still.

Dir. 7. §. 16. Direct. 7. Study well the wonderful Love and Mercy which he hath manifested to thy soul in the Redemption wrought by Jesus Christ, in the Covenant of Grace, in all the patience he hath exercised towards thee, and all his offers of mercy and salvation, entreating thee to turn and live. Canst thou remember what God hath done for thee all thy life, and how patiently and mercifully he hath dealt with thee, and yet canst thou hate him, or thy Heart be against him.

Dir. 8. §. 17. Direct. 8. Judge not of God or Holiness by the faults of any men that have seemed holy: No more than you will censure the Sun, because Thieves rob by the light of it, or because some men are purblind. God hateth sin in them and you, where ever he findeth it. Judge of God and holiness by his proper nature and true effects, and by the holy Scripture, and not by the crimes of sinners which he condemneth, who if they had been more Holy, had less offended.

Dir. 9. §. 18. Direct. 9. Come among the godly, and try a holy life awhile, and judge not of it or them that use it, by the reports of the Devil and wicked men; Malice will speak ill of God himself, and of his holiest servants? Can worse be said, than was said of Christ himself, and his Apostles? The Devil was not ashamed to belye Job to Gods own face, and tell God that he was such a one, as that a little tryal to his flesh, would turn him from his Godliness. But those that come near and try the ways and servants of God, do find that the Devil did belye them.

Dir. 10. §. 19. Direct. 10. Remember thy near approaching end, and how dreadful it will be to be found and judged among the malignant enemies of Holiness. And if the Righteous be scarcely saved, where then shall the ungodly and the sinner appear, 1 Pet. 4. 18. Then what wouldst thou give to be one of those holy ones that now thou hatedst? and to be judged as those that lived in that holiness which thy malignant heart could not abide? Then thou wilt wish that thou hadst lived and dyed as the righteous, that thy latter end might have been like his.

Tit. 7. Directions against sinful Wrath or Anger.

§. 1. AS Anger is against the Love of our neighbour, I shall speak of it afterwards: As it is against the soul it self, I shall speak of it in this place. Anger is the rising up of the heart in passionate displicency against an apprehended evil, which would cross or hinder us of some desired good. It is given us by God for good, to stir us up to a vigorous resistance of those things which within us or without us do oppose his Glory or our salvation, or our own or our neighbours real good.

§. 2. Anger is Good when it is thus used to its appointed end, in a right manner and measure: But it is sinful, 1. When it riseth up against God or any Good, as if it were evil to us! As wicked men are angry at those that would convert and save them, and that tell them of their sins, and that hinder them from their desires. 2. When it disturbeth Reason, and hindereth our judging of things aright. 3. When it casteth us into any unseemly carriage, or causeth or disposeth to any sinful words or actions, when it enclineth us to wrong any other by word or deed, and to do as we would not be done by. 4. When it is mistimed, and without just cause. 5. When it is greater in measure than the cause alloweth. 6. When it unfitteth us for our duty to God or man. 7. When it unfitteth us for the sweet ferment of Love and brotherly kindness, and the hindering of any good which we should do for others: Much more when it breedeth malice and revenge, and contentions, and unpeaceableness in societies, oppression of inferiours, or disdain of superiours. 8. When it stayeth too long, and ceaseth not when its lawful work is done. 9. When it is selfish and carnal, stirred up upon the account of some carnal interest, and used but as a means to a selfish carnal sinful end: As to be angry with men only for crossing your Pride, or profit, or sports, or any other fleshly will: In all these it is sinful.

Directions Meditative against sinful Anger.

§. 3. Direct. 1. Remember that immoderate anger is an injury to humanity, and a rebel against the Government of Reason. It is without reason and against reason. Whereas in man all Passions should be obedient to Reason: It is the misery of madness, and the crime of drunkenness to be the suppressing and dethroning of our Reason: And sinful Anger is a short madness or drunkenness. Remember that thou art a man, and scorn to subject thy self to a bestial fury. Dir. 1.

§. 4. Direct. 2. It is also against the Government of God: for God governeth the Rational powers first, and the inferiour by them. If you destroy the Kings Officers and Judges, you oppose the Government of the King. Is a man in passion fit to obey the commands of God, that hath silenced this Reason? Dir. 2.

§. 5. Direct. 3. Sinful Passion is a pain and malady of the mind. And will you love or cherish your disease or pain? Do you not feel your selves in pain and diseased while it is upon you? I do not think you would take all the world to live continually in that case your selves. If you should be still so what were you good for, or what could you enjoy, or what comfort would your lives be to you? Why, if a long pain be so bad, a short one is not lovely? Keep not wilfully so troublesome a malady in your mind. Dir. 3.

§. 6. Direct. 4. Observe also what an enemy it is to the body it self: It inflameth the blood, and stirreth up diseases, and breedeth such a bitter displeasedness in the mind, as tends to consume the strength of nature, and hath cast many into Acute, and many into Chronical sicknesses, which have proved their death. And how uncomfortable a kind of death is this? Dir. 4.

§. 7. Direct. 5. Observe how unlovely and unpleasing it rendereth you to beholders: deforming the countenance, and taking away the amiable sweetness of it, which appeareth in a calm and loving temper. If you should be always so, would any body love you? or would they not go out of your way (if not lay hands on you) as they do by any thing that is wild or mad? You would scarce desire to have your picture drawn in your fury, till the frowning wrinkles, and inflamed blood are returned to their places, and have left your visage to its natural comeliness. Love not that which maketh you so unlovely to all others, Dir. 5.

§. 8. Direct. 6. You should love it the worse because it is a hurting passion, and an enemy to Love and to anothers good. You are never angry but it inclineth you to hurt those that angred you, if not all others that stand in your way: It putteth hurting thoughts into your mind, and hurting words into your mouths, and enclineth you to strike or do some mischief: And no men love a hurtful creature. Avoid therefore so mischievous a passion. Dir. 6.

§. 9. Direct. 7. Nay, mark the tendency of it, and you will find that if it should not be stopt it would tend to the very ruine of your brother, and end in his blood and your own damnation. How many thousand hath anger murdered or undone! It hath caused Wars, and filled the world with blood and cruelty! And should your hearts give such a fury entertainment? Dir. 7.

§. 10. Direct. 8. Consider how much other sin immoderate anger doth enclude [illegible]. It is the great crime of drunkenness that a man having not the Dir. 8.

government of himself, is made lyable by it to any wickedness: And so it is with immoderate anger. How many Oaths and Curses doth it cause every day? How many rash and sinful actions? What villany hath not anger done? It hath slandered, railed, reproached, falsly accused, and injured many a thousand. It hath murdered, and ruined Families, Cities and States: It hath made Parents kill their Children, and Children dishonour their Parents: It hath made Kings oppress and murder their Subjects, and Subjects rebel and murder Kings. What a world of sin is committed by sinful anger throughout all the world? How endless would it be to give you instances. David himself was once drawn by it to purpose the murdering of all the family of Nabal. Its effects should make it odious to us.

Proprium est magnitudinis verè non sentire se esse permissum. Qui non irascitur, inconcussus injuria persistit: qui irascitur motus est. Senec. de Ira l. 3. c. 5.

Dir. 9. §. 11. Direct. 9. And it is much the worse in that it suffereth not a man to sin alone, but stirreth up others to do the like. Wrath kindleth wrath, as fire kindleth fire. It's two to one, but when you are angry you will make others angry, or discontent, or troubled by your words or deeds. And you have not the power of moderating them in it, when you have done. You know not what sin it may draw them to! It is the Devils bellows to kindle mens corruptions, and set hearts, and families, and Kingdoms in a flame.

Dir. 10. §. 12. Direct. 10. Observe how unfit it maketh you for any holy duty, for prayer, or meditation, or any communion with God. And that should be very unwelcome to a gracious soul, which maketh it unfit to speak to God, or to be employed in his Worship. If you should go to prayer or other Worship in your bedlam passion, may not God say as the King of Gath did of David, Have I need of mad men? Yea, it unfitteth all the family, or Church, or society where it cometh, for the Worship of God? Is the family fit for prayer, when wrath hath muddled and disturbed their minds? Yea, it divideth Christians and Churches, and causeth confusion and every evil work. James 3. 15, 16.

Dir. 11. §. 13. Direct. 11. It is a great dishonour to the grace of God, that a servant of his should shew the world that grace is of no more force and efficacy, that it cannot rule a raging passion, nor so much as keep a Christian sober: that it possesseth the soul with no more patience, nor fear of God, nor Government over it self. O wrong not God thus by the dishonouring of his Grace and Spirit.

Dir. 12. §. 14. Direct. 12. Is it a sin against Conscience, still repented of and disowned by almost all when they come to themselves again, and a meer preparation for after sorrow: That therefore which we fore-know we must repent of afterwards, should be prevented and avoided by men that choose not shame and sorrow.

Obj. 1. §. 15. Object. 1. But (you'll say) I am of a hasty cholerick nature, and cannot help it.

Answ. Answ. That may strongly dispose you to anger, but cannot Necessitate you to any thing that is sinful: Reason and Will may yet command and master passion if they do their Office. And when you know your disease and danger, you must watch the more.

Obj. 2. §. 16. Object. 2. But the provocation was so great it would have angered any one: Who could choose?

Answ. Answ. It is your weakness that makes you think that any thing can be great enough to discharge a mans reason, and allow him to break the Laws of God. That would have been small or nothing to a prepared mind, which you call so great: You should rather say, Gods Majesty and dreadfulness is so great, that I durst not offend him for any provocation. Hath not God given you greater cause to obey, than man can give you to sin?

Obj. 3. §. 17. Object. 3. But it is so sudden that I have no time of deliberation to prevent it.

Answ. Answ. Have you not Reason still about you? And should it not be as ready to rule, as passion to rebel. Stop passion at first, and take time of deliberation.

Obj. 4. §. 18. Object. 4. But it is but short, and I am sorry for it when I have done.

Answ. But if it be evil, the shortest is a sin, and to be avoided: And when you know before-hand that you must be sorry after, why will you breed your own sorrow?

Obj. 5. §. 19. Object. 5. But there is none that will not be angry sometime: no not the best of you all.

Answ. The sin is never the better because many commit it. And yet, if you live not where grace is a stranger, you may see that there are many that will not be angry easily, frequently, furiously, nor mis-behave themselves in their anger by railing, or cursing, or swearing, or ill language, or doing wrong to any.

Obj. 6. §. 20. Object. 6. Doth not the Apostle say, Be angry and sin not: let not the Sun go down upon your wrath, Ephes. 4. 26. My wrath is down before the Sun: therefore I sin not.

Answ. The Apostle never said that anger is never sinful, but when it lasteth after Sun-setting: But entertain no sinful anger at all; but if you do, yet quickly quench it, and continue not in it: Be not angry without or beyond cause, and when you are, yet sin not by uncharitableness or any evil words or deeds in your anger; nor continue under the justest displeasure, but hasten to be reconciled and to forgive.

These Reasons improved may rule your Anger.

Directions practical against sinful Anger.

Dir. 1. §. 1. Direct. 1. The principal help against sinful anger, is in the right habituating of the soul, that you live as under the Government of God, with the sense of his authority still upon your hearts, and in the sense of that mercy that hath forgiven you, and forbeareth you, and under the power of his healing and assisting grace, and in the life of Charity to God and man. Such a Heart is continually fortified, and carrieth its preservatives within it self, as a wrathful man carrieth his incentives still within him: There is the main cause of Wrath or Meekness.

Dir. 2. §. 2. Direct. 2. Be sure that you keep a humbled soul, that overvalueth not it self; for Humility is patient and aggravateth not injuries: But a proud man takes all things as heinous or intolerable that are said or done against him. He that thinks meanly of himself, thinks meanly of all that is said or done against himself. But he that magnifieth himself, doth magnifie his provocations. Pride is a most impatient sin: There is no pleasing a proud person, without a great deal of wit, and care, and diligence. You must come about them as you do about Straw or Gunpowder with a Candle. Prov. 13. 10. Only by pride cometh contention: Prov. 28. 25. He that is of a proud heart stirreth up strife. Prov. 21. 24. Proud and haughty scorner is his name, who dealeth in proud wrath. Psal. 31 18. Let the lying lips be put to silence, which speak grievous things proudly and contemptuously against the righteous. Humility and meekness and patience live and dye together.

Dir. 3. §. 3. Direct. 3. Take heed of a worldly covetous mind: for that setteth so much by earthly things, that every loss, or cross, or injury will be able to disquiet him, and enflame his passion. Neither neighbour, nor child, nor servant can please a covetous man: Every little trespass, or crossing his commodity toucheth him to the quick, and maketh him impatient.

Dir. 4. §. 4. Direct. 4. Stop your Passion in the beginning, before it go too far. It's easiest moderated at first. Watch against the first stirrings of your wrath, and presently command it down. Reason and Will can do much if you will but use them according to their power. A spark is sooner quenched than a flame: and this Serpent is easiliest crushed in the spawn.

Dir. 5. §. 5. Direct. 5. Command your tongue, and hand, and countenance, if you cannot presently quiet or command your passion: And so you will avoid the greatest of the sin, and the passion it self will quickly be stifled for want of vent: You cannot say, that it is not in your power to hold your tongue or hands if you will. Do not only avoid that swearing and cursing which are the marks of the prophane, but avoid many words till you are fitter to use them, and avoid expostulations, and contending, and bitter, opprobrious, cutting speeches, which tend to stir up the wrath of others. And use a mild and gentle speech, which savoureth of Love, and tendeth to assuage the heat that's kindled, Prov. 15. 1. A soft answer turneth away wrath: but grievous words stir up anger. And that which mollifieth and appeaseth another, will much conduce to the appeasing of your selves.

Dir. 6. §. 6. Direct. 6. At least command your self into quietness till Reason be heard speak, and while you deliberate: Be not so hasty as not to think what you say or do. A little delay will abate the fury, and give Reason time to do its office. Prov. 25. 15. By long forbearing is a Prince perswaded, and a soft answer breaketh the bone. Patience will lenifie anothers wrath: and if you use it but so long, as a little to stay your selves, till reason be awake, it will lenifie your own. And he is a fury and not a man that cannot stop while he considereth.

Dir. 7. §. 7. Direct. 7. If you cannot easilier quiet or restrain your selves, go away from the place and company. And then you will not be heated by contending words, nor exasperate others by your contending. When you are alone the fire will assuage, Prov. 14. 7. Go away from the presence of a foolish man, when thou perceivest not in him the lips of knowledge: You will not stand still and stir in a Wasps Nest when you have inraged them.

Dir. 8. § 8. Direct. 8. Yea, ordinarily avoid much talk, or disputes, or business with angry men, as far as you can without avoiding your duty: and avoid all other occasions and temptations to the sin: A man that is in danger of a Feavor must avoid that which kindleth it. Come not among the infected, if you fear the Plague, stand not in the Sun, if your are too hot already. Keep as far as you can from that which most provoketh you.

Unicuique pertinacius contendenti justam habere causam permitte, tacendoq; contumaci cede: sic uteriq; quieti & imperturbati permanebitis. Thauler. Ror. pag. 84.

Dir. 9. §. 9. Direct 9. Meditate not on injuries or provoking things when you are alone: suffer not your thoughts to feed upon them. Else you will be Devils to your selves, and tempt your selves when you have none else to tempt you, and will make your solitude as provoking as if you were in company: And you will be angring your selves by your own imaginations.

Dir. 10. §. 10. Direct. 10. Keep upon your minds the lively thoughts of the exemplary meekness and patience of Jesus Christ: who calleth you to learn of him to be meek and lowly, Matth. 11. 28, 29. Who being reviled, reviled not again, when he suffered he threatned not, leaving us an example that we should follow his steps, 1 Pet. 2. 21, 23. Who hath pronounced a special blessing on the Meek, that they shall inherit the earth. Matth. 5. 50.

Dir. 11. §. 11. Direct. 11. Live as in Gods presence: and when your passions grow bold repress them with the reverend Name of God, and bid them remember that God and his holy Angels see you.

Dir. 12. §. 12. Direct 12. Look on others in their passion and see how unlovely they make themselves: With frowning countenances, and flaming eyes, and threatning devouring looks, and hurtful inclinations: And think with your selves, whether these are your most desirable patterns.

Dir. 13. §. 13. Direct. 13. Without any delay confess the sin to those that stand by (if easier means will not repress it:) And presently take the shame to your selves, and shame the sin and honour God: This means is in your power if you will; and it will be an excellent effectual means. Say to those that you are angry with, I find a sinful anger kindling in me, and I begin to forget Gods presence and my duty, and am tempted to speak provoking words to you, which I know God hath forbidden me to do. Such a present opening of your temptation, will break the force of it: And such a speedy confession will stop the fire that it go no further: For it will be an engagement upon you in point of honour, even the reputation both of your wit and honesty, which will both suffer by it, if you go on in the sin just when you have thus opened it by confession. I know there is prudence to be used in this, that you do it not so as may make you ridiculous, or harden others in their sinful provocations: But with prudence and due caution it is an excellent remedy, which you can use if you are not unwilling.

Dir. 14. §. 14. Direct. 14. If you have let your passion break out to the offence or wrong of any, by word or deed, freely and speedily confess it to them, and ask them forgiveness, and warn them to take heed of the like sin by your example. This will do much to clear your consciences, to preserve your Brother, to cure the hurt, and to engage you against the sin hereafter: If you are so proud that you will not do this, say no more, You cannot help it, but that you will not. A good heart will not think this too dear a remedy against any sin.

Dir. 15. §. 15. Direct. 15. Go presently (in the manner that the place alloweth you) to prayer to God for pardon and grace against the sin: Sin will not endure prayer and Gods presence: Tell him how apt your peevish hearts are to be kindled into sinful wrath, and intreat him to help you by his sufficient grace, and engage Christ in the cause, who is your head and advocate: and then your souls will grow obedient and calm: Even as Paul, when he had the prick in the flesh prayed thrice (as Christ did in his agony) so you must pray and pray again and again till you find Gods grace sufficient for you. 2 Cor. 12. 7, 8, 9.

§. 16. Direct. 16. Covenant with some faithful friend that is with you to watch over you and rebuke your passions as soon as they begin to appear: and promise them to take it thankfully and in good part. And perform that promise that you discourage them not. Either you are so far a weary of your sin and willing to be rid of it, as to be willing to do what you can against it, or you are not: If you are, you can do this much if you please: If you are not, pretend not to repent, and to be willing to be delivered from your sin upon any lawful terms, when it is not so. Remember still, the mischievous effects of it do make it to be no contemptible sin, Eccles. 7. 9. Be not hasty in thy Spirit to be angry, for anger resteth in the bosom of fools, Prov. 16. 32. He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty, and he that ruleth his Spirit, than he that taketh a City, Prov. 15. 18. A wrathful man stirreth up strife, but he that is slow to anger appeaseth strife. The discretion of a man deferreth his anger, and it is his glory to pass over a transgression, Prov. 19. 11.

Tit. 8. Directions against sinful Fear.

§. 1. THe chief of my advice concerning this sin, I have given you before Chap. 3. Direct. 12. Yet somewhat I shall here add. Fear is a necessary Passion in man, which is planted in Nature for the restraining of us from sin, and driving us on to duty, and preventing misery. It is either God, or Devils, or men, or inferiour creatures, or our selves, that we fear. God must be feared as he is God: as he is Great, and Holy and Just, and True: As our Lord and King, and Judge, and Father: And the fear of him is the beginning of wisdom. Devils must be feared only as subordinate to God, as the executioners of his wrath: And so must men, and beasts, and fire, and water, and other creatures be feared and no otherwise: We must so discern and fear a danger as to avoid it. Our selves we are less apt to fear, because we know that we Love our selves. But there is no creature that we have so much cause to fear, as our folly, weakness and wilfulness in sin.

§. 2. Fear is sinful 1. When it proceedeth from unbelief, or a distrust of God. 2. When it ascribeth more to the creature than is its due: As when we fear Devils or men, as Great, or bad, or as our enemies, without due respect to their dependance upon the will of God: When we fear a chained creature, as if he were unchained. 3. When we fear God upon mistake or error, or fear that in him which is not in him, or is not to be feared. As when we fear lest he will break his promise; lest he will condemn the keepers of his Covenant, lest he will not forgive the penitent that hate their sin; lest he will despise the contrite; lest he will not hear the prayers of the humble faithful soul; lest he will fail them and forsake them, lest he will not cause all things to work together for their good; lest he will forsake his Church; lest Christ will not come again: Lest our bodies shall not be raised; lest there be no life of glory for the just, or no immortality of souls; all such fears as these are sinful. 4. When our fear is so immoderate in degree, as to distract us, or hinder us from faith and prayer, and make us melancholy: Or when it hindereth Love and praise, and thanks, and necessary joy, and tendeth not to drive us to God, and to the use of means to avoid the danger, but to drive us from God, and kill our hope, and make us sit down in despair.

Directions against sinful fear of God.

Dir. 1. §. 3. Direct. 1. Know God in his Goodness, Mercifulness and Truth, and it will banish sinful fears of him: For they proceed from the ignorance of unbelief of some of these; or not considering and applying them to the cause that is before you, Psal. 9. 10. They that know thy Name, will put their trust in thee.

Dir. 2. §. 4. Direct. 2. Know God in Jesus Christ the Mediator, and come to him by him: And then you may have access with boldness and confidence, Ephes. 3. 12. We have boldness to enter into the holiest by his blood, by the new and living way which he hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say his flesh: And having an High Priest over the house of God, let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, Heb. 10. 19, 20, 21, 22. The sight of Christ by faith should banish immoderate fear, Matth. 14. 27. Be of good chear, it is I, be not afraid.

Dir. 3. §. 5. Direct. 3. Understand the tenour of the Gospel, and the freeness of the Covenant of Grace, and then you will there find abundant encouragement against the matter of inordinate fears.

Dir. 4. §. 6. Direct. 4. Employ your selves as much as possible in Love and praise: for Love expelleth tormenting fear: there is no fear in Love, 1 John 4. 18.

Dir. 5. §. 7. Direct. 5. Remember Gods particular mercies to your selves: For those will perswade you that he will use you kindly, when you find that he hath done so already. As when Manoah said, We shall surely dye, because we have seen God; his Wife answered, If the Lord were pleased to kill us, he would not have received an Offering at our hands, neither would he have shewed us all these things, Judg. 13. 22, 23.

Dir. 6. §. 8. Direct. 6. Labour to clear up your title to the promises and special interest in Christ. Otherwise the doubts of that will be still feeding and justifying your fears.

§. 9. Direct. 7. Consider what a horrible injury it is to God, to think of him as you do of the Devil, an enemy to humble willing souls, and a destroyer of them, and an adversary to them that diligently seek him: Of whom he is a lover and rewarder. And so to think of God as Evil, and fear him upon such misapprehensions. Dir. 7. Heb. 11. 6.

§. 10. Direct 8. Observe the sinfulness of your fear in the effects; how it driveth you from God, and hindreth faith, and love and thankfulness, and discourageth you from prayer, and Sacraments, and all duty: And therefore it must needs be pleasing to the Devil, and displeasing to God, and no way to be pleaded for or justified. Dir. 8.

§. 11. Direct. 9. Mark how you contradict the endeavours of God, in his Word, and by his Ministers: Do you find God driving any from him, and frighting away souls that would fain be his? Or doth he not prepare the way himself, and reconcile the world to himself in Christ, and then send his Embassadors in his name and stead to beseech them to be reconciled unto God, and to tell them that all things are ready, and compel them to come in. Dir. 9. 2 Cor. 5. 19. Luke 14. 17. Matth. 22. 8.

§. 12. Direct. 10. Consider how thou wrongest others and keepest them from coming home to God: When they see thee terrified in a way of piety, they will fly from it as if some enemies or robbers were in the way. If you tread fearfully, others will fear there is some quicksand: If you tremble when you enter the Ship with Christ, others will think he is an unfaithful Pilot, or that it's a leaking Vessel. Your fear discourageth them. Dir. 10.

§. 13. Direct. 11. Remember how remediless, as to comfort, you leave your selves, while you inordinately fear him, who alone must comfort you against all your other fears. If you fear your remedy, what shall cure the fear of your disease? If you fear your meat, what shall cure your fear of hunger? If you fear him that is most Good and faithful, and the friend of every upright soul, what shall ease you of your fear of the wicked and the enemies of holy souls? If you fear your Father, who shall comfort you against your foes? You cast away all peace, when you make God your terror. Dir. 11.

§. 14. Direct. 12. Yet take heed lest under this pretence you cast away the necessary fear of God; even such as belongeth to men in your condition, to drive them out of their sin and security unto Christ, and such as the truth of his threatnings require. For a senseless presumption and contempt of God, are a sin of a far greater danger. Dir. 12.

Directions against sinful fear of the Devil.

§. 1. Direct. 1. Remember that the Devil is chained up, and wholly at the will and beck of God: He could not touch Job, nor an Ox, nor an Ass of his, till he had permission from God: He cannot appear to thee nor hurt thee unless God give him leave. Dir. 1. Job 1.

§. 2. Direct. 2. Labour therefore to make sure of the Love of God, and then thou art safe: Then thou hast God, his Love and Promise always to set against the Devil. Dir. 2.

§. 3. Direct. 3. Remember that Christ hath conquered the Devil in his temptations, on the Cross by his Resurrection and Ascension: He destroyed through death him that had the power of death, even the Devil, that he might deliver them who through fear of death were all their life time subject to bondage, Heb. 2. 14, 15. The Prince of this world is conquered and cast out by him, and wilt thou fear a conquered foe? Dir. 3.

§. 4. Direct. 4. Remember that thou art already delivered from his power and dominion if thou be renewed by the Spirit of God: And therefore let his own be afraid of him, that are under his power, Dir. 4.

and not the free Men and redeemed ones of Christ: God hath delivered thee in the Day that he converted thee, from a thousand fold greater Calamity, than the seeing of the Devil would be: And having been saved from his greatest Malice, you should not overfear the less.

Dir. 5. §. 5. Direct. 5. Remember what an Injury it is to God, and to Christ that conquered him, to fear the Devil, while God is your Protector, (any otherwise than as the Instrument of God's Displeasure:) It seemeth as much as to say, I fear lest the Devil be too hard for God; or lest God cannot deliver me from him.

Dir. 6. §. 6. Direct. 6. Remember how you honour the Devil by fearing him and pleasure him by thus honouring him. And will you not abhor to honour and please such an Enemy of God and you? This is it that he would have; to be feared instead of God: He glorieth in it as part of his Dominion: As Tyrants rejoyce to be Men fear them, as those that can destroy them when they will, so the Devil triumpheth in your Fears as his Honour. When God reprehendeth the Idolatry of the Israelites, it is as they feared their Idols of Wood and Stone. To fear them, shewed that they took them for their Gods, 2 Kings 17. 38, 39. Dan. 6. 26.

Dir. 7. §. 7. Direct. 7. Consider that it is a Folly to be inordinately fearful of that which never did befall thee, and never befalleth one of many hundred thousand Men: I mean any terrible Appearance of the Devil. Thou never sawest him, nor hearest credibly but of very few in an Age that see him (besides Witches:) This Fear therefore is irrational, the Danger being utterly improbable.

Dir. 8. §. 8. Direct. 8. Consider that if the Devil should appear to thee, yea, and carry thee to the Top of a Mountain, or the Pinnacle of the Temple, and talk to thee with blasphemous Temptations, it would be no other than what thy Lord himself submitted to; who was still the dearly beloved of the Father, Matth. 4. One Sin is more terrible than this.

Dir. 9. §. 9. Direct. 9. Remember that if God should permit him to appear to thee, it might turn to thy very great Advantage: By killing all thy Unbelief or Doubts, of Angels, and Spirits, and the unseen World: It would sensibly prove to thee that there is indeed an unhappy Race of Spirits, who envy Man and seek his Ruin, and so would more convince thee of the evil of Sin, the danger of Souls, the need of Godliness, and the truth of Christianity: And it is like this is one cause why the Devil no more appeareth in the World, not only because it is contrary to the ordinary Government of God, who will have us live by Faith and not by Sight, but also because the Devil knoweth how much it would do to destroy his Kingdom, by destroying Infidelity, Atheism and Security, and awakening Men to Faith, and Fear, and Godliness. The Fowler or the Angler must not come in sight, lest he spoil his Game by frightning it away.

Dir. 10. §. 10. Direct. 10. If it be the spiritual Temptations and Molestations only of Satan which you fear, remember that you have more Cause to fear your selves; for he can but tempt you; and if you do not more betray your selves than all the Devils in Hell can do, you will never perish. And if you are willing to accept and yield to Christ, you need not inordinately fear either Satan or your selves. For it is in the Name and Strength of Christ, and under his conduct and protection, that you are to begin and finish your Warfare: And the Spirit that is in us is greater and stronger than the Spirit that is in the World, and that moleteth us, 1 John 4. 4. And the Father that giveth us to Christ is greater than all, and none can pluck us out of his Hands: John 10. 29. And the God of peace will tread down Satan under our feet shortly, Rom. 16. 20. If it were in his Power he would more molest us daily, and we had never escaped so far as we have gone: Our daily Experience telleth us that we have a Protector.

Directions against the sinful Fear of Men, and Sufferings by them.

§. 1. Direct. 1. Bottom thy Soul and Hopes on Christ, and lay up thy Treasure in Heaven; be not a Worldling that liveth in Hope of Happiness in the Creature; and then thou art so far above the Fear of Men; as knowing that thy Treasure is above their Reach, and thy Foundation and Fortress safe from their Assaults. It is a base hypocritical worldly Heart that maketh you immoderately afraid of Men! Are you afraid lest they should storm and plunder Heaven? Or lest they cast you into Hell? or lest they turn God against you? Or lest they bribe or over-awe your Judge! No, no; these are none of your fears! No, you are not so much as afraid lest they hinder one of your Prayers from prevailing with God, nor lest their Prison-walls and chains should keep out God and his Spirit from you, and force you from your Communion with him! You are not afraid lest they forcibly rob you of one degree of Grace, or Heavenly-mindedness, or hopes of the Life to come! (If it be lest they hinder you from these by tempting or affrightning you into Sin (which is all the hurt they can do your Souls) then you are the more engaged to cast away the Fears of their hurting your Bodies, because that is their very Temptation to hurt your Souls:) No, it is their hurting of your Flesh, the diminishing your Estates, the depriving you of your Liberty, or worldly Accommodations, or of your Lives, which is the thing you fear. And doth not this shew how much your Hearts are yet on Earth! And how much unmortified Worldliness and Fleshliness is still within you? and how much yet your hearts are false to God and Heaven? O how the Discovery should humble you! to find that you are yet no more dead to the things of the World, and that the Cross of Christ hath yet no more crucified it to you! to find that yet the fleshly Interest is so powerful in you; and the Interest of Christ and Heaven is so low: That God seemeth not enough for you, and that you cannot take Heaven alone for your Portion, but are so much afraid of losing Earth! O presently search into the Bottom of this Corruption in your Hearts, and lament your Worldliness and Hypocrisie, and work it out, and set your Hearts and Hopes above, and be content with God and Heaven alone, and then this inordinate fear of Man will have nothing left to work upon.

Dir. 2. §. 2. Direct. 2. Set God against Man, and his Wisdom against their Policy, and his Love and Mercy against their Malice and Cruelty, and his Power against their Impotency, and his Truth and Omniscience, and Righteousness against their Slanders and Lies, and his Promises against their Threatnings; and then if yet thou art inordinately afraid of Man, thou must confess that in that measure, thou believest not in God. If God be not wise enough, and good enough, and just enough, and powerful enough to save thee, so far as it is best for thee to be saved, then he is not God: Away with Atheism, and then fear not Man.

Dir. 11 §. 3. Direct. 3. Remember what Man is that thou art afraid of: He is a Bubble raised by Providence, to toss about the World, and for God to honour himself by or upon: He is the meer Product of his Maker's Will: His Breath is in his Nostrils! he is haltning to his Dust, and in that Day his worldly Hopes and Thoughts do perish with him: He is a Worm that God can in one Moment tread into the Earth and Hell: He is a Dream, a Shadow, a dry Leaf, or a little Chaff that's blown a while about the World: He is just ready in the Height of his Pride and Fury, to drop into the Grave, and that same Man or all those Men, whom now thou fearest shall one of these Days most certainly lie rotting in the Dust, and be hid in Darkness, lest their ugly Sight and ſtink be an annoyance to the living. Where now are all the proud ones that made ſuch a buſtle in the world but awhile ago? In one age they look big, and boaſt of their power, and rebel, and uſurp authority, and are mad to be great and Rulers in the World, or perſecute the Miniſters and people of the Lord; and in the next (or in the ſame) they are viler than the dirt; their Carkaſſes are buried, or their bones ſcattered abroad, and made the horrour and wonder of Beholders. And is this a Creature to be feared above God, or againſt God? See Iſa. 51. 7. Hearken to me ye that know righteouſneſs, the people in whoſe heart is my Law. Fear ye not the reproach of men, neither be afraid of their revilings: For the moth ſhall eat them up like a garment, and the worm ſhall eat them like wool: but my righteouſneſs ſhall be for ever, and my ſalvation from Generation to generation. Iſa. 2. 22. Ceaſe ye from man whoſe breath is in his noſtrils, for wherein is he to be accounted of? Pſal. 146. 3, 4. Put not your truſt in Princes, nor in the ſon of man, in whom there is no help: his breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day all his thoughts periſh. When Herod was magnified as a God, he could not ſave himſelf from being devoured alive by Worms. When Pharaoh was in his Pride and Glory, he could not ſave his people from Frogs and Flies and Lice. Saith God to Sennacherib, The Virgin, the Daughter of Zion hath deſpiſed thee, and laughed thee to ſcorn —— and hath ſhaken her head at thee; whom haſt thou reproached and blaſphemed, and againſt whom haſt thou exalted thy voice and lifted thine eyes on high? O what a worm is Man that you are ſo afraid of!

Dir. 4. §. 4. Direct. 4. Remember that men as well as Devils are chained, and dependant upon God, and have no power but what he giveth them, and can do nothing but by his permiſſion. And if God will have it done, thou haſt his promiſe that it ſhall work unto thy good, Rom. 8. 28. And are you afraid leſt God ſhould do you good by them? If you ſee the knife or lancet in an enemies hand only, you might fear it; but if you ſee it in the Surgeons or in a fathers hand, tho' nature will a little ſhrink, yet Reaſon will forbid you to make any great matter of it, or inordinately to fear. What if God will permit Joſephs brethren to bind him, and ſell him to the Amalekites? and his Maſters Wife to cauſe him to be impriſoned? Is he not to be truſted in all this, that he will turn it to his good? what if he will permit Shimei to curſe David, or the King to caſt Daniel into the Lions Den, or the three Confeſſours into the Furnace of Fire? Do you believe that your Fathers will is the diſpoſer of all? and yet are you afraid of man? Our Lord told Pilate when he boaſted of his power to take away his Life or ſave it, Thou couldſt have no power at all againſt me except it were given thee from above, Joh. 19. 11.

Obj. We fear them only as Gods inſtruments. Anſwered. I know you will ſay that it is only as Gods inſtruments that you fear them, and that if you were certain of his favour, and were not firſt afraid of his wrath, you ſhould not fear the Wrath of Men. Anſw. By this you may ſee then what it is to be diſobedient, and to cheriſh your fears of Gods diſpleaſure, and to hinder your own aſſurance of his love, when this muſt be the cauſe of, or the pretence for ſo many other ſins: But if really you fear them but as the inſtruments of Gods diſpleaſure, 1. Why then did you no more fear his diſpleaſure, before when the Danger from men did not appear? you know God never wanteth inſtruments to execute his wrath or will: 2. And why fear you not the ſin which doth diſpleaſe him more than the inſtruments, when they could do you no hurt were it not for ſin? 3. And why do you not more fear them as tempters than as afflicters? and conſequently why fear you not their flatteries and enticements and preferments and your Proſperity, more than adverſity, when proſperity more draweth you away to ſin. 4. And why fear you not Hell more than any thing that man can do againſt you, when God threatneth Hell more than human penalties. 5. And why do you not apply yourſelves to God chiefly for deliverance; but ſtudy how to pacify man? why do you with more fear and care and diligence and compliance apply your ſelves to thoſe that you are afraid of, if you fear God more than them? Repent and make your peace with God thro' Chriſt, and then be quiet, if it be God that you are afraid of: Your Buſineſs then is not firſt with the Creature, but with God. 6. And if you fear them only as God's inſtruments, why doth not your fear make you the more cauteouſly to fly from further guilt, but rather make you to think of ſtretching your conſciences as far as ever you dare, and ventering as far as you dare upon God's diſpleaſure to eſcape mans? Are theſe ſigns that you fear them only as the Inſtruments of Gods diſpleaſure? or do you ſee how deceitful a thing your heart is? Indeed man is to be feared in a full ſubordination to God, 1. As his officers commanding us to obey him, 2. As his executioners puniſhing us for diſobeying him. 3. But not as Satans inſtruments (by Gods permiſſion) afflicting us for obeying him, or without deſert. Rom. 13. 3, 4. For Rulers are not a terrour to good works but to the evil: wilt thou then not be afraid of the Power? Do that which is good, and thou ſhalt have praiſe of the ſame: For he is the miniſter of God to thee for good: But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid: for he beareth not the ſword in vain: for he is the Miniſter of God; a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doth evil. Would you have the fuller expoſition of this? It is in 1 Pet. 3. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. For he that will love life and ſee good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his Lips that they ſpeak no guile: Let him eſchew evil and do good, let him ſeek peace and enſue it: For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open to their prayers: but the face of the Lord is againſt them that do evil: And who is he that will harm you if ye be followers of that which is good? But and if ye ſuffer for righteouſneſs ſake, happy are ye: and be not afraid of their terrour, neither be troubled: but ſanctify the Lord God in your hearts, and be ready always to give an anſwer to every man that asketh you a reaſon of the hope that is in you, with meekneſs and fear. Having a good conſcience, that whereas they ſpeak evil of you as evil doers, they may be aſhamed that falſly accuſe your good converſation in Chriſt. For it is better if the will of God be ſo, that ye ſuffer for well-doing than for evil doing. See alſo 1 Pet. 4. 13, 14, 15.

§. 5. Direct. 5. Either you fear ſuffering from men as guilty or as innocent, for evil doing or for well doing, or for nothing! If as guilty and for evil doing, turn your fears the right way, and fear God, and his wrath for ſin, and his threatnings of more than men can inflict; and acknowledge the goodneſs of Juſtice both from God and man: But if it be as innocent or for well doing, remember that Chriſt commandeth you exceedingly to rejoyce; and remember that martyrs have the moſt glorious Crown: And will you be exceſſively afraid of your higheſt honour and gain and joy? Believe well what Chriſt hath ſaid, and you cannot be much afraid of ſuffering for him. Matth. 5. 10, 11, 12. Bleſſed are they which are perſecuted for righteouſneſs ſake; for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven. Bleſſed are ye when men ſhall revile you and perſecute you, and ſhall ſay all manner of evil againſt you falſly for my ſake: Rejoyce and be exceeding glad, for great is your reward in heaven: for ſo perſecuted they the Prophets which were before you.

you. And you will fear the way of blessedness and exceeding joy, Matth. 10. 17, 18, 19. Beware of men, for they will deliver ye up to the Councils, and they will scourge you in their Synagogues, and ye shall be brought before Governours and Kings for my sake for a testimony against them ——— But take no thought, &c. You are allowed to beware of them, but not to be over fearful or thoughtful of the matter, Vers. 22, 23. And ye shall be hated of all men for my names sake; but he that endureth to the end shall be saved. But when they persecute you in this City fly to another —— Fly but fear them not, with any immoderate fear, vers. 39. He that findeth his life shall lose it, and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it. Luke 18. 29, 30. Verily I say unto you, there is no man that hath left house or Parents or Brethren or Wife or Children for the Kingdom of Gods sake, who shall not receive manifold more in this present time, and in the world to come life everlasting. Can you believe all this, and yet be so afraid of your own felicity? O what a deal of secret unbelief is detected by our immoderate fears! 1 Pet. 4. 12, 13, 14, 16, 19. Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery tryal, which is to try you as though some strange thing happened to you: But rejoice in as much as ye are partakers of Christs sufferings, that when his glory shall be revealed ye may be glad also with exceeding joy. If ye be reproached for the name of Christ happy are ye: for the spirit of Glory and of God resteth on you: On their part he is evil spoken of, but on your part he is glorified. But let none of you suffer as an evil doer —— yet if any man suffer as a Christian, let him glorifie God on that behalf ———wherefore let them that suffer according to the will of God, commit the keeping of their souls to him in well doing as unto a faithful Creatour. There is scarce any point that God hath been pleased to be more full in, in the holy Scriptures, than the encouraging of his suffering servants against the fears of men; acquainting them that their sufferings are the matter of their profit and exceeding joy; and therefore not of too great fear.

The seven Brethren that suffered in Africk under Hunnericus, *Incedebant cum fiducia ad supplicium quasi ad epulas, decantantes, Gloria Deo in excelsis, &c. Votiva nobis hæc est dies, & omnipotentis festivior. Uticens. p. 348. In Paulo quinque gloriationes observavi. Gloriatur in imbecillitate, in cruce Christi, in bona conscientia; in afflictionibus, in spe vitæ æternæ. Bucholtzer.

Dir. 6. Idolatria tam altas in mundo egit radices ut non possit extirpari: Ideo optimum est Confiteri & Pati. Bucholtzer. Victor Uticensis saith, That Genserick commanded that when a Magistrate came to dye, if he were fearful they should execute him, that he might dye with shame, but if he were constant, they should forbear least he should have the honour of a glorious Martyrdom. And so his boldness saved his life. Etsi martyrem invidus hostis noluit facere confessorem, tamen non potuit violare.

§. 6. Direct. 6. Experience telleth us that men have never so much joy on earth as in suffering for the cause of Christ; nor so much honour as by being dishonoured by men for him. How joyfully did the ancient Christians go to Martyrdom? many of them lamented that they could not attain it: And what comfort have Christs Confessours found above whatever they could attain before? And how honourable now are the names and memorials of those Martyrs, who dyed then under the slanders, scorn and cruelty of men? Even the Papists that bloodily make more, do yet honour the names of the ancient Martyrs with keeping Holy-days for them, and magnifying their shrines and relicts: For God will have it so, for the honour of his holy sufferers, that even that same generation that persecute the living Saints shall honour the dead, and they that murder those they find alive, shall honour those whom their forefathers murdered: Matth. 23. 29, 30, 31. Woe unto you Scribes and Pharisees hypocrites! because ye build the Tombes of the Prophets, and garnish the Sepulchres of the righteous! And say, if we had been in the days of our fathers, we would not have been partakers with them of the blood of the Prophets. Comfort and Honour attend the pain and shame of the Cross, Acts 5. 41. They departed from the presence of the Council, rejoycing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name. Acts 16. 25. Paul and Silas sang praises to God at midnight in the prison and stocks when their backs were sore with stripes. It's written of some of the Christians that were imprisoned by Julian, that they would not forbear in the Emperours hearing as he passed by, to sing, Let God arise, and his enemies shall be scattered.

§. 7. Direct. 7. Love better the holy Image of God upon your souls, and then you will be glad of the great helps to holiness which sufferings do afford. Who findeth not that adversity is more safe and profitable to the soul than prosperity? Especially that adversity which Christ is engaged to bless to his servants, as being undergone for him? Rom. 10. 3. 4. 5. We glory in tribulation also; knowing that tribulation worketh patience, and patience experience, and experience hope, and hope maketh not ashamed. God chastneth us for our profit that we may be partakers of his holiness: Now no chastisement for the present seemeth joyous, but grievous; nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness to them that are exercised thereby. Heb. 12. 10, 11. Moses esteemed the very reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Ægypt: and therefore rather chose to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season. Heb. 11. 25, 26. It is but now for a season, and if need be, that we are in heavinesse through manifold temptations, that the tryal of our faith being much more precious than of Gold that perisheth, might be found unto praise, and honour, and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ, 1 Pet. 1. 6, 7. Who is it that knoweth himself, that feeleth not a need of some afflictions? to awake us from our drowsiness, and quicken us from our dulness, and refine us from our dross, and wean us from the world, and help us to mortifie the flesh, and save us from the deceits of sin? Dir. 7.

§. 8. Direct. 8. Remember that sufferings are the ordinary way to Heaven. Love Heaven better and your sufferings will seem lighter, and your fear of them will be less. Christ hath resolved on it, that If any man come to him, and hate not his Father, and Mother, and Wife, and Children, and Brethren, and Sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be his disciple: And whoever doth not bear his Cross and follow him, cannot be his Disciple: and whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be his disciple, Luke 14. 26, 27, 33. In the world we shall have tribulation but peace in him, John 16. 33. Through much tribulation we must enter into the Kingdom of God, Acts 14. 22. If so be that we suffer with him that we may be also glorified with him. For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared to the glory that shall be revealed in us: Rom. 8. 17, 18. Therefore we both labour and suffer reproach, because we trust in the living God, 1 Tim. 4. 10. In preaching the Gospel, Paul saith, he suffered as an evil doer even unto bonds, but the Word of God is not bound, 2 Tim. 2. 9. I suffer these things, saith he, nevertheless I am not ashamed; for I know whom I have believed, and I am perswaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed to him against that day, 2 Tim. 1. 12. Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution, 2 Tim. 3. 12. Our patience in sufferings is the joy of our friends, and therefore they are not too much to be feared: 2 Thess. 1. 4, 5. So that we our selves glory in you in the Churches of God, for your patience and faith in all your persecutions and tribulations that ye endure: A manifest token of the righteous judgment of God, that ye may be counted worthy Dir. 8. Anacharsis (in Lertio) percontanti quædam esset securissima navis: Ea inquit, quæ in portum venerit: In Heaven we shall be quiet from all these tumults.

of the Kingdom of God, for which ye also suffer. Therefore take the conclusion of all from God, Rev. 2. 10. Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer: Behold the Devil shall cast some of you into prison, that ye may be tried: and ye shall have tribulation ten days: Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a Crown of life, Phil. 1. 28, 29, 30. And in nothing terrified by your adversaries, which is to them an evident token of perdition, but to you of salvation, and that of God: For to you it is given in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake. And shall we fear so great a gift?

Dir. 9. §. 9. Direct. 9. Remember how small and short the suffering will be, and how great and long the glorious reward. It is but a little while and the pain and shame will all be past: but the glory will be never past: What the worse now is Stephen for his stones, or John Baptist for being beheaded; or Paul for his bonds and afflictions which did every where abide him, or any holy Martyr for the torment and death which they underwent? O how Psal. 30. 5. the case is altered with them, now God hath wiped away all tears from their eyes? Are we so tender that we cannot endure the grief that is but for a night, when we know that joy will come in the morning? 2 Cor. 4. 16, 17, 18. For this cause we faint not, but though our outward man perish, yet the inner man is renewed day by day. For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory: while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal. Heb. 10. 35, 36, 37, 38. Cast not away therefore your Confidence, which hath great recompence of reward: For ye have need of patience, that after ye have done the Will of God, ye might receive the promise: For yet a little while, and he that shall come, will come, and will not tarry. Now the Just shall live by faith, but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him.

Dir. 11. §. 11. Direct. 11. Are you better than your Lord? Look to him, and be confirmed, Matth. 10. 24. The disciple is not above his Master, nor the servant above his Lord. It is enough for the disciple that he be as his Master, and the servant as his Lord. If they have called the Master of the house Belzebub, how much more shall they call them of his household? Heb. 12. 1, 2, 3. Let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking to Jesus the author and finisher of our faith, who for the joy that was set before him, endured the Cross despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God: For consider him that endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, lest ye be wearied, and faint in your minds.

Dir. 12. §. 12. Direct. 12. Be of good cheer: our Lord hath overcome the world, Joh. 16. 33. And shall we fear inordinately a conquered world? Yea, he overcame it by suffering, to shew us that by suffering we shall overcome it. He triumphed over principalities and powers (greater than mortals) on the Cross, Col. 2. 15. And therefore all power in Heaven and Earth is given to him, Matth. 28. 19. and he is Lord both of the dead and living, Rom. 14. 9. and is made head over all things to the Church, Ephes. 1. 21, 22. And so though for his sake we be killed all the day long, and counted as sheep to the slaughter, yet in all these things we are more than conquerors, through him that loved us: that is, we have a nobler victory than if we conquered them by the sword.

§. 13. Direct. 13. Think how little your suffering is in comparison of what your sin deserved, and your Lord hath freely saved you from. Should a man grudge at the opening of a Vein for his health, who deserved to have lost his life. Can you remember Hell which was your due, and yet make a great matter of any thing that man can do against you? Dir. 13.

§. 14. Direct. 14. Remember that to sin through fear of suffering, is to leap into Hell to escape a little pain on earth. Are you afraid of man? Be more afraid of God: Is not God more terrible? It is a fearful thing to fall into his hands: for he is a consuming fire, Heb. 10. 31. 26, 27, 29. Heb. 12. 29. O hear your Lord, Luke 13. 4, 5. And I say to you my friends, Be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do: But I will forewarn you whom you shall fear: Fear him which after he hath killed, hath power to cast into Hell: yea, I say unto you, fear him. If their fire be hot, remember that Hell is hotter: and that God is the best friend, and the dreadfullest enemy. Dir. 14.

§. 15. Direct. 15. Remember that you shall suffer (and it's like, as much) even here from God, if you scape by sin your suffering from men. If you sin to scape death, you shall dye when you have done: And O how quickly! And how much more joyful it is to dye for Christ, than a little after unwillingly to part with that life which you denyed to part with for your Lord? And what galls will you feel in your guilty conscience both in life and at your death? So that even in this life, your fear would drive you into greater misery. Dir. 15.

§. 16. Direct. 16. Think of the dangerous effects of your immoderate fear. It is the way with Peter to deny your Lord: Yea, the way to Apostasie or any wickedness which men shall drive you to by terrors. If you were where the Turk is now tyrannizing among Christians, if you overcome not your fear, he might overcome your fidelity, and make you turn from Jesus Christ: And that is the sin which the Apostle so dreadfully describeth, Heb. 10. 26, 27, 29. If we sin wilfully (that is, wilfully renounce our Lord) after the acknowledgment of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sin, but a fearful looking for of judgment, and fire which shall devour the adversary. O how many have been drawn by the fear of men, to wound their consciences, neglect their duties, comply with sin, forsake the truth, dishonour God, and undo their souls: And often in this life they do as poor Spira did, who by sinning through the fear of man, did cast himself into melancholy and self-murdering despair. Your fear is a more dangerous enemy to you than those that you fear are, Prov. 29. 25, 26. The fear of man bringeth a snare: but whoso putteth his trust in the Lord shall be safe: Many seek the Rulers favour, but every mans judgment cometh of the Lord. Fear is given to preserve you. Use it not to destroy you. Dir. 16.

Dir. 20. §. 20. Direct. 20. Remember the great approaching Day of Judgment, where great and ſmall will be equal before God: And where God will right all that were wronged by Men, and be the full and final Avenger of his Children! He that promiſed, though he bear long to avenge them ſpeedily, Luke 18. 7, 8. Can you believe that Day, and yet not think that it is ſoon enough to juſtifie you fully and finally, and to make you Reparations of all your Wrongs? Cannot you ſtay till Chriſt come to judge the Quick and the Dead? You will then be loth to be found with thoſe that, as Saul, made haſte to ſacrifice, becauſe he could not ſtay till Samuel came; whoſe Souls drew back, becauſe they could not live by Faith. Matth. 10. 26. Fear them not therefore; for there is nothing covered that ſhall not be revealed, and hid that ſhall not be known. 2 Theſſ. 2. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. Seeing it is a righteous thing with God to recompence Tribulation to them that trouble you, and to you that are troubled reſt with us, when the Lord Jeſus ſhall be revealed from Heaven with his mighty Angels, in flaming Fire taking Vengeance, &c. When he ſhall come to be glorified in his Saints, and admired in all them that do believe.

Dir. 21. §. 21. Direct. 21. Remember that the Fearful and Unbelieving ſhall be ſhut out of Heaven, Rev. 21. 8. that is, Thoſe that fear Men more than God, and cannot truſt him with their Lives and all, but will rather venture upon his Wrath by Sin, than on the Wrath of Man.

Dir. 22. §. 22. Direct. 22. Turn your Fear of the Inſtruments of the Devil into Pity and Compaſſion to Men in ſuch lamentable Miſery: And pray for them as Chriſt and Stephen did: Foreſee now the Miſery that is near them. When you begin to be afraid of them, ſuppoſe that juſt now were the Day of Judgment, and you ſaw how they will then tremble at the Bar of God (as Conſcience ſometimes makes ſome of them do at the hearing or remembring of it; as Felix before Paul:) See them as ready to be ſentenced to the Fire prepared for the Devil and his Angels, as Matth. 25. Can you fear him that is near ſuch endleſs Miſery, whom you ſhould condole and pity (as the ancient Martyrs uſed to do?) 1 Pet. 4. 17. What ſhall the End of the Perſecutors be, and where ſhall the ungodly Sinners appear, if Judgment begin at the Houſe of God, and the Righteous be ſaved with ſo much ado?

About the Fear of Death I have written largely already in my Treatiſe of Self-denial, and in the Saints Reſt, and in The Laſt Enemy Death, &c. and in The Believers Laſt Work: Therefore I ſhall here paſs it by.

Tit. 9. Directions againſt ſinful Grief and Trouble.

§. 1. Sorrow is planted in Nature to make Man a Subject capable of Government, by making him capable of Puniſhment, that he might be kept from Sin by the Fear or Senſe of that which Nature hath made its Puniſhment: And that the Beginnings of Pain might help to prevent the Sin that would bring more; and might drive the wounded Soul to its Remedy; or by Sympathy might condole the Miſery of others.

§. 2. Sorrow or Grief in it ſelf conſidered, is neither Morally Good nor Evil: But it is a Natural Paſſion, and Evil, that is hurtful to him that hath it, but Good, that is, an apt conducible means to the Univerſal or higher Ends of Government, to which the Creator and univerſal King hath planted it in Man: The ſame may be ſaid of all Capacity of Pain and natural Miſery.

§. 3. Meer Sorrow in it ſelf conſidered, is a thing that God commandeth not, nor taketh Pleaſure in. Sorrow for our natural or penal Hurt is in it ſelf no Duty, but a neceſſary thing. God doth not command it, but threaten it: Therefore there is no moral Good in it. God will not command or intreat Men to feel when they are hurt, or mourn under their Torment; but will make them do it whether they will or no: Therefore humble Souls muſt take heed of thinking they merit or pleaſe God meerly by ſorrowing for their Sufferings. But yet Sorrow for Miſery may accidentally become a Duty and a moral Good, 1. Ratione principii, by reſpect to the Principle it proceedeth from: As when it is, 1. The Belief of God's Threatnings which cauſeth the Sorrow; 2. When it cometh from a Love to God: 2. Ratione materiæ, for the Matter's ſake, when it is the Abſence of God, and his Favour, and his Spirit and Image, which is the Miſery that we lament (which therefore favoureth of ſome Love to God;) and not meer fleſhly ſenſitive Suffering. 3. Ratione finis, in reſpect of the End; when we ſorrow with Intent to drive our Hearts to Chriſt our Saviour, and to value Mercy and Grace, and to recover us to God. 4. Ratione effecti, in reſpect of the Effect, when theſe fore-mention'd Ends become the Fruits of it.

Even Sorrow that profiteth not, may teſtifie a juſt Affection. It is ſaid by Laertius, that when Solon was reproved for mourning for his Son, with a Nihil proficis; He anſwered, At propter hoc ipſum illachrimor quia nihil proficio.

§. 4. Sorrow for Sin is a Duty and moral Good, 1. Formally in it ſelf conſidered: For to be ſorrowful for offending God, and violating his Law, eſſentially containeth a Will to pleaſe God and obey his Law. 2. It muſt be alſo made good, by a good Principle, that is, by Faith and Love. 3. By a right End; that it be to carry us from the Sin to God: 4. And by a right Guide and Matter, that it be Sin indeed, and not a miſtaken ſeeming Sin, that is it we ſorrow for. But Sorrow for Sin (materially) may be made ſinful, 1. By an ill End and formal Reaſon, when we mourn not for Sin as Sin, but as one Sin hindereth another, or as it marred ſome ill Deſign. 2. And by the Effect, when it doth but ſink Men in Deſpair, or torment them, and not at all ſeparate them from the Sin. 3. When it cometh not at all from any Love to God, or care to pleaſe him, but only an Unwillingneſs to be damned, and ſo it is lamented only as a means of Damnation; which though it be a Sorrow poſitively neither good nor evil, yet it is evil privately.

§. 5. But it is the Paſſion of Grief as in its Exceſs that I am now to ſpeak againſt. And it is in Exceſs, 1 When we grieve for that which we ought not all to grieve for: that is, neither for ſome good, or for a thing indifferent that is neither good or bad: Both which come from the Error of the Mind. 2. When we grieve too much for that which we may grieve for lawfully in ſome meaſure: That is, for our own Afflictions or penal Suffering. 3. When we grieve too much for that which we are bound to grieve for in ſome meaſure: As, 1. For our Sin. 2. For our loſs of the Favour of God, or of his Grace and Spirit. 3. For other Mens Sin and Suffering. 4. For the Sufferings of the Church, and Calamities of the World. 5. For God's Diſhonour.

That very old Book of Hermes, called Paſtor, notably ſheweth how much Grief and Heavineſs is an Enemy to Chriſtianity and the Spirit of God.

§. 6. Though it is not eaſie to have too much Sorrow for Sin, conſidering it Eſtimatively, that is, we can hardly take Sin for a worſe Evil than it is, and accordingly grieve for it; yet it is oft too eaſie to have too much Sorrow for Sin, or any other Evil intenſively as to the Greatneſs of the Paſſion. And thus Sorrow for Sin is too great, 1. When it diſtracteth the Mind, and overturneth Reaſon, and it is made unfit for the Ends of Sorrow. 2. When it ſo cloudeth and cloatheth the Soul in Grief, that maketh us unfit to ſee and conſider of the Promiſe, to reliſh Mercy, or believe it; to acknowledge Benefits, or own Grace received, or be thankful for it; to feel the Love of God, or love him for it, to praiſe him, or to mind him, or to call upon him: When it driveth the Soul from God, and weakeneth it to Duty, and teacheth it to deny Mercy, and ſinketh it towards Deſpair; all this is too much and ſinful Sorrow: And ſo is all that doth the Soul more Hurt than Good: For Sorrow is not good of it ſelf, but as it doth Good, or ſheweth good.

Dir. 1. §. 7. Direct. 1. Keep your Hearts as true and cloſe to God as poſſible, and make ſure of his Love, that you may know you have not an unregenerate miſerable Soul to mourn for, and then all other Grief is the more curable, and more tolerable. Be once able to ſay, that God is on your Side, that Chriſt, and the Spirit, and Heaven is yours, and then you have the greateſt Cordial againſt exceſſive Grief that this World affords. If you ſay, How ſhould this be done? I anſwer, That this is opened in its proper Place. No marvail if Sorrow overwhelm that Soul, that is in the Chains of Sin, under the Curſe of God, as ſoon as awakened Conſcience comes to feel it. And it is moſt miſerable when it hath the ſmalleſt Sorrow; there being ſome Hope that Sorrow may drive it home to Chriſt. Therefore if thou have been a ſecure, unhumbled carnal Wretch, and God be now beginning to humble thee, by ſhewing thee thy Sin and Miſery, take heed as thou loveſt thy Soul, that thou drive not away neceſſary healing Sorrow and Repentance, under pretence of driving away Melancholy or over-much Sorrow: Thy Smart tendeth to thy Hopes of Cure.

Dir. 2. §. 8. Direct. 2. Renew not the Wounds of Conſcience by renewed wilful groſs Sin: For Sin will bring Sorrow, eſpecially if thou have any Life of Grace to feel it: Even as Falls and breaking the Bones brings Pain. Obey carefully if thou wouldſt have Peace.

Dir. 3. §. 9. Direct. 3. Be well acquainted with the General Grounds of Hope in the Mercy of God, the Office and Death of Chriſt, and the free univerſal Offer of Pardon, Grace and Life in the New Covenant. Abundance of Grief doth dwell in many humbled Souls through the Ignorance of theſe General Grounds of Comfort; which would vaniſh away if theſe were known.

Dir. 4. §. 10. Direct. 4. Know well the true Nature and Uſe of godly Sorrow: How it is but a means to higher Grace, and a thing which muſt exceed, and not a thing that we ſhould ſtop in, or think we can never have too much of it. Deſire is but in its place, and to its proper Ends.

§. 11. Direct. 5. Know well the Nature and Excellency of thoſe higher Graces, which Sorrow tendeth to. Even Love, and Thankfulneſs, and Delight in God, and fruitful Obedience. And then you will be carried after theſe, and will learn to hate the Sorrow that hindereth them, and to cheriſh that Sorrow which leadeth you up to them, and to value it but as a means to them. Dir. 5.

§. 12. Direct. 6. Manage all your Affairs, eſpecially thoſe of your Souls, with prudent Foreſight: And look not only on Things as they appear at hand. Judge not by Senſe, but by Reaſon; for Senſe can not foreſee, but pleaſeth it ſelf at preſent with that which muſt be Bitterneſs in the End. Thus carnal Delight is the common way to overwhelming Sorrow. He that would not have the Pain and Sickneſs of a Surfeit to morrow, muſt not pleaſe his Appetite againſt Reaſon to day. Poiſon will gripe and kill never the leſs for taſting ſweet. You muſt fore-know how that which you take will work, and what will be the Effects of it, and not only how it taſteth, if you would eſcape the Pain. The Drunkard thinketh not of his Vomiting, and Poverty, or Shame, or Sickneſs, and therefore cauſeth them. There is no Sorrow ſo intolerable as that of a guilty Soul, that's paſſing in Terror to the Bar of God, and thence to everlaſting Pain. Foreſee this Sorrow in your moſt pleaſant Sin; and remember that when you are tempted to Sin, you are tempted to Sorrow; and then you may prevent it. And in all your particular Actions uſe a foreſeeing Judgment, and aſk what is like to be the End, before you enter on the Beginning. Moſt of our Sorrows come for want of this, and expreſs themſelves by, Had I known, or Had I thought of this, I had prevented it. Do nothing which you may foreſee muſt be repented of: For Repentance is ſorrowful: And the weightier the Caſe, the deeper the Sorrow. How eaſie and comfortable a Life and Death might Men attain, if they would not buy a little forbidden poiſonous Pleaſure with the Price of future Pain and Sorrows! And if they did not fooliſhly and over-tenderly refuſe thoſe holy neceſſary medicinal Sorrows, by which their greater overwhelming and undoing Sorrows ſhould have been prevented! Dir. 6. Pittaci ſententia fuit, Prudentiam virorum eſſe prius quam adverſa contingant prouidere: fortunæ ne credant contingere, æquo animo ferre. Laert. in Pittac.

§. 13. Direct. 7. Look always on your Remedy when you look on your Miſery, and when you find any dangerous Sin or Sign in you, preſently conſider what is your Duty in order to your Recovery and Eſcape. It is an ordinary thing with peeviſh diſtemper'd Natures, when they are reproved for any Sin, to reſiſt the Reproof by Excuſes as long as they can: And when they can reſiſt no longer, then they fall into deſpairing Lamentations. If they are ſo bad, what then ſhall they do! And in the mean time never ſet themſelves againſt the Sin, and caſt it off, and return to their Obedience, that their Comforts may return: They will do any thing rather than amend. The Reaſon why God convinceth them of Sin is that they may forſake it, and they are ſooner brought to any thing than to this: Convince them of their Pride, or Malice, or Worldlineſs, or Obedience, or Slothfulneſs, or Paſſion, and they will ſooner ſink in Sorrow and Deſpair, than they will ſet upon a reſolved Reformation. This is it indeed which the Devil deſireth: He can allow you Grief and Deſperation, but not to amend: But is this beſt for you? Or is it pleaſing to God. Deny not your Sin, but ſee withal that there is enough in Chriſt for your Pardon and Deliverance: He hath appointed you means for your preſent Recovery, and he is ready to help you: Ask what is your Duty for your Cure, and ſet upon it without Delay. Dir. 7.

§. 14.

Dir. 8. §. 14. Direct. 8. Remember your Causes of Joy as well as your cause of Sorrow, that each may have their due, and your Joy and Sorrow may both be suited to their causes: To which end you must labour for the exactest acquaintance with your own condition, that possibly you can attain to: If you are yet ungodly, your Sorrow must be greater than your joy, or else it will be irrational joy, and pernicious to your Souls, and increase your after sorrow: And you must not over-look so much cause of comfort as it is afforded you in Gods Patience, and the Offers of a Saviour, and of Pardon, and grace, and life in him? If you are truly Godly, you must so mourn for sin, and weakness, and wants, and crosses and afflictions of your selves and others, as never to forget the unvaluable mercies which you have already received, your part in Christ and life eternal, your Beginnings of Grace, and your reconciliation with God, which allow and command you greatly to rejoyce: And remember that no Humiliations will excuse you from the Observation and Acknowledgment of all these mercies.

Act. 8. 8.

Dir. 9. §. 15. Direct. 9. Read over all the Commands of Scripture that make it your Duty, to rejoice in the Lord, and exceedingly to rejoice: And make as much conscience of them as of other commands of God. The same God commandeth you to Rejoyce, who commandeth you to hear and pray and repent. See Psal. 33. 1. Phil. 3. 1. & 4. 4. Rom. 5. 2. Phil. 3. 3. 1 Thes. 5. 16. 1 Pet. 1. 6, 8. & 4. 13. Heb. 3. 6. 2 Cor. 6. 10. Rom. 12. 12. Psal. 32. 11. & 132. 9, 16. Rom. 14. 17. Psal. 5. 11.

Dir. 10. §. 16. Direct. 10. Be*friend not your own excessive Sorrows, by thinking them to be your Duty, nor suspect not lawful mirth and joy as if it were a sin,* or a thing unbecoming you. For if you take your sin for your duty, and plead for it, and your Duty for your sin, and plead against it, you are far from the way of amendment and recovery. And yet it is common with an afflicted, weak, impatient Soul, to fall into liking (though not in Love) with their inordinate Sorrows, and to justify them, and think that it is their duty still to mourn. If these sorrows were of God, we should be more backward to them: And if our comfort were not more pleasing to God, our natures would not be so backward to them as they are.

Dir. 11. §. 17. Direct. 11. Love no creature too much, and let it not grow too sweet and pleasant to you: Else you are preparing for sorrow from the Creature. Love it less, and you shall sorrow less. All your grief for crosses and losses, in goods, estate, in children and friends, in reputation, liberty, health and life, doth come from your over-loving them. Value them but as they deserve, and you may easily bear the loss of them. He that maketh them his Idol or felicity, will grieve for the want of them or the loss of them as a Man undone that cannot live without them. But he that hath placed his happiness and hopes in God, and valueth the world no further than it tendeth to his ultimate end, will no further grieve for the want of it, than as he misseth it to that end. 1 Tim. 6. 10. The love of Money and coveting after it, doth pierce Men through with many Sorrows. Mark what you find your heart too much set upon and pleased in, or hoping after, and take it off quickly if you love your peace.

Dir. 12. §. 18. Direct. 12. Learn to be pleased and satisfied in the Will of God: Trust your Heavenly Father who knoweth what you need. It is some Rebellion or crossness of our wills to the will of God, which causeth our inordinate griefs and trouble. Because we cannot bring our Wills to his Will, nor make our reason stoop unto his wisdom, nor think well of his providence, unless he will suit it to our conceits, and Interests and lusts, therefore so far as we are carnal we are ordinarily displeased and grieved at his ways. If we might have had our own wills about our estates, or names, or children, or friends, or health, or life, we should not have been troubled (at the present:) But because it is not our way but Gods way that is taken, nor our will but Gods will that is done: therefore we are grieved and discontent, as if his way and will were worse than ours, and God had wanted his foolish children to be his Counsellors, or they could have chosen better for themselves!

Dir. 13. §. 19. Direct. 13. Afflict your selves no further than God or man afflict you: But remember if you think that you have too much already against your Wills, how foolish and self contradicting it is to lay a great deal more wilfully upon your selves. Is it slanders or reproach that men afflict you with? Let it be so: that toucheth not the Heart. Is it Poverty, crosses or losses that God afflicteth you with? Let it be so: that toucheth not the heart neither: Is it loss of children and friends; or is it pain and sickness? I confess these are sore; but yet they do not touch the heart: If they come thither, it is your doing; and (though thither they should come moderately,) if they are immoderate, it is your own sinful doing. It is you that grieve; and make the heart ake: God and man did but make the flesh ake. If others hurt your bodies, will you therefore vex your minds? Will you pierce thro' your hearts, because they touch your name or goods? If so, remember which part of your sorrow is of their making, and which is of your own: And can you for shame go beg of God or man to ease the grief which you your selves are causing, and wilfully continue it while you pray against it? And why lament you that which you cause and choose? It is a shame to be wilfully your own tormenters.

Liberter fe-ras quod necesse est: Dolor patient. vincitur. Mart. Dumient. de Morib. Tristitiam sin potes, ne admiseris: sin minus: ne ostende-ris. Id. ib.

Dir. 14. §. 20. Direct. 14. Abhor all that tendeth to take down the power and government of Reason (that is, all feebleness and cowardice of mind, and a melancholy, a peevish passionate disposition:) and labour to keep up the Authority of Reason, and to keep all your passions subject to your wills; which must be done by Christian faith and fortitude: If you come once to that childish or distracted pass, as to grieve and say, I cannot help it: I know it is sinful and immoderate, but I cannot choose, if you say true, you are out of the reach of counsel, advice or comfort. You are not to be preacht to, nor talkt to, nor to be written for: we do not write Directions to teach Men how to touch the Stars, or explain the asperities or inequalities of the Moon, or the opacous parts of Saturn, or to govern the Orbs, or rule the Chariot of the Sun: If it be become a natural impossibility to you, Doctrine can give you no remedy: But if the impossibility be but Moral in the weakness of Reason, and want of consideration, it may by Doctrine, Consideration, and Resolution, be overcome. You can do more if you will than you think you can. How come you to lose the command of your Passions? Did not God make you a rational creature, that hath an understanding and will to rule all Passions? How came you to have lost the Ruling Power of Reason and Will? You would take it for a disparagement to be told that you have lost the use of your Reason: and is it not a principal use of it to Rule the Passions, and all other inferiour subject powers? You say you cannot choose but grieve! But if one could give you that creature which you want or desire, then you could choose: You could rejoice, if one could restore you that Child, that Friend, that Estate which you have lost. But God, and Christ, and Heaven, it seems, are not enough to cure you: If you must have but them you cannot choose but grieve! And what hearts have you then that are thus affected? Should not those hearts be rather grieved for? God will sometime make you see, that you had more power than you used.

not

Dir. 15. §. 21. Direct. 15. Observe the mischiefs of excessive sorrow, that you may feel what reason you have to avoid it: While you know not what hurt is in it, you will be the more remiss in your resisting it: I shall briefly name you some of its unhappy fruits.

The ill effects of sinful grief.

§. 22. 1. It is a continual pain and sickness of the mind (This you know by feeling.) 2. It is a destroyer of bodily health and life: For worldly sorrow worketh death, 2 Cor. 7. 10. Prov. 17. 22. A merry heart doth good like a medicine: But a broken spirit dryeth the bones. 3. It putteth the soul out of relish with its mercies, and so causeth us to undervalue them, and consequently to be unthankful for them, and not to improve them. 4. It destroyeth the sense of the Love of God, and lamentably undisposeth the soul to Love him: And therefore should be abhorred by us were it but for that one effect. 5. It destroyeth the joy in the Holy Ghost, and unfitteth us to obey that command of God, Rejoyce continually. 6. It contradicteth a Heavenly mind and conversation, and hindereth us from all foretastes of the everlasting joyes. 7. It undisposeth us to the excellent work of Praise: Who can ascend in the Praises of God, while Grief doth oppress and captivate the soul? 8. It destroyeth the sweetness of all Gods Ordinances, Hearing, Reading, Prayer, Sacraments; we may force our selves to use them, but shall have no delight in them. 9. It hindereth the exercise of Faith, and raiseth distrust and sinful doubts and fears within us. 10. It causeth sinful discontents and murmurings at God and man. 11. It maketh us impatient, peevish, froward, angry, and hard to be pleased. 12. It weakneth the soul to all that is good, and destroyeth its fortitude and strength: For it is the Joy of the Lord that is our strength. Neh. 8. 10. 13. It hindreth us in the dutys of our callings: Who can do them as they should be done, under the clog of a disquiet mind? 14. It maketh us a grief and burden to our friends, and robs them of the comfort which they should have in and by us. 15. It maketh us unprofitable to others, and hindereth us from doing the good we might: When we should be instructing, exhorting and Praying for poor sinners, or minding the Church of God, we are all taken up at home; about our own afflictions. 16. It maketh us a stumbling block and scandal to the ungodly, and hindreth their conversion while the Devil setteth us before the Church doors, to keep away the ungodly from a holy life, as men set scare-crows in their fields and gardens, to frighten away the birds. 17. It dishonoureth Religion, by making men believe that it is a melancholy vexatious self-tormenting life. 18. It obscureth the Glory of the Gospel, and crosseth the work of Christ, his Spirit and Ministers, who all come upon a message of Great joy to all Nations; and proclaim Glad tidings to the worst of sinners: Much more to the sons of God, and heirs of life. 19. It misrepresenteth God himself, as if we would perswade men that he is a hard and cruel master, that none can please, though they do all through a Mediator upon a covenant of grace; and that it is worse with us since we served him than before; and that he delighteth in our grief and misery, and is against our peace and joy; and as if there were no joy nor pleasure in his service. Such hideous doctrine do our lives preach of God, when those that profess to fear and seek him, do live in such immoderate grief and trouble. 20. And it too much pleaseth the Devil, who is glad to torment us here, if he may not do it in Hell; and especially to make our selves the executioners upon our selves, when he is restrained: When he can boast and say, Tho' I may not vex thee, I will perswade thee to vex thy self. These are the fruits of sinful sorrows.

Even Anaxagoras a Philosopher could say to one that asked him, Nullane tibi patriæ cura est? Mihi quidem patriæ cura est & quidem summa: digitum in cœlum intendens. Laert. p. 85.

Tit. 10. Directions against sinful Despair (and Doubting.)

§. 1. DEspair is the contrary to Hope. There is a Despair that is a duty, and a Despair that is a sin, and a Despair that is indifferent, as being but of natural and not of Moral kind. Despair is a duty, when it is the contrary to the sinful Hope before described: That is, 1. When we despair of any thing which God hath told us shall never come to pass: For we are bound to believe his word: As that all the world should be saved or converted, or that our bodies should not dye and perish, and many such like. 2. It is a duty to Despair of ever attaining a good end by means or upon terms, which God hath told us it shall never be attained by: And so it is a great duty, for an unregenerate person to despair of ever being saved without regeneration, conversion and holiness: And to despair of ever being pardoned or saved if he live after the flesh and have not the spirit of Christ, and repent not unfeignedly of his sin, and be not a new-creature, and crucifie not the flesh with its affections and lusts. Such a dispair is one of the first things necessary to the conversion of a sinner, because the false hopes of being pardoned and saved without regeneration, is the present hindrance to be removed. See more of the cure of Doubting, Ch. 25. Tom. 2. Joh. 3. 3. 5. Heb. 12. 14. Mat. 18 3. Luk. 13. 3. Rom. 8. 7. 9, 13. 2 Cor. 5. 17. Gal. 5. 24.

§. 2. Despair is a sin, when it is contrary to any Hope which God commandeth us: (so it be not only a Negative despair, or bare not-hoping, which in sleep and other times may be innocent, but a Positive despair which concludeth against Hope) As, 1. Particular despair of the benefit of some particular promise, (as if Israel had despaired of deliverance from Egypt, or Abraham of a Son.) 2. General despair of the fulfilling of some general promise; as if we despaired of the Resurrection or the Kingdom of Christ in glory. 3. When by misapplication we despair of that pardon and salvation to our selves, which yet we believe shall be to others.

§. 3. Yea, Despair is sinful sometimes when it is not contrary to any promise or commanded Hope: For if God have not revealed his will one way or other, it is no duty to expect the thing, and yet it is a sin to conclude positively that it will not be: For then we shall say more than we know or than God hath revealed. If Hope be taken for the comfort that ariseth in us from the apprehension of a meer possibility, then indeed it is a duty to hope for that Good which is possible only: But if Hope be taken for a confident expectation, then both such Hope and also the contrary Despair would be a sin. We may (so) non-sperate but not Desperate. Possibles must be taken but for possibles, yet still for such.

§. 4. He that despaireth but of some common Mercy which he should not despair of, ratione materiæ committeth a sin of the smaller sort: He that despaireth of a great mercy to others (though not promised), committeth a greater sin ratione materiæ: (as if you despair of the conversion of a bad child, or of the continuance of the Gospel to the Kingdom, &c.) But he that despaireth of his own pardon and salvation sinneth more perilously ratione materiæ.

§. 5. The Despairing of pardon and salvation upon a Despair of the truth of the Gospel, or sufficiency of Judas perished not meerly by despair; but he had no such Repentance as Renewed his soul, nor any Love to God and holiness.

of Chriſt, is damnable and a certain mark of a wretched infidel, if it be predominant. But to Believe all the Goſpel to be true, and deſire Chriſt and life as beſt, and yet to Deſpair upon too bad thoughts of ones ſelf, or through ſome other miſtake, this is a ſin of infirmity, conſiſtent with grace, (unleſs the Deſpair be ſo total and prevalent, as to make the ſinner ſetledly caſt off a godly life, and give up himſelf to a life of wickedneſs.) The Scripture ſpeaketh little of this humble ſort of deſpair, and no where threatneth it as it doth Infidelity.

§. 6. The commoneſt Deſpair (like Spira's) which cometh immediately from invincible predominant melancholy (tho' occaſioned firſt by ſin) is no otherwiſe ſinful or dangerous, than the deſpair or raving of a mad-man or one in a doting feaver is. It is the too-humble Deſpair, thro' perſonal miſapplication, and particular miſtakes, that I ſhall ſpeak of in this place.

Dir. 1. §. 7. Direct. 1. Take heed of being ignorant of, or miſunderſtanding the three great general grounds of Faith and Hope; that is, 1. The infinite goodneſs of God, and his unmeaſurable Love and Mercy: 2. The relation of Chriſts office to all, and the ſufficiency of his Ranſom and Sacrifice for all: 3. The univerſality of the promiſe, or the Act of Oblivion or deed of gift of free pardon and ſalvation to all on condition of penitent belief and acceptance, which is procured and given by Chriſt, and contained in the Goſpel. If you miſtake ſo about any one of theſe as not to believe or underſtand them, or if you do not well conſider and improve them, no wonder if you be left under continual doubtings and liable to deſpair.

This is true faith: This is the condition of pardon; and on theſe terms Chriſt and life is given: This is the infallible evidence of a ſtate of grace: If you know not this, but look after ſomething elſe as neceſſary which is ſeparable from this, no wonder if you are perplexed, and inclined to deſpair.

Dir. 3. §. 9. Direct. 3. Underſtand the extent of this pardoning Covenant as to the ſins which it pardoneth: that it containeth the forgiveneſs of all ſin without exception, to them that perform the condition of it (that is, to Conſenters): So that directly no ſin is excepted but the non-performance of the condition; but conſequently, all ſin is excepted and none at all forgiven by it, to them that do not perform the condition. Every conditional grant doth expreſly except the non-performance of the condition by the making of it to be the condition. He that ſaith, All ſin is forgiven to them that believe and repent, and no other doth plainly import, that not believing and not repenting is not forgiven, while it continueth; nor any other ſin to ſuch. But to penitent believers or conſenters, all ſin is pardoned. Which made the Ancients ſay, that all ſin is waſht away in Baptiſm, ſuppoſing the perſon Baptized to be a meet Subject, and to have the Condition of the Covenant which is by Baptiſm ſealed and delivered to him.

Dir. 4. Though the troubles of ſome call for a larger Diſcourſe of this ſin, yet having written a Treatiſe of it, I muſt not here be tedious in reciting what is there ſaid already.

§. 10. Direct. 4. Miſunderſtand not the excepted ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt; which is no other, than an aggravated Non-performance and refuſal of the condition of the Covenant; viz. when Infidels are ſo obſtinate in their Infidelity, that they will rather impute the Miracles of the Holy Ghoſt to the Devil, than they will be convinced by them that Chriſt is the true Meſſias or Saviour. This is the true nature of the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, of which I have written the third Part of my Treatiſe of Infidelity. So that no one hath the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt that confeſſeth that Jeſus is the Chriſt, and Saviour; or that confeſſeth the miracles done by Chriſt and his Apoſtles were done by the Holy Ghoſt, or that confeſſeth the Goſpel is true; or that doth not juſtify his ſin and infidelity. He muſt be a profeſſed Infidel againſt confeſſed Miracles that commits this ſin. And yet many deſpair becauſe they fear they have committed this ſin, that never underſtood what it is, nor have any reaſon but bare fear, and ſome blaſphemous temptations which they abhor, to make them imagine that this ſin is theirs. But the truth is, in their fearing condition, if any other ſin had been as terribly ſpoken of, they would have thought it is theirs.

§. 11. Direct. 5. Underſtand the Time to which the condition of the Goſpel doth extend, namely, to the end of our life on earth: The day of his grace hath no ſhorter end. For the Goſpel ſaith not, He that believeth this year or the next ſhall be ſaved: But abſolutely without limitation to any time ſhort of death, He that believeth ſhall be ſaved: ſo that to doubt whether true repentance and faith will be accepted at any time before death, is but to be ignorant of the Goſpel, or to doubt whether it be true. And therefore for a deſpairing ſoul to ſay, If I did repent, it is too late becauſe the day of grace is paſt, is but to contradict the Goſpel covenant it ſelf, or to ſay he knows not what. God never refuſed a ſoul that truly repented and believed before death. Dir. 5.

§. 12. Obj. 1. But (they'll ſay) do not ſome Divines ſay that ſome mens day of Grace is ſooner paſt, and God hath forſaken them, and it is too late, becauſe they came not in time. Obj. 1.

Anſw. They that underſtand what they ſay, muſt ſay but this: that this word [the day of grace] hath divers ſenſes. 1. Properly by the Day of Grace, is meant, The Time in which according to the tenour of the Goſpel, God will pardon and accept thoſe that repent: And in this ſenſe the time of life, is the time of Grace: whenever a ſinner repenteth and is converted he is pardoned. 2. Sometimes by the [day of Grace] is meant the time in which the means of grace is continued to a Nation or a Perſon: And thus it is true, that the day of Grace is quicklier paſt with ſome Countries than others: that is, God ſometimes taketh away the Preachers of his Goſpel from a People that reject them, and ſo by Preaching offereth them his Grace no more. But in this ſenſe a man may eaſily know whether his Day of grace be paſt or no? that is, whether Bibles and Books and Chriſtians and Preachers be all gone, or not? (And yet if they were, he that receiveth Chriſt before they are gone is ſafe.) No man in his wits can think this day of grace is paſt with him while Chriſt is offered him, or while there is a Bible or Preacher or Chriſtians about him. 3. Sometime by the day of grace, is meant, The certain time which we are ſure of as our own. And ſo it is only the preſent minute that is the time of grace: that is, we cannot before-hand be ſure of another minute; But yet the next minute when it is come is as much the time of grace as the former was. 4. Sometime by the day of grace is meant the Time in which God actually worketh and giveth grace; and that is no more than the day of our Converſion. And in this ſenſe to have the day of grace paſt is a happineſs and comfort, that is, that the day is paſt in which we were converted. 5. And ſometime by the Day of grace is meant that day in which God moveth the hearts of the impenitent more ſtrongly towards converſion than formerly he did; And this is it that Divines mean when they talk of the day of Grace being paſt with Men before their death: that is, Though Anſw. When the day of Grace is paſt.

Though such have never a Day of effectual Grace, yet their Motions were stronger towards it, than hereafter they shall be, and they were fairer for Conversion, than after when they are gone further from it. This is true, and this is all: And what's this to a Soul that is willing to come in, and ignorantly questioneth whether he shall be accepted, because the Day of Grace is past?

Obj. 2. §. 13. Obj. 2. But Christ saith, Luke 19. 42. If thou hadst known in this thy Day——

Answ. Answ. That was the Day of the Offers of Grace by Preaching: We grant that Nations have but their day of enjoying the Gospel, which they may shorten by sinning it away.

Obj. 3. §. 14. Obj. 3. But it's said of Esau, that afterward when he would have inherited the Blessing he was rejected, for he found no place of Repentance, tho' he sought it carefully with Tears, Heb. 12. 17. It seems then that Repentance in this life may be too late.

Answ. It seemeth to be Isaac's Repentance which Esau found no Place for: But if it be spoken of the unacceptableness of his own Repentance, when it was too late, it signifieth not that any Man's is too late in this Life as to Salvation.

Answ. It's true, that Esau's time for the Blessing was past as soon as Isaac had given it to Jacob. When he had sold his Birth-right it was too late to recal it, for the Right was made over to his Brother: And it was not Repentance and Cries and Tears that could recal the right he had sold, nor recal the words that Isaac had spoken: But this doth not prove that our day of Grace doth not continue till Death, or that any Man repenteth before his Death shall be rejected, as Esau's Repentance was: The Apostle neither saith nor meaneth any such thing: The sense of his Words are only this much [Take heed lest there be any so prophane among you as to set so light by the Blessings of the Gospel, even Christ and life eternal, as to part with them for a base Lust or transitory thing, as Esau that set more by a Morsel of Meat than by his birth right: For let them be sure that the time will come (even the time mentioned by Christ, Matth. 25. 10, 11. when the Door is shut and the Lord is come) when they will dearly repent it, and then, as it was with Esau when the Blessing was gone, so it will be with them when their Blessing is gone, Repentance and Cries and Tears will be too late: For the Gospel hath its Justice and Terrors as well as the Law. This is all in the Text; but there is no Intimation that our day of Grace is as short as Esau's hope of the Blessing was.

Obj. 4. §. 15. Obj. 4. Saul had but his time, which when he lost he was forsaken of God.

Answ. Answ. Saul's Sin provoked God to reject him from being King of Israel, and to appoint another in his stead: But if Saul had repented he had been saved after that, though not restored to the Crown: And it's true, that as God withdrew from him the Spirit of Government, so many before death by the greatness of their Sins, cause God to forsake them so far as to withhold those Motions and Convictions, and Fears and Disquietments in Sin which sometimes they had, and to give them over to a reprobate mind, Rom. 1. 28. to commit all Uncleanness with greediness, and glory in it as being past feeling, Eph. 4. 18, 19. If it be thus with you, you would be no better, you would not be recovered, you think Sin is best for you, and hate all that would reform you.

Obj. 5. §. 16. Obj. 5. It is said, 2 Cor. 6. 2. Behold now is the accepted time, behold now is the Day of Salvation. And Heb. 3. 7, 12, 13. To day if you will hear his Voice, harden not your hearts— lest any of you be hardened by the Deceitfulness of Sin.

Answ. Answ. This saith no more than that the present time is the best, yea the only certain time; and we are not sure that the day of Salvation will continue any longer, because death may cut us off: But if it do not, yet Sin is a hardening thing, and the longer we sin, the more it hardneth: yea God may withhold the Motions of his Spirit, and leave us to our selves, to the hardness of our Hearts: And thus he doth by thousands of wicked Persons, who are left in Impenitency and Hatred of the truth: But most certainly if those Men repented they might be saved, and the very Reason why they have not Christ and Life is still because they will not consent.

§. 17. Direct. 6. Understand by what help and strength it is that the Obedience to the Gospel must be performed: Not meerly by your own strength, but by the Help of Grace and Strength of Christ: If he have but made you willing, he will help you to perform the rest. You are not by this Covenant to be a Saviour and Sanctifier to your selves, but to consent that Christ be your Saviour, and the Holy Spirit your Sanctifier. You might else despair indeed if you were left to that which you are utterly unable to do. Though you must work out you own Salvation with Fear and Trembling, it is he that worketh in you to will and to do of his good Pleasure, Phil. 2. 13. Dir. 6.

§. 18. Direct. 7. Understand well the difference between mortal Sins and Infirmities, that you may not think that every Sin is a sign of death or graceleſsness; but may know the difference between those sins which should make you think your selves unjustified, and those Sins which only call for particular Humiliation, being such as the justified themselves commit. Tho' in the Popish sense we take no sin to be venial, that is, which in it self is properly no Sin, nor deserveth death according to the Law of Works; yet the distinction between mortal and venial Sin, is of very great Necessity; that is, between Sins which prove a Man in a state of death, or unjustified, and sins which consist with a state of Grace and Justification; between Sins which the Gospel pardoneth not, and those which it pardoneth, that is, all that stand with true Repentance. There are some sins which every one that repenteth of them, doth so forsake as to cease committing them: And there are some lesser Sins, which they that repent of them do hate indeed, but yet frequently renew, as our defective degrees in the Exercise of Repentance it self, faith, love, trust, fear, obedience: Our vain Thoughts and Words; some sinful Passions; Omissions of many duties of thought, affection, word or deed towards God or Man; some minutes of time over-slip us; Prayer and other duties have a sinful coldness or remissness in them, and such like. Many such sins are fitly called Infirmities and Venial, because they consist with Life, and are forgiven: It is of great use to the peace of our Consciences to discern the difference between these two, for one sort require a Conversion to another state, and the other require but a particular Repentance, and where they are unknown are forgiven without particular Repentance, because our general Repentance is virtually though not actually particular as to them. One sort are cause of judging our selves ungodly; and the other sort are only cause of filial Humiliation: Any one may see the great need of discerning the difference; but yet it is a matter of very great Judgment doctrinally to distinguish them, much more actually to discern them in every Instance in your selves. The way is to know first what is the Condition of the New Covenant, and of absolute necessity to Salvation or Justification: And then every Sin that is inconsistent with that condition is mortal, and the rest that are consistent and do consist with it are venial, or but Infirmities: As Venial signifieth only that sort of Sin which is pardonable and may consist with true Grace, so a Venial Sin may be in an unsanctified Person materially, where it is not pardoned; that is, e. g. his wandring thought, or passion, is a sin of that sort that in the Godly is consistent with true Grace: But as Venial signifieth a Sin that is pardoned, or pardonable without a Regeneration or Conversion into a State of Life from a State of Death, so Venial Sin is in no unregenerate unjustified Person, but is only the Infirmities of the Saints; and thus I here speak of it. In a word, that Sin which actually consisteth with habitual Repentance, and with Dir. 7. De quâ vide Tract. Rob. Sarotnii Of Mortal and Venial Sin.

hatred of it so far that you had rather be free from it than commit or keep it, and which consisteth with an unfeigned consent to the Covenant, that God be your Father, Saviour and Sanctifier, and with the Love of God above all, is but an Infirmity or Venial sin. But to know from the nature of the sin, which those are, requireth a Volume by it self to direct you only.

Dir. 8. §. 19. Direct. 8. Understand how necessary a faithful Minister of Christ is in such cases of danger and difficulty to be a guide to your Consciences; and open your case only to them, and place so much confidence in their judgment of your state, as their office and abilities and faithfulness do require, and set not up your timerous darkned perplexed judgments above theirs in cases where they are fitter to judge. Such a Guide is necessary both as appointed by Christ who is the Author of his office, and in regard of the greatness and danger and difficulty of your case. Do you not feel that you are insufficient for your selves, and that you have need of help? sure a soul that is tempted to Despair may easily feel it. You are very proud or blindly self-conceited if you do not. And you may easily know that Christ that appointed them their office, requireth that they be both used and trusted in their office, as far as reason will allow. And where there is no office, yet Ability and faithfulness deserve and require credit of themselves. Why else do you trust Physicians and Lawyers and all Artificers in their several Professions and arts as far as they are reputed able and faithful? I know no man is to be believed as infallible as God is; but man is to be believed as man: And if you will use and trust your spiritual guide but so far as you use and trust your Physician or Lawyer, you will find the great benefit if you choose aright.

Dir. 9. §. 20. Direct. 9. Remember when you have sinned how sure and sufficient and ready a remedy you have before you, in Jesus Christ and the Covenant of Grace; and that it is Gods design in the way of Redemption, not to save any man as innocent, that none may glory, but to save men that were first in sin and misery, and fetch them as from the gates of Hell, that Love and mercy may be magnified on every one that is saved, and grace may abound more by the occasion of sins abounding, Rom. 5. 15, 20. Not that any should continue in sin because grace hath abounded: God forbid, Rom. 6. 1. But that we may magnify that grace and mercy which hath abounded above our sins; and turn the remembrance of our greatest sins to the admiration of that great and wonderful mercy. To magnify mercy when we see the greatness of our sin, and to Love much because much is forgiven, this is to please God, and answer the very design and end of our Redemption: But to magnifie sin and extenuate mercy, and to say, My sin is greater than can be forgiven, this is to please the Devil, and to cross Gods design in the work of our Redemption. Is your disease so great that no other can cure it? It is the fitter for Christ to honour his office upon, and God to honour his Love and mercy on. Luk. 7. 47. John 5. 40. Do but come to him that you may have life, and you shall find that no greatness of sin past, will cause him to refuse you, nor no infirmities which you are willing to be rid of, shall cause him to disown you or cast you out. Luk. 15. 20, 22, 23. The Prodigal is not so much as upbraided with his sins, but finds himself before he is aware, in his Fathers arms, cloathed with the best Robes, the Ring and Shoes, and joifully entertained with a Feast. Remember that there is enough in Christ, and the promise to pardon and heal all sins which thou art willing to forsake.

Dir. 10. §. 21. Direct. 10. Take heed of being so blind or Proud in thy Humility, as to think that thou canst be more willing to be a Servant of Christ, than he is to be thy Saviour, or more willing to have Grace than God is to give it thee, or more willing to come home to Christ, than he is to receive and welcome thee. Either thou art willing or unwilling to have Christ and grace, to be sanctified and freed from sin: If thou be willing Christ and his grace shall certainly be thine: Indeed if thou wouldst have Pardon without Holiness, this cannot be, nor is there any promise of it: But if thou wouldst have Christ to be thy Saviour and King, and his Spirit to be thy Sanctifier, and hadst rather be perfect in Love and Holiness than to have all the Riches of the World, then art thou in sincerity that which thou wouldst be in perfection: Understand that God accounteth thee to be what thou truly desirest to be. The great work of Grace lieth in the renewing of the will: If the will be found, the Man is found. I mean not the conquered uneffectual Velleity of the wicked, that wish they could be free from Pride, sensuality, gluttony, drunkenness, lust and covetousness, without losing any of their beloved honour, wealth or pleasure; that is, when they think on it as the way to Hell they like not their sin, but wish they were rid of it, but when they think of it as pleasing their fleshly minds, they love it more, and will not leave it, because this is the prevailing thought and will. So Judas was unwilling to sell his Lord, as it was the betraying of the innocent, and the way to Hell, but he was more willing as it was the way to get his hire. So Herod was unwilling to kill John Baptist as it was the murder of a Prophet: but his willingness was the greater, as it was the pleasing of his Damosel, and the freeing himself from a troublesome reproover. But if thy willingness to have Christ and perfect Holiness be more than thy unwillingness, and more than thy willingness to keep thy sin, and enjoy the honour, wealth and pleasures of the world, then thou hast an undoubted sign of uprightness, and that Love to Grace, and desire after it, which nothing but Grace it self doth give. And if thou art thus willing, it is great wrong to Christ to doubt of his willingness. For, 1. He is a greater lover of Holiness than thou art; and therefore cannot come behind thee, in being willing of thy Holiness. 2. He is more merciful to thee, than thou art to thy self: His Love and Mercy is beyond thy measure. 3. He hath begun to thee, and fully shewed his Willingness first. He died to prepare thee a full Remedy: he hath drawn up the Covenant: he hath therein expressed his own Consent, and intreateth thine: he is the first in consenting, and is a Suiter to thee. Never Sinner did yet begin to him in the world. Never any was willing of the match before him: His general Offer of mercy, and Covenant tendered to all, doth shew his Willingness before they can shew theirs, by their Acceptance. Never Man over-went him in Willingness and was more willing than he. Take this sinner, as Gods infallible truth. If the Match break between Christ and thee, and thou be lost, it shall not be through his refusal, but through thine: And it cannot break any other way, no not by the craft or force of all the Devils in Hell: but either because Christ is unwilling or because thou art unwilling; And on Christ part it shall never break. And therefore if thou be willing the match is made; and there is no danger but lest thy heart draw back. If thou art not willing, why complainest thou for want of that which thou wouldst not have? If thou art willing, the Covenant is then made, for Christ is more willing, and was willing first.

Write them on thy very Chamber Walls, and set them still before thine eyes; and try whether they agree with the words of him that temptеth thee to despair:* such as these which I here transcribe for thee, Joh. 3. 16. God so loved the World that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth lieveth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life——v. 19. This is the condemnation that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil, 1 John 5. 10, 11, 12. He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself: he that believeth not God hath made him a liar, because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son: And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life and this life is in his Son: He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life. John 1. 11, 12. He came unto his own, and his own received him not: but to as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the Sons of God, to them that believe on his name. Rev. 22. 17. Let him that is athirst come, And whoever will let him take the water of life freely. John 5. 40. And ye will not come unto me, that ye may have life. John. 6. 37. All that the Father giveth me, shall come to me, and him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out. Joh. 7. 37. If any man thirst, let him come to me and drink, Luk. 14. 17. Come, for all things are now ready. And read oft Luke 15.

Dir. 12. Eph. 4. 1. §. 23. Direct. 12. Distinguish between sin seen and felt, and sin reigning unto death; that you may not be so blinded as to think your sin greatest or your condition worst, when your sight and feeling of it is greatest. To see and feel your sin and misery is at least the ordinary preparation for recovery. To be dead is to be past feeling: They that are most forsaken of God are most willing of their present condition, and most love their sin, and hate holiness and all that would reform them, and if they have power, will persecute them as enemies.

Dir. 13. §. 24. Direct. 13. Think not that the troublesome strivings and temptations which weary you are the worst condition or a sign of the victory of sin. It is rather a sign that you are not yet forsaken of God, while he beareth witness in you against sin, and is yet following you with his dissuasives. Paul saith, Gal. 5. 15. For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh, and these are contrary the one to the other, so that ye cannot do the things that ye would. Read Rom. 7. from 14. to the end.

Dir. 14. §. 25. Direct. 14. Understand the Difference between weak grace and no grace, that you may not think every want of grace is a sign of total gracelessness. When you have opened in your complaints a long Catalogue of weaknesses, consider whether yet there be not a true desire to be better; and some degree of life with all these?

Dir. 15. §. 26. Direct. 15. Think well of the excellency of the least degree of special grace, that it is a seed of glory; the beginning of life eternal; the Divine nature, and the image of God, and of greater worth than all the learning, wealth and honour in the world: And be not unthankful for so great a mercy, because you have not more.

Dir. 16. §. 27. Direct. 16. Make conscience of observing the grace and mercy received as well as the Wants remaining and the sins committed, and of the thankful Remembrance and Mention of mercy, as much as the humble mention of sin. Think as oft of mercy as of sin: Talk of it as much to others: and mention it to God as much in prayer: This is your plain duty: If you will not do it, your wilful unthankfulness for what you have received, may well leave you in distress without the comfort of it.

Dir. 17. §. 28. Direct. 17. Let your Thoughts of Gods Goodness bear some Proportion with your Thoughts of his Knowledge and his Power. And then you will not be so apt to entertain false suspicions of it, and think of him as a man-hater, like the Devil, nor to run away from him, that is the infinite most attractive Good.

Dir. 18. §. 29. Direct. 18. Record the particular kindnesses to thy self, by which God hath testified his particular Love to thee: that they may stand as near and constant witnesses of his mercy and readiness to do thee good, against thy excessive fearfulness and despair.

Dir. 19. §. 30. Direct. 19. Think how few there are in the World so likely for mercy as thy self: Look not only on a few that are better than thy self; but think how five parts of the world are open Infidels and Heathens; and of the sixth part that are Christians, how few are Reformed from Popish and Barbarous ignorance and superstition: and among Protestants, how small is the number of them that are less in Love with sin than thy self? I know that many wicked men abuse this comparison to presumption: But I know also that a Christian may and must use it against Despair, and not think of God and the Redeemer, as if he would save so few as are next to none at all.

Dir. 20. Psal. 33. 18. & 42. 5. & 43. 5. & 147. 11. & 71. 14. §. 31. Direct. 20. Remember that God commandeth faith and hope, and forbiddeth unbelief and despair, and that it is your sin: And will you sin more when you have sinned so much already? What if you see no other reason why you should Hope, and why you should not despair but Gods command? Is not that enough? I charge you in the name of God obey him and despair not. Sin not wilfully thus against him, Psal. 146. 5. & 31. 24. Rom. 8. 24. & 15. 4, 13. Col. 1. 23. 1 Thes. 5. 8. Heb. 3. 6. & 6. 11, 18, 19. Tit. 1. 2. Hope is your duty: and dare you plead against duty? Despair is your sin, and will you justify it? Yea consider what a deal of comfort is in this: For if there were no hope of your salvation, God would never have made it your Duty to hope, nor forbidden you to despair. He doth not bid the Devils nor the damned Hope as he doth you: He forbiddeth not them to despair as he doth you: There is cause for this: He would have done it, if your condition were as Hopeless as theirs is.

Dir. 21. §. 32. Direct. 21. If God forbid you to Despair, it's certainly the Devil that biddeth it. And will you knowingly obey the Devil? What if the Devil perswaded you to it openly with his own mouth? would you not know that it is bad which such an Enemy draweth you to? Methinks this should be a very great comfort to you, to think that it is the Devil that perswadeth you to despair? For that proveth that you should not despair; and that proveth that your case is not desperate but hopeful.

Dir. 22. §. 33. Direct. 22. Think whither it tendeth: to despair is to give up all hopes of your Salvation: and when you have no hope you will use no means: for to what purpose should a man seek for that which he hath no hopes to find? And so when this weight is taken off, all the wheels stand still: The meaning of the Devil hath two parts, the first is, Do not hear, nor read, nor pray, nor seek advice, nor talk any more about it with good people, for there is no hope. And the next part is, either make away thy self, or else sin boldly and take the pleasure of sin while thou maist; for there is no hope of any better. And dost thou think that either of these is from God? Or is it for thy good? What is the meaning of all, but cast away thy soul? While thou hopest, thou wilt seek, and use some means; but to cast away hope is to cast away all. And hast thou so far lost self-love as to be thy self the doer of such a deed?

Dir. 23. §. 34. Direct. 23. Think what a wrong thou dost to the Father, the Saviour and the Sanctifier of souls, to think so poorly and despairingly of his grace, as if it were not able to prevail against thy sin: and to obscure us the glory of his redemption; and to believe the Devil in his slandering, extenuating and dishonouring that in God, which he will have most glorified by sinners?

Dir. 24. §. 35. Direct. 24. Bethink thee what one Person thou canst name in all the world, that ever perished or was rejected, that was willing in this Life to be saved ved and Sanctified by Chriſt, and had rather have Chriſt and perfect Holineſs than the treaſures or pleaſures of the world. Name me any one ſuch perſon if thou canſt: but I am ſure thou canſt not: And doſt thou fear that which never was done to any one; or think that Chriſt will begin with thee?

Dir. 25. §. 36. Direct. 25. Up man and be doing, and reſolve in deſpight of the Devil that thou wilt wait on God in the uſe of means, and caſt thy ſelf on Chriſt, and if thou periſh thou wilt periſh there: Do this, and thou ſhalt never periſh. Thou canſt not do worſe than Deſpair and give up all; nor canſt thou pleaſe the Devil more, nor diſpleaſe God more, nor wrong Chriſt and the ſpirit more. Thou art certain that thou canſt loſe nothing by truſting thy ſoul on Chriſt, and hoping in him, and patiently uſing his means: Do but this, and hope ſhall ſave thee, when Satan by deſpair would damn thee.

Dir. 26. §. 37. Direct. 26. Underſtand in what time and order it is that Chriſt giveth his grace and ſaveth his people from their ſins: that he doth it not all at once but by degrees, and taketh all the time of this preſent life to do it in: As able as your Phyſician is he will not finiſh the cure till your life be finiſhed. The next life is the ſtate of abſolute perfection: All things are imperfect here: Deſpair not therefore of all that you have not yet attained: Your ſin may be more mortified yet, and your grace yet more ſtrengthened. If it be done before you come to judgment it's well for you: Do your part in daily diligence: Do you plant and water, and he will give the increaſe. CHAP. VIII.

Directions for the Government of the Senſes.

PART I.

General Directions for the Government of the Senſes (by a Life of Faith).

§. 1. THE moſt wiſe and gracious God, having been pleaſed to conſtitute us of Soul and Body, that our nobler part in its preparation and paſſage to a nobler ſtate, might have a Companion and Inſtrument ſuited to the lower Place and Employment, through which it is to paſs, hath appointed our Senſes not only for the exerciſe and Helps of Life, and the Management of our inferiour Actions, and the communication of his inferiour mercies, but alſo to be the common paſſage to the fantaſie, and ſo to the mind, and to be ſerviceable to our rational powers, and help, in our ſervice of our Maker, and communion with him in his higher gifts. To theſe ends all our Senſes ſhould be uſed; as being capable of being ſanctified and ſerviceable to God. But ſin made its entrance by them, and by ſin they are now corrupted and vitiated with the body, and are grown inordinate, violent and unruly in their appetite; and the rational Powers having loſt and forſaken God their proper End and chiefeſt Object, have hired or captivated themſelves to the ſenſitive appetite, to ſerve its ends. And ſo the ſenſitive appetite is become the ruling faculty in the unſanctified, and the ſenſes the common entrance of ſin, and Inſtruments of Satan: and though the work of grace be primarily in the Rational Powers, yet ſecundarily the lower powers themſelves alſo are ſanctified, and brought under the Government of a renewed Mind and Will, and ſo reſtored to their proper uſe. And though I cannot ſay that Grace immediately maketh any alteration on the Senſes, yet mediately it doth, by altering the Mind, and ſo the Will, and then the imagination, and ſo the ſenſitive appetite, and ſo in exerciſe, the ſenſe it ſelf. We ſee that Temperance and Chaſtity do not only reſtrain, but take down the Appetite from the rage and violence which before it had: Not the natural appetite, but the ſenſitive, ſo far as it is ſinful.

§. 2. The Sanctifying and Government of the ſenſes and their appetite, lieth in two parts: Firſt, In guarding them againſt the entrance of ſin: and Secondly, In uſing them to be the entrance of good into the Soul. But this later is ſo high a work that two few are skilled in it? and few can well perform the other.

§. 3. Direct. 1. The principal part of the work is about the ſuperiour Faculties, to get a well informed judgment, and a holy and confirmed Will; and not about the ſenſe it ſelf. Reaſon is dethroned by ſin: and the will is left unguided and unguarded to the rapes of ſenſual violence. Reaſon muſt be reſtored, before ſenſe will be well governed; for what elſe muſt be their immediate Governour? It is no ſin in Brutes to live by ſenſe, becauſe they have not Reaſon to rule it: And in man it is ruled more or leſs, as reaſon is more or leſs reſtored: When Reaſon is only cleared about things temporal (as in Men of worldly wiſdom) there ſenſe will be maſtered and ruled as to ſuch temporal ends, as far as they require it. But where Reaſon is ſanctified, there Senſe is ruled to the ends of ſanctification, according to the meaſure of grace. Dir. 1.

§. 4. Direct 2. It is only the high eternal things of God and our Salvation, objectively ſettled in the Mind and Will, and become as it were connatural to them, and made our Ruling End and Intereſt, that can ſuffice a true and holy Government of the Senſes. Lower things may muzzle them, and make men ſeem temperate and ſober as far as their honour, and wealth, and health, and life require it: But this is but ſtopping a gap, while moſt of the hedge lyeth open, and engaging the Senſe to ſerve the Fleſh, the World and the Devil, in a handſome, calm and leſs diſhonoured way, and not ſo filthily and furiouſly as others. Dir. 2.

§. 5. Direct. 3. The main part of this Government in the exerciſe, is in taking ſpecial care that no ſenſitive good be made the ultimate end of our deſire, nor ſought for it ſelf, nor reſted in, nor delighted in too much; but to ſee that the Soul (having firſt habitually fixed on its proper higher end and happineſs) do direct all the actions of every ſenſe (ſo far as it falls under Deliberation and choice) to ſerve it remotely to thoſe holy ends. For the ſenſe is not ſanctified, if it be not uſed to a holy end, and its object is not ſanctified to us, if it be not made ſerviceable to more holy Objects. A meer negative reſtraint of ſenſe for common ends, is but ſuch as thoſe ends are for which it's done. When the eyes, and ears, and taſte, and feeling are all taught by reaſon to ſerve God to his glory and our ſalvation, then and never till then they are well governed. Dir. 3.

§. 6. Direct. 4. To this End the conſtant uſe of a lively belief of the Word of God and the things unſeen of the other world, muſt be the firſt and principal means by which our Reaſon muſt govern every ſenſe, both as to their reſtraint and their right employment: And therefore living by ſight, and living by faith are oppoſed in Scripture, 2 Cor. 5. 7. For we walk by faith, not by ſight: that is, ſight and ſenſe is not our principal guiding faculty, but ſubſervient to faith; nor the objects of ſight the things which we principally or ultimately ſeek or ſet by, but the objects of faith: As it is before expounded, 2 Cor. 4. 18. While we look not at the things which are ſeen, but at the things which are not ſeen: For the things which are ſeen are temporal, but the things which are not ſeen are eternal. Therefore Faith is deſcribed to be the Subſtance of things hoped for, and the evidence of things not ſeen, Heb. 12. 1. Believing is to a Chriſtian inſtead of ſeeing; becauſe he knoweth by Gods teſtimony, that the things believed are true, though they are unſeen. And you Dir. 4.

know that the objects of ſenſe are all but trifles, to the great aſtoniſhing objects of faith. Therefore if faith be lively, it muſt needs prevail and over rule the ſenſes, becauſe its objects utterly cloud and make nothing of the tranſitory objects of ſenſe. Therefore the Apoſtle John ſaith, 1 John 5. 4. Whatſoever is born of God overcometh the world: And this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith. And Moſes by ſeeing him that is inviſible, overcame the deſires of Ægypts treaſures, and the fear of the wrath of the King, Heb. 11. 26, 27. Having reſpect to the recompence of reward. Stephen eaſily bore his cruel death, when he ſaw Heaven opened, and Chriſt ſtanding at the right hand of God, Acts 7. 56. I dare appeal to that man that is moſt ſenſual, and ſaith, I am not able to deny my appetite, or rule my ſenſes, whether he would not be able if he did but ſee at the ſame time what's done in the other world? If he ſaw Heaven, and Hell, the glorified and the damned, and ſaw the Majeſty of that God who commandeth him to forbear, would he not be able to let alone the Cup, the Diſh, the Harlot, the Sport, which is now ſo powerful with him? I would not thank the moſt beaſtly ſenſualiſt among you, to live as temperately (as to the act) as the ſtricteſt Saint alive, if he did but ſee the worlds which departed ſouls now ſee. It is not poſſible but it would overpower his ſenſual deſires: Yea, and call off thoſe ſenſes to ſerve him in ſome enquiry what he ſhould do to be ſaved. Therefore if Believing the unſeen world, be inſtead of ſeeing it with our eyes, it's moſt certain that the means to overcome ſenſuality is faith, and lively Belief muſt rule our ſenſes.

Dir. 5. §. 7. Direct. 5. The more this Belief of God and glory doth kindle Love to them, the more effectual it will be in the Government of the ſenſes. Our common Proverb ſaith, Where the Love is, there is the Eye. How readily doth it follow the heart! Love will not alter the ſenſe it ſelf, but it commandeth the Uſe of all the ſenſes. It will not clear a dim decayed ſight; but it will command it what to look upon. As the ſtronger love of one diſh, or one ſport, or one company, will carry you from another which you love more faintly; ſo the Love of God, and Heaven, and Holineſs, will carry you from the captivity of all ſenſual things.

Dir. 6. §. 8. Direct. 6. It muſt be well conſidered how powerful and dangerous things ſenſible are, and how high and hard a work it is in this our depraved earthly ſtate to live by faith upon things unſeen, and to rule the ſenſe and be carryed above it: that ſo the ſoul may be awakened to a ſufficient fear and watchfulneſs, and may fly to Chriſt for aſſiſtance to his faith. It is no ſmall thing for a man in fleſh, to live above fleſh. The way of the ſouls reception and operation, is ſo much by the ſenſes here, that it's apt to grow too familiar with things ſenſible, and to be ſtrange to things which it never ſaw. It's a great work to make a man in fleſh, to deny the pleaſures which he ſeeth, and taſteth, and feeleth, for ſuch pleaſures as he only heareth of; and heareth of as never to be enjoyed till after death, in a world which ſenſe hath no acquaintance with. O what a glory it is to faith that it can perform ſuch a work as this! How hard is it to a weak believer! And the ſtrongeſt find it work enough. Conſider this that it may awake you, to ſet upon this work with that care, that the greatneſs of it requireth, and you may live by faith above a life of ſight and ſenſe: For it is this that your Happineſs or miſery lyeth on.

Dir. 7. §. 9. Direct. 7. Senſe muſt not only be kept out of the Throne, but from any participation in the Government, and we muſt take heed of receiving it into our counſels, or treating with it, or hearing it plead its cauſe, and we muſt ſee that it get nothing by ſtriving, importunity, or violence, but that it be governed deſpotically and abſolutely, as the Horſe is governed by the Rider. For if the Government once be halved between ſenſe and reaſon, your lives will be half beſtial: And when Reaſon ruleth not, Faith and Grace ruleth not: For faith is to reaſon, as ſight to the eye: There are no ſuch Beaſts in human ſhape, who lay by all the uſe of Reaſon, and are governed by ſenſe alone (unleſs it be idiots or madmen) But ſenſe ſhould have no part of the Government at all: And where it is chief in power, the Devil is there the unſeen Governour. You cannot here excuſe your ſelves by any plea of neceſſity or conſtraint. For though the ſenſe be violent as well as enticing, yet God hath made the Reaſon and Will the abſolute Governours under him; and by all its rebellion and violence, ſenſe cannot depoſe them, nor force them to one ſin, but doth all the miſchief by procuring their conſent. Which is done ſometime by affecting the fantaſie and paſſions too deeply with the pleaſure and alluring ſweetneſs of their objects, that ſo the higher faculties may be drawn into conſent; and ſometime by wearying out the reſiſting mind and will, and cauſing them to remit their oppoſition, and relax the reins, and by a ſinful privation of reſtraint, to permit the ſenſe to take its courſe: A head-ſtrong Horſe is not ſo eaſily ruled, as one of a tender mouth, that hath been well ridden: And therefore though it be in the power of the Rider to rule him, yet ſometime for his own eaſe he will looſe the reins; and a Horſe that is uſed thus by a ſlothful or unſkilful Rider, to have his will when ever he ſtriveth, will ſtrive when ever he is croſſed of his will; and ſo will be the Maſter. As ill-bred Children that are uſed to have every thing given 'em which they cry for, will be ſure to cry before they will be croſt of their deſire. So it is with our ſenſitive appetite; If you uſe to ſatisfie it when it is eager or importunate, you ſhall be maſtered by its eagerneſs and importunity: And if you uſe but to regard it over much, and delay your commands till ſenſe is heard and taken into counſel, it's two to one but it will prevail; or at leaſt will be very troubleſome to you, and prove a traytor in your boſome, and its temptations keep you in continual danger. Therefore be ſure that you never looſe the reins, but keep ſenſe under a conſtant government, if you love either your ſafety or your eaſe.

Dir. 8. §. 10. Direct. 8. You may know whether Senſe, or Faith and Reaſon be the chief in Government, by knowing which of their objects is made your chiefeſt End, and accounted your Beſt, and loved, and delighted in, and ſought accordingly: If the objects of ſenſe be thus taken for your Beſt and End, then certainly ſenſe is the chief in Government: But if the objects of faith and Reaſon, even God and life eternal be taken for your Beſt and End, then faith and reaſon are the ruling power. Though you ſhould uſe never ſo great underſtanding and policy for ſenſual things, (as Riches, and Honour, and worldly greatneſs, or fleſhly delights) this doth not prove that Reaſon is the ruling power; but proveth the more ſtrongly that ſenſe is the Conquerour, and that Reaſon is depraved and captivated by it, and truckleth under it, and ſerveth it as a voluntary ſlave: And the greater is your learning, wit and parts, and the nobler your education, the greater is the victory and Dominion of ſenſe, that can ſubdue, and rule, and ſerve it ſelf by parts ſo noble.

Dir. 9. §. 11. Direct. 9. Though ſenſe muſt be thus abſolutely ruled, its proper power muſt neither be diſabled, prohibited, nor denyed. You muſt keep your Horſe ſtrong and able for his works though not head ſtrong and unruly! And you muſt not keep him from the uſe of his ſtrength, though you grant him not the Government. Nor will you deny but that he may be ſtronger than the Rider, though the Rider have the ruling power: He hath more of the power called δυναμις, natural power, though the ἐξουσία be yours.

yours. So it is here, 1. No man muſt deſtroy his bodily ſenſe: The quickeſt ſenſe is the beſt ſervant to the ſoul, if it be not headſtrong and too impetuous. The Body muſt be ſtricken ſo far as to be kept under and brought into ſubjection, 1 Cor. 9. 27. but not be diſabled from its ſervice to the ſoul: 2. Nor muſt we forbid or forbear the exerciſe of the ſenſes, in ſubordination to the exerciſe of the inferior ſenſes, Heb. 4. 14. It is indeed a ſmaller loſs to part with a right hand or a right eye, than with our ſalvation: But that proveth not that we are put to ſuch ſtreights, as to be neceſſitated to either (unleſs perſecution put us to it): 3. Nor muſt we deny the certainty of the ſenſitive apprehenſion, when it keepeth its place; as the Papiſts do that affirm it neceſſary to ſalvation to believe that the ſight and taſte, and ſmell, and feeling of all men in the world, that take the Sacrament, are certainly deceived, in taking that to be Bread and Wine which is not ſo. For if all the ſenſes of all men though never ſo ſound and rational, be certainly deceived in this, we know not when they are not deceived, and there can be no certainty of faith or knowledge: For if you ſay that the Church telleth us that ſenſe is deceived in this, and only in this: I anſwer, if it be not firſt granted that ſenſe (as ſo ſtated) is certain in its apprehenſion, there is no certainty then that there is a Church, or a man, or a world, or what the Church ever ſaid, or any member of it: And if ſenſe be ſo fallible, the Church may be deceived, who by the means of ſenſe doth come to all her knowledge. To deny faith is the property of an infidel: To deny Reaſon is to deny Humanity, and is fitteſt for a mad man, or a Beaſt (if without reaſon, reaſon could be denyed): But to deny the certainty of ſenſe it ſelf, and of all the ſenſes of all ſound men, and that about the proper objects of ſenſe, this ſheweth that ambition can make a Religion, which ſhall bring man quite below the Beaſts, and make him a Muſhrome, that Rome may have ſubjects capable of her Government, and all this under pretence of honouring faith, and ſaving ſouls: Making God the deſtroyer of nature in order to its perfection, and the deceiver of nature in order to its edification.

Deny not ſenſe with the Papiſts.

Dir. 10. §. 12. Direct. 10. Senſe muſt not be made the Judge of matters that are above it, as the proper objects of faith and reaſon: Nor muſt we argue negatively from our ſenſes in ſuch caſes, which God in nature never brought into their Court. We cannot ſay, that there is no God, no Heaven, no Hell, no Angels, no ſouls of men, becauſe we ſee them not: We cannot ſay, I ſee not the Antipodes, nor other Kingdoms of the world; and therefore there is no ſuch place: So we ſay as well as the Papiſts, that ſenſe is no Judge whether the ſpiritual body of Chriſt be preſent in the Sacrament, no more than whether an Angel be here preſent: But ſenſe with reaſon is the Judge whether Bread and Wine be there preſent, or elſe humane underſtanding can judge of nothing. Chriſt would have had Thomas to have believed without ſeeing, and feeling, and bleſſeth thoſe that neither ſee him, nor feel, and yet believe; but he never bleſſeth men for believing contrary to the ſight, and feeling, and taſte and all that have ſound ſenſes and underſtandings in the world. Their inſtance of the Virgins conception of Chriſt, is nothing contrary to this: For it belongeth not to ſenſe to judge whether a Virgin may conceive: Nor will any wiſe mans Reaſon judge, that the Creator who in making the world of nothing was the only cauſe, cannot ſupply the place of a partial ſecond cauſe in Generation: They might more plauſibly argue with Ariſtotle againſt the Creation it ſelf, that ex nihilo nihil fit: But as it is paſt doubt, that the infallibility of ſenſe is nothing at all concerned in this, ſo it is ſufficiently proved by Chriſtians, that God can create without any pre-exiſtent matter. Reaſon can ſee much further than ſenſe by the help of ſenſe; and yet much further by the help of Divine Revelation by faith. To argue Negatively againſt the concluſions of Reaſon or Divine Revelation, from the meer negation of ſenſitive apprehenſion is to make a Beaſt of man. We muſt not be ſo irrational or impious, as to ſay, that there is nothing but what we have ſeen, or felt, or taſted, &c. If we will believe others who have ſeen them, that there are other parts of the world, we have full Reaſon to believe the ſealed teſtimony of God himſelf, that there are ſuch ſuperior worlds and powers as he hath told us: We have the uſe of ſenſe in hearing, or ſeeing Gods Revelation; and we have no more in receiving mans report of thoſe Countreys which we never ſaw.

§. 13. If they will make it the Queſtion, whether the ſenſe may not be deceived; I anſwer, we doubt not by diſtance of the objects, or diſtempers, or diſproportions of it ſelf or the Media, it may: But if the ſenſe it ſelf, and all the means and objects have their natural ſoundneſs, aptitude and diſpoſition, it is a contradiction to ſay it is deceived: for that is to ſay it is not the ſenſe which we ſuppoſe it is: If God deceive it thus, he maketh it another thing. It is no more the ſame nor will admit the ſame definition. But however, it is moſt evident, that the ſenſes being the firſt entrance or inlet of knowledge, the firſt certainty muſt be there, which is preſuppoſed to the certain judgment of the intellect: But if theſe err, all following certainty which ſuppoſeth the certainty of the ſenſes is deſtroyed: And this error in the firſt reception (like an error in the firſt concoxion) is not rectified by the ſecond. And if God ſhould thus leave all men under a fallibility of ſenſe, he ſhould leave no certainty in the world; and I deſire thoſe that know the definition of a lye to conſider whether this be not to feign God to lye in the very frame of nature, and by conſtant lyes to rule the world, when yet it is impoſſible for God to lye. And if this Blaſphemy were granted them, yet it would be mans duty ſtill to judge by ſuch ſenſes as he hath about the objects of ſenſe: For if God have made them fallible we cannot make them better: Nor can we create a Reaſon in our ſelves which ſhall not preſuppoſe the judgement of ſenſe, or which ſhall ſupply its ordinary natural defects. So that the Roman faith of Tranſubſtantiation, denying the reality of Bread and Wine, doth not only unman the world, but bring man lower than a Beaſt, and make ſenſe to be no ſenſe, and the world to be governed by natural deceit or lyes, and baniſh all certainty of faith and reaſon from the Earth: And after all, (with ſuch wonderful enmity to charity as maketh man liker the Devil, than elſe could eaſily be believed) they ſentence all to Hell that believe not this; and decree to burn them firſt on earth, and to depoſe Temporal Lords from their Dominions, that favour them, or that will not exterminate them from their Lands, and ſo abſolve their Subjects from their Allegiance, and give their Dominions to others. All this you may read in the third Canon of the Lateran General Council under Innocent 3.

§. 14. Direct. 11. Look not upon any object of ſenſe with ſenſe alone, nor ſtep not in it, but let reaſon begin where ſenſe doth end, and always ſee by faith or reaſon the part which is inviſible, as well as the ſenſible part by ſenſe. By that which is ſeen collect and riſe up to that which is unſeen. If God had given us an eye, or ear, or taſte, or feeling, and not a mind, then we ſhould have exerciſed no other faculty but what we had. But ſure he that hath given us the higer faculty requireth that we uſe it as well as the lower. And remember that they are not meer co-ordinate faculties, but the ſenſitive faculty is ſubordinate to the Intellectual: And accordingly that which the ſenſible creature objectively revealeth through the ſenſe unto Dir. 11.

the Intellect, is something to which things sensible are subordinate. Therefore if you stop in sensible things, and see not the Principle which animateth them, the Power which ordereth and ruleth them, and the End which they are made for, and must be used for, you play the Beasts; you see nothing but a dead carkass without the Soul, and nothing but a useless senseless thing. You know nothing indeed to any purpose: no not the creature it self; while you know not the use and meaning of the creature, but separate it from its Life, and Guide, and End.

Dir. 12. §. 15. Direct. 12. First therefore see that you ever look upon all things sensible as the products of the Will of the invisible God, depending on him more than the Sunshine doth upon the Sun; and never see or taste a Creature separatedly from God. Will you know what a plant is, ann know not that it is the earth that beareth and nourisheth it? Will you know what a Fish is, and yet be ignorant that he liveth in the Water? Will you know what a branch or fruit is, and yet not know that it groweth on the Tree? The nature of things cannot be known without the knowledge of their Causes, and respective parts: It is as no knowledge to know incoherent Scraps and Parcels: To know a hand as no part of the body, or an eye or nose without knowing a head; or a body without knowing its life or soul, is not to know it; for you make it another thing. It is the difference between a wise man and a fool, that Sapiens respicit ad plura, insipiens ad pauciora: A wise man looketh comprehensively to things as they are conjunct, and takes all together, and leaveth out nothing that is useful to his end; but a fool seeth one thing and overseeth another which is necessary to the true knowledge or use of that which he seeth: see God as the Cause and Life of every thing you see: As a carkass is but a ghastly sight without the soul, and quickly corrupteth and stinketh when it is separated; so the Creature without God is an unlovely sight, and quickly corrupteth and becomes a snare or annoyance to you: God is the beauty of all that's beautiful, and the strength of all that's strong, and the Glory of the Sun, and all that is glorious, and the wisdom of all that's wise, and the goodness of all that's good, as being the only original total cause of all. You play the Brutes, when you see the creature, and over-look its Maker, from whom it is, whatsoever it is. Will you see the Dial, and overlook the Sun. Remember it is the use of every Creature to shew you God, and therefore it is the use of every sense to promote the knowledge of him.

Dir. 13. §. 16. Direct. 13. See God as the Conductor, Orderer and Disposer of all the Creatures, according to their natures, as moved necessarily or freely: and behold not any of the motions or events of the World, without observing the interest, and over-ruling hand of God. Sense reacheth but to the effects and events; but Reason and faith can see the first cause and disposer of all. Again, I tell you, that if you look but on the particles of things by sense, and see not God that setteth all together, and doth his work by those that never dream of it, you see but the several wheels and parcels of a Clock, or Watch, and know not him that made and keepeth it, that setteth on the Poise, and winds it up, to fit his ends. Joseph could say, God sent me hither when his Brethren sold him into Ægypt; And David felt his Father's Rod in Shimei's curse.

Dir. 14. §. 17. Direct. 14. See God the end of every creature; how all things are ordered for his Service; and be sure you stop not in any creature, without Referring it to a higher end: Else as I have oft told you, you will be but like a Child or illiterate person, who openeth the Book, and admireth the workmanship of the Printer, and the order and well forming of the Letters, but never mindeth or understandeth the subject, sense or end. Or like one that looketh on a comely picture, and never mindeth either him that made it, or him that is represented by it. Or like one that gazeth on the sign at an inn-door, and praiseth the Workmanship, but knoweth not, that it is set there to direct him to entertainment and necessaries within. And this folly and sin is the greater, because it is the very end of God in all his works of Creation and Providence, to reveal himself by them to the intellectual world: And must God shew his Power, and Wisdom, and Goodness so wonderfully in the frame of the creation, and in his daily general and particular providence? and shall man that daily seeth all this, overlook the intended use and end? and so make all his glorious work as nothing, or as lost to him? Sense knoweth no End but its own Delight, and the natural felicity of the Sensitive creature, such as things sensibly afford: But Reason must take up the work where sense doth end its stage, and carry all home to him that is the End of all. For OF Him, and THROUGH Him, and TO Him are all things, to whom be Glory for ever. Amen. Rom. 11. 36.

Dir. 15. §. 18. Direct. 15. Besides the General Use and Ultimate end of every creature, labour for a clear acquaintance with the particular use and nearer End of every thing which you have to do with, by which it is serviceable to your Ultimate end: And suppose still you saw that special use as subserving your highest End, as the Title written upon each creature. As suppose upon your Bible it were written, The Word of the Living God to acquaint me with himself and his Will that I may please, and glorify, and enjoy him for ever. And upon your Godly friend suppose you saw this Title written, A Servant of God that beareth his Image, and appointed to accompany and assist me in his service unto life everlasting. Upon your meat suppose you saw this Title written, The Provisions of my Father sent me as from my Saviours hands not to gratify my sensuality, and serve my inordinate desires, but to refresh and strengthen my body for his Service in my Passage to everlasting life. So upon your Cloaths, your Servants, your Goods, your Cattle, your Houses and every thing you have, inscribe thus the proper use and end.

Dir. 16. §. 19. Direct. 16. Know both the final and the mediate danger, of every thing that you have to do with: and suppose you still see them written upon every thing you see. The final danger is Hell; The mediate danger in general is sin: But you must find what sin it is that this creature will be made a Temptation to by the Devil and the Flesh. As suppose you saw written upon money and riches, The bait of Covetousness and all evil to pierce me through with many sorrows and then to damn me: And suppose you saw written upon great Buildings, and estates, and honours, and attendance, The great price which the devil would give for souls, and the baits to tempt men, to the inordiate Love of fleshly pleasures, and to draw their hearts from God and Heaven to their damnation: Suppose you still saw written upon Beauty and tempting actions and attire, The Bait of lust, by which the Devil corrupteth the minds of men to their damnation: Suppose you saw written on the Play-house Door, The Stage of the Mountebank of Hell, who here cheateth men of their precious time, and enticeth them to vanity, luxury and damnation, under pretence of instructing them by a nearer and more pleasant way than Preachers do: The like I say of Gaming, Recreations, Company: See the particular snare in all.

Dir. 17. §. 20. Direct. 17. To this end be well acquainted with your own particular inclinations and distempers; that you may know what Creature is like to prove most dangerous to you, that there you may keep the strictest watch. If you be subject to pride, keep most from the baits of Pride, and watch most cautelously against them. If you be subject to Covetousness, watch most against the baits of Covetousness; If you are inclined to lust, away from the sight of alluring Objects. The knowledge of your Temper and Disease, must direct you both in your diet and your Physick.

Dir. 18. §. 21 Direct. 18. Live as in a constant course of obedience; and suppose you saw the Law of God also written upon every thing you see. As when you look on any tempting Beauty; suppose you saw this written on the forehead, [Thou shalt not lust: Whoremongers and Adulterers God will judge: They shall not enter into the Kingdom of God:] See upon the forbidden dish or cup the prohibition of God, [Thou shalt not eat, or drink this]: See upon money and riches this written, [Thou shalt not covet]: See upon the face of all the world, [Love not the World, nor the things that are in the world: If any Man love the world, the Love of the Father is not in him.] Thus see the Will of God on all things.

Rom. 7. 7. Mat. 5. 28. Ephes. 5. 5. Heb. 13. 4. 1 Joh. 2. 15.

Dir. 19. §. 22. Direct. 19. Make not the Objects of Sense over tempting and dangerous to your selves; but take special care as much as in you lieth, to order all so, that you may have as much of the Benefit, and as little of the Snare of the creature as is possible. Would you not be gluttonous pleasers of your appetite? Choose not then too full a Table, nor over-pleasant tempting drinks or dishes, and yet choose those that are most useful to your health. Would you not over-love the world, nor your present house, or lands, or station: Be not too instrumental your selves in guilding or dulcifying your bait! If you put in the sugar, the Devil and the flesh will put in the poyson. Will you make all as pleasant and lovely as you can, when you believe that the overloving them is the greatest danger to your salvation? Will you be the greatest tempters to your selves, and then desire God not to lead you into temptation.

Dir. 20. §. 23. Direct. 20. Let not the tempting object be too near your Sense: For nearness enrageth the sensitive appetite and giveth you an opportunity of sinning. Come not too near the fire if you would not be burnt (And yet use prudence in keeping the usefulness of it for warmth, though you avoid the burning:) Distance from the snares of pride, and lust, and Passion, and other sins, is a most approved remedy: and Nearness is their strength.

Dir. 21. §. 24. Direct. 21. Accustom your souls to frequent and familiar exercise about their invisible Objects, as well as your senses about theirs: And as you are daily and hourly in seeing, and tasting, and hearing the creature, so be not rarely in the humble adoration of him that appeareth to you in them. Otherwise use will make the creature so familiar to you, and disuse will make God so strange, that by degrees you will wear your selves out of his acquaintance, and become like carnal sensual men, and live all by sense, and forget the holy exercise of the life of Faith.

Dir. 22. § 25 Direct 22. Lose not your humble Sense of the badness of your hearts, how ready they are as tinder, to take the fire of every temptation: and never grow fool-hardy and confident of your selves. For your holy fear is necessary to your watchfulness, and your watchfulness is necessary to your escape and safety: Peters self confidence betrayed him to deny his Lord. Had Noah and Lot and David been more afraid of the sin, they had been like to have escaped it. It is a part of the Character of the beastly Hereticks that Jude declaimeth against, that they were spots in their Feasts of Charity, when they feasted with the Church, feeding themselves without fear, verse 12. When the knowledge or sense of your weakness and sinful inclination is gone, then fear is gone, and then safety is gone, and your fall is near.

PART II.

Particular Directions for the Government of the Eyes.

§. 1. Direct. 1. Know the Uses that your sight is given you for: As, 1. To see the Works of God, that thereby your Minds may see God himself. 2. To read the word of God, that therein you may perceive his mind. 3. To see the Servants of God whom you must Love; and the poor whom you must relieve or pity, and all the visible objects of your duty: To conduct your body in the discharge of its office about all the matters of the world: And in special often to look up towards Heaven, the place where your blessed Lord is Glorified, and whence he shall come to take you to his glory.

Dir. 1. Prov. 3. 21. Luk. 11. 34. Mat. 6. 22. Psal. 145. 15. Psal. 123. 2. 3. Prov. 23. 27.

§. 2. Direct. 2. Remember the sins which the eye is most in danger of, that you may be watchful and escape. 1. You must take heed of a Proud, and lofty, and scornful eye: which looketh on your selves with admiration, and delight, as the Peacock is said to do on his tail, and on others as below you with slighting and disdain. 2. You must take heed of a lustful wanton eye, which secretly carrieth out your heart to a befooling piece of dirty flesh, and stealeth from Beauty and Ornaments a spark to kindle that fire which prepareth for everlasting fire. 3. Take heed of a greedy covetous eye, which with Achan and Gehezi looketh on the bait to tempt you to unlawful love and desire, and to bring you by their sin unto their ruine. 4. Take heed of a Luxurious, Gluttonous and drunken eye; which is looking on the forbidden fruit, and on the tempting dish, and the delicious cup, till it have provoked the Appetite of that greedy Worm, which must be pleased, though at the rate of thy damnation. 5. Take heed of a gazing wandering Eye, which like a vagrant hath no home, nor work nor master, but gaddeth about to seek after death, and find out matter for temptation: Prov. 17. 24. Wisdom is before him that hath Understanding, but the eyes of a fool are in the Ends of the Earth. 6. Take heed of an envious eye, which looketh with dislike and discontent at the Prosperity of others, especially such as stand cross to your own interest: Matth. 20. 15. Is thine eye evil because I am good? It is the envious eye, that in Scripture most usually is called by the Name of an evil Eye, πονηρὸς ὀφθαλμὸς. It is an Eye that would see Evil rather than good upon another: as Deut. 15. 9. Lest thy Eye be Evil against thy poor Brother, &c. Prov. 23. 6. it is an eye that grudgeth another any thing that is ours. So Prov. 28. 22. Mar. 7. 22. 7. Take heed of a passionate cruel eye that kindleth the hurting or reviling fire in thy breast, or is kindled by it: that fetcheth matter of rage or malice from all that displeaseth thee in another. 8. Take heed of a self conceited and censorious eye, that looketh on all the actions of another with quarrelling, undervaluing, censure or reproach. 9. Take heed of a fond and fanciful eye, that falls in Love too much with Houses, or Friend, or Child, or Goods, or whatsoever pleaseth it. 10. Take heed of a sleepy sluggish eye, that is shut to good, and had rather sleep than watch, and read, and pray, and labour. 11. Abhor a malignant eye, which looketh with hatred on a godly man, and upon the holy assemblies and communion of Saints, and upon holy actions; and can scarce see a man of exemplary zeal and holiness, but the heart riseth against him, and could wish all such expelled or cut off from the earth. This is the heart that hath the Image of the Devil in most lively colours; he being the Father of such, as Christ calleth him, John 8. 44. 12. Abhor an Hypocritical eye, which is lifted up to Heaven, when the heart is on earth, on lusts, on honours, on sports or pleasure, or plotting mischief against the just.

Prov. 21. 10. See Dr. Hammond on Mat. 6. 22. Prov. 22. 9. Ezek. 10. 5. Isa. 13. 18. Prov. 28. 27. Matth. 7. 3. Luk. 6. 41. Prov. 6. 4. Psa. 35. 21. Psal. 10. 8. Psal. 36. 1. Matth. 6. 22, 23. Luk. 11. 34.

juſt. Know the evil and danger of theſe diſeaſes of the Eye.

Dir. 3. §. 3. Direct. 3. Remember that the Eye being the nobleſt, and yet the moſt dangerous Senſe, muſt have the ſtricteſt Watch. Sight is often put in Scripture for all the Senſes: And living by Sight is oppoſed to living or walking by Faith. 2 Cor. 5. 7. We walk by Faith, not by Sight. And a ſenſual Life is called a walking in the ways of our Heart and in the Sight of the Eyes, Eccleſ. 11. 9. An ungoverned Eye doth ſhew the Power of the ungoverned Senſes. Abundance of Good or Evil entreth in by theſe Doors: All lieth open if you guard not theſe.

Dir. 4. §. 4. Direct. 4. Remember that as your Sin or Duty, ſo your Sorrow or Joy do depend much on the Government of your Eyes: And their preſent Pleaſure is the common way to after Sorrow. What a Flood of Grief did David let into his Heart by one unlawful Look?

Dir. 5. §. 5. Direct. 5. Remember that your Eye is much of your Honour or Diſhonour, becauſe it is the Index of your Minds: You ſee that which is next the Mind it ſelf, or the moſt immediate Beam of the inviſible Soul, when you ſee the Eye. How eaſily doth a wandring Eye, a wanton Eye, a proud Eye, a luxurious Eye, a malicious Eye, a paſſionate Eye, bewray the Treaſure of Sin which is in the Hearts? Your Soul lieth opener to the View of others in your Eye, than in any other part: Your very Reputation therefore ſhould make you watch.

Prov. 23. 29.

Dir. 6. §. 6. Direct. 6. Remember that your Eye is of all the Senſes moſt ſubject to the Will, and therefore there is the more of Duty or Sin in it: For Voluntarineſs is the Requiſite to Morality, both good and evil. Your Will cannot ſo eaſily command your Feeling, Taſting, Hearing or Smelling, as it can your Sight; ſo eaſily can it open or ſhut the Eye in a moment, that you are the more unexcuſable if it be not govern'd: For all its Faults will be proved the more voluntary. Cham was curſed for not turning away his Eyes from his Father's ſhame, and Shem and Japhet bleſſed for doing it. The Righteous is thus deſcribed, Iſa. 33. 15. He that ſtoppeth his Ears from hearing of Blood, and ſhutteth his Eyes from ſeeing Evil; he ſhall dwell on high, &c. Mens Idols which they are commanded to caſt away, are called, The abomination of their eyes, Ezek. 20. 7. Covetouſneſs is called, The Luſt of the Eyes, 1 John 2. 16. It's ſaid of the Unclean, that they have Eyes full of Adultery, 2 Pet. 2. 14. And as Sin ſo Puniſhment is placed on the Eye: Iſa. 5. 15. The Eyes of the loſty ſhall be humbled: Yea the whole Bodies of the Daughters of Zion are threatned to be diſhonoured with Nakedneſs, Scabs, and Stink, and Shame, becauſe they walked with wanton Eyes, haughtily and mincing as they go, &c. Iſa. 3. 16.

Pſal. 6. 7. Lam. 3. 48, 49, 51.

Dir. 7. §. 7. Direct. 7. Therefore let believing Reaſon and a holy reſolved fixed Will, keep a continual Law upon your Eyes, and let them be uſed as under a conſtant Government: This Job calleth, the making a Covenant with them, Job 31. 1. Leave them not a Liberty; as if a Look had nothing in it of Duty or Sin; or as you might look on what you would. Will you go to fooliſh tempting Plays, and gaze on vain alluring Objects, and think there is no harm in all this? Do you think your Eye can't ſin as well as your Tongue? Undoubtedly it's much Sin that is both committed by it, and entreth at it: Keep away therefore from the Bait, or command your Eye to turn away.

Dir. 8. §. 8. Direct. 8. Remember ſtill how much more eaſie and ſafe it is to ſtop ſin here at the Gates and Outworks, than to beat it out again when it is once got in: If it have but tainted your very Fantaſie or Memory (as tempting Sights will almoſt unavoidably do) it hath there ſpawned the matter for a Swarm of vain and ſinful Thoughts: It is almoſt impoſſible to rule the Thoughts without ruling the Eye: And then the Paſſions are preſently tainted; and the Citadel of the Heart is taken before you are aware. You little know when a luſtful Look, or a covetous Look beginneth the Game, to how ſad a Period it tendeth. Many a horrid Adultery, and Murther, and Robbery, and Wickedneſs, hath begun but with a Look? A Look hath begun that, which hath brought many a thouſand to the Gallows, and many Millions to Hell.

Dir. 9. §. 9. Direct. 9. Keep both Eye and Mind employed in continual Duty, and let them not be idle, and have Leiſure to wander upon Vanity. Idleneſs and Neglect of ſpiritual and corporal Duty is the Beginner and the Nurſe of much Senſuality. Let your ſpiritual Work and your lawful bodily Labours take up your Time and Thoughts, and command and keep your Senſes in their Services.

Dir. 10. §. 10. Direct. 10. Beg daily of God the Preſerving Aſſiſtance of his Grace and Providence: Of his inward Grace to confirm you and aſſiſt you in your Reſolutions and Watch, and of his Providence and gracious Diſpoſals of you, and Objects to keep the Temptations from before your Eyes? And when others will run and go on purpoſe, to gaze on vain or tempting Shews, or to admire like Children the Vanities of the playful pompous World, do you go to God with David's Prayer, Pſal 119. 37. Turn away mine Eyes from beholding Vanity: and quicken me in thy way: And imitate him Ver. 148. Mine Eyes prevent the Night Watches, that I might meditate in thy Word. And make every Look a Paſſage to thy Mind, to carry it up to God, and pray, Pſal. 119. 18. Open thou mine Eyes that I may behold the wondrous things out of thy Law. Obſerve theſe, with the general Directions fore-named.

PART III.

Directions for the Government of the Ear.

Dir. 1. §. 1. Direct. 1. IMploy your Ears in the Duties which they were made for: And to that end underſtand thoſe Duties: Which are as followeth. 1. To be the Organ of Reception of ſuch Communications from others, as is neceſſary for our Converſe in the World, and the duties of our ſeveral Relations and Vocations. 2. To hear the Word of God delivered publickly by his appointed Teachers of the Church. 3. To hear the Counſel of thoſe that privately adviſe us for our Good: And the Reproofs of thoſe that tell us of our Sin and Danger. 4. To hear the Praiſes of God ſet forth by his Church in publick, and particular Servants in private. 5. To hear from our Anceſtors and the Learned in Hiſtory, what hath been done in the Times before us. 6. To hear the Complaints and Petitions of the Poor and Needy and Diſtreſſed, that we may compaſſionate them, and endeavour their Relief. 7. To be the paſſage for Grief and Hatred to our Hearts, by the ſinful Words which we hear unwillingly.

Gen. 49. 2. Exo. 19. 9. Deu. 1. 16 & 4. 10. & 5. 1, 25, 27. & 31. 13. Prov. 1. 8. & 19, 20. 27. & 22. 17. Eccleſ. 5. 1. & 7. 5. Jam. 1. 19. Iſa. 66. 4. & 65. 12. & 30. 9. Ezek. 12. 2 Mal. 2. 2. Act. 3. 23. Lev. 5. 1. Deut. 13. 12.

Dir. 2. §. 2. Direct. 2. Know which are the Sins of the Ear, that you may avoid them. And they are ſuch as follow. 1. A careleſs Ear, which heareth the Word of God, and the private Exhortations of his Servants, as if it heard them not. 2. A ſottiſh ſleepy Ear, that heareth the Word of God but as a confuſed Sound, and underſtandeth not, nor feeleth what is heard. 3. A ſcornful Ear, which deſpiſeth the Meſſage of God, and the Reproofs and Counſel of Men, and ſcorneth to be reproved or taught. 4. An obſtinate ſtubborn Ear, which regardeth not Advice or will not yield. 5. A prophane and impious Ear, which loveth to hear Oaths and Curſes, and prophane and blaſphemous Expreſſions. 6. A carnal Ear, which loveth to hear of fleſhly things, but ſavoureth not the Words which ſavour of Holineſs. 7. An airy hypocritical Ear, which loveth more the Muſick and Melody, than the Senſe and ſpiritual Elevation of the Soul to God; and regardeth more the Numbers and Compoſure and Tone, than the Matter of Preaching, Prayer, or other ſuch Duties; and ſerveth God with the Ear, when the Heart is far from him. 8 A curious Ear, which nauſeateth the moſt profitable Sermons, Prayers or Diſcourſes, if they be not accurately ordered and expreſſed, and ſlighteth or loſeth the offered Benefit, for a (modal) Imperfection in the Offer, or the Inſtrument! and caſteth away all the Gold, becauſe a Piece or two did catch a little Ruſt: And perhaps quarrelleth with the ſtyle of the ſacred Scriptures, as not exact or fine enough for its Expectations. 9. An itching Ear, which runs after Novelties, and a heap of Teachers, and liketh ſomething extraordinary better than things neceſſary. 10. A ſelfiſh Ear, which loveth to hear all that tends to the Confirmation of its own Conceits, and to be flattered or ſmoothed up by others, and can endure nothing that is croſs to its opinions. 11. A proud Ear, which loveth its own Applauſe, and is much pleaſed with its own Praiſes, and hateth all that ſpeak of him with mean undervaluing Words. 12. A peeviſh impatient Ear, which is nettled with almoſt all it heareth, and can endure none but ſilken Words, which are oiled and ſugared and fitted by Flattery, or the loweſt Submiſſion, to their froward Minds; and is ſo hard to be pleaſed, that none but Graduates in the Art of Pleaſing can perform it. 13. A bold preſumptuous Ear, which will hear falſe Teachers and Deceivers in a proud Conceit and Confidence of their own Abilities to diſcern what is true and what is falſe. 14. An ungodly Ear, that can eaſily hear the Reproach of Holineſs, and ſcorns at the Servants and Ways of Chriſt. 15. A neutral indifferent Ear, that heareth either Good or Evil, without much Love or Hatred, but with a dull and cold Indifferency. 16. A diſſembling temporizing Ear, which can complyingly hear one ſide ſpeak for Holineſs, and the other ſpeak againſt it, and ſuit it ſelf to the Company and Diſcourſe it meets with. 17. An uncharitable Ear, which can willingly hear the Cenſures, Backbitings, Slanders, Revilings, that are uſed againſt others, yea againſt the beſt. 18. An unnatural Ear, which can eaſily and willingly hear the Diſhonour of their Parents, or other near Relations, if any carnal Intereſt do but engage them againſt their Honour. 19. A rebellious diſobedient Ear, which hearkeneth not to the juſt Commands of Magiſtrates, Parents, Maſters, and other Governours, but hearkeneth with more Pleaſure to the Words of ſeditious Perſons that diſhonour them. 20. A filthy, unclean, adulterous Ear, which loveth to hear filthy ribbald Speeches, and Love-ſongs, and Romances, and laſcivious Plays, and the Talk of wanton Luſt and Dalliance. 21. A ſelf-provoking Ear, that hearkeneth after all that others ſay againſt them, which may kindle Hatred or Diſlike or Paſſion in them. 22. A buſie meddling Ear, which loveth to hear of other Mens Faults, or Matters which concern them not, and to hearken to Tatlers and Carry-tales and Make bates, and to have to do with evil Reports. 23. A timerous, cowardly, unbelieving Ear, which trembleth at every Threatning of Man, tho' in a Cauſe which is God's, and he hath promiſed to juſtifie. 24. An idle Ear, which can hearken to idle time-waſting Talk, and make the Sins of Twatlers your own. All theſe ways (and more) you are in danger of ſinning by the Ear, and becoming Partakers in the Sins of all whoſe ſinful Words you hear, and of turning into Sin the Words of God and his Servants, which are ſpoken for your Good.

Dir. 3. When hearing Evil is a Sin.

§. 3. Direct. 3. Know when the hearing of Evil, and not hearing Good is your Sin; that is, 1. When it is not out of any impoſed Neceſſity, but of your voluntary Choice: And when you might avoid it upon lawful Terms, without a greater Hurt, and will not. 2. When you hate not the Evil, which you are neceſſitated to hear, and love not the Good which through Neceſſity you cannot hear; but your Hearts comply with your Neceſſities. 3. When you ſhew not ſo much Diſowning and Diſlike of the Evil which you hear, as you might do, without an Inconvenience greater than the Benefit; but make it your own by ſinful Silence or Compliance. 4. When you are preſumptuous and fearleſs of your Danger.

Dir. 4. The Danger of Hearing.

§. 4. Direct. 4. Know wherein the Danger of ſuch ſinful Hearing lieth. As, 1. In diſpleaſing God, who loveth not to ſee his Children harken to thoſe that are abuſing him, nor to ſee them playing too boldly about Fire or Water, nor to touch any ſtinking or defiling thing, but calls to them, Come out from among them, and be ye ſeparate, ſaith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you. 2 Cor. 6. 16, 17, 18. 2. It is dangerous to your Fantaſie and Memory, which quickly receiveth hurtful Impreſſions by what you hear: If you ſhould hear provoking Words, even againſt your Wills, yet it's hard to eſcape the receiving of ſome hurtful Impreſſion by them: And if you hear laſcivious filthy Words againſt your wills (much more if willingly) it's two to one but they leave ſome Thoughts in your Minds which may gender unto further Sin. And it is dangerous to your Paſſions and Affections, leſt they catch Fire before you are aware. And it is dangerous to your Underſtandings, leſt they be perverted and ſeduced; and to your Wills, leſt they be turned after Evil, and turned away from Good; and, alas, how quickly is all this done? 3. It is dangerous to the Speaker, leſt your voluntary Hearing encourage him in his Sin, and hinder his Repentance. 4. And it is diſhonourable to God and Godlineſs.

Dir. 5. When you are called into ill Company.

§. 5. Direct. 5. Do your beſt to live in ſuch Company where you ſhall hear that which is goood and edifying, and to eſcape that Company whoſe Conference is hurtful and corrupt. Run not your ſelves into this Temptation: Be ſure you have a Call, and your Call muſt be diſcerned, 1. By your Office and Place, whether any Duty of your Office or Relation bind you to be there. 2. By your Ends; whether you be there as a Phyſician to do them good (as Chriſt went among Sinners) or to do the Work of your proper Calling; or whether you are there out of a carnal, manpleaſing or temporizing Humour? 3. By the meaſure of your Abilities to attain thoſe Ends. 4. By the meaſure of your Danger to receive the Infection. 5. By the Quality of your Company, and the Probability of Good or Evil in the Event.

Dir. 6.

§. 6. Direct. 6. When you are called into ill Company, go fortified with defenſive and offenſive Arms, as foreſeeing what Danger or Duty you are like to be caſt upon. Foreſee what Diſcourſe you are like to hear, and accordingly prepare your ſelves: Let your firſt Preparation be to preſerve your ſelves from the hurt, and your next Preparation to confute the Evil, and convince the ſinful Speaker, or at leaſt to preſerve the endangered Hearers, if you have Ability, and Opportunity. If you are to hear a ſeducing Heretical Teacher, there is one kind of Preparation to be made: If you are to hear a beaſtly filthy Talker, there is another kind of Preparation to be made. If you are to hear a cunning Phariſee, or malignant Enemy of Godlineſs reproach or cavil or wrangle againſt the Scriptures, or the ways of God, there is another kind of Preparation to be made: If you are to hear but the ſenceleſs Scorns or Railings and Bawlings of ignorant prophane and ſenſual Sots, there is another kind of Preparation to be made: To give you particular Directions for your Preparations againſt every ſuch Danger would make my Work too tedious. But remember how much lieth upon your own Preparations or Unpreparedneſs.

Dir. 7.

§. 7. Direct. 7. Be not ſinfully wanting in good Diſcourſe your ſelves, if you would not be enſnared by bad Diſcourſe from others. Your good Diſcourſe may prevent, or divert, or ſhame, or diſappoint their evil evil Diſcourſe. Turn the Stream another way: And do it wiſely, that you expoſe not your ſelves and your Cauſe to Scorn and Laughter: And do it with ſuch Zeal as the Cauſe requireth, that you be not born down by their greater Zeal in Evil. And where it is unfit for you to ſpeak, if it may be let your Countenance or Departure ſignifie your Diſlike and Sorrow.

Dir. 8. §. 8. Direct. 8. Specially labour to mortifie thoſe Sins, which the unavoidable Diſcourſe of your Company doth moſt tempt you to: That where the Devil doth moſt to hurt you, you may there do moſt in your own Defence. Doth the Talk which you hear tend moſt to Hereſie, Seduction, or to turn you from the Truth? Study the more to be eſtabliſhed in the Truth: Read more Books for it; and hear more that is ſaid by wiſe and godly Men againſt the Error which you are tempted to. Is it to Profaneneſs or Diſlike of a holy Life, that your Company tempt you? Addreſs your ſelves the more to God, and give up your ſelves to Holineſs, and let your Study and Practiſe be ſuch as tendeth to keep your Souls in Reliſh with Holineſs, and Hatred of Sin. Is it Pride that their applauding Diſcourſe doth tempt you to? Study the more the Doctrine of Humiliation. Is it Luſt that they provoke you to, or is it Drunkenneſs, Gluttony, ſinful Recreations or Exceſſes? Labour the more in the Work of Mortification, and keep the ſtricteſt Guard where they aſſault you.

Dir. 9. §. 9. Direct. 9. Be not unacquainted with the particular Weakneſſes and Dangers of your own Hearts, or any of your ſinful Inclinations: That when you know where the Wall is weakeſt you may there make the beſt Defence. That wanton Word will ſet a wanton Heart on fire, which a ſober Mind doth hear with pity as a Bedlam kind of Speech. A peeviſh paſſionate Heart is preſently diſturbed and kindled with thoſe Words which are ſcarce obſerved by a well-compoſed Soul.

Dir. 10. §. 10. Direct. 10. Hear every ſinful Word as dictated by the Devil; and ſuppoſe you ſaw him all the while at the Speaker's Elbow, putting each Word into his Mouth, and telling him what to ſay. For it is as verily the Devil that doth ſuggeſt them all, as if you ſaw him: Suppoſe you ſaw him behind the Railer, hiſſing him on as Boys do Dogs in Fighting, and bidding him, Call him thus or thus: Suppoſe you ſaw him at the Malignant's Ear, bidding him, Revile a holy Life, and ſpeak evil of the Ways and Servants of the Lord: Suppoſe you ſaw him behind the Wanton, bidding him uſe ſuch ribald Talk, or on the Stage ſuggeſting it to the Actors, or at the Ear of thoſe that would provoke you to Paſſion, to tell them what to ſay againſt you: This juſt Suppoſition would much preſerve you.

Dir. 11. §. 11. Direct. 11. Suppoſe you heard the End annexed to every Speech. As when you hear one tempting you to Luſt, ſuppoſe he ſaid, Come, let us take our Pleaſures a while, and be damned for ever: So alſo in every word that tempteth you to any other Sin; if the Tempter put in the Sin, do you put in God's Wrath and Hell, and ſeparate not that which God hath adjoined, but with the Serpent ſee the Sting.

Dir. 12. §. 12. Direct. 12. Obſerve when the Infection firſt ſeizeth on you, and preſently take an Antidote to expel it, if you love your Souls. The Signs of Infection are, 1. When your Zeal abateth, and you grow more indifferent what you hear. 2. Next you will feel ſome little Inclination to it. 3. Next you will a little venture upon an Imitation. 4. And Laſtly, you will come to a full Conſent, and ſo to Ruin. If you feel but a Remitting of your Diſlike and Hatred, or any Filth or Tincture left on your Thoughts and Fantaſie, go preſently and ſhake them off; Bewail it to God in true Repentance, and waſh your Souls in the Blood of Chriſt, and caſt up the Poiſon by holy Reſolutions, and ſweet out the Remnant by the fervent Exerciſes of Love and Holineſs

PART IV.

Directions for Governing the Taſte and Appetite.

Tit. 1. Directions againſt Gluttony.

Dir. 1. §. 1. THE moſt that is neceſſary to be ſaid to acquaint you with the Nature and Evil of this Sin, is ſaid before in Chap. 4. Part 7. againſt Fleſh-pleaſing: But ſomething more particularly muſt be ſaid, 1. To ſhew you what is, and what is not the Sin of Gluttony. 2. To ſhew you the Cauſes of it. 3. The Odiouſneſs of it; and 4. To acquaint you with the more particular Helps and Means againſt it.

§. 2. 1. Gluttony is a voluntary Exceſs in Eating, for the pleaſing of the Appetite, or ſome other carnal End. Here note, 1. The Matter, 2. The End or Effect of this Exceſs. 1. It is ſometimes an Exceſs in Quantity, when more is eaten than is meet. 2. Or elſe it may be an Exceſs in the delicious Quantity, when more Regard is had to the Delight and Sweetneſs than is meet. 3. Or it may be an Exceſs in the Frequency and ordinary Unſeaſonableneſs of eating: When Men eat too oft, and ſit at it too long. 4. It may be an Exceſs in the Coſtlineſs or Price, when Men feed themſelves at too high rates. 5. Or it may be an Exceſs of Curioſity in the dreſſing, and ſawcing, and ordering of all. 2. And it is uſually for ſome carnal End; whether it may be properly called Gluttony, if a Man ſhould think that at a Sacrifice of Thankſgiving he were bound to eat inordinately, and ſo made the Service of God his End, we need not enquire, (tho' I ſee not but it may have that Name.) For that's a Caſe that is more rare; and it is undoubtedly a Sin: And it is Gluttony, if it be done for the pleaſing of others that are importunate with you. But the common Gluttony is when it is done for the pleaſing of the Appetite, with ſuch a Pleaſure, as is no Help to Health or Duty, but uſually a Hurt to Body or Soul, the Body being hurt by the Exceſs, the Soul is hurt by the inordinate Pleaſure.

So the Iſraelties, Numb. 11. loathing Manna, becauſe they muſt have Change of Diet, was a Sin of Guloſity or Gluttony: Being more for Appetite than Health.

Even fruitful Land, ſaith Plutarch, enricheth not if it coſt too much the manuring. So here.

§. 3. Yea it is a kind of Gluttony and Exceſs, when Men will not faſt or abſtain when they are required, from that which at other times they may uſe with Abſtinence and without Blame. If a Man uſe not to eat exceſſively nor deliciouſly, yet if he will not abſtain from his temperate Diet, either at a publick Faſt, or when his Luſt requireth him to take down his Body, or when his Phyſician would diet him for his Health, and his Diſeaſe elſe would be encreaſed by what he eateth, this is an inordinate Eating and Exceſs, to that Perſon, at that time. Or if the Delight that the Appetite hath in one ſort of Meat, which is hurtful to the Body, prevail againſt Reaſon and Health ſo with the Perſon, that he will not forbear it, it is a Degree of Guloſity or Gluttony, though for Quantity and Quality it be in it ſelf but mean and ordinary.

§. 4. By this you may ſee, 1. That it is not the ſame Quantity which is an Exceſs in one, which is in another. A labouring Man may eat ſomewhat more than one that doth not labour, and a ſtrong and healthful Body more than the weak and ſick: It muſt be an Exceſs in Quantity, as to that particular Perſon at that time, which is, when to pleaſe his Appetite he eateth more than is profitable to his health or duty. 2. So alſo the Frequency muſt be conſidered with the Quality of the Perſon: For one Perſon may ration[illegible] a little and often for his Health, and another may luxuriouſly eat oftner than is profitable to Health: Eccleſ. 10. 16, 17. Wo to thee, O Land, when thy King is a Child, and thy Princes eat in the Morning. Bleſſed art thou, O Land, when thy

King

King is the Son of Nobles, and thy Princes eat in due Season, for Strength and not for Drunkenness. 3. And in point of Costliness, the same measure is not to be set to a Prince and to a Plow-man; that is, luxurious Excess in one, which may be Temperance and Frugality in another: But yet, unprofitable Cost, which, all things considered, would do more good another way, is Excess in whomsoever. 4. And in Curiosity of Diet, a difference must be allowed: The happier healthful Man need not be so curious as the Sick: And the happy Plow-man need not be so curious, as State and Expectation somewhat require the Noble and the Rich to be. 5. And for length of time, though unnecessary sitting out time at Meat, be a Sin in any, yet the happy poor Man is not obliged to spend all out so much this way, as the Rich may do. 6. And it is not all Delight in Meat, or pleasing the Appetite that is a Sin: But only that which is made Mens End, and not referred to a higher End; even when the Delight it self doth not tend to health nor Alacrity in duty, nor is used to that End, but to please the Flesh and tempt unto Excess. 7. And it is not necessary that we measure the Profitableness of Quantity or Quality by the present and immediate Benefits; but by the more remote sometimes; so merciful is God, that he alloweth us that which is truly for our Good, and forbiddeth us but that which doth us hurt, or at least no good. 8. All Sin in eating is not Gluttony, but only such as are here described.

As Isaac's pleasant Meat, Gen. 27. 7.

§. 5. 11. The Causes of Gluttony are these: 1. The chiefest is an innordinate Appetite, together with a fleshly Mind and Will, which is set upon Flesh-pleasing as its Felicity: They that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh, Rom. 8. 6, 7. This Gulosity which Clemens Alexandrinus calleth The Throat-Devil, and the Belly-Devil is the first Cause.

Non potest temperantiam laudare is, qui summum bonum ponit in voluptate. Est enim temperantia libidinum inimica. Cicero. Saith Aristotle, He is temperate that takes Pleasure to deny fleshly Pleasure, but he is intemperate that is troubled because he cannot have them. Ethic. l. 2. c. 3.

§. 6. 2. The next Cause is, The want of strong Reason, Faith and a spiritual appetite and mind, which should call off the Glutton, and take him up with higher Pleasures, even such as are more manly, and in which his real Happiness doth consist. They that are after the Spirit do mind the things of the Spirit, Rom. 8. 6. Reason alone may do something to call up a Man from this Felicity of a Beast, (as appeareth by the Philosophers Assaults upon the Epicures:) But Faith and Love which feast the Soul with sweeter Delicates, must do the Cure.

§. 7. 3. Gluttony is much increased by Use: when the Appetite is used to be satisfied, it will be the more importunate and impetuous: Whereas a Custom of Temperance maketh it easie, and makes Excess a matter of no delight but burden. I remember my self, that when I first set upon the Use of Cornario's and Lessius diet (as it is called) (which I did for a time for some special Reasons) it seem'd a little hard for two or three Days; but within a Week it became a Pleasure, and another sort or more was not desirable. And I think almost all that use one Dish only, and a small Quantity, do find that more is a Trouble, and not a Temptation to them: So great a matter is Use (unless it be with very strong and labouring Persons.)

§. 8. 4. Idleness and want of Diligence in a Calling is a great Cause of Luxury and Gluttony: Though Labour cause a healthful Appetite, yet it cureth a beastly sensual Mind: An idle Person hath leisure to think of his Guts what to eat, and what to drink, and to be longing after this and that: Whereas a Man that is wholly taken up in lawful Business, especially such as findeth Employment for the Mind, as well as for the Body, hath no Leisure for such thoughts: He that is close at his Studies, or other calling hath somewhat else to think on than his appetite.

§. 9. 5. Another Incentive of Gluttony is the Pride of rich Men, who to be accounted good House-keepers, and to live at such rates as are agreeable to their Grandeur, do make their Houses, Shops of Sin, and as bad as Ale-houses; making their Tables a Snare both to themselves and others, by Fulness, Variety, Deliciousness, Costliness and Curiosity of Fare: It is the Honour of their Houses that a Man may drink excessively in their Cellars when he please; and that their Tables have excellent Provisions for Gluttony, and put all that sit at them upon the Trial of their Temperance, whether a Bait so near them, and so studiously fitted, can tempt them to break the Bounds and Measure which God hath set them. It is a lamentable thing when such as have the Rule of others, and Influence on the common People, shall think their Honour lieth upon their Sin; yea upon such a constant Course of Sinning? And shall think it a Dishonour to them to live in sweet and wholsome Temperance, and to see that those about them do the like? And all this is either because they overvalue the Esteem and Talk of fleshly Epicures, and cannot bear the Censure of a Swine, or else because they are themselves of the same Mind, and are such as Glory in their Shame, Phil. 3. 18, 19.

Socrates dixit, eos qui præcocia magno emerentis, desperare se ad maturitatis tempus perventuros Laert. in Socrat. Cum vocasset ad cœnam divites, & Zantippen modicl pudaret apparatus; Bono inquit, esto animo: Nam siquidem modesti erunt frugique, nemjam non aspernabuntur; sin autem intemperantes, nulla nobis de hisce cura fuerit. Idem. ibid. Aiebat alios vivere ut ederent, se autem edere ut vivat. Ibid.

§. 10. 6. Another Incentive is the Custom of urging and importuning others to eat still more and more, as if it were a necessary Act of Friendship. People are grown so uncharitable and selfish, that they suspect one another, and think they are not welcome, if they be not urged thus to eat: And those that invite them think they must do it to avoid the Suspicion of such a sordid Mind: And I deny not but it is fit to urge any to that which is fit for them to do: And if we see that Modesty maketh them eat less than is best for them, we may perswade them to eat more. But now without any due respect to what is best for them, Men think it a necessary Complement to provoke others more and more to eat, till they peremptorily refuse it: But amongst the familiarest Friends there is scarce any that will admonish one another against Excess, and advise them to stop when they have enough; and tell them how easily it is to stop beyond their Bounds, and how much more prone we are to exceed, than to come short; and so Custom and Complement is preferred before Temperance and honest Fidelity. You'll say, what will Men think of us, if we should not perswade them to eat, much more if we should desire them to eat no more? I answer, 1. Regard your Duty more than what Men think of you: Prefer Virtue before the Thoughts or Breath of Men. 2. But yet if you do it wisely, the Wise and Good will think much the better of you. You may easily let them see that you do it not in sordid sparing, but in Love of Temperance and of them; if you speak but when there is need either for eating more or less; and if your Discourse be first in general for Temperance, and apply it not till you see that they need help in the Application. 3. It is undeniable that healthful Persons are much more prone to Excess, than to the defect in Eating, and that Nature is very much bent to Luxury and Gluttony, I think as much as to any one Sin; and it's as sure that it is a beastly breeding odious Sin: And if this be so, is it not clear that we should do a great deal more to help one another against such Luxury than to provoke them to it? Had we not a greater Regard to Mens Favour, and Fancies, and Reports, than to God and the Good of their Souls, the Case were soon decided.

§. 11. 7. Another Cause of Gluttony is, that rich Men are not acquainted with the true Use of Riches, nor think of the Account which they must make to

God

Hic eſt mos nobilium ante alios: Artes quæ liberales fuerunt, mechanicæ evaſere: ipſique qui bellorum duces, philoſophi, rectores urbium, ac patres patriæ eſſe ſolent, venatores, atq; aucupes fuêre, intelligas nullam eſſe reliquam ſpem ſalutis, Nobilitati tribuitur quod eſt Gulæ, aut proculdubio vanitatis: Petrarch.

God of all they have: They think that their Riches are their own, and that they may uſe them as they pleaſe; or that they are given them as plentiful proviſions for their fleſh, and they may uſe them for themſelves to ſatisfy their own deſires, aslong as they drop ſome crumbs or ſcraps, or ſmall matters to the poor: They think they may be ſaved juſt in the ſame way that the Rich man in Luk. 16. was damned; and he that would have warned his five Brethren that they come not to that place of torment, is yet himſelf no warning to his followers: They are cloathed in purple and fine linnen or ſilk, and fare ſumptuouſly or deliciouſly every day; and have their good things in this life, and perhaps think they merit by giving the ſcraps to Lazarus (which it's like that Rich man alſo did.) But God will one day make them know, that the Richeſt were but his Stewards, and ſhould have made a better diſtribution of his proviſions, and a better improvement of his Talents; and that they had nothing of all their riches given them for any hurtful, or unprofitable pleaſing of their Appetites, nor had no more allowance for Luxury than the poor. If they knew the Right uſe of Riches, it would reform them.

§. 12. 8. Another cauſe of Gluttony is their unacquaintedneſs with thoſe Rational and Spiritual Exercciſes in which the delightful fruits of Abſtinence do moſt appear. A man that is but a painful ſerious Student, in any noble ſtudy whatſoever, doth find a great deal of Serenity and Aptitude come by Temperance, and a great deal of cloudy miſtineſs on his mind, and dulneſs on his invention come by fulneſs and exceſs: And a man that is uſed to holy contemplations, meditation, reading, prayer, ſelf-examination or any ſpiritual converſe above, or with his heart, doth eaſily find a very great difference; how abſtinence helpeth, and Luxury and fulneſs hinder him. Now theſe Epicures have no acquaintance with any ſuch Holy or Manly works; nor any mind of them, and are therefore unacquainted with the ſweetneſs and benefit of abſtinence; and having no taſte or trial of its benefits, they cannot value it. They have nothing to do when they riſe from eating but a little talk about their worldly buſineſs, or complement and talk with company which expect them, or go to their ſports to empty their paunches for another meal, and quicken their appetites leſt Luxury ſhould decay: as the Iſraelites worſhipped the Golden Calf, (and as the Heathens their God Bacchus) Exod. 32. 5. They ſate down to eat and drink, and roſe up to play: Their diet is fitted to their work! Their idle or worldly lives agree with gluttony: But were they accuſtomed to better work, they would find a neceſſity of a better diet.

1 Cor. 10. 7.

Of this ſee more in my Book of ſelf-denial.

§. 13. 9. Another great cauſe of Gluttony is mens beaſtly ignorance of what is hurtful or helpful to their very health: they make their appetites their rule for the quantity and quality of their food. And they think that nature teacheth them ſo to do, becauſe it giveth them ſuch an appetite, and becauſe it is the meaſure to a beaſt. And to prove themſelves Beaſts, they therefore take it for their meaſure: As if their natures were not Rational but only ſenſitive; or nature had not given them Reaſon to be the ſuperiour and Governour of ſenſe? As if they knew not that God giveth the Bruits an appetite more bounded becauſe they have not Reaſon to bound it; and giveth them not the temptation of your delicate varieties; or giveth them a concoction anſwerable to their appetites; and yet giveth man to be the Rational Governour of thoſe of them that are for his ſpecial ſervice and apt to exceed: And if his Swine, his Horſes, and his Cattle were all left to their Appetites, they would live but a little while. If promiſcuous generating be not lawful in mankind, which is lawful in bruits, why ſhould they not confeſs the ſame of the Appetite. Men have ſo much love of life and fear of death, that if they did but know how much their Gluttony doth haſten their death it would do more to reſtrain it with the moſt, than the fear of death eternal doth. But they judge of their digeſtion by their preſent feeling: If they feel not their ſtomachs ſick, or diſpoſed to vomit, or if no preſent pain correct them, they think they have eaten no more than doth them good. But of this more anon in the Directions.

See Plutarchs Precepts of health.

§. 14. 10 Another great cauſe of Gluttony is that it is grown the commoneſt cuſtom, and being not known is in no diſgrace, unleſs men eat till they ſpew, or to ſome extraordinary meaſure. And ſo the meaſure which every man ſeeth another uſe, he thinketh is moderation and is fit for him: whereas the ignorance of Phyſick, and matters of their own health, hath made Gluttony almoſt as common as eating, with thoſe that are not reſtrained by want or ſickneſs: And ſo every man is an example of evil to another, and encourageth one another in the ſin: If Gluttony were but in as much diſgrace as whoredom, yea or as drunkenneſs is, and as eaſily known, and as commonly taken notice of, it would contribute much to a common reformation.

III. The Greatneſs of the ſin of Gluttony.

Rom 16. 17, 18 They ſerve not the Lord Jeſus but their own Bellies.

§. 15. To know the Greatneſs of the ſin, is the chief part of the cure, with thoſe that do but believe that there is a God: I ſhall therefore next tell you of its nature, effects and accidents which make it great, and therefore ſhould make it odious to all.

§. 16. 1. Luxury and Gluttony is a ſin exceeding contrary to the Love of God: It is Idolatry: It hath the heart which God ſhould have: And therefore Gluttons are commonly and well called Belly-Gods, and God-bellies, becauſe that Love, that care, that delight, that ſervice, and diligence which God ſhould have, is given by the Glutton to his Belly and his Throat. He Loveth the pleaſing of his Appetite better than the pleaſing of God: His Diſhes are more delightful to him than any holy Exerciſe is: His thoughts are more frequent and more ſweet of his belly than of God or Godlineſs: His care and labour is more that he may be pleaſed in meats and drinks, than that he may ſecure his ſalvation, and be juſtified and ſanctified. And indeed the Scripture giveth them this name, Phil. 3. 19. whoſe end is deſtruction, whoſe God is their Belly, who glory in their ſhame, who mind earthly things, being enemies to the Croſs of Chriſt, that is, to bearing the Croſs for Chriſt, and to the Crucifying of the fleſh, and to the mortifying, ſuffering parts of Religion. Nay ſuch a devouring Idol is the Belly that it ſwalloweth up more by Intemperance and exceſs than all otherldols in the world do. And remember that the very life of the ſin is in the Appetite and Heart: when a mans heart is ſet upon his Belly, tho' he fare never ſo hardly thro' neceſſity, he is a Glutton in Heart: When you make a great matter of it, what you ſhall eat and drink as to the delight, and when you take it for a great loſs or ſuffering if you fare hardly, and are troubled at it, and your thoughts and talk are of your belly, and you have not that Indifferency whether your fare be courſe or pleaſant (ſo it be wholſome) as ill Temperate perſons have, this is the Heart of Gluttony, and is the Hearts forſaking of God, and making the Appetite its God.

§. 17. 2. Gluttony is ſelf-murder: Though it kill not ſuddenly, it killeth ſurely: Like the dropſie which killeth as it filleth, by degrees. Very many of the wiſeſt Phyſicians do believe that of thoſe that over live their Child-hood, there is ſcarce one of twenty, yea or of a hundred that dieth, but Gluttony or

or exceſs in eating or drinking is a principle cauſe of their death, tho' not the moſt immediate cauſe. It is thought to kill a hundred to one of all that dye at Age. And it will not let them dye eaſily and quickly, but tormenteth them firſt, with manifold diſeaſes while they live; You eat more than nature can perfectly concoct, and becauſe you feel it not trouble you or make you ſick, you think it hurts you not: Whereas it doth by degrees firſt alter and vitiate the temperament of the blood and humours making it a crude unconcocted unnatural thing, unfit for the due nutrition of the parts; turning the nouriſhing maſs into a burdenſome excrementitious mixture, bounding with Saline or tartareous matter, and conſiſting more of a pituitous ſlime, or redundant ſerofity, than of that ſweet nutrimental milk of nature quickened with thoſe ſpirits and well proportioned heat, which ſhould make it fit to be the Oyle of life. And our Candle either ſparkleth away with Salt, or runs away becauſe there is ſome Thief in it, or goeth out becauſe the Oyle is turned into Water; or preſently waſteth and runs about thro' the inconſiſtent ſoftneſs of its Oyle: Hence it is that one part is tainted with corruption; and another conſumeth as deſtitute of fit nutriment; and the veſſels ſecretly obſtructed by the groſneſs or other unfitneſs of the blood to run its circle and perform its offices, are the cauſe of a multitude of lamentable diſeaſes. The frigid diſtempers of the Brain, the ſoporous and comatous effects, the Lethargy, Carus and Apoplexy, the Palſie, Convulſion, Epilepſie, Vertigo, Catarrhs, the Head-ache, and oft the Phrenſie and Madneſs, come all from theſe effects of gluttony and exceſs, which are made upon the blood and humours. The Aſthma uſually, and the Phthiſis or Conſumption, and the Pleuriſie and Peripneumony, and the Hemoptoick paſſion often come from hence: Yea the very Syncopes or Swooning, Palpitations of the heart, and Faintings, which men think rather come from weakneſs, do uſually come either from oppreſſion of nature by theſe ſecret excrements or Putrilaginous Blood, or elſe from a weakneſs contracted by the inaptitude of the blood to nouriſh us, being vitiated by exceſs: The loathing of meat and want of appetite is ordinarily from the crudities or diſtempers cauſed by this exceſs. Yea the very Canine appetite which would ſtill have more, is cauſed by a vitiouſneſs in the humours thus contracted: The Pains of the Stomach, Vomitings, the Cholera, Hiccoughs, Inflammations, Thirſts, are uſually from this cauſe: The Wind Cholick, the Iliack Paſſion, Looſneſs and Fluxes, the Teneſmus and Ulcers, the Worms and other troubles in thoſe parts, are uſually from hence: The obſtructions of the Liver, the Jaundice, Inflamations, Abſceſſus and Ulcers, Schirrhus, and Dropſie, are commonly from hence. Hence alſo uſually are Inflammations, Pains, Obſtructions and Schirrhus of the Spleen: Hence commonly is the Stone, Nephritick torments, and Sroppages of Urine and Ulcers of the Reins and Bladder: Hence commonly is the Scorbute and moſt of the Feavours which are found in the World, and bring ſuch multitudes to the grave: Even thoſe that immediately are cauſed by Colds, diſtempers of the Air or Infections, are oft cauſed principally by long exceſs which vitiateth the humours, and prepareth them for the diſeaſe: Hence alſo are Gouts and Hyſterical affects, and diſeaſes of the eyes and other exterior parts. So that we may well ſay that Gluttony enricheth Landlords, filleth the Church-yards, and haſteneth multitudes untimely to their ends. Perhaps you'll ſay that the moſt temperate have diſeaſes: To which experience teacheth me to anſwer that uſually Children are permitted to be Voracious and Gluttonous, either in quantity or in quality, eating raw Fruits and things unwholeſome, and ſo when Gluttony hath bred the diſeaſe, or laid in the matter, then all the temperance that can be us'd is little enough to keep it under all their life after: and abundance that have been brought to the doors of death by exceſs, have been preſerved after many years to a competent age by abſtinence, and many totally freed from their diſeaſes. Read Cornario's Treatiſe of himſelf, and Leſſius and Sir William Vaughan, &c. (Though yet I perſwade none without neceſſity to their exceeding ſtrictneſs.) Judge now what a murderer Gluttony is, and what an enemy to mankind.

It is a common ſaying that Gula plures occidit quam gladius. Quicquid avium volitat, quicquid piſcium natat, quicquid ferarum diſcurrit, noſtris ſepelitur ventribus. Quæ nunc cur ſubitomoriamur? Quia mortibus vivimus. Senec. Hierom. ſaith that he had read of ſome that had been ſick of the Arthritis and Podagra, that were cured by being brought to poverty by confiſcation of their eſtates, and ſo brought to a poor dyet.

Chryſoſtome ſaith the difference betwixt famine and exceſs is, that famine kills men ſooner out of their pain, and exceſs doth putrifie and conſume them by long and painful ſickneſſes, in Hebr. Hom. 29.

§. 18. 3. Gluttony is alſo a deadly enemy to the mind, and to all the noble employments of Reaſon both Religious, Civil, and artificial: It unfits men for any cloſe and ſerious ſtudies, and therefore tends to nouriſh ignorance, and keep men fools: It greatly unfits men for hearing Gods Word, or reading, or praying, or meditating, or any holy work; and makes them have more mind to ſleep; or ſo undiſpoſeth and dulleth 'em, that they have no life or fitneſs for their duty; but a clear head not troubled with their drowſie vapours will do more, and get more in an hour, than a full bellied Beaſt will do in many. So that Gluttony is as much an enemy to all Religious and manly ſtudies, as drunkenneſs is an enemy to a Garriſon, where the drunken Souldiers are diſabled to reſiſt the Enemy.

As ſmoak driveth away the Bees from their Hive, ſaith Baſil de Junin. So gluttony expelleth all ſpiritual gifts, and excellent endowments of mind.

§. 19. 4. Gluttony is alſo an enemy to dilgence in every honeſt Trade and Calling: For it dulleth the Body as well as the Mind: It maketh men heavy and drowſie, and ſlothful and go about their buſineſs as if they carried a Coat of Lead; and were in Fetters: They have no vivacity and alacrity and are fit ter to ſleep or play, than work.

Saith Baſil, A Ship heavy laden is unfit to ſail: So a full belly to any duty.

§. 20. 5. Gluttony is the immediate ſymptom of a carnal mind, and of the damnable ſin of fleſh-pleaſing before deſcribed: And a carnal mind is the very ſum of iniquity, and the proper name of an unregenerate ſtate: It is enmity againſt God, and neither is nor can be ſubject to his Law: So that they that are thus in the fleſh cannot pleaſe God, and they that walk after the fleſh ſhall dye, Rom. 8. 6, 7, 8, 13. The filthieſt ſins of Leachers, and Miſers, and Thieves, are but to pleaſe the fleſh: And who ſerveth it more than the Glutton doth?

§. 21. 6. Gluttony is the breeder and feeder of all other luſts: Sine Cicere & Baccho friget venus: It pampereth the fleſh to feed it, and make it a ſacrifice for luſt. As dunging the ground doth make it fruitful, eſpecially of Weeds: So doth Gluttony fill the mind with the Weeds and Vermine of filthy thoughts, and filthy deſires and words, and deeds.

Semper ſaturitati juncta eſt laſcivia, Hieron.

§. 22. 7. Gluttony is a baſe and beaſtly kind of ſin: For a man to place his happineſs in the pleaſure of a Swine; and to make his Reaſon ſerve his throat, or ſink into his Guts: As if he were but a Hogſhead to be filled and emptyed: or a Sink for Liquor to run thro' into the chanel; or as if he were made only to carry meat from the Table to the Dung-hil, how baſe a kind of life is this? yea, many beaſts will not eat and drink exceſſively as the Gluttonous Epicure will do.

Ventri obedientes animalium numero computantur non hominum: Senec.

§. 23. 8. Gluttony is a Prodigal conſumer and devourer of the Creatures of God: What is he worthy of that would take meat and drink and caſt it away into the chanel? nay, that would be at a great deal of coſt and curioſity to get the pleaſanteſt meat he could procure, to caſt away? The Glutton doth worſe: It were better of the two to throw all his exceſſes into the Sink or Ditch, for then they would not firſt hurt his body. And are the Creatures of God of no more worth? Are they given you to do worſe than caſt them away? Would you have your Children uſe their proviſions thus?

It is Chryſoſtoms ſaying in Hebr. Hom. 29.

§. 24. 9. Gluttony is a moſt unthankful ſin, that takes Gods mercies and ſpews them as it were in his face; and carryeth his proviſions over to his enemy, even to the ſtrengthening of fleſhly luſts: And turneth them all againſt himſelf? You could not have a bit but from his liberality and bleſſing

Jer. 5. 7.

and will you use it to provoke him and dishonour him?

§. 25. 10. Gluttony is a sin which turneth your own mercies, and wealth, and food, into your snare, and to your deadly ruine: Thou pleasest thy throat and poysonest thy soul. It were better for thee a thousand times that thou hadst lived on scraps, and in the poorest manner, than thus to have turned thy plenty to thy damnable sin, Deut. 6. 11, 12. When thou shalt have eaten and be full, then beware lest thou forget the Lord. Prov. 30. 9. Feed me with food convenient for me, lest I be full and deny thee, and say, Who is the Lord? Psal. 75. 29, 30. So they did eat and were filled, for he gave them their own desire; they were not estranged from their lust.

Magna pars libertatis est bene moratus venter. Senec.

§. 26. 11. Gluttony is a great Time-wasting sin: What a deal of time is spent in getting the money that is laid out to please the throat? and then by servants in preparing for it; and then in long sitting at meat and feastings; and not a little in taking Physick to carry it away again, or to ease or cure the diseases which it causeth; besides all the time which is lost in languishing sickness, or cut off by untimely death. Thus they live to eat, and eat to frustrate, and to shorten life.

When a friend of Socrates complained to him, What a dear place is this? Wine will cost so much, and Honey so much, and Purple so much: Socrates took him to the Meal-Hall, Lo, saith he, you may buy here half a Sextare of good Meal for a half penny (which boyled in water was his meat) God be thanked the Market is very cheap: Then he took him to an Oyl-shop, where a measure (Chœnix) was sold for two brass dodkins. Then he led him to a Brokers shop where a man might buy a Suit of Clothes for ten drams: You see, quoth he, that the penny worths are reasonable, and things good cheap throughout the City. Plutarch. de Tranquil. Anim. pag. 153.

§. 27. 12. It is a Thief that robbeth you of your estates, and devoureth that which is given you for better uses, and for which you must give account to God. It is a costly sin and consumeth more than would serve to many better purposes. How great a part of the riches of most Kingdoms are spent in Luxury and Excess?

§. 28. 13. It is a sin that is a great enemy to the common good: Princes and Common-wealths have reason to hate it, and restrain it as the enemy of their safety. Men have not money to defray the publick charges, necessary to the safety of the Land, because they consume it on their Guts: Armies and Navies must be unpaid, and Fortifications neglected, and all that tendeth to the glory of a people must be opposed as against their personal interest, because all is too little for the throat. No great works can be done to the honour of the Nation, or the publick good: No Schools or Alms-houses built or endowed, no Colledges erected, no Hospitals, nor any excellent work, because the Guts devour it all. If it were known how much of the Treasure of the Land is thrown down the Sink by Epicures of all degrees, this sin would be frowned into more disgrace.

§. 29. 14. Gluttony and Excess is a sin greatly aggravated by the Necessities of the poor. What an incongruity is it, that one member of Christ (as he would be thought) should be feeding himself deliciously every day, and abounding with abused superfluities, whilst another is starving and pining in a Cottage, or begging at the door? and that some families should do worse than cast their delicates and abundance to the Dogs, whilest thousands at that time are ready to famish, and are fain to feed on such unwholsome food, as killeth them as soon as Luxury kills the Epicure! Do these men believe that they shall be judged according to their feeding of the poor? Or do they take themselves to be members of the same body with those whose sufferings they so little feel? 1 Cor. 12. 26. It may be you'll say, I do relieve many of the poor. But are there not more yet to be relieved? As long as there are any in distress, it is the greater sin for you to be luxurious. Deut. 15. 7. If there be among you a poor man of one of thy brethren in the land——thou shalt not harden thy heart, nor shut thy hand against thy poor brother, but thou shalt open thy hand wide unto him, &c. Nay, how often are the poor oppressed to satisfie luxurious appetites. Abundance must have hard bargains and hard usage, and toil like Horses, and scarce be able to get bread for their families, that they may bring in all to belly-god Landlords, who consume the fruit of other mens labours upon their devouring flesh.

Matth 25

§. 30. 15. And it is the heinouser sin because of the common calamities of the Church and Servants of Christ throughout the world: One part of the Church is oppressed by the Turk, and another by the Pope, and many Countries wasted by the cruelties of Armies, and persecuted by proud impious enemies; and is it fit then for others to be wallowing in sensuality and gluttony? Amos 6. 1, 3, 4, 5, 6. Wo to them that are at ease in Zion—— Ye that put far away the evil day, and cause the seat of violence to come near——That lye upon beds of Ivory, and stretch themselves upon their couches, and eat the Lambs out of the flock, and the Calves out of the midst of the stall, that chaunt to the sound of the Viol——That drink Wine in bowls, and anoint themselves with the chief ointments, but they are not grieved for the affliction of Joseph: It is a time of great humiliation, and are you now given up to fleshly luxury? Read Isa. 22. 12, 13, 14. And in that day did the Lord God of Hosts call to weeping and to mourning, and to baldness, and to girding with sackcloth; and behold, joy and gladness, slaying Oxen, and killing Sheep, eating Flesh and drinking Wine, let us eat and drink for to morrow we shall dye:——Surely this iniquity shall not be purged from you till ye dye, saith the Lord of Hosts.

§. 31. 16. Luxury is a sin most unseemly for men in so great misery, and incongruous to the state of the Gluttonous themselves. O man if thou hadst but a true sight of thy sin and misery of death and judgement, and of the dreadful God whom thou dost offend, thou wouldst perceive that fasting, and prayer, and tears become one in thy condition much better than glutting thy devouring flesh. What a man unpardoned, unsanctified, in the power of Satan, ready to be damned if thus thou dye (for so I must suppose of a Glutton) for such a man to be taking fleshly his pleasure! For a Dives to be faring sumptuously every day, that must shortly want a drop of water to cool his tongue, is as foolish as for a Thief to feast before he goeth to hanging: Yea, and much more. For you might yet prevent your misery: and another posture doth better beseem you to that end: Fasting and crying mightily to God, is fitter to your state. See Jonah 3. 8. Joel 1. 14. Joel. 2. 15.

§. 32. 17. Gluttony is a sin so much the greater, by how much the more Will and delight you have in the committing of it: The sweetest, most voluntary and beloved sin is (cæteris paribus) the greatest: And few are more pleasant and beloved than this.

§. 33. 18. Those are the worst sins, that have least Repentance: But Gluttony is so far from being truly Repented of by the luxurous Epicure, that he loveth it, and careth, and contriveth how to commit it, and buyeth it with the price of much of his estate.

§. 34. 19. It is the greater sin, because it is so frequently committed: Men live in it as their daily practice and delight: They live for it, and make it the end of other sins: It is not a sin that they seldom fall into, but it is almoſt as familiar with them, as to eat and drink: Being turned into Beaſts, they live like Beaſts continually.

§. 35. 20. Laſtly, It is a ſpreading ſin, and therefore is become common, even the ſin of Countries, of rich and poor: For both ſorts love their Bellies, though both have not the like proviſion for them. And they are ſo far from taking warning one of another, that they are encouraged one by another: and the ſin is ſcarce noted in one of a hundred that daily liveth in it: Nor is there almoſt any that reprove it, or help one another againſt it (unleſs by impoveriſhing each other) but moſt by Perſwaſions and Examples do encourage it (though ſome much more than others:) So that by this time you may ſee that it is no rare, nor venial little ſin.

§. 36. And now you may ſee alſo, that it is no wonder if no one of the Commandments expreſly forbid this ſin, (not only becauſe it is a ſin againſt our ſelves directly but alſo) becauſe it is againſt every one almoſt of the Commandments. And think not that either Riches or Poverty will excuſe it, when even Princes are reſtrained ſo much as from unſeaſonable eating, Eccleſ. 10. 16. If it was one of the great ſins that Sodom was burnt with fire for, judge whether England be in no danger by it: Read O England, and know thy ſelf and tremble, Ezek. 16. 49. Behold, this was the iniquity of thy Siſter Sodom; PRIDE, FULNESS of bread, and abundance of IDLENESS was in her and in her daughters, neither did ſhe ſtrengthen the hand of the poor and needy.

IV. The Directions or Helps againſt it.

Dir. 1. Saith Plato, God is the temperate mans Law; and pleaſure the intemperate mans.

§. 37. Direct. 1. Mortify the fleſh, according to the Directions, Chap. 4. Part 7. Subdue its inclinations and deſires: and learn to eſteem and uſe it but as a Servant. Think what a pitiful price a little gluttonous pleaſure of the Throat is, for a Man to ſell his God and his ſalvation for: Learn to be indifferent whether your meat be pleaſing to your appetite or not; and make no great matter of it: Remember ſtill what an odious, ſwiniſh, damning ſin it is, for a mans heart to be ſet upon his belly. All Gal. 5. 24. that are Chriſts have crucified the fleſh with its affections and luſts.

Dir. 2. Heb. 13. 9.

§. 38. Direct. 2. Live faithfully to God, and upon ſpiritual durable delights. And then you will fetch the meaſure of your eating and drinking from their tendency to that higher end. There is no uſing any inferiour thing aright, till you have firſt well reſolved of your end, and uſe it as a means thereto, and mark how far it is a means.

Dir. 3.

§. 39. Direct. 3. See all your Food as provided and given you by God, and beg it and the Bleſſing of it at his hand, and then it will much reſtrain you from uſing it againſt him. He is a wretch indeed that will take his food as from his Fathers hand, and throw it in his face, tho' perhaps a petulant child would do ſo by a fellow ſervant: He that thinketh he is moſt beholden to himſelf for his plenty, will ſay as the fool, Luke 12. 19, 20. Soul take thy eaſe, eat, drink and be merry, thou haſt enough laid up for many years. But he that perceives it is the hand of God that reacheth it to him, will uſe it more reverently. It is a horrid aggravation of the Gluttony of this age, that they play the Hypocrites in it, and firſt (for cuſtom) crave Gods bleſſing on their meat, and then ſit down and ſin againſt him with it: Such are the prayers of Hypocritical ſenſualiſts. But a ſerious diſcerning of God as the Giver, would teach you 1 Cor. 10. 31. whether you eat or drink to do all to his glory from whom it comes.

Dir. 4.

§. 40. Direct. 4. See by faith the Blood of Chriſt as the purchaſing cauſe of all you have: and then ſure you will bear more reverence to his blood, than to caſt the fruit of it into the ſink of ſenſuality, and to do worſe than throw it on the dunghill: What! Muſt Chriſt be a ſacrifice to God, and die to recover you the mercies which you had forfeited, and now will you caſt them to the Dogs? and pleaſe a ſinful appetite with them? did he die to purchaſe you proviſion for your luſts, and to ſerve the fleſh with?

§. 41. Direct. 5. Forget not how the firſt ſin came into the world, even by eating the forbidden fruit: And let the ſlain creatures whoſe lives are loſt for you, remember you of that ſin, which brought the burden on them for your ſakes: And then every piece of fleſh that you ſee, will appear to you as with this caution written upon it, [O ſin not as your firſt Parents ſinned by pleaſing of your appetite; for this our death, and your devouring the fleſh of your fellow-creatures, is the fruit of that ſin, and warneth you to be temperate. Revel not to exceſs in your fellow creatures lives.]

Dir. 6.

§. 42. Direct. 6. Keep an obedient tender Conſcience, not ſcrupulouſly perplexing your ſelves about every bit you eat (as melancholy perſons do) but checking your appetite, and telling you of Gods Commands, and teaching you to fear all ſenſual exceſs. It is a graceleſs diſobedient ſenſeleſs heart that maketh men ſo boldly obey their Appetite: When the fear of God is not in their hearts, no wonder if they feed and feaſt themſelves without fear, Jude 12. Either they make a ſmall matter of ſin in the general, or at leaſt of this ſin in particular: It is uſually the ſame perſons that fear not to ſpend their time in idleneſs, ſports or vanity, and to live in worldlineſs or fleſhly luſts, who live in Gluttony to feed all this. The Belly is a Bruit, that ſticks not much upon Reaſon: Where Conſcience is aſleep and ſeared, Reaſon and Scripture do little move a ſenſual belly-god: And any thing will ſerve inſtead of Reaſon to prove it lawful, and to anſwer all that's ſaid againſt it. There is no diſputing the caſe with a man that is aſleep; eſpecially if his Guts and Appetite be awake: You may almoſt as well bring Reaſon and Scripture to keep a Swine from over-eating, or perſwade a hungry Dog from a Bone, as to take off a Gluton from the pleaſing of his Throat, if he be once grown blockiſh, and have maſtered his conſcience by unbelief, or ſtilled it with a ſtupifying opiate. His taſte then ſerveth inſtead of Reaſon, and againſt reaſon: Then he ſaith, I feel it do me good, (that is, he feeleth that it pleaſeth his appetite, as a Swine feeleth that his meat doth him good when he is ready to burſt:) and this anſwereth all that can be ſaid againſt it: Then he can ſacrifice his time and treaſure to his belly, and make a jeſt of the Abſtinence and Temperance of ſober men, as if it were but a needleſs ſelf-afflicting, or fit only for ſome weak and ſickly perſons. If the conſtant fear and obedience of God do not rule the ſoul, the Appetite will be unruled: And if a tender conſcience be not Porter, the Throat will be common for any thing that the Appetite requireth. One ſight of Heaven or Hell, to awaken their Reaſon and ſleepy Conſciences, would be the beſt remedy to convince them of the odiouſneſs and danger of this ſin.

Dir. 7. Socrates adeo parce & tempeſtatè vixit, ut cum Athenas peſtis ſæpenumero vaſtaret, ſolus ipſe nunquam ægrotaverit. Laertius. in Socrat.

§. 43. Direct. 7. Underſtand well what is moſt conducible to your health; and let that be the ordinary meaſure of your diet for quantity, and quality, and time. Sure your Nature it ſelf, if you are yet men, ſhould have nothing to ſay againſt this meaſure, and conſequently againſt all the reſt of the Directions which ſuppoſe it: Nature hath given you Reaſon as well as Appetite, and Reaſon telleth you, that your health is more to be regarded than your appetite. I hope you will not ſay that God is too ſtrict with you, or would diet you too hardly as long as he alloweth you (ordinarily) to chooſe that (when you can have it lawfully) which is moſt for your own health, and forbiddeth you nothing but that which

hurteth

hurteth you. What Heathen or Infidel that is not either mad or swiniſh, will not allow this meaſure and choice, as well as Chriſtians? Yea, if you believe not a Life to come, methinks you ſhould be loth to ſhorten this Life which now you have. God would but keep you from hurting your ſelves by your Exceſs, as you would keep your Children or your Swine. Tho' he hath a farther End in it, and ſo muſt you, namely, that a healthful Body may be ſerviceable to a holy Soul, in your Maſter's work: Yet it is the Health of your Bodies which is to be your neareſt and immediate End and Meaſure.

The Meaſure of Eating.

It is a very great Overſight in the Education of Youth, that they be not taught betimes ſome common and neceſſary Precepts about Diet, acquainting them what tendeth to Health and Life, and what to Sickneſs, Pain and Death. And it were no unprofitable and unneceſſary thing, if Princes took a Courſe that all their Subjects might have ſome ſuch common needful Precepts familiarly known (As if it were in the Books that Children firſt learn to read in, together with the Precepts of their moral Duty:) For it is certain, that Men love not Death or Sickneſs, and that all Men love their Health and Life: And therefore thoſe that fear not God, would be much reſtrained from Exceſs by the fear of Sickneſs and of Death. And what an Advantage this would be to the Commonwealth, you may eaſily perceive, when you conſider what a maſs of Treaſure it would ſave, beſides the Lives, and Health, and Strength of ſo many Subjects. And it is certain, that moſt People have no conſiderable Knowledge, what meaſure is beſt for them; but the common Rule that they judge by, is their Appetite. They think they have eaten enough, when they have eaten as long as they have liſt, and not before. If they could eat more with an Appetite, and not be ſick after it, they never think they have been guilty of Gluttony or Exceſs.

Multum confert cogitatio exitus, quod cum omnibus vitiis ſit commune, tamen huic proprium—Petrarch.

§. 44 Firſt, Therefore you muſt know, that Appetite is not to be your Rule or Meaſure, either for Quantity, Quality, or Time: For, 1. It is irrational, and Reaſon is your Ruling Faculty, if you are Men. 2. It dependeth on the Temperature of the Body, and the Humours and Diſeaſes of it, and not meerly on the natural Need of meat. A man in a Dropſie is moſt Thirſty, that hath leaſt cauſe to drink: Tho' frequently in a putrid or malignant Feavor a draught of cold drink would probably be Death, yet the Appetite deſireth it never the leſs: Stomachs that have acid Humours, have commonly a ſtrong Appetite, be the Digeſtion never ſo weak, and moſt of them could eat with an appetite above twice as much as they ought to eat. And on the contrary, ſome others deſire not ſo much as is neceſſary to their Suſtenance, and muſt be urged to eat againſt their Appetite. 3. Moſt healthful People in the World have an appetite to much more than Nature can well digeſt, and would kill themſelves if they pleaſed their appetites: For God never gave Man his appetite to be the Meaſure of his Eating or Drinking, but to make that grateful to him, which reaſon biddeth him take. 4. Man's Appetite is not now ſo ſound and regular as it was before the Fall, but is grown more rebellious and unruly, and diſeaſed as the Body is: And therefore it is now much more unfit to be our meaſure, than it was before the Fall. 5. You ſee it even in Swine, and many greedy Children, that would preſently kill themſelves, if they had not the Reaſon of others to rule them. 6. Poyſon it ſelf may be as delightful to the Appetite as Food: And dangerous Meats, as thoſe that are moſt wholſome. So that it is moſt certain, that Appetite is not fit to be the Meaſure of a Man. Yet this is true withal, that when Reaſon hath nothing againſt it, then an Appetite ſheweth what Nature taketh to be moſt agreeable to it ſelf; and Reaſon therefore hath ſomething for it (if it have nothing againſt it;) becauſe it ſheweth what the Stomack is like beſt to cloſe with and digeſt; and it is ſome Help to Reaſon to diſcern when it is prepared for Food.

§ 45. Secondly, It is certain alſo, that the preſent feeling of Eaſe or Sickneſs is no certain Rule to judge of your Digeſtion, or your Meaſure by: For though ſome tender, relaxed, windy Stomachs are ſick or troubled when they are overcharged, or exceed their meaſure, yet with the moſt it is not ſo; unleſs they exceed to very Swiniſhneſs, they are not ſick upon it, nor feel any Hurt at preſent by leſs Exceſſes, but only the Imperfection of Concoctions doth vitiate the Humours, and prepare for Sicknеſſes by Degrees (as is aforeſaid;) and one feeleth it a Month after in ſome diſeaſed Evacuations; and another a Twelve-month after, and another not of many Years, till it have turned to ſome uncurable Diſeaſe: (For the Diſeaſes that are bred by ſo long Preparations are ordinarily much more uncurable, than thoſe that come but from ſudden Accidents and Alterations, in a cleaner Body.) Therefore to ſay, [I feel it do me no harm, and therefore it is no Exceſs,] is the Saying of an Ideot, that hath no foreſeeing Reaſon, and reſiſteth not an Enemy while he is garriſoning, fortifying and arming himſelf, but only when it comes to Blows: Or like him that would go into a Peſt houſe, and ſay, I feel it do me no harm; but within few days or weeks he will feel it. As if the Beginning of a Conſumption were no hurt to them, becauſe they feel it not! Thus living like a Beaſt, will at laſt make Men judge like Beaſts, and brutifie their Brains as well as their Bellies.

§. 46. Thirdly, It is certain alſo, that the common Rules for the Meaſure of Eating. Cuſtom and Opinion is no certain Rule; nay, certainly it is an erring Rule: For judging by Appetite hath brought Men ordinarily to take Exceſs to be but Temperance. All theſe then are falſe meaſures.

§. 47. If I ſhould here preſume to give you any Rules for judging of a right meaſure, Phyſicians would think I went beyond my Calling, and ſome of them might be offended at a Deſign that tendeth ſo much to their Impoveriſhing, and thoſe that ſerve the greedy Worm would be more offended. Therefore I ſhall only give you theſe general Intimations. 1. Nature is content with a little, but Appetite is never content till it have drowned Nature. 2. It is the Perfection of Concoction, and Goodneſs of the nutriment that is more conducible to Health, than the Quantity. 3. Nature will eaſilier overcome twice the quantity of ſome light and paſſible Nouriſhment than half ſo much of groſs and heavy meats (therefore thoſe that preſcribe juſt twelve Ounces a day without differencing meats that ſo much differ, do much miſtake.) 4. A healthful ſtrong Body muſt have more than the Weak and Sickly. 5. Middle aged Perſons muſt have more than old Folks or Children. 6. Hard Labourers muſt have more than eaſie Labourers, and theſe more than the idle or Students, or any that ſtir but little. 7. A Body of cloſe Pores, that evacuateth little by ſweat or tranſpiration, muſt have leſs, eſpecially of Moiſture, than another. 8. So muſt a cold and flegmatick Conſtitution. 9. So muſt a Stomach that corrupteth its Food, and caſteth it forth by periodical bilious Evacuations. 10. That which troubleth the Stomach in the Digeſtion is too much, or too bad, unleſs with very weak ſickly Perſons. 11. So is that too much or bad which maketh you more dull for Study, or more heavy and unfit for Labour (unleſs ſome Diſeaſe be the principal Cauſe.) 12. A Body that by Exceſs is already filled with Crudities, ſhould take leſs than another, that Nature may have time to digeſt and waſte them. 13. Every one ſhould labour to know the Temperature of their own Bodies, and what Diſeaſes they are moſt enclined to, and ſo have the Judgment of their Phyſician, or ſome skilful Perſon, to give them ſuch Directions as are ſuitable to their own particular Temperature and Diſeaſes. 14. Hard Labourers err more in the Quality than the Quantity, partly through Poverty, partly thro' Ignorance, and partly thro' Appetite, while they refuſe that which is more wholſome (as meer Bread and Beer) if it be leſs pleaſing to them. 15. If I may preſume to conjecture, ordinarily very hard Labourers exceed in Quantity about a 4th part: Shopkeepers of eaſier Trades do ordinarily exceed about a Third part: Voluptuous Gentlemen and their Serving-men, and other Servants of theirs that have no hard Labour, do uſually exceed about Half in Half: (But ſtill I except Perſons that are extraordinarily temperate thro' Weakneſs, or thro' Wiſdom:) And the ſame Gentlemen uſually exceed in Variety, Coſtlineſs, Curioſity and Time, much more than they do in Quantity, (ſo that they are Glutons of the firſt Magnitude.) The Children of thoſe that govern not their Appetites, but let them eat and drink, as much and as often as they deſire it, do uſually exceed above Half in Half, and lay the Foundation of the Diſeaſes and Miſeries of all their Lives. All this is about the Truth, though the Belly believe it not.

Venter præcepta non audit. Senec.

§. 48. When you are once grown wiſe enough to know what in Meaſure, and Time, and Quality is fitteſt for your Health, go not beyond that upon any Importunity of Appetite, or of Friends: For all that is beyond that, is Gluttony and Senſuality, in its Degree.

Dir. 8. §. 49. Direct. 8. If you can lawfully avoid it, make not your Table a Snare of Temptation to your ſelves or others. I know a greedy Appetite will make any Table that hath but Neceſſaries a Snare to it ſelf: But do not you unneceſſarily become Devils, or Tempters to your ſelves or others. 1. For Quality, ſtudy not Deliciouſneſs too much; unleſs for ſome weak diſtempered Stomachs, the beſt Meat is that which leaveth behind it in the Mouth neither troubleſome Loathing, nor an eager Appetite after more, for the Taſte's ſake: But ſuch as Bread is, that leaveth the Palate in an indifferent Moderation. The curious Inventions of new and delicious Diſhes, meerly to pleaſe the Appetite, is Gluttony inviting to greater Gluttony: Exceſs in Quality to invite to Exceſs in Quantity.

If you will not take this Counſel, at leaſt uſe after Meat to ſet before your Gueſts a Baſon and a Feather, or a Provang to vomit it up again, that you may ſhew ſome Mercy to their Bodies, if you will ſhew none to their Souls.

§. 50. Object. But (you'll ſay) I ſhall be thought niggardly or ſordid, and reproached behind my Back, if my Table be ſo fitted as to the Temperate and Abſtinent.

A Senſualiſt craving to be admittted of Cato among his Familiars, Cato anſwer'd him, I cannot live with one whoſe Palate is wider than his Brain. Eraſ.

Anſw. This is the pleading of Pride for Gluttony: Rather than you will be talk'd againſt by Belly-gods, or ignorant fleſhly People, you will ſin againſt God, and prepare a Feaſt or Sacrifice for Bacchus or Venus: The ancient Chriſtians were torn with Beaſts, becauſe they would not caſt a little Frankincenſe into the Fire on the Altar of an Idol: And will you feed ſo many Idol Bellies ſo liberally to avoid their Cenſure? Did not I tell you, that Guloſity is an irrational Vice? Good and temperate Perſons will ſpeak well of you for it: And do you more regard the Judgment and Eſteem of Belly-gods?

§. 51. Object. But it is not only riotous luxurious Perſons that I mean: I have no ſuch at my Table: But it will be the Matter of Obloquy even to good People, and thoſe that are ſober.

Anſw. I told you ſome meaſure of Gluttony is become a common Sin: And many are tainted with it thro' Cuſtom, that otherwiſe are good and ſober: But ſhall they therefore be left as uncurable? Or ſhall they make all others as bad as they? And muſt we all commit that Sin, which ſome ſober People are grown to favour? You bear their Cenſures about different Opinions in Religion, and other matters of difference; and why not here? The deluded Quakers may be Witneſſes againſt you, that while they run into the contrary Extream, can bear the deepeſt Cenſures of all the World about them. And cannot you for honeſt Temperance and Sobriety bear the cenſures of ſome diſtempered or guilty Perſons that are of another Mind: Certainly in this they are no temperate Perſons, when they plead for Exceſs and the Baits of Senſuality and Intemperance.

§. 52. 2. For Variety alſo, make not your Table unneceſſarily a Snare: Have no greater Variety, than the Weakneſs of Stomachs, or Variety of Appetites doth require. Unneceſſary Variety and Pleaſantneſs of Meats, are the Devil's great Inſtruments to draw Men to Gluttony? (And I would wiſh no good People to be his Cooks or Caterers:) When the very bruiriſh Appetite it ſelf begins to ſay of one diſh, I have enough, then comes another to tempt it unto more Exceſs, and another after that to more: All this that I have ſaid, I have the concurrent Judgment of Phyſicians in, who condemn Fulneſs and Variety, as the great Enemies of Health, and Nurſeries of Diſeaſes. And is not the concurrent Judgment of Phyſicians more valuable about matters of Health, than your private Opinions or Appetite? Yet when Sickneſs requireth Variety, it is neceſſary.

§. 53. 3. Sit not too long at Meat: For beſides the Sin of waſting Time, it is but the way to tice down a little and a little more: And he that would be temperate, if you ſate but a Quarter of an Hour, (which is ordinarily enough) will exceed when he hath the Temptation of Half an Hour (which is enough for the Entertainment of Strangers:) Much more when you muſt ſit out an Hour, (which is too much of all Conſcience:) Though greedy Eating is not good, yet ſober Feeding may ſatisfie Nature in a little time.

§. 54. 4. See that your Proviſions be not more coſtly than is neceſſary: Tho' I know there muſt be a Difference allow'd for Perſons and Times, yet ſee that no Coſt be beſtowed unneceſſarily: And let ſober Reaſon and not Pride and Gluttony judge of the neceſſity: We commonly call him the Rich Glutton, Luke 16. that fared ſumptuouſly every Day: It is not ſaid that he did eat any more than other Men, but that he fared ſumptuouſly. You can't anſwer it comfortably to God, to lay that out upon the Belly, which might do more good another way: It's a horrid Sin to ſpend ſuch ſtore of Wealth unneceſſarily upon the Belly, as is ordinarily done. The cheapeſt Diet (cæteris paribus) muſt be preferred.

The old Faſhion in Country-mens Houſes was not amiſs, where the Story of this Rich Glutton and Lazarus was wont to be painted over their Tables on their Walls.

§. 55. Object. But the Scandal of Covetouſneſs muſt be avoided as well as Gluttony. Folks will ſay, that all this is done meerly from a miſerable Worldly Mind.

Anſw. 1. It is eaſier to bear that Cenſure than the Diſpleaſure of God. 2. No Scandal muſt be avoided by Sin: It is a Scandal taken, and not given. 3. With temperate Perſons your Exceſs is much more ſcandalous. 4. I'll teach you a Cure for this in the next Direction.

§. 56. Object. But what if I ſet Variety and Plenty on my Table? May not Men chuſe whether they will eat too much? Do you think Men are Swine, that know not when they have enough?

Anſw. Yes, we ſee by certain Experience, that moſt Men know not when they have enough, and do exceed when they think they do not. There is not one of many, but is much more prone to exceed, than to come ſhort, and abundance ſin in Exceſs, for one that ſinneth by Defect: And is Sin ſo ſmall a matter with you, that you will lay ſnares before men, and then ſay, They may take heed? So Men may chuſe whether they will go into a Whore-houſe, and yet the Pope doth ſcarce deal honeſtly to licenſe them at Rome: much leſs it is well to prepare them, and invite Men to them. Will you excuſe the Devil for tempting Eve with the forbidden Fruit, becauſe ſhe might chuſe whether ſhe would meddle with it? What doth that on your Table, which is purpoſely cooked to the tempting of the Appetite, and is fitted to draw Men to Guloſity and Exceſs, and is no way needful? Wo to him that layeth a Stumbling-block before the Blind. Let no Man put a Stumbling-block in his Brother's Way: It is the Wicked's Curſe, [Let their Table be made a Snare, and a Trap, and a Stumbling-block.] And it was Balaam's Sin, that he taught Balack to tempt Iſrael, or lay a Stumbling-block before them.

and

Dir. 9. §. 57. Direct. 9. Reſolve to beſtow the Coſt of ſuch Superfluities upon the Poor, or ſome other charitable uſe; that ſo it become not a Sacrifice to the Belly. Let the greateſt and needfulleſt Uſes be firſt ſerved: It is no time for you to be glutting your Appetites, and wallowing in Exceſs, when any (yea, ſo many) about you do want even Cloaths and Bread. If you do thus lay out all upon the Poor, which you ſpare from feeding your own and other Mens Exceſs, then none can ſay, that your ſparing is thro' covetous Niggardize; and ſo that Reproach is taken off. The Price of one Feaſt, will buy Bread for a great many poor People. It's ſmall thanks to you to give to the Poor ſome Leavings, when your Bellies are firſt glutted with as much as the Appetite deſired: This coſteth you nothing. A Swine will leave that to another which he cannot eat. But if you will a little pinch your Fleſh, or deny your ſelves, and live more ſparingly and thriftily, that you may have the more to give to the Poor, this is commendable indeed.

Dir. 10. §. 58. Direct. 10. Do not overperſwade any to eat when there is no need, but rather help one another againſt running into Exceſs: By ſeaſonable Diſcourſes of the ſinfulneſs of Gluttony, and of the Excellency of Abſtinence, and by friendly Watchings over and warning one another. Satan and the Fleſh and its unavoidable Baits, are Temptation ſtrong enough: We need not by unhappy Kindneſs to add more.

Dir. 11. §. 59. Direct. 11. When you feel your Appetites eager againſt Reaſon and Conſcience, check them, and reſolve that they ſhall not be pleaſed. Unreſolvedneſs keepeth up the Temptation: If you would but reſolve once, you would be quiet: But when the Devil findeth you yielding, or wavering, or unreſolved, he will never give you Reſt. Prov. 23. 1, 2, 3. When thou ſitteſt to eat with a Ruler, conſider diligently what is before thee, and put a Knife to thy Throat if thou be a Man given to Appetite: Be not deſirous of his Dainties, for they are deceitful Meat. The Words tranſlated If thou be a Man given to Appetite (agreeable to the Septuagint and the Arabick) are tranſlated by Montanus, and in the Vulgar Latin, and the Chaldee Paraphraſe, [If thou have the Power of thy own Soul, or be Maſter of thy Soul, Compos animæ] Shew that thou art Maſter of thy ſelf by thy Abſtinence. Inſtead of [Put a Knife to thy Throat] (that is, Threaten thy ſelf into Abſtinence.) the Syriack, and divers Expoſitors tranſlate it [Thou doſt, or leſt thou doſt put a Knife to thy Throat] that is, Thou art as bad as cutting thy Throat, or deſtroying thy ſelf, when thou art gluttonouſly feeding thy ſelf,] Keep up Reſolution and the Power of Reaſon.

Dir. 12. §. 60. Direct. 12. Remember what thy Body is, and what it will ſhortly be, and how loathſome and vile it will be in the Dust. And then think how far Such a Body ſhould be pampered and pleaſed, and at what rates. Pay not too dear for a Feaſt for worms: Look into the Grave, and ſee what is the End of all your pleaſant Meats and Drinks; of all your curious coſtly Fare. You may ſee there the Skulls caſt up, and the ugly Hole of that Mouth which devoured ſo many ſweet delicious Morſels; But there is none of the Pleaſure of it now left. O wonderful Folly! that Men can ſo eaſily, ſo eagerly, ſo obſtinately waſte their Eſtates, and neglect their Souls, and diſpleaſe their God, and in effect even ſell their Hopes of Heaven for ſo ſmall and ſordid a Delight, as the pleaſing of ſuch a piece of Fleſh, that muſt ſhortly have ſo vile an End! Was it worth ſo much Care, and Toil, and Coſt, and the caſting away of your Salvation to pamper that Body a little while, that muſt ſhortly be ſuch a loathſome Carcaſs? Methinks one Sight of a Skull or a Grave ſhould make you think Gluttony and Luxury Madneſs. Eccleſ. 7. 2. It is better to go to the Houſe of Mourning, than to the Houſe of Feaſting: For that is the End of all Men, and the living will lay it to heart. David ſaith of the Wicked, Let me not eat of their Dainties; but, Let the Righteous ſmite me and reprove me, Pſal. 141. 4, 5. So dangerous a thing is Feaſting, even among Friends, where of it ſelf it is lawful, that Job thought it a ſeaſon for his Fears and Sacrifice, Job 1. 4, 5. And his Sons went and feaſted in their houſes every one his day, and ſent and called for their three Siſters to eat and to drink with them. But Job ſacrificed for them ſaying, It may be my Sons have ſinned, and curſed (that is, thought provokingly, unreverently, unholily or contemptuouſly of) God in their Hearts. Thus did Job continually. A Funeral is a ſafer place for you than a Feaſt.

§. 61. Direct. 13. Go into the Houſes of the Poor ſometimes, and ſee what Proviſions they live upon, and what time they ſpend at Meat: And then bethink you whether their Diet or yours do tend more to the Mortification of fleſhly Luſts; and whether theirs will not be as ſweet as yours at the laſt? And whether meer riches ſhould make ſo great a difference in eating and drinking between them and you? I know that where they want what is neceſſary to their Health, it is lawful for you to exceed them, and be thankful: But not ſo as to forget their wants, nor ſo as to turn your Plenty to Exceſs. The very Sight now and then of a poor Man's Diet and manner of Life would do you good; Seeing affecteth more than Hearſay. Dir. 13.

§. 62. Direct. 14. Look upon the ancient Chriſtians, the Patterns of Abſtinence, and think whether their Lives were like to yours. They were much in faſtings and Abſtinence; and Strangers to Gluttony and Exceſs: They were ſo prone to Exceſs of Abſtinence, rather than Exceſs of Meat, that abundance of them lived in Wilderneſſes or Cells, upon Roots, or upon Bread and Water: (From the Imitation of whom in a formal Hypocritical manner came Swarms of Fryers that are now in the World:) And will you commend their Holineſs, and Abſtinence, and yet be ſo far from any ſerious Imitation of them, that you will in Gluttony and Exceſs, oppoſe your ſelves directly againſt them? Dir. 14.

He may ſhortly caſt thee into thoſe Diſeaſes, which ſhall make thee loath thy Pleaſant Fare, and wiſh thou hadſt the poor Man's Fare and Appetite, and make thee ſay of all the Baits of thy Senſuality, I have no Pleaſure in them, Eccleſ. 12. 1. Temperantiam exigit Philosophia non Pœnam. Senec.

§. 64. Yet after all this, I shall remember you that you run not into the contrary Extream: Place not more Religion in external abstinence and fastings than you ought: Know your own Condition, and how far either Fasting or Eating is really a Help or a Hindrance to you in those greater things which are their Ends, and so far use them. A decaying Body must be carefully supported: An unruly Body must be carefully subdued: The same medicines serve not for contrary Tempers and Diseases: To think, that abstaining from Flesh, and glutting your selves with Fish, and other Meats, is acceptable to God, or that meer abstaining so many Hours in a Week, and serving your Appetite on the rest, is meritorious, or that Abstinence from Meat will prove you holy, without an Abstinence from Sin, all this is self-deluding Error. Nor must you raise a great many of perplexing Scruples about all that you eat or drink, to no Edification, but meerly to your Vexation; but in cheerful Temperance preserve your Health, and subdue Concupiscence.

Tit. 2. Directions against Drunkenness, and all Excess of Drink.

§. 1. I. THE most that I have said against Gluttony will serve against Excess of Drink also: Therefore I need not repeat it. Drunkenness in the largest Sense extendeth both to the Affection and to the Effect: And so he is a Drunkard (that is, Reputatively, in the sight of God) who would drink too much if he had it, and is not restrained by his will, but by Necessity.

§. 2. Drunkenness in the Effect or Act, is sometime taken more largely, sometime more strictly: Largely taken it signifieth all Drinking to Excess to please the Appetite: Two things here make up the Crime, 1. Love of the Drink, or pleasing the Appetite, which we call Gulosity. 2. Excess in Drinking; which Excess may be in Quantity or Quality.

§. 3. Drunkenness strictly taken, signifieth Drinking till Reason have received some Hurt: And of this there be many Degrees He that hath in the least Degree disturbed his Reason, and disabled or hindred it from its proprer Office, is drunken in that Degree; and he that hath overturned it or quite disabled it, is stark drunk, or drunk in a greater degree.

§. 4. All Excess of Drink is sinful Gulosity or Sensuality, of the same Nature with Gluttony, and falls under all my last Reproofs and Directions: And in some Persons that can sit it out, and bear much Drink without Intoxication, the Sin may be greater than in some others, that by a smaller Quantity are drunk by a Surprize, before they are aware; but yet, cæteris paribus, the Overthrow of the Understanding maketh the Sin to be much the greater: For it hath all the Evil that the other degrees have, with more; it is a voluptuous Excess in Drink to the Depravation of Reason. Gulosity is the general Nature of it: Excess is the Matter; Depravation of Reason is its special Form.

§. 5. It is Excess of drinking when you drink more than, according to the Judgment of sound Reason, doth tend to fit your Body mediately or immediately for its proper Duty without a greater hurt. Sometime the immediate Benefit is most to be regarded, (As if a Man had some present Duty of very great moment to perform:) The present Benefit consisteth, 1. In the Abatement of such a troublesome Thirst or Pain, as hindreth you from doing your Duty. 2. In adding that Refocillation and Alacrity to the Spirits, as maketh them fitter Instruments for the Operations of the Mind and Body. That Measure which doth one or both of these without greater hurt is not too great: I say without greater hurt; because if any should in a Dropsie or a Feavor prefer a little present Ease and Alacrity before his Health and Life it were Excess: Or if any Man ordinarily drink more than Nature will well digest, and which causeth the Incoction of his Meat, and consequently Crudities, and consequently a Dunghil of Flegm and vitious Humours, fit to engender many Diseases, this is Excess of Drinking, though he feel it ease him, and make him cheerful for the present time. And this is the common Case of most Bibbers or Tiplers, that are not stark Drunkards: They feel a present Ease from Thirst, and perhaps a little Alacrity of Spirits, and therefore they think that measure is no Excess, which yet tendeth to Crudities and Diseases, and the Destruction of their Health and Life.

§. 6. Therefore (except in some great extraordinary Case of Necessity) it is not so much the present as the future foreseen Effects, which must direct you to know your measure. Reason can foresee, though Appetite cannot: Future Effects are usually great and long; when present Effects may be small and short. He that will do that which tendeth to the hurt of his Health, for the present easing or pleasing of his thirsty Appetite, doth sin against Reason, and play the Beast. You should be so well acquainted with your Bodies, and the means of your own Health, as to know first whether the enduring of the Thirst, or the drinking to quench it is like to be the more hurtful to your Health, and more a Hindrance to your Duty.

§. 7. And for the present Alacrity, which Strong-drink bringeth to some, you must foresee that you purchase it not at too dear a rate, by a longer dulness or disablement afterwards; and take heed that you take not an alien counterfeit Hilarity consisting in meer sensual Delight, for that Serenity and just Alacrity of the Spirits as doth fit you for your Duty. For this also is a usual (and wilful) Self-deceit of Sensualists: They make themselves believe, that a Cup of Sack or Strong-drink giveth them a true assistant Alacrity, when it only causeth a sensual Delight, which doth more hinder and corrupt the Mind than truly further it in its Duty; and differeth from true Alacrity as Paint from Beauty, or as a Feavor doth from our natural Heat.

§. 8. You see then that Intemperance in Drinking is of two Sorts: 1. Bibbing, or drinking too much. 2. Drunkenness (in various degrees.) And these intemperate Bibbers are of several Sorts. 1. Those that when they have over-heated themselves, or are feavorish, or have any ordinary diseased Thirst, will please their Appetites, tho' it be to their hurt, and will venture their Health rather than endure the Thirst; tho' in Feavors, Dropsies, Coughs, it should be the greatest Enemy to them, yet they are such beastly Servants to their Appetites, that drink they must whatever come of it: Though Physicians forbid them, and Friends dissuade them, they have so much of the Bruit, and so little of the Man, that Appetite is quite too hard for Reason with them. These are of two Sorts: One Sort keep the Soundness of their Reason, tho' they have lost all the Strength and Power of it, for want of a resolved Will: And these confess that they should abstain, but tell you, They cannot: They are not so much Men. The other sort have given up their very Reason (such as it is) to the Service of their Appetites; and these will not believe (till the Cough, or Gout, or Dropsie, &c.

ſie,&c. make them believe it (that their meaſure of drinking is too much,or that it will do them hurt; but ſay, that it would hurt them more to forbear it: Some thro' real ignorance, and ſome made willingly ignorant by their appetites.

§. 9. 2 Another ſort of Bibbers there are much worſe than thoſe, who have no great diſeaſed thirſt to excuſe their guloſity,but call it a Thirſt whenever their Appetite would have drink; and uſe themſelves ordinarily to ſatisfy ſuch an Appetite, and drink almoſt as oft as the throat deſireth it, and ſay, it is but to quench their thirſt; and never charge themſelves with Intemperance for it. Theſe may be known from the firſt ſort of Bibbers by the quality of their drink: It is cold ſmall beer that the firſt ſort deſire to quench a real thirſt; when Reaſon bids them endure it, if other means will not quench it. But it is Wine or Strong-Drink, or ſome drink that hath a delicious guſt, which the ſecond ſort of Bibbers uſe, to pleaſe the Appetite which they call their Thirſt. And of theſe Luxurious Tiplers, next to ſtark Drunkards, there are alſo divers degrees, ſome being leſs guilty, and ſome more.

Et non ſolum hæc ſeculares viri, ſed & ipſe grex domini ejuſque paſtores, qui exemplo eſſe omni plebi debuerint, ebrietate quam plurimi quaſi vino madidi torpebant reſoluti, & animoſitatum tumore, jurgiorum contentione, invidiæ rapacibus ungulis, indiſcreto boni malique judicio carpebantur. Gildas.

§. 10. 1. The Loweſt degree are they that will never ordinarily drink but at meals: But they will then drink more than nature requireth,or than is profitable to their health.

§. 11. 2. The ſecond degree are they that uſe to drink between meals when their appetite deſireth it, to the hindering of concoction, and the increaſe of Crudities and Catarrhs,and to the ſecret gradual vitiating of their humours, and generating of many diſeaſes: and this without any true neceſſity,or the approbation of ſound Reaſon, or any wiſe Phyſician: Yet they tipple but at home,where you may find the pot by them at unſeaſonable times.

§. 12. 3. The third degree are many poor men that have not drink at home,and when they come to a Gentlemans houſe or a feaſt, or perhaps an A L E-houſe, they will pour in for the preſent to exceſs, tho' not to Drunkenneſs,and think it is no harm, becauſe it is but ſeldom, and they drink ſo ſmall drink all the reſt of the year, that they think ſuch a fit as this ſometimes is medicinal to them, and tendeth to their health.

§. 13. 4. Another rank of Bibbers are thoſe that tho' they haunt not A L E-houſes or Taverns, yet have a throat for every health or pledging Cup that reacheth not to drunkenneſs: and uſe ordinarily to drink many unneceſſary cups in a day to pledge (as they call it) thoſe that drink to them; And cuſtom and complement are all their excuſe.

§. 14. 5. Another degree of Bibbers are common ALE-houſe haunters, that love to be there, and to ſit many hours perhaps in a day,with a pot by them, tipling, and drinking one to another. And if they have any bargain to make, or any Friend to meet,the A L E-houſe or Tavern muſt be the place, where Tippling may be one part of their work.

6. The higheſt degree are they, that are not apt to be ſtark Drunk, and therefore think themſelves leſs faulty, while they ſit at it, and make others drunk,and are ſtrong themſelves to bear away more, than others can bear: they have the Drunkards appetite, and meaſure, and pleaſure, tho' they have not his giddineſs and loſs of wit.

§. 15. 3. And of thoſe that are truly Drunken alſo, there are many degrees and kinds. As ſome will be drunk with leſs and ſome with more; ſo ſome are only poſſeſſed with a little diſeaſed Levity, and talkativeneſs more than they had before: Some alſo have diſtempered Eyes, and ſtammering tongues: Some alſo proceed to unſteady reeling heads, and ſtumbling feet,and unfitneſs for their callings: Some go further to ſick and vomiting ſtomachs, or elſe to ſleepy heads: and ſome proceed to ſtark madneſs, quarelling, railing, brawling, hooting, ranting, roaring, or talking nonſenſe, or doing miſchief: the furious ſort being like mad dogs that muſt be tied; and the ſottiſh prating and ſpewing ſort being commonly the deriſion of the Boys in the ſtreets.

§. 16. II. Having told you what Tipling and Drunkenneſs is, I ſhall briefly tell you their Cauſes: but briefly becauſe you may gather moſt of them from what is ſaid of the Cauſes of Gluttony. 1. The firſt and Grand Cauſes are theſe three concurrent: A Beaſtly raging appetite or Guloſity: A Weakneſs of Reaſon and Reſolution to rule it: And a want of Faith to ſtrengthen Reaſon, and of Holineſs to ſtrengthen Reſolution. Theſe are the very Cauſe of all.

§. 17. 2. Another cauſe is, their not knowing that their exceſs and tipling is really a hurt or danger to their health: And they are ignorant of this from many cauſes: One is, becauſe they have been bred up among ignorant people, and never taught to know what is good or bad for their own bodies, but only by the common talk of the miſtaken vulgar. Another is becauſe their appetite ſo maſtereth their very Reaſon, that they can chooſe to believe that which they would not have to be true.Another reaſon is becauſe they are of healthful bodies,and therefore feel no hurt at preſent, and preſume that they ſhall feel none hereafter, and ſee ſome abſtemious Perſons weaker than they (who began not to be abſtemious till ſome chronical diſeaſe had firſt invaded them) And thus they do by theirBodies,juſt as wicked men do by their ſouls: They judge all by preſent Feeling, and have not wiſdom enough to take things foreſeen into their Deliberation and Accounts: That which will be a great while hence they take for nothing, or an uncertain ſomething next to nothing: As Heaven and Hell move not ungodly men, becauſe they ſeem a great way off; ſo while they feel themſelves in health, they are not moved with the threatning of ſickneſs: The cup is in their hands, and therefore they will not ſet it by, for fear of they know not what,that will befal them you know not when: As the thief that was told,he ſhould anſwer it at the day of judgment, ſaid, he would take the other Cow too, if he ſhould ſtay unpuniſhed till then; ſo theſe Belly-Gods think, they will take the other Cup, if they ſhall but ſtay till ſo long hence: And thus becauſe this temporal puniſhment of their Guloſity is not ſpeedily exerciſed, the hearts of men are fully ſet in them to pleaſe their appetites.

§. 18. 3. Another cauſe of Tipling and Drunkenneſs is, a wicked Heart that loveth the company of wicked men,and the fooliſh talk,and cards and dice, by which they are entertained: One ſin ticeth down another: It is a delight to prate over a pot, or rant and game, and drive away all thoughts that ſavour of ſound Reaſon or the fear of God, or the care of their ſalvation: Many of them will ſay, It is not for love of the drink but of the company, that they uſe the ALE-houſe: An Excuſe that maketh their ſin much worſe, and ſheweth them to be exceeding wicked: To love the company of wicked men, and love to hear their lewd and idle fooliſh talk, and to game and ſport out your time with them, beſides your tipling, this ſheweth a wicked fleſhly heart, much worſe than if you loved the drink alone: Such

Why Gregory ſet up Wakes, & Church-Ales, and Meetings on Holy-days in England, ſee Li 10. Regiſt. Ep. 71. in policy to win the heathens; Qui boves ſolent multos in ſacrificio dæmonum occidere, debet his etiam de hac re aliqua ſolemnitas immutari, ut die dedicationis vel natalitiis martyrum, tabernacula ſibi circa eaidem eccleſias, quæ ex fanis commutatæ ſunt, de ramis arborum faciant, & religioſis conviviis ſolennitatem celebrent: Nec Diabolo jam animalia immolent, ſed ad laudem Dei in uſu ſuo animalia occidant, & donatori omnium de ſatietate ſua gratias agant, &c. But do Chriſtians need this as Heathens did, when we ſee the ſad Effects of ſuch Riotings? Lege Acoſt. l. 3. c. 34.

company as you love beſt, ſuch are your own diſpoſitions: If you were no Tiplers or Drunkards, it is a certain ſign of an ungodly perſon to love ungodly company better, than the company of wiſe and godly men, that may edifie you in the fear of God.

§. 19. 4. Another cauſe of Tipling is Idleneſs, when they have not the conſtant employments of their callings to take them up: Some of them make it their chief excuſe that they do it to paſs away the time: Blind wretches! that are ſo near eternity, and can find no better uſes for their Time: To theſe I ſpoke before Chap. 5. Par. 1.

§. 20. 5. Another cauſe is, the wicked neglect of their dutys to their own families; making no conſcience of loving their own relations, and teaching them the fear of God, nor following their buſineſs, and ſo they take no pleaſure to be at home: The company of wife and children and ſervants is no delight to them, but they muſt go to an ALE-houſe or Tavern for more ſuitable company. Thus one ſin bringeth on another.

§. 21. 6. Another cauſe is the ill management of matters at home with their own Conſciences; when they have brought themſelves into ſo terrible and ſad a caſe that they dare not be much alone, nor ſoberly think of their own condition, nor ſeriouſly look towards another world; but fly from themſelves, and ſeek a place to hide them from their conſciences, forgetting that ſin will find them out: They run to an ALE-houſe, as Saul to his muſick, to drink away melancholy, and drown the noiſe of a guilty ſelf-accuſing mind: And to drive away all thoughts of God, and Heaven, and ſin, and Hell, and death, and judgement, till it be too late. As if they were reſolved to be damned, and therefore reſolved not to think of their miſery nor the remedy: But though they dare venture upon Hell it ſelf, the ſots dare not venture upon the ſerious thoughts of it! Either there is a Hell, or there is none: If there be none, why ſhouldſt thou be afraid to think of it? If there be a Hell (as thou wilt find it if thou hold on but a little longer) will not the feeling be more intolerable than the thoughts of it? And is not the forethinking on it a neceſſary and cheap prevention of the feeling? O how much wiſer a courſe were it to retire your ſelves in ſecret, and there to look before you to eternity, and hear what conſcience hath firſt to ſay to you concerning your life paſt, your ſin and miſery, and then what God hath to ſay to you of the remedy: You'll one day find, that this was a more neceſſary work, than any that you had at the ALE houſe, and that you had greater buſineſs with God and Conſcience, than with your idle companions.

§. 22. 7. Another cauſe is the cuſtom of pledging thoſe that drink to you, and of drinking healths, by which the Laws of the Devil and the ALE-houſe do impoſe upon them the meaſures of exceſs, and make it their duty to diſregard their duty to God: So lamentable a thing it is, to be the tractable ſlaves of men, and intractable rebels againſt God! Plutarch mentions One that being invited to a feaſt, made a ſtop when he heard that they compelled men to drink after meat, and askt whether they compelled them to eat too? Apprehending that he went in danger of his belly: And it ſeems to be but cuſtom that maketh it appear leſs ridiculous or odious to conſtrain men to drinking than to eating.

§. 23 8. Another great cauſe of exceſs is the Devils way of drawing them on by degrees: He doth not tempt them directly to be drunk, but to drink one cup more, and then another and another, ſo that the worſt that he ſeemeth to deſire of them is, but to drink a little more: And thus as Solomon ſaith of the fornicator, they yield to the flatterer and go on as the Ox to the ſlaughter, and as the Fool to the correction of the ſtocks, till a dart ſtrike though his liver, as a bird haſteth to the ſnare, and knoweth not that it is for his life: Prov. 7. 21, 22, 23.

24. III. The Greatneſs of this ſin appeareth in what is ſaid before of Gluttony: More ſpecially 1. Think how baſe a maſter thou doſt ſerve, being thus a ſlave to thy throat: What a beaſtly thing it is, and worſe than beaſtly: For few beaſts but a ſwine will be forced to drink more than doth them good. How low and poor is that mans reaſon that is not able to command his throat?

§. 25. 2. Think how thou conſumeſt the creatures of God that are given for ſervice and not for guloſity and luxury. The Earth ſhall be a witneſs againſt thee, that it bore that fruit for better uſes, which thou miſpendeſt on thy ſin. Thy Servants and Cattle that labour for it ſhall be witneſſes againſt thee: Thou offereſt the creatures of God as a ſacrifice to the Devil for Drunkenneſs and Tipling is his ſervice. It were leſs folly to do as Diogenes did, who, when they gave him a large cup of wine, threw it under the table that it might do him no harm: Thou makeſt thy ſelf like Caterpillars, and Foxes, and Wolves, and other deſtroying creatures that live to do miſchief, and conſume that which ſhould nouriſh man; and therefore are purſued as unfit to live! Thou art to the common-wealth as Mice in the Granary, or Weeds in the Corn. It is a great part of the work of faithful Magiſtrates to weed out ſuch as thou.

§. 26. 3. Thou robbeſt the poor, conſuming that on thy throat which ſhould maintain them: If thou have any thing to ſpare, it will comfort thee more at laſt, to have given it to the needy, than that a greedy throat devoured it. The covetous is much better in this than the Drunkard and Luxurious: For he is a gatherer, and the other is a ſcatterer: The Common-wealth maintaineth a double or treble charge in ſuch as thou art: As the ſame paſture will keep many Sheep which will keep but one Horſe; ſo the ſame country may keep many temperate perſons which will keep but a few Gluttons and Drunkards. The worldling makes proviſion cheaper by getting and ſparing: But the Drunkard and Glutton make it dearer by waſting: The covetous man that ſcrapeth together for himſelf, doth oft-times gather for one that will pity the poor, when he is dead: Prov. 28. 8. But the Drunkard and Riotous devour it while they are alive. One is like a Hog that is good for ſomething at laſt, though his feeding yield no profit while he liveth: The other is like devouring vermine, that leave nothing to pay for what they did conſume: The one is like a Pike among the fiſhes, who payeth when he is dead for that which he devoured alive: But the other is like the ſink or chanel that repayeth you nothing but ſtink and dirt, for all that you caſt into it.

Prov. 13. 23. Prov. 14. 21. & 21. 13. & 30. 14. & 22. 9 & 28. 27.

§. 27. 4. Thou draweſt poverty and ruine upon thy ſelf. Beſides the value which thou waſteſt God uſually joyneth with the prodigal by his judgements, and ſcattereth as faſt as he. Prov. 21. 17. He that loveth pleaſure ſhall be a poor man: He that loveth wine and oyl ſhall not be rich. There is that ſcattereth and yet increaſeth, Prov. 11. 24. But this is not the iſſue of thy ſcattering. Prov. 23. 19, 20, 21. Hear thou my ſon and be wiſe, and guide thy heart in the way: Be not amongſt wine bibbers, amongſt riotous eaters of fleſh: For the Drunkard and the Glutton ſhall come to poverty, and drowſineſs ſhall cloath a man with rags.

Diogenes begging of a Prodigal, askt a pound of him, when he askt but a penny of the next. Because ſaith he, I may oft receive of them, but God knows whether ever I ſhall have more of him. Laert. in Diog. Prov. 28. 19.

§. 28. 5. Thou art an enemy to thy family: Thou grieveſt thy friends: Thou impoveriſheſt thy children.

dren, and robbeſt thoſe whom thou art bound to make proviſion for. Thou filleſt thy houſe with diſcontents and brawlings, and baniſheſt all quietneſs and fear of God: A diſcontented or a brawling wife, and ragged deſolate untaught Children, are often ſigns that a Drunkard or Riotous perſon is the maſter of the family.

§. 29. 6. Thou art a heynous conſumer of thy precious Time: This is far worſe than the waſting of thy eſtate: O that thou didſt but know, as thou ſhalt know at laſt, what thoſe hours are worth, which thou waſteſt over thy pots! and how much greater work thou hadſt to lay it out upon? How many thouſands in Hell are wiſhing now in vain, that they had thoſe hours again to ſpend in prayer and repentance, which they ſpent in the ALE-houſe, and ſenſeleſly caſt away with their companions in ſin. Is the glaſs turned upon thee, and death poſting towards thee, to put an end to all thy time, and lay thee where thou muſt dwell for ever; and yet canſt thou ſit tipling and prating away thy time, as if this were all that thou hadſt to do with it? O what a wonder of ſottiſhneſs and ſtupidity is a hardned ſinner, that can live ſo much below his reaſon! The ſenſleſs neglect of thy ſouls concerment, and greater matters, is the great part of thy ſin, more than the drunkenneſs it ſelf.

§. 30. 7. How baſe a Price doſt thou ſet upon thy Saviour and Salvation, that will not forbear ſo much as a cup of drink for them? The ſmalneſs of the thing ſheweth the ſmalneſs of thy Love to God, and the ſmalneſs of thy regard to his word and to thy ſoul. Is that loving God as God, when thou loveſt a cup of drink better! Art thou not aſhamed of thy Hypocriſie, when thou ſaiſt thou loveſt God above all, when thou loveſt him not ſo well as thy Wine and Ale! Surely he that loveth him not above Ale, loveth him not above all! Thy choice ſheweth what thou loveſt beſt, more certainly than thy tongue doth. It is the diſh that a man greedily eateth of that he loveth, and not that which he commendeth but will not meddle with. God tryeth mens love to Him by their keeping his commandments: It was the aggravation of the firſt ſin, that they would not deny ſo ſmall a thing as the forbidden fruit, in obedience to God! And ſo it is of thine, that wilt not leave a forbidden cup for him! O miſerable wretch! doſt thou not know that thou canſt not be Chriſts Diſciple, if thou forſake not all for him, and hate not even thy life in compariſon of him, and wouldſt not rather dye than forſake him, Luk. 14. 26, 33. And art thou like to lay down thy life for him that wilt not leave a cup of drink for him? Canſt thou burn at a ſtake for him, that canſt not leave an ALE-houſe, or vain company or exceſs for him! What a ſentence of condemnation doſt thou paſs upon thy ſelf; Wilt thou ſell thy God and thy ſoul for ſo ſmall a matter as a cup of drink? Never delude thy ſelf, to ſay I hope I do not ſo, when thou knoweſt that God hath told thee in his word, that Drunkards ſhall not inherit the Kingdom of God: 1 Cor. 6. 10. Nay God hath commanded thoſe that will come to Heaven, to have no familiarity with thee upon earth, no not ſo much as to eat with thee! 1 Cor. 5. 11. Read what Chriſt himſelf ſaith, Mat. 24. 48, 49, 50, 51. But if that evil ſervant ſhall ſay in his heart My Lord delayeth his coming, and ſhall begin to ſmite his fellow ſervants, and to eat and to drink with the drunken, the Lord of that ſervant ſhall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour when he is not aware of, and ſhall cut him aſunder and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites: There ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth. Read Deut. 29. 19, 20. If when thou heareſt the words of Gods curſe thou bleſs thy ſelf in thy heart and ſay, I ſhall have peace, though I walk in the imagination of my heart to add drunkenneſs to thirſt: The Lord will not ſpare that man, but then the anger of the Lord and his jealouſie ſhall ſmoak againſt him, and all the curſes that are written in this Book ſhall lye upon him, and the Lord ſhall blot out his name from under Heaven, and the Lord ſhall ſeparate him to evil. Thou ſeeſt here how God will ſpice thy Cups.

Joh. 14. 15. 1 Joh. 5. 2, 3.

§. 31. 8. Thou art the ſhame of humane nature: Thou repreſenteſt man in the likeneſs of a Beaſt, and worſe: As if he were made but inſtead of a Barrel or a ſink: Look on a drunkard filthing and ſpewing and reeling and bawling, and ſee if he be not uglier than a bruit? Thou art a ſhame to thy own Reaſon, when thou ſheweſt the world, that it cannot ſo much as ſhut thy mouth, nor prevail with thee in ſo ſmall a thing. Wrong not Reaſon ſo much as to call thy ſelf Rational; and wrong not mankind ſo much as to call thy ſelf a man: Non homo ſed amphora, ſaid one of Benoſus the drunken Emperor when he was hanged: It is a barrel and not a man.

And a ſhame to thy family: As it ſaid that Cicero's Son proved a drunkard, to whom he directed his Book de officiis which was made his fathers reproach.

§. 32. 9. Thou deſtroyeſt that Reaſon which is the Glory of thy Nature, and the natural part of the Image of God upon thy mind: If thou ſhouldſt deface the Kings Arms or Image in any publick place, and ſet in the ſtead of it the image of a dog, would it not be a Traiterous contempt? How much worſe is it to do thus by God? If thou didſt mangle and deform thy body, it were leſs in this reſpect; for it is not thy body but thy ſoul that is made after the Image of God: Hath God given thee Reaſon for ſuch high and excellent ends and uſes, and wilt thou dull it and drown it in obedience to thy throat? Thy Reaſon is of higher value than thy houſe or land or money, and yet thou wilt not caſt them away ſo eaſily! Had God made thee an ideot, or mad and lunatick, thy caſe had been to be pitied, but to make thy ſelf mad and deſpiſe thy man hood: deſerveth puniſhment. It's the ſaying of Baſil; Involuntary madneſs deſerveth compaſſion, but voluntary madneſs, the ſharpeſt whips. Prov. 19. 29. Judgments are prepared for ſcorners, and ſtripes for the fools back: Eſpecially for the voluntary fool: He that will make himſelf a beaſt or a mad-man, ſhould be uſed by others like a beaſt or a mad-man whether he will or not.

§. 33. 10. Thou makeſt thy ſelf unfit for any thing, that is good. O how unfit art thou to read or hear or meditate on the Word of God! how unfit to pray? how unfit to receive the Holy Sacrament? what a dreadful thing is it to think of a Drunken man ſpeaking to God in Prayer? Thy beſt poſture till thou art ſober is to be aſleep: For then thou doſt leaſt hurt, and thou art made uncapable of doing good; yea and of receiving any good from others? Thou art not ſo much as capable of reproof or council; He that ſhould caſt Pearls before ſuch a Swine, and offer to ſpeak to thee for the good of thy ſoul, would but diſhonour the Name and Word of God. As it is ſaid of a drunkard, that when one rebuked him, ſaying, Art thou not aſhamed to be thus drunken, replyed, Art thou not aſhamed to talk to a man that is drunken? It is a ſhame to the man that would cure thee by Reaſon, when thou haſt thrown away thy Reaſon. And if thou have but a merry cup, and thinkeſt thy ſelf the fitter for thy duty, yea if thou do it well, as to the outward appearance, as the principle is falſe and baſe, ſo thou deſerveſt blame for caſting thy work upon ſo great a hazzard. As Sophocles ſaid of an Orator that wrote well when he was half drunken, Though he did it well, he did it ignorantly and in uncertainty: For thy levity weakneth thy judgement, and thou doſt the good thou doſt but at a venture; as a Paſſionate

Of drunken Prieſts I am loth to ſpeak: but pray ſuch to read Iſa. 52. 12. & 28. 7. Mic. 2. 11. 1 Tim. 3. 3, 8. Iſa. 56. 11, 12. Lev. 10. 9. Jer. 35. Ezek. 44. 21. Matth. 24. 49. 1 Theſ. 5. 7. Gal. 5. 21.

man may ſpeak well, but it's unlikely and uncertain; and therefore no thanks to him that it fell not out to be worſe.

§. 34. 11. Thou diſpoſeſt thy ſelf to almoſt every ſin: Drunkenneſs breaketh every one of the Commandments; by diſpoſing men to break them all. It diſableth to the duties of the firſt Commandment above all, viz. to know God, and believe and truſt and love him: It utterly unfitteth men for the holy worſhip, required in the ſecond Commandment as I have ſhewed: He that hateth the guilt of former ſin, in his Worſhippers, hateth preſent wickedneſs much more, Prov. 21. 27. The Sacrifice of the wicked is abomination: How much more when he bringeth it with a wicked mind. Idolatry, and wantonneſs, and exceſs in eating and drinking uſually diſpoſe to one another. See 1 Cor. 10. 7. Sacrifices of mirth and jovialty and gluttony and drunkenneſs are fit for Idols and Devils, but unfit for God? And therefore commonly we find that it is the drunkards and riotous people in every Town that are the great enemies to the Preaching of the Goſpel, and to all holy exerciſes, and to all that fear God, and will not be as mad as they: When there is a Sacrifice to be offered to Bacchus, and any merry meeting where potting and feaſting and dancing and roaring is to be the game, there it is that the Miniſters and the Servants of Chriſt are ſlandered and ſcorned and railed at. There it is that Helliſh reproach of Godlineſs, like the Devils Canons are let fly without controle (Though through Gods mercy they have more powder than bullet, and do little Execution). There it is that the Devil ſitteth as Preſident in his Council, plotting what to do againſt the people and wayes of Chriſt. And though it be drunken ſottiſh Council, it is the fitter for his buſineſs: for it is a bruitiſh thunderbolt that he hath to caſt; a ſenſleſs furious work that he hath to do; and no other inſtruments will ſerve his turn. He hath a plot to blow up the Reputation and honour of ſerious Godlineſs; but he that ſetteth fire to his train muſt withal blow up himſelf: And none is ſo fit for this work as a Drunkard or a ſenſual Sot: Few others will venture to caſt their own ſouls into the fire of Hell, that they may procure a little ſtinking breath to be blown into the faces of the godly: Few others would ſet their own houſes on fire, that they may trouble Gods ſervants by the ſmoak. Their very work is to do as thoſe in Dan. 3. to caſt the ſervants of Chriſt into thoſe flames, which muſt devour thoſe that caſt them in, and muſt ſcarce touch a thred of the garments, or a hair of the head of thoſe for whom it was prepared: And who would do this, that knew what he did, and were well in his wits: Muſt he not be firſt made drunk that doth it? Alſo drunkenneſs diſpoſeth you to ſwearing and blaſpheming and perjury and ſpeaking contemptuouſly and unreverently of God, and to ſpeak prophanely and jeſtingly of the Scripture: And thus fools make a mock of ſin, Prov. 14. 9. You are good for none of the holy exerciſes of the Lords day: That's the day that you muſt defile with your filthy ſin: The day in which God ſendeth abroad his gracious invitations and the Devil his wicked incitations: In which God giveth moſt of his Grace, and the Devil infecteth moſt with ſin: In which God is beſt ſerved by his ſincere ones, and the Devil is moſt ſerved by his impious ones. And you diſpoſe your ſelves to ſin againſt your Governors: You have no hold of tongue or action when you are drunken: How many in their Drunkenneſs have reproached and abuſed Father and Mother; and ſpoken Treaſon againſt their King, or reviled Magiſtrates and Superiors: And perhaps attempted and done miſchief as well as ſpoken it? If you are Superiours, how unfit are you to judge or govern? Is it not lawful for any to appeal from you as the Woman did from Philip drunk, to Philip ſober? You will be apter to abuſe your inferiors than well to govern them. Alſo Drunkenneſs deſtroyeth civility, juſtice and charity. It inflameth the mind with anger and rage: It teacheth the tongue to curſe and rail and ſlander: It makes you unfaithful and uncapable of keeping any ſecret, and ready to betray your chiefeſt friend, as being maſter neither of your mind or tongue or actions. Drunkenneſs hath made men commit many thouſand murders: It hath cauſed many to murder themſelves, and their neareſt relations: Many have been drowned by falling into the water, or broke their necks with falling from their Horſes, or dyed ſuddenly by the ſuffocation of nature: It draweth men to idleneſs, and taketh them off their lawful calling: It maketh a multitude of thieves, by breeding neceſſity, and emboldening to Villany. It is a principle cauſe of luſt and filthineſs, and the great maintainer of whoredoms; and taketh away all ſhame and fear and wit, which ſhould reſtrain men from this or any ſin: What ſin is it that a drunken man may not commit? no thanks to him that he forbeareth the greateſt wickedneſs! Cities and Kingdoms have been betrayed by Drunkenneſs: Many a drunken Garriſon hath let in the enemy. There is no confidence to be put in a drunken man: Nor any miſchief that he is ſecure from.

Gluttons and Drunkards and Luſtful ſenſualiſts, are prepared for Atheiſm, Infidelity and any impious conceit. For their wits are buried in the dunghil of their guts, & drowned in the excrementitious humidity of their brains: (ubi oculus ſiccus clarus intellectus): and the vapours & fumes of their boiling luſts, do ſo intoxicate and cloud their brains, that they have little uſe of their reaſon except to contrive the ſervice of their guts and luſts. Lege Baſilii Homil. in Ebriet. & Lux. Vide ipſe ex taberna duos ſemi captos vino egreſſos, vix oboli cauſa, ſe mutuo uno eodemque gladio confeciſſe; & quidem extracto his è percuſſo corpore, præ alterum feriendi furore: Itaque momento temporis ambo exanimes corruerunt. Joſ. Acoſta de proc. Ind. ſalut. l. 3. c. 21. p. 332.

12. Laſtly, Thou ſinneſt not alone, but tempteſt others with thee to perdition. It is the great crime of Jeroboam that he made Iſrael to ſin: The Judgement of God determineth thoſe men to death, that not only do wickedneſs, but have pleaſure in them that do it, Rom. 1. 32. And is not this thy caſe? Art thou not Satans inſtrument to tempt others with thee, to waſt their Time, and neglect their ſouls, and abuſe God and his creatures? Yea ſome of you glory in your ſhame, that you have drunk down your companions, and carried it away (the honour of a ſponge or a tub, which can drink up or hold liquor as well as you.) And what is that man worthy of, that would thus transform himſelf and others, into ſuch Monſters of iniquity.

§. 55. IV. Next let us hear the drunkards excuſes, (for even drunkenneſs will pretend to Reaſon, and men will not make themſelves mad without an argument to juſtifie it.) 1. Saith the Tipler, I take no more than doth me good: You allow a man to eat as much as doth him good, and why not to drink as much? No man is fitter to judge this than I, For I am ſure I feel it do me good.

Anſw. What good doſt thou mean man! Doth it fit thee for holy thoughts or words or deeds? Doth it help thee to live well, or fit thee to dye well? Art thou ſure that it tendeth to the health of thy body? Thou canſt not ſo ſay without the imputation of folly or ſelf-conceitedneſs, when all the wiſe Phyſicians in the world do hold the contrary. No it doth as Gluttony doth: It pleaſeth thee in the drinking, but it filleth thy Body with crudities, and flegm, and prepareth for many Mortal ſickneſſes: It maketh thy body like grounds after a flood, that are covered with ſtinking ſlime: Or like fenny Lands that are drowned in water, and bear no fruit: Or like grounds that have too much rain, that are diſſolved to dirt, but are unfit for uſe. It maketh thee like a leaking ſhip, that muſt be pumpt and emptied or it will ſink: If thou have not Vomits or Purges to empty thee, thou wilt quickly drown or ſuffocate thy life. As Baſil ſaith, A drunkard is like a Ship in a Tempeſt, when all the goods are caſt overboard to disburden it leſt it ſink. Phyſicians muſt pump pump thee, or disburden thee, or thou wilt be drowned: And all will not serve if thou hold on to fill it up again: For Intemperance maketh most Diseases uncurable. A Historian speaketh of two Physicians that differed in their Prognosticks about a Patient; one forsook him as uncurable, the other undertook him as certainly curable; but when he came to his Remedies, he prescribed him so strict Abstinence as he would not undergo, and so they agreed in the Issue; when one judged him incurable because intemperate, and the other curable if he would be temperate. Thou that feelest the Drink do thee Good, dost little think how the Devil hath a design in it, not only to have thy Soul, but to have it quickly; that the Mud-walls of thy Body being wash'd down may not hold it long. And I must tell thee, that thou hast cause to value a good Physician for greater Reasons than thy Life, and art more beholden to him than many others, even that he may help to keep thy Soul out of Hell a little longer, to see if God will give thee Repentance, that thou mayest escape out of the Snare of the Devil, who taketh thee captive at his Will, 2 Tim. 2. 25, 26. As Ælian writeth of King Antigonus, that having great respect for Zeno the Philosopher, he once met him when he was in drink, and embracing him, urged him to ask of him what he would, and bound himself with many Oaths to give it him. Zeno thanked him, and the Request he made to him was, that he would go home and vomit: To tell him that he more needed to be disburdened of his Drink, than he himself did need his Gifts. The truth is, the Good that thou feelest the Drink do thee is but the present pleasing of thy Appetite, and tickling thy Fantasie by the exhilirating Vapours. And so the Glutton and the Whoremonger and every sensual Wretch will say, that he feeleth it do him good: But God bless all sober Men from such a Good. So the Gamester feeleth the Sport do him good, but perhaps he is quickly made a Beggar by it. It is Reason and Faith, and not thy Appetite or present Feeling that must tell thee what and how much doth thee good.

Obj. 2. §. 36. Obj. 2. But I have heard some Physicians say, that it is wholsome to be drunk sometimes.

Answ. Answ. None but some Sot, that had first drunk away his own Understanding; I have known Physicians that have been Drunkards themselves, and they have been apt to plead for their own vice; but they quickly killed themselves, and all their Skill could not save their Lives from the effects of their own Bestiality, even as the Knowledge and Doctrine of a wicked Preacher, will not save his Soul, if he live contrary to his Profession. And what if the Vomiting of a Drunkard did him some good with all the harm! Are there not easier, safer, lawfuller means enough to do the same good without the harm? He is a Bruit himself, and not a Physician that knoweth no better Remedy than this. But thy Conscience telleth thee, this is but a false Excuse.

Obj. 3. §. 37. Obj. 3. But I wrong no body in my drink; the hurt is my own.

Answ. Answ. No thanks to thee if thou wrong no body. But read over the former Aggravations, and then justifie thy self in this if thou canst. It seems thou makest nothing of wronging God by Disobedience. But suppose it be no ones hurt but thy own, dost thou hate thy self? Is thy own hurt nothing to thee? What, dost make nothing of the Damning of thy own Soul? Whom wilt thou love if thou hate thy self? It is the Aggravation of this Sin, as well as Fornication, 1 Cor. 6. 18. that it is against your own Bodies, and much more as against your own Souls.

Obj. 4. §. 38. Obj. 4. But I was but merry, I was not drunken.

Answ. Answ. It were well for you if God should stand to your Names and Definitions, and take none for a Sinner that taketh not himself for one. There are several degrees of Drunkenness short of the highest degree; and if your Reason was not disturbed, yet the Excess of Drink only, and Tipling and Gulosity will prove a greater Sin than you suppose.

§. 39. Obj. 5. But I drink but a little; but my Head is weak, and a little over turneth it. Obj. 5.

Answ. Answ. If you know that before-hand, you are the more unexcusable, that will not avoid that measure which you know you cannot bear. If you knew that less Poison would kill you than another, you would be more the fearful of it, and not the less.

§. 40. Obj. 6. But I have a thirst upon me, and I take no more than will quench it. Answ.

Answ. So the Whoremonger saith, he hath a Lust upon him, and he taketh no more than will quench it: And the malicious Man, that beateth you or undoes you may say, that he hath a Passion upon him, and he taketh no more revenge on you than satisfieth it. But if you add Drunkenness to Thirst, read your Doom again, Deut. 29. 19. If it be a natural moderate Thirst, Moderation will satisfie it: If it be a diseased thirst, as in a Feavor or Dropsie, the Physician must direct you in the Cure: And small Drink is fitter for a thirst than strong; but if it be the thirst of a Drunkard's raging appetite that hath been used to be pleased, and therefore is loth to be denied, you are best quench it upon better and cheaper Terms, than the displeasing God, and damning your Souls, lest you find it more troublesome in the Flames of Hell, to want a drop of water for your Tongues, than it would have been to have bridled a beastly Appetite: And lest you then cry out as Lysimachus when thirst forced him to yield to the Scythians, for a little Drink, Quam brevis voluptatis gratia, quantum fœlicitatis amisi? For how short a Pleasure did I lose so great Felicity? Take heed of reasoning your Souls into Impenitence.

Obj. 3.

Bibendi consuetudo augit aviditatem. Plin.

Perinde est vinolenti am bibendo velle sedare, atque ignem materia apposita pergere extingere: Nam quod naturæ appetitioni datur moderatam est, at vitiosa & præter naturam libido, nullo expletur. Acosta ub. sup.

Quest. 1. It is not lawful to drink when we are thirsty, and know of no harm that it is like to do us, seeing Thirst telleth us what the Stomack needeth. Quest. 1.

Answ. Answ. A Beast may do so, that hath no higher faculty to guide him. And a Man may take in the Consideration of his Thirst to guide his Reason in judging of the due Quantity and Time; but not otherwise: A Man must never drink to please his appetite either against Reason, or without it: And no Man must so captivate his Reason to Sense, as to think that his Appetite is his principal Rule or Guide herein; nor be so bruitish as to know no otherwise what doth him good or hurt, but by his present Feeling: Sometime true Reason may tell a Man, that thirst is a sign that Drink is needful to his Health, and then he may take it. Sometime (and commonly with blockish People) pleasing a thirst may hurt their Health, and they are so foolish that they do not know it, either because they are ignorant of such things, or because their Appetite maketh them unwilling to believe it, till they feel it, and because they judge only by the present Effects; so a Man may kill himself with drinking cold Drink in a heat, in some Feavors, in a Dropsie, a Cough, a Cachexy, &c. And Excess doth insensibly vitiate the Blood and heap up matter of many Diseases, which are incurable before the Sot will believe that Drinking when he was thirsty did him any harm. If really it will do no harm, you may drink when you are thirsty (because it will do good.) But if it will quench natural Heat, and hinder Concoction, and breed Diseases thro' unseasonableness, or ill Quality, or Excess, it is neither your Thirst, nor your sottish Ignorance of the Hurt, that will excuse you from the Sin, or prevent the Coughs, Stone, Gout, Cholick, Swellings, Palsies, Agues, Feavors or Death, which it will bring.

Queſt. 2. Queſt. 2. Is it not lawful to drink a health ſometimes when it would be ill taken to refuſe it, or to be uncovered while others drink it?

Anſw. Anſw. Diſtinguiſh between, 1. Drinking meaſurably as you need it, and unmeaſurably when you need it not. 2. Between the foreſeen effects; and doing it ordinarily, or when it will do hurt, or extraordinarily when it will more prevent hurt. And ſo I conclude.

1. It is unlawful to drink more than is good for your health, by the provocation of other men.

2. It is unlawful to do that which tempteth and encourageth others to drink too much. And ſo doth the cuſtom of pledging healths, eſpecially when it is taken for a crime to deny it.

3. Therefore the ordinary pledging or drinking of ſuch healths is unlawful; becauſe it is the ſcandalous hardening of others in their ſin unto their ruine.

4. But if we fall in among ſuch furious Beaſts as would ſtab a man if he did not drink a health, it is lawful to do it to ſave ones life, as it is to give a Thief my Purſe: Becauſe it is a ſin not ſimply evil of it ſelf to drink that Cup, but by accident, which a greater accident may preponderate.

5. Therefore any other Accident beſide the ſaving of your life, which will really preponderate the Hurtful accident, may make it Lawful: As poſſibly in ſome caſes and Companies the offence given by denying it may be ſuch as will do more hurt far, than yielding would do. (As if a malignant company would lay ones Loyalty to the King upon it.) &c.

6. Chriſtian prudence therefore (without carnal complyance) muſt be always the preſent decider of the caſe, by comparing the good and the evil effects.

7. To be bare when others lay the honour of the King or Superiors upon it, is a Ceremony that on the aforeſaid Reaſon may be complyed with.

8. When to avoid a greater evil we are extraordinarily put on any ſuch Ceremony, it is meet that we joyn ſuch words (where we have liberty) as may prevent the ſcandal, or hardening any preſent in ſin.

9. And it is a duty to avoid the company which will put us upon ſuch inconveniences, as far as our Calling will allow us.

V. But becauſe it is the Drunkards heart or will that needs perſwaſion, more than his underſtanding needs Direction, I ſhall before the Directions yet endeavour his fuller convittion, if he will but read and conſider ſoberly, (if ever he be ſober) theſe following Queſtions, and not leave them till he anſwer them to the ſatisfaction of his own Conſcience.

Queſt. 1. §. 42. Queſt. 1. Doſt thou know that thou art a man? and what a man is? Doſt thou know that Reaſon differenceth him from a beaſt that is ruled by Appetite and hath no Reaſon? If thou do, let thy Reaſon do its office, and do not drown it, or ſet the beaſt above it.

Queſt. 2. §. 43. Queſt. 2. Doſt thou believe that there is a God that is the Governour of the world, or not? If not, tell me how thou cameſt to be a man? And how came thy tongue and palate to taſte thy drink or meat, any more than thy finger. Look on thy finger and on thy tongue and thou canſt ſee no reaſon why one ſhould taſte and not the other? If thou live in midſt of ſuch a world, which he hath made and daily governeth, and yet believeſt not that there is a God, thou art ſo much worſe already than drunk or mad, that it is no wonder if thou be a Drunkard. But if thou do believe indeed that there is a God, hear further thou ſtupid beaſt and tremble! Is he the Governour of Heaven and Earth, and is he not worthy to be the Governor of thee? Is all the World at his diſpoſe? and is he not worthy to diſpoſe of thy throat and appetite? Are Crowns and Kingdoms, Heaven and Hell at his diſpoſe and will, and is he not worthy to be maſter of thy Cup and Company? wilt thou ſay to him by thy practice, Go rule Sun and Moon, and rule all the world, except my Appetite and my Cup?

Queſt. 3. §. 44. Queſt. 3. Doſt thou verily believe that God is preſent with thee, and ſeeth and heareth all that is done and ſaid among you? If not, thou believeſt not that he is God! For he that is abſent and ignorant, and is not Infinite, Omnipreſent, and Omniſcient is not God: And if God be not there, thou art not there thy ſelf: For what can uphold thee and continue thy life and breath and being? But if thou believe that God is preſent, dareſt thou drink on, and dareſt thou before him waſte thy time, in prating over a Pot with thy Companions?

Queſt. 4. §. 45. Queſt. 4. Tell me, doſt thou believe that the Holy Scripture is true? If thou do not, no wonder if thou be a drunkard. But if thou do, remember that then it is true, that drunkards ſhall not inherit the Kingdom of God, 1 Cor. 6. 10. And then mark what the Scripture ſaith, Iſa. 21. 1. Woe to the Crown of Pride, to the drunkards of Ephraim, Hab. 2. 15. Woe to him that giveth his Neighbour drink, that putteſt thy bottle to him and makeſt him drunk alſo: Iſa. 5. 11. Woe to them that riſe up early in the morning that they may follow ſtrong drink, that continue till night till wine inflame them: And the Harp and the Viol and the Tabret and the Pipe and Wine are in their Feaſts, but they regard not the work of the Lord, nor conſider the operation of his hands, v. 22. Woe unto them that are mighty to drink wine, and men of ſtrength to mingle ſtrong drink: Prov. 31. 4, 5, 6. It is not for Kings to drink wine, nor for Princes ſtrong drink; leſt they drink and forget the Law, and pervert the judgement of any of the afflicted: Give ſtrong drink to him that is ready to periſh and wine to thoſe that be of heavy hearts. See Amos 6. 6. Luke 21. 34. Take heed to your ſelves, leſt at any time your hearts be over charged with ſurfeiting and drunkenneſs and cares of this life, and ſo that day come upon you unawares. Rom. 13. 13, 14. Not in gluttony and drunkenneſs, not in chambering and wantonneſs, not in ſtrife and envying, but put ye on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and make no proviſion for the fleſh to ſatisfie the luſts thereof. Prov. 20. 1. Wine is a mocker ſtrong drink is raging; and whoſoever is deceived thereby is not wiſe. Prov. 23. 29, 30, 31, 32. Who hath woe? who hath ſorrow? who hath contentions? who hath babling? who hath wounds without cauſe? who hath redneſs of eyes? they that tarry long at the wine: they that go to ſeek mixt wine. Look not thou upon the wine when it is red; when it giveth his colour in the cup: When it moveth it ſelf aright: At laſt it biteth like a Serpent and ſtingeth like an Adder. Thine eyes ſhall behold ſtrange Women, and thy heart ſhall utter perverſe things: Yea thou ſhalt be as he that lyeth down in the midſt of the Sea, or as he that lyeth upon the top of a maſt. Hoſ. 4. 11. Whoredom and wine and new wine take away the heart. Joel 1. 5. Awake ye drunkards, and weep and howle all ye drinkers of wine, &c. If thou do indeed believe the Word of God, why do not ſuch paſſages make thee tremble?

Id ſane magno Chriſtianis opprobrio eſt, Ingam Regem barbarum & idolis deditum ab ebrietate ſubditos ſibi populos cohibuiſſe; noſtros verò quos oportebat mores, quoque perditos emendare, temulentiæ incrementa tanta feciſſe. Acoſta l. 3. c. 21.

Queſt. 5. §. 46. Queſt. 5. Doſt thou conſider into how dangerous a caſe thou putteſt thy ſelf when thou art drunk or joyneſt thy ſelf with drunkards? What abundance of other ſins thou art lyable to? And in what peril thou art of ſome preſent judgement of God? Even thoſe examples in Scripture which encourage thee ſhould make thee tremble. To think that even a Noah that was drunken but once, is recorded to his ſhame for a warning unto others: How horrid

2 Sam. 11. 13. a crime even Lot fell into by the temptation of drunkenneſs? How Uriah was made drunk by a David
2 Sam. 13. 28. to have hid his ſin? How Davids ſon Amnon, in Gods juſt revenge, was murdered by his brother Abſoloms command, when his heart was merry with wine. How Nabal was ſtrucken dead by God after his drunkenneſs, 1 Sam. 25. 36, 37, 38. How King Ela was murdered as he was drinking himſelf drunk, 1 Sam. 16. 9. And how the terrible hand appeared
Dan. 5. 1. 30. writing upon the Wall to King Belſhazzar in his carouſing, to ſignifie the loſs of his Kingdoms, and that very night he was alſo ſlain. Thou ſeeſt God ſpareth not Kings themſelves, that one would think might be allowed more pleaſure: And will he ſpare thee? Prov. 31. 4, 5. It is not for Kings to drink wine, nor for Princes ſtrong drink: And is it then for thee? mark the dreadful fruits of it, even to the greateſt, Hoſ. 7. 3, 4, 5. They make the King glad with their wickedneſs, and the Princes with their lyes: They are all Adulterers as an Oven heated——In the day of our King the Princes have made him ſick with bottles of wine: He ſtretched out his hand with ſcorners. Thou ſeeſt that be they great or ſmall, both ſoul and body is caſt by tipling and drunkenneſs into greater danger, than thou art in at Sea in a raging tempeſt. Thou putteſt thy ſelf in the way of the vengeance of God, and art not like to ſcape it long.

Queſt. 6. §. 47. Queſt. 6. Didſt thou ever meaſure thy ſin by that ſtrange kind of puniſhment commanded by God againſt incorrigible gluttons and drunkards, Deut. 21. 18, 19, 20, 21. If a man have a ſtubborn and rebellious Son, which will not obey the voice of his Father, or the voice of his Mother, and that when they have chaſtened him will not hearken to them, Then ſhall his Father and his Mother lay hold on him, and bring him out to the Elders of his City, and to the gate of his place: And they ſhall ſay unto the Elders of his City, This our Son is ſtubborn and rebellious; he will not obey our voice, he is a Glutton and a Drunkard: And all the men of his City ſhall ſtone him with ſtones, that he dye: So ſhalt thou put away evil from among you, and all Iſrael ſhall hear and fear. Surely Gluttony and Drunkenneſs are heynous crimes, when a mans own Father and Mother were bound to bring him to the Magiſtrate to be put to death, if he will not be reformed by their own correction? And you ſee here that youth is no excuſe for it, though now it is thought excuſable in them.

Queſt. 7. §. 48. Queſt. 7. Doſt thou think thy drink is too good to leave at Gods command? Or doſt thou think that God doth grudge thee the ſweetneſs of it? or rather that he forbids it thee for thy good, that thou maiſt ſcape the hurt. And tell me, Doſt thou love God better than thy drink and pleaſure, or doſt thou not? If not, thy own Conſcience muſt needs tell thee, (if thou have a Conſcience not quite ſeared) that there is no hope of thy ſalvation in that ſtate: But if thou ſay, thou doſt, will God, or any wiſe man believe thee, that thou loveſt him better, and wilt not be ſo far ruled by him, nor leave ſo ſmall a matter for his ſake? 1 Joh. 5. 3. For this is the Love of God that we keep his commandments, and his commandments are not grievous. So 2 Joh. 6.

Queſt. 8. §. 49. Queſt. 8. Doſt thou remember that thy Carkaſs muſt lye rotting in the grave, and how loathſome a thing it muſt ſhortly be? And canſt thou make ſo great a matter of the preſent ſatisfying of ſo vile a body, and dung the earth at ſo dear a rate?

Queſt. 9. §. 50. Queſt. 9. Wouldſt thou have all thy friends and children do as thou doſt? If ſo, what would become of thy eſtate? It would be a mad world if all were drunkards: Wouldſt thou have thy Wife a Drunkard? If ſhe were, thou wouldſt ſcarce be confident of her Chaſtity. Wouldſt thou have thy Servants Drunkards? If they were, they might ſet thy houſe on fire? and they would do thee little work, or do it ſo as it were better be undone. Thy houſe would be a Bedlam if all were Drunkards; and much worſe than Bedlam; for there are ſome wiſe men to govern and correct the mad ones. But if thou like it not in Wife and Children and Servants, why doſt thou continue it thy ſelf? Art thou not neareſt to thy ſelf? Doſt thou love any others better than thy ſelf? Hadſt thou rather thy own ſoul were damned than theirs? Or canſt thou more eaſily endure it? I have wondered ſometimes to obſerve ſome Drunkards very ſevere againſt the ſame ſin in their Children, and very deſirous to have them ſober! But the Reaſon is becauſe the ſobriety of their Children is no trouble to them, nor puts them to deny the pleaſure of their appetites, as their own ſobriety muſt do.

§. 51. Queſt. 10. Wouldſt thou have thy Phyſician drunk when he ſhould cure thee of thy ſickneſs? or thy Lawyer drunk when he ſhould plead thy cauſe? or the Judge when he ſhould judge it? If not, why wilt thou be drunken when thou ſhouldſt ſerve thy God, and mind the buſineſs of thy ſoul? If thou wouldſt not have thy ſervant be potting in an Ale-houſe when he ſhould be about thy work; wilt thou ſit potting and prating there, when thou haſt a thouſand fold greater work to do, for thy everlaſting happineſs? Qu. 10.

§. 52. Queſt. 11. If one do but lame or ſpoil thy Beaſt and make him unfit for thy ſervice, wouldſt thou be pleaſed with it? And wilt thou unfit thy ſelf for the ſervice of God, as if thy work were of leſs concernment than thy Beaſts? Qu. 11.

§. 53. Queſt. 12. Would it pleaſe you if your ſervants poured all that drink in the Chanel? If not, I have before proved to thee that it ſhould diſpleaſe thee more to pour it into thy belly: For thou wilt find at laſt, that it will hurt thee more? Qu. 12.

§. 54. Queſt. 13. What reliſh hath thy pleaſant liquor the next day? will it then be any ſweeter than wholeſome abſtinence? All the delight is ſuddenly gone: There is nothing left but the ſlime in thy guts, and the Ulcer in thy Conſcience, which cannot be cured by all thy Treaſure, nor palliated long by all thy pleaſure. And canſt thou value much ſo ſhort delights? As all thy ſweet and merry cups, are now no ſweeter than if they had been Wormwood; ſo all the reſt will quickly come to the ſame end and reliſh! As Plato ſaid of his ſlender ſupper compared to a Rich mans feaſt, Yours ſeemeth better to night, but mine will be better to morrow: So thy Conſcience telleth thee, that Temperance and holy obedience will be better to morrow, and better to Eternity, tho' gluttony and drunkenneſs ſeem better Now. Qu. 13.

§. 55. Queſt. 14. Doſt thou conſider how dear thou payeſt for hell? and buyeſt damnation at a harder rate than ſalvation might be attained at. What ſhame doth it coſt thee? what ſickneſs is it like to coſt thee? what painful vomitings or worſe doſt thou undergoe? How much doſt thou ſuffer in thy eſtate? And is Hell worth all this adoe? Qu. 14.

§. 56. Queſt. 15. Doſt thou not think in thy heart, that ſober temperate Godly men do live a more quiet and comfortable life than thou? (as well as an honeſter and ſafer life.) If thou do think ſo, why wilt thou not imitate them? It is as free for thee to chooſe as them. If thou think they do not, Conſider that as they have none of thy forbidden Cups, ſo they have none of thy thirſt or deſire after them? Abſtinence is ſweeter much to them. They have none of thy ſowre belchings or Vomitings, nor ſhame, nor danger, nor thy reckoning to pay: They have none of thy gripes of Conſcience, and terrors under the guilt of ſuch a ſin! They live in the Love of God and the forethoughts of Heaven, while thou Qu. 15.

art in the Ale-houſe: And doſt thou not think in thy Conſcience, that to a heart that is ſuited and ſanctified thereto, it is not a ſweeter thing to live in the Love of God, than in the love of thy ſenſuality? Dareſt thou ſay (whatever thou thinkeſt) that God and Heaven and Holineſs are not ſo lovely and fit to be delighted in, as a Cup of Wine or Ale? ſure thou dareſt not ſay ſo! If it were for no more than the different Aſpects of Death and Eternity to them and to thee, I account thy life in the midſt of thy pleaſures incomparably more ſad than theirs. They look at Death as at the time of hope, and the day of their deliverance, as the Aſſizes are to the innocent or pardoned man: But thou lookeſt on Death with terror as the end of all thy mirth, as the Guilty Malefactor thinketh on the Aſſizes: (Or elſe with ſenſeleſneſs or preſumption which is worſe.) They look unto Eternity as their endleſs unſpeakable felicity: And thou dareſt ſcarce ſeriouſly think of it, without the deluſory eaſe of unbelief or of falſe hopes. Thou dareſt not ſeriouſly look beyond death, unleſs thro' the Devils cheating ſpectacles. I tell thee, a ſober Godly man would not have thy merry life (as thou accounteſt it) one day, for all thy wealth, or for any worldly gain? He had rather lye in Jail, or ſit in the Stocks that while, than Drink and Swagger with thee? Keep thy merriment to thy ſelf, for no wiſe man or good man will be thy partner. If thou wert their enemy they would not wiſh thee ſo much miſery as thou chooſeſt. As the ſtory goeth of a Confeſſor that hearing many confeſs the ſin of Drukenneſs, would needs try himſelf what pleaſure was in it: And having Vomited and ſlept it out, the next Drunkard that came to him in Confeſſion, he appointed him for Penance to be drunk again, and told him, he need no ſharper penance.

Qu. 16. 1 Theſ. 5. 7. They that are drunken, are drunken in the night.

§. 57. Queſt. 16. How cometh it to paſs that thy very Pride doth not cure thy drunkenneſs? Pride is ſo natural and deep rooted a ſin, that I dare ſay thou haſt not overcome it, if thou have not overcome the ſenſuality: And is thy Credit no more worth with thee? wilt thou for a Cup of Drink be made the talk of the Country, the ſcorn of the Town, the ſport and laughing game of Boys, and the pity of ſober perſons? If thou be a great man among them, and they dare not ſpeak it to thy face, and thou heareſt not what they ſay of thee, yet in private they make bold with thy name, to talk of thee as of a filthy Beaſt? Canſt thou think that ſober men do honour thee? What honour may accidentally be due to thee from thy place, is another matter; but thou takeſt a courſe to keep them from honouring thee for thy worth; and doſt thy worſt to bring thy rank and place into contempt. It's ſaid that in Spain a Drunkard is not allowed for a witneſs againſt any man: And ſure he is not a credible perſon. Regard thy reputation, if thou careſt not for thy ſoul.

Qu. 17.

§. 58. Queſt. 17. Doſt thou not love the fleſh it ſelf which thou ſo much pampereſt? If thou do, why wilt thou drown it, and choak it up with flegm and filth? Ask Phyſicians whether drunkenneſs be whol ſome. Mark how many drunkards live to be old: Ennius podagricus is a Proverb: The ſickneſs is longer than the ſweetneſs of the cup. If thou feareſt not Hell, fear the Conſumption, Gout or Dropſie.

Qu. 18.

§. 59. Queſt. 18 Why ſhouldſt thou not take more pleaſure in the company of thy family, and in the company of people fearing God; that worſhip him in truth of heart, and will do their beſt to help to ſave thee? Canſt thou give any reaſon for it, why ſuch company ſhould not be more pleaſant to thee, than thy pot-companions? and why it ſhould not be pleaſanter to talk of the way to Heaven, and the pardon of ſin, and the love of Chriſt, and of eternal happineſs, than to prate a deal of idle non-ſenſe in an Ale-houſe? There is no Reaſon for it but thy filthy mind, that is ſuitable to vanity and ſin, and unſuitable to all that's wiſe and holy.

§. 60. Queſt. 19. What if thou ſhouldſt dye in a drunken fit? Wouldſt thou not thy ſelf take thy caſe to be deſperate or dangerous? Why, it may be ſo for ought thou knoweſt: It hath been the caſe of many a one. But if it be not ſo, yet to dye a drunkard is as certain damnation, as to dye in drunkenneſs: If the guilt of the ſin be on thee, it is all one when it was committed, whether lately or long ago? For unpardoned ſin is moſt ſure damnation: And it is certainly unpardoned, till it be truly Repented of: And it is not Repented of if it be not forſaken: And then bethink thee how thou wilt review theſe days, and what thoughts thou wilt then have of thy Cups and Company! Qu. 19.

§. 61. Queſt. 20. Art thou willing to part with thy ſin, or art thou not? Speak man, Art thou willing? If thou be not willing, bear witneſs againſt thy ſelf that thou doſt not Repent of it, and that thou art not forgiven it, and therefore that thou art at preſent a ſlave of the Devil, and if thou dye ſo, as ſure to be damned as thou art alive. Bear witneſs, that thou waſt not kept from grace, and conſequently from Heaven, againſt thy will; but by thy wilful refuſal of it; and that it was not becauſe thou couldſt not be ſaved that thou goeſt to Hell, but becauſe thou wouldſt not? Sure even now thou canſt not have the face to deny any of this, if thou confeſs that thou art not willing to amend. Take thy will in ſin, if Gods will muſt be violated, which tendered thee mercy, and commanded thee to accept it; but be ſure that God will have his will in puniſhing thee. Qu. 10.

§. 62. But I ſuppoſe that thou wilt ſay thou art willing to amend and leave thy ſin, but thou canſt not do it, becauſe fleſh is frail, and company is tempting, and God giveth thee not grace: Willing thou art, but yet unable: But ſtay a little! God will not ſo let thee carry it, and ſmooth over thy wickedneſs with a lye. Thy meaning, if thou ſpeak out, is not that thou art willing, preſently and heartily willing to forſake thy ſin, but only that thou wouldſt be willing, if the drink and the Devil did not tempt thee? And ſo thou wilt be willing to love God and be ſaved, when nothing ſhall tempt thee to the contrary! And wouldſt thou thank thy Wife for ſuch a willingneſs to forſake adultery when no body will tempt her to it? or thy ſervant to do thy work when he hath nothing to tempt him to idleneſs or neglect? Judge by this what thanks thou deſerveſt of God for ſuch a willingneſs? But dally not with God, and mock not thy Conſcience but ſpeak to the queſtion, Art thou willing to give over thy company, and tipling from this day forward or art thou not? Take heed what thou ſaiſt: If thou ſay, No, God may ſay Nay to all thy cryes for mercy in the day of thy miſery and diſtreſs. But if ſtill thou ſay that thou art willing, but not able, I will convince thee of thy falſhood.

§. 63. Queſt. 1. Tell me then, what force is uſed to make thee ſin againſt thy Will? Waſt thou carried to the Ale-houſe, or didſt thou go thy ſelf? Waſt thou gagg'd and drencht? Was it poured down thy throat by violence? or didſt thou take the Cup and pour it down thy ſelf? Who was the man that held open thy mouth and poured it in? Nay if it had been thus, it had not been thy ſin; for no will, no ſin. Or did they ſet a Sword or Piſtol to thy breaſt and ſo force thee to it? If they had, that had not proved thee unwilling, but only that they forced thee to be willing. And their force is no excuſe. For God threatned Hell, and thou ſhoudſt have feared that moſt. Queſt. 1.

§. 64. Queſt. 2. Didſt thou love the Drink, or loath it when thou waſt drinking it? Didſt thou Queſt. 2.

Love

Love it againſt thy will, when love and willingneſs are all one?

Queſt. 3. §. 65. Queſt. 3. Wilt thou forbear the next time till thou art carried to it, and till it is forcibly poured down with a horn? If not, confeſs it is thy will.

Queſt. 4. §. 66. Queſt. 4. Couldſt thou not forbear, if the Judge or the King ſtood by? And canſt thou not forbear when God ſtands by? If thou wilt, thou canſt.

Queſt. 5. §. 67. Queſt. 5. Couldſt thou not forbear, if thou wert ſure to be put to death for it? If the Law hang'd all Drunkards, and the Hangman were at thy back? Surely thou couldſt. And canſt thou not then forbear if thou wilt, when God hath made it worſe than hanging, and when Death is coming to fetch thee to execution.

Queſt. 6. §. 68. Queſt. 6. Couldſt thou not forbear it in ſickneſs, if thy Phyſician required it, and told thee if thou drink it will be thy death? I doubt not but thou couldſt: If not, thou art very unworthy to live, that canſt not deny thy ſelf a Cup of drink for the ſaving of thy life: And thou art as unworthy to be ſaved, if thou wilt not do that to ſave thy ſoul, which thou wouldſt do to ſave thy preſent life.

Queſt. 7. §. 69. Queſt. 7. Yea, couldſt thou not forbear if it were to ſave the life of thy Wife, or Child, or Friend, or Neighbour? If thou kneweſt that forbearing thy forbidden Cup would ſave thy life of any one of them, couldſt thou not? Nay, wouldſt thou not do it? If not, thou telleſt the world what a Husband, what a Father, what a Friend, and what a Neighbour thou art, that wouldſt not forbear a Cup of Drink to ſave a Friend or Neighbours life: I ſhould think thee an unworthy friend, if thou wouldſt not do that much at thy friends requeſt, though there were no ſuch neceſſity lay upon it. If this be ſo, I'll never take a Drunkard for my Friend: for he would not forbear a Cup of Drink for my ſake, no not if it were to ſave my life. If thou ſay, God forbid, I would do more than that: Why then didſt thou ſay, Thou canſt not forbear? Mark how thy tongue reproves thy falſhood? And canſt thou not do that for thy own ſoul, which thou couldſt do for the life, or at the requeſt of a Friend or Neighbour.

Queſt. 8. §. 70. Queſt. 8. Couldſt thou not forbear if it were to get a Lordſhip or a Kingdom? yea, to ſave thy own eſtate, if it were all in danger, and this would ſave it? I doubt not but thou couldſt. Why then doſt thou ſay, thou canſt not do it?

Queſt. 9. §. 71. Queſt. 9. If thou wert certain that thou wereſt to dye to morrow, wouldſt thou be drunk to night? Or if thou wert ſure to dye within this Week or Month, wouldſt thou be drunk ere then? I do not believe thou wouldſt. Fear would ſo long ſhut thy mouth. Thou ſeeſt then that thou canſt forbear if thou wert but willing, and wert but awaked out of thy ſtupidity and folly.

Qu. 10. §. 72. Queſt. 10. What if thou wert ſure that there were an ounce of Arſenick or other ſuch poyſon in the Cup? Couldſt thou not then forbear it? Yes, no doubt of it: It is plain therefore that thou ſpeakeſt falſly, when thou ſaieſt that thou canſt not! And is not Gods wrath and curſe in thy Cup much worſe than poyſon?

Qu. 11. §. 73. Queſt. 11. What if thou ſaweſt the Devil ſtanding by thee and offering thee the Cup, and perſwading thee to drink it, couldſt thou not then forbear? Yes, no doubt of it. And is he not as certainly there tempting thee, as if thou ſaweſt him? Well the matter is proved againſt thee to thy own conſcience, that if thou wilt forbear, thou canſt.

Qu. 12. §. 74. Queſt. 12. But yet if thou canſt not, be think thee, whether thou canſt better bear the pains of Hell? For God is not in jeſt with thee in his threatnings. If thy thirſt be harder to bear than Hell, then chooſe that which is eaſieſt to thee? But remember hereafter that thou hadſt thy choice.

§. 75. Yet, art thou willing to let go thy ſin? (for I am ſure thou art able ſo far as thou art willing) I will take thy caſe to be as it is; that is, that thou haſt ſome half uneffectual willingneſs, or lazy wiſh which will not conquer a temptation, and that thou art ſometimes in a little better mood than at other times, and that thou loveſt thy ſin, and therefore wouldſt not leave it if thou couldſt chooſe, but thou loveſt not Hell, and therefore haſt ſome thoughts of parting with thy Cups againſt thy will, for fear of puniſhment. Theſe wiſhes and purpoſes will never ſave thee: It muſt be a renewed Nature, Loving God, and hating the ſin, that muſt make thee capable of ſalvation. But yet in the mean time it is neceſſary that thou forbear thy ſin, though it be but through fear; for thou canſt not expect elſe that the Holy Ghoſt ſhould renew thy Nature. Therefore I will give thee Directions how to forbear thy ſin moſt ſurely and eaſily, if thou be but willing, and withal to promote thy willingneſs it ſelf with the performance.

Practical Directions againſt Tipling and Drunkenneſs.

§. 76. Direct. 1. Write over thy bed and thy chamber door where thou maiſt read it every morning before thou goeſt forth, ſome Text of holy Scripture that's fit to be thy Memorandum: As 1 Cor. 6. 10. Drunkards ſhall not inherit the Kingdom of God, and Rom. 8. 13. If ye live after the fleſh, ye ſhall dye: but if by the Spirit you mortifie the deeds of the body, you ſhall live. And read it before thou goeſt out of thy doors. Dir. 1.

§. 77. Direct. 2. Alſo fall down on thy knees to God, and earneſtly beg of him to keep thee that day from temptations, and ill company, and from all thy fleſhly deſires and exceſs: and eſpecially that he would renew thy nature, and give thee a hatred of the ſin. Dir. 2.

§. 78. Direct. 3. Keep thy ſelf in the conſtant employments of thy Calling; and ſpend not one quarter of an hour in idleneſs, and allow not leiſure to thy thoughts, ſo much as to think of thy drink and pleaſures; much leſs to thy body to follow it. God hath commanded thee whoever thou art, to labour ſix days, and in the ſweat of thy brows to eat thy bread; and hath forbidden idleneſs and negligence in thy calling: Avoid this and it will help thee much. Dir. 3.

§. 79. Direct. 4. Reckon not upon long life, but think how quickly death will come, and that for ought thou kneweſt thou maiſt dye that day, and how dreadful a caſe it would prove to thee to be found among Tiplers, or to dye before thou art truly converted. Think of this before thou goeſt out of thy doors! and think of it as thou art going to the Ale-houſe: Look on the Cup and the Grave together: The duſt of thoſe bones will be wholſome Spice to thee. Remember when thou ſeeſt the Wine or Ale, how unlike it is to that black and loathſome liquor which thy blood and humours will be turned into, when thou art dead. Remember that the hand that taketh the Cup muſt ſhortly be ſcattered bones and duſt, and the mouth that drinketh it down, muſt ſhortly be an ugly hole: and the Pallate, and Stomach, and Brain that are delighted by it, muſt ſhortly be ſtinking puddle: and that the Graves of Drunkards are the Field or Garden of the Devil, where Corpſe are ſowed to riſe at the reſurrection to be fewel for Hell. Dir. 4.

§. 80. Direct. 5. When thou are tempted to the Ale-houſe, call up thy Reaſon, and remember that there is a God that ſeeth thee, and will judge thee, Dir. 5.

and that thou haſt an endleſs life of joy or torment ſhortly to poſſeſs, and that thou haſt ſinned thus too long already, and that without ſound Repentance thy caſe is deſperate, and that thou art far from true Repentance while thou goeſt on in ſin. Ask thy ſelf, Have I not ſinned long enough already? Have I not long enough abuſed mercy? Shall I make my caſe remedileſs, and caſt away all hope? Doth not God ſtand by, and ſee and hear all? Am I not ſtepping by death into an endleſs world? Think of theſe things, and uſe thy Reaſon if thou be a man, and haſt Reaſon to uſe.

Dir. 6. §. 81. Direct. 6. Exerciſe thy ſelf daily in Repenting for what is paſt: and that will preſerve thee for the time to come. Confeſs thy former ſin to God with ſorrow, and beg forgiveneſs of it with tears and groans: If thou make light of all that's paſt, thou art prepared to commit more: Think as thou goeſt about thy work, how grievouſly thou haſt ſinned, againſt thy knowledge and conſcience; in the ſight of God; againſt all his mercies, and how obſtinately thou haſt gone on, and how unthankfully thou haſt rejected mercy, and neglected Chriſt, and refuſed grace! Think what had become of thee if thou hadſt dyed in this caſe? and how exceedingly thou art beholden to the patience of God, that he cut thee not off, and caſt thee not into Hell; and that he hath provided and offered thee a Saviour, and is yet willing to pardon and accept thee through his Son, if thou wilt but reſolvedly return, and live in faith and holineſs. Theſe penitent thoughts and exerciſes will kill thy ſin and cure thee. Faſt and humble thy ſelf for what thou haſt done already: As the holy Apoſtle ſaith, 1 Pet. 4. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. Foraſmuch as Chriſt hath ſuffered for us in the fleſh, arm your ſelves likewiſe with the ſame mind: for he that hath ſuffered in the fleſh hath ceaſed from ſin: That he no longer ſhould live the reſt of his time in the fleſh to the luſts of men, but to the will of God: For the time paſt of our life may ſuffice us to have wrought the will of the Gentiles, when we walked in laſciviouſneſs, luſts, exceſs of wine, revellings, banquetting, abominable idolatries, wherein they think it ſtrange that you run not with them to the ſame exceſs of riot, ſpeaking evil of you: who ſhall give account to him that is ready to judge the quick and the dead.

Dir. 7. §. 82. Direct. 7. Keep from the place and company, Epheſ. 5 7, 11. Be not partakers with them. Have no fellowſhip with the unfruitful works of darkneſs, but rather reprove them. Thou canſt not deny but thou art able no do this if thou wilt. Canſt thou not ſtay at home and come not near them? If thou be willing to eſcape, run not into the ſnare.

Dir. 8. §. 83. Direct. 8. Stop at the firſt Cup: be not drawn on by little and little: As the ſluggard ſaith, Yet a little more ſleep; ſo the drunkard ſaith, yet a little more drink: I will take but one cup more: Underſtand thy due meaſure that thou maiſt know what is exceſs: To an ordinary healthful body, that doth not very much labour and ſweat, a quart in a day is enough: To cold and flegmatick perſons it is too much: The old Rule was, Prima ad ſitim, ſecunda ad hilaritatem, tertia ad voluptatem, quarta ad inſaniam. The firſt Cup is for thirſt, the ſecond for mirth, the third for ſenſual pleaſure, the fourth for madneſs. Eſpecially you that have drunk too much ſo long, ſhould rather drink leſs than other men: Your ſoul requireth it for penitence and for prevention; Your bodies require it, to cure the crudities already heaped up.

Dir 9. §. 84. Direct. 9. Avoid the tempting ceremonies of drunkards, ſuch as drinking healths, or urging others to pledge them, or drink more. Plutarch ſaith, that when Ageſilaus was made the Maſter of a Feaſt, and was to preſcribe the Laws for drinking, his Law was; If there be Wine enough give every one what he asketh for; if not enough, devide it equally; By which means none were tempted or urged to drink, and the intemperate were aſhamed to ask for more than others. As among Witches, ſo among Drunkards, the Devil hath his Laws and Ceremonies, and it's dangerous to practiſe them.

§. 85. Direct. 10. Go to thy ſinful companions to their houſes, and tell them plainly and ſeriouſly that thou repenteſt of what thou haſt done already, and that thou art aſhamed to remember it, and that now thou perceiveſt that there is a righteous God, and a day of judgment, and an endleſs puniſhment to be thought on, and that thou art reſolved thou wilt be voluntarily mad no more: and that thou wilt not ſell thy Soul and Saviour for a merry cup: And beſeech them for the ſake of Chriſt, and of their ſouls, to joyn with thee in repentance and reformation; but let them know, that if they will not, thou comeſt to take thy leave of them and art reſolved thou wilt no more be their companion in ſin, leſt thou be their companion in Hell. If thou art willing indeed to Repent and be ſaved, do this preſently and plainly; and ſtick not at their diſpleaſure or reproach: If thou wilt not, ſay thou wilt not, and ſay no more thou canſt not; but ſay, I will keep my ſin and be damned: For that's the Engliſh of it. Dir. 10.

§. 86. Direct. 11. Suppoſe when the Cup of exceſs is offered thee, that thou ſaweſt theſe words [Sin and Hell] written upon the Cup, and ſaweſt the Devil offering it thee, and urging thee to drink, and ſaweſt Chriſt bleeding on the Croſs, and calling to thee, O drink not that which coſteth ſo dear a price as my blood. Strongly imprint this ſuppoſition on thy mind: And it is not unreaſonable: For certainly ſin is in thy Cup, and Hell is next to ſin; and it is the Devil that puts thee on, and it's Chriſt unſeen that would diſſwade thee. Dir. 11

§. 87. Direct. 12. Suppoſe that there were mortal poyſon in the Cup that is offered thee: Ask thy ſelf, Would I drink it if there were poyſon in it? If not, why ſhould I drink it when ſin is in it, and Hell is near it? And the ſuppoſition is not vain. It's written of Cyrus, that when Aſtyages obſerved that at a Feaſt he drank no Wine, and asked him the reaſon, he anſwered, becauſe he thought there was poyſon in the cup: for he had obſerved ſome that drunk out of it, loſt their ſpeech or underſtanding, and ſome of them vomited, and therefore he feared it would poyſon him: However it's poyſon to the ſoul. Dir. 12.

§. 88. Direct. 13. Look ſoberly upon a drunken man, and think whether that be a deſirable plight for a wiſe man to put himſelf into. See how ill-favouredly he looks, with heavy eyes, and a flabbering mouth, ſtinking with drink or vomit, ſtaggering, falling, ſpewing, bawling, talking like a mad man, pitied by wiſe men, hooted at by Boys; and madly reeling on towards Hell. And withal look upon ſome wiſe and ſober man, and ſee how compoſed and comely is his countenance and geſture; how wiſe his words, how regular his actions, how calm his mind; envied by the wicked, but reverenced by all that are impartial. And then bethink thee which of theſe it is better to be like. Saith Baſil, Drunkenneſs makes men ſleep like the dead, and wake like the ſleeping. It turneth a man into a uſeleſs, noyſome, filthy, hurtful, and devouring Beaſt. Dir. 13.

§. 89. Direct. 14. If all this will not ſerve turn, if thou be but willing, I can teach thee a cheap reſtraint, and tell thee of a medicine that is good againſt Drunkenneſs and Exceſs. Reſolve that after every Cup of exceſs thou wilt drink a Cup of the juice Dir. 14.

juyce of Wormwood, or of Carduus, or Centaury, or Germander; at leaſt, as ſoon as thou comeſt home and groweſt wiſer, that this ſhall be thy penance: And hold on this courſe but a little while, and thy appetite will rather chooſe to be without the drink, than to bear the penance. Do not ſtick at it; if thy Reaſon be not ſtrong enough for a manly cure, drench thy ſelf like a Beaſt, and uſe ſuch a cure as thou art capable of: And in time it may bring thee to be capable of a better. And I can aſſure thee, a bitter draught is a very cheap remedy to prevent a ſin.

Dir. 15. §. 90. Direct. 15. If all this will not ſerve, I have yet another remedy if thou be but Willing: Confeſs thy ſelf unfit to govern thy ſelf, and give up thy ſelf to the government of ſome other: Thy Wife, thy Parents, or thy friend: And here theſe things are to be done. 1. Engage thy Wife, or Friend to watch over thee, and not to ſuffer thee to go to the Ale-houſe, nor to drink more than is profitable to thy health. 2. Deliver thy Purſe to them, and keep no money thy ſelf. 3. Drink no more at home but what they give thee, and leave it to them to judge what meaſure is beſt for thee. 4. When thou art tempted to go to the Ale-houſe, tell thy wife or friend that they may watch thee. Even as thou wouldſt call for help if Thieves were robbing thee. 5. Give leave to thy Wife or friend to charge the Ale-ſellers to give thee no drink: And go thy ſelf when thou art in thy right mind, and charge them thy ſelf to give thee none; and tell them that thou art not thy ſelf, or in thy right wits when thou deſireſt it. If theſe means ſeem now too hard to thee, and thou wilt ſin on, and venture upon the wrath and curſe of God and upon Hell, rather than thou wilt uſe them, remember hereafter that thou waſt damned, becauſe thou wouldſt be damned, and that thou choſeſt the way to Hell to ſcape theſe troubles, and take that thou getteſt by it: But do not ſay, thou couldſt not help it, for I am ſure thou canſt do this if thou wilt. Thou wilt lock thy door againſt Thieves: Lock thy mouth alſo againſt a more dangerous Thief, that would rob thee of thy Reaſon and ſalvation. Saith Baſil, If his Maſter do but box or beat his ſervant, he will run away from the ſtroaks; and wilt thou not run away from the drink that would break thy brains and underſtanding?

Dir. 16. §. 91. Direct. 16. But the ſaving remedy is this: Read Eph. 5. 18. Study the love of God in Chriſt, and the riches of Grace, and the eternal glory promiſed to holy ſouls, till thou be in Love with God, and Heaven, and Holineſs, and haſt found ſweeter pleaſure than thy exceſs, and then thou wilt need no more Directions.

PART V.

Tit. 1. Directions againſt Fornication and all Uncleanneſs.

§. 1. THough as it is a ſin againſt another, Adultery and Fornication is forbidden in the ſeventh Commandment, and ſhould there be handled, yet as it is a ſin againſt our own bodies, which ſhould be members of Chriſt, and Temples of the Holy Ghoſt, as 1 Cor. 6. 15, 18, 19. ſo it is here to be handled among the reſt of the ſins of the ſenſes: And I the rather chooſe to take it up here, becauſe what I have ſaid in the two laſt Titles againſt Gluttony and Drunkenneſs, ſerve alſo for this. The ſame arguments and convincing queſtions, and directions, will almoſt all ſerve, if you do but change the name of the ſin: And as the Reader loveth not needleſs tediouſneſs, ſo I am glad of this means to avoid the too often naming of ſuch an odious filthy ſin, yet ſomething moſt proper to it muſt be ſpoken. And 1. I ſhall ſhew the Greatneſs of the ſin, and 2. give Directions for the cure.

§. 2. 1. There is no ſin ſo odious, but Love to it, and frequent uſing it, will do much to reconcile the very judgment to it: Either to think it lawful or tolerable and venial; to think it no ſin, or but a little ſin and eaſily forgiven. And ſo with ſome brutiſh perſons it doth in this. But 1. It is Reaſon enough againſt any ſin that it is forbidden by the moſt wiſe infallible univerſal King of all the world. The Makers will is enough to condemn it, and ſhall be enough to condemn thoſe that are ſervants of it. He that ſaid, Thou ſhalt not commit adultery. 1 Cor. 6. 9, 10. Be not deceived, neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abuſers of themſelves with mankind —— ſhall inherit the Kingdom of God. V. 15. 16, 17, 18, 19. Know ye not that your bodies are the members of Chriſt? Shall I then take the members of Chriſt, and make them the members of an harlot? God forbid. What, Know ye not that he which is joined to an harlot is one body: for two (ſaith he) ſhall be one fleſh: But he that is joyned to the Lord is one Spirit. Flee fornication: Every ſin that a man doth is without the body: but he that committeth fornication ſinneth againſt his own body. What! know ye not that your body is the Temple of the Holy Ghoſt which is in you ——— (Mark that he ſpeaketh not this to fornicators: for their bodies are not Temples of the Holy Ghoſt: But to them that by filthy Hereticks in thoſe times were tempted to think fornication no great ſin.) So Eph. 5. 3, 4, 5, 6. But fornication, and all uncleanneſs, and covetouſneſs, let it not be once named among you as becometh Saints: Neither filthineſs, nor fooliſh talking, nor jeſting —— For this ye know, that no whoremonger, nor unclean perſon, nor covetous man who is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the Kingdom of God: Let no man deceive you with vain words; for becauſe of theſe things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of diſobedience: Be not ye therefore partakers with them. Gal. 5. 19. Now the works of the fleſh are manifeſt, which are adultery, fornication, uncleanneſs, laſciouſneſs ——of the which I tell you before, as I have alſo told you in time paſt, that they which do ſuch things ſhall not inherit the Kingdom of God. 1 Theſ. 4. 3. For this is the will of God, even your ſanctification, that ye ſhould abſtain from fornication: That every one of you ſhould know how to poſſeſs his veſſel in ſanctification and honour, not in the luſt of concupiſcence, as the Gentiles which know not God. See alſo Col. 3. 5, 6. Heb. 13. 4. Marriage is honourable, and the bed undefiled: But whoremongers and adulterers God will judge. Rev. 21. 8. The abominable —— and whoremongers —— ſhall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimſtone. Rev. 22. 15. For without are dogs, and ſorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers —— Jude 7. Even as Sodom and Gomorrha and the Cities about them in like manner, giving themſelves over to fornication, and going after ſtrange fleſh, are ſet for an example ſuffering the vengeance of eternal fire. I ſhall add no more leſt I be tedious.

§. 3. 2. Beſides Scripture God hath planted in nature a ſpecial pudor and modeſty to reſtrain this ſin: And they that commit it do violate the Law of Nature, and ſin againſt a witneſs and condemner that is within them. And ſcarce any one of them ever committeth it boldly, quietly and fearleſly, till firſt they have hardened their hearts and ſeared their conſciences and overcome the light of nature, by frequent wilful ſinning. Nature hideth the obſcene parts, and teacheth man to bluſh at the mention of any thing that is beyond the bounds of modeſty. Say not that it is meer cuſtom; for the vitiated nature of man is not ſo over preciſe, nor the villany of the world ſo rare and modeſt, but before this day it had quite baniſhed all reſtraints of this ſin, above moſt others, if they could have done it, and if God had not written the Law which condemneth it, very deep in nature, with almoſt indelible Characters. So that in deſpight of the horrid wickedneſs of the earth, though mankind be almoſt univerſally inclined to luſt, yet there be univerſally Laws and Cuſtoms reſtraining it, ſo that except a very few Savages and Cannibals like beaſts, there is no Nation on the earth where filthineſs is not a ſhame, and modeſty layeth not ſome rebukes upon uncleanneſs. Ask no further then for a Law, when thy Nature it ſelf is a Law againſt it. And the better any man is, the more doth he abhor the luſts of uncleanneſs. So that among Saints, ſaith the Apoſtle, it is not to be named (that is, not without need and deteſtation) Epheſ. 5. 3. & v. 12. For it is a ſhame even to ſpeak of thoſe things that are done of them in ſecret. And when drunkenneſs had uncovered the ſhame of Noah, his Son Cham is curſed for beholding it, and the other Sons bleſt for their modeſt and reverent coveriug him.

Saith Boniface (alias Wirfrid) to the Engliſh Mercian King Ethelbald a fornicator, Opprobrium genervs noſtri patimur, ſive ad Chriſtianis ſive Paganis deveniebus, quod gens Anglorum ſi preto more cæterarum gentium, &c. binnientium equorum conſuetudine, vel rudentium aſinorum more, luxuriando & adulterando, Omnia turpiter fœdet, & confundat. Epiſt. Bonif. 10. ad Pereſrid. Salvagius Sarzanenſis Epiſcopus —— Pauli 5. juſſu Viſitationem Eccleſiarum Stiriæ, Carinthiæ & Carnioliæ inſtituerat: Qua peracta, ſex omnino Sacerdotes qui non eſſent concubinarii, in tribus illis Provinciis invenit, cum tamen magna pars ex Jeſuitarum diſciplina prodiiſſet, &c. Giraldi Apolog. pro Senatu Vener. p. 165. Mœchum in adulterio deprehenſum necato: Was a Roman Law, 12. tab.

§. 4. 3. And that God hath not put this Law into mans nature without very great cauſe, albeit the Implicite belief and ſubmiſſion due to him, ſhould ſatisfie us, though we knew not the cauſes particularly, yet much of them is notorious to common obſervation: As that if God had not reſtrained luſt by Laws, it would have made the female ſex moſt contemptible and miſerable, and uſed worſe by men than dogs are. For firſt rapes and violence would deflowre them, becauſe they are too weak to make reſiſtance: And if that had been reſtrained, yet the luſt of men would have been unſatisfied; and moſt would have grown weary of the ſame woman whom they had abuſed, and taken another; at leaſt when ſhe grew old they would chooſe a younger, and ſo the aged woman would be the moſt calamitous creatures upon earth: Beſides that luſt is addicted to variety, and groweth weary of the ſame; the fallings out between men and women, and the ſickneſſes that make their perſons leſs pleaſing, and age and other accidents, would expoſe them almoſt all to utter miſery. And men would be Law-makers, and therefore would make no Laws for their relief, but what conſiſted with their luſts and ends. So that half the world would have been ruined, had it not been for the Laws of matrimony, and ſuch other as reſtrain the luſts of men.

§. 5. 4. Alſo there would be a confuſed mixture in procreation, and no men would well know what children are their own: which is worſe than not to know their Lands or Houſes.

§. 6. 5. Hereby all natural affection would be diminiſhed or extinguiſhed: As the love of Husband and Wife, ſo the Love between Fathers and Children would be diminiſhed.

§. 7. 6. And conſequently the due education of children would be hindered, or utterly overthrown: the mothers that ſhould firſt take care of them, would be diſabled and turned away, that freſh harlots might be received, who would hate the off-ſpring of the former: So that by this means the world and all ſocieries and civility would be ruined, and men would be made worſe than brutes, whom nature hath either better taught, or elſe made for them ſome other ſupply, Learning, Religion, and civility would be all in a manner extinct, as we ſee they are among thoſe few ſavage Cannibals that are under no reſtraint: For how much all theſe depend upon education, experience telleth us: In a word this confuſion in procreation, would introduce ſuch confuſion in mens hearts, and families and all ſocieties by corrupting and deſtroying neceſſary affection and education, that it would be the greateſt plague imaginable to mankind, and make the world ſo baſe and beaſtly that to deſtroy mankind from off the earth would ſee much more deſirable. Judge then whether God ſhould have left mens Luſts unreſtrained.

§. 8. Object. But (you'll ſay) there might have been ſome moderate reſtraint to a certain number, as it is with the Mahometans, without ſo much ſtrictneſs as Chriſt doth uſe. Object.

Anſw. That this ſtrictneſs is neceſſary, and is an excellency in Gods law, appeareth thus. 1. By the greatneſs of the miſchief which elſe would follow: To be remiſs in preventing ſuch a confuſion in the world, would be an enmity to the world. 2. In that mans nature is ſo violently inclined to break over, that if the hedge were not cloſe there were no ſufficient reſtraining them; they would quickly run out at a little gap. 3. The wiſer and the better any nation or perſons are, even among the Heathens, the more fully do they conſent to the ſtrictneſs of Gods Laws. 4. The cleaneſt ſort of brutes themſelves are taught by nature to be as ſtrict in their copulations: Tho' it be otherwiſe with the meer terreſtial beaſts and birds, yet the aerial go by couples: Thoſe that are called the fowles of the Heavens, that fly in the air, are commonly taught this chaſtity by nature; as if God would not have luſt come near to Heaven. 5. The families of the Mahometans that have more wives than one, do ſhew the miſchief of it in the effects, in the hatred and diſagreement of their wives, and the great ſlavery that women are kept in; making them like ſlaves that they may keep them quiet: And when women are thus enſlaved, who have ſo great a part in the education of children, by which all virtue and civility are maintained in the world, it muſt needs tend to the debaſing and brutifying of mankind. Anſw.

§. 9. 7. Children being the preciouſeſt of all our treaſure, it is neceſſary that the ſtricteſt Laws be made for the ſecuring of their good education and their welfare. If it ſhall be treaſon to debaſe or counterfeit the Kings coyn, and if men muſt be hanged for robbing you of your goods and money, and the Laws are not thought too ſtrict that are made to ſecure your eſtates; how much more is it neceſſary that the Laws be ſtrict againſt the vitiating of mankind, and againſt the debaſement of your image on your children, and againſt that which tendeth to the extirpation of all virtue; and the ruine of all ſocieties and ſouls.

§. 10. 8. God will have a holy ſeed in the world, that ſhall bear his image of holineſs, and therefore he will have all means fitted thereunto: Bruitiſh promiſcuous generation tendeth to the production of a bruitiſh ſeed: And tho' the word preached is the means of ſanctifying thoſe that remain unſanctified from their youth; yet a holy marriage and holy dedication of children to God, and holy education of them, are the former means, which God would not have neglected or corrupted, and to which he promiſeth his bleſſing: As you may ſee, 1 Cor. 7. 14. Mal. 2. 15. Did not he make one? Yet had he the reſidue of the ſpirit: And wherefore one? That he might ſeek a godly ſeed: Therefore take heed to your ſpirit, and let none deal treacherouſly againſt the wife of his youth: For the Lord hateth putting away.

§. 11. 9. Yea luſt corrupteth the mind of the perſon himſelf, if it be not very much reſtrained and moderated. It turneth it from the only excellent pleaſure, by the force of that bruitiſh kind of pleaſure. It carrieth away the thoughts; and diſtempereth the paſſions, and corrupteth the fantaſie, and thereby doth eaſily corrupt the intellect and heart. Solomon's wives turned away his heart after other Gods: 1 Kings 11. 4. The wiſdom of Solomon preſerved him not from the power of luſt, and the deceit of women. 1 Pet. 2. 10. Fleſhly luſts that fight againſt the ſoul.

Pleaſure

Pleaſure is ſo much of the End of man, which his Nature leadeth him to deſire, that the chief thing in the world to make a man Good and Happy is to engage his heart to thoſe Pleaſures which are good, and make men Happy: And the chief thing to make him Bad and Miſerable, is to engage him in the pleaſures which make men Bad and end in Miſery. And the principal thing by which you may know your ſelves or others, what you are, is to know what your pleaſures are, or at leaſt, what you chooſe and deſire for your pleaſure. If the Body rule the Soul you are bruitiſh, and ſhall be deſtroyed: If the Soul rule the Body, you live according to true human nature and the ends of your creation. If the Pleaſures of the Body are the predominant Pleaſures which you are moſt addicted to, then the body ruleth the Soul, and you ſhall periſh as Traytors to God, that debaſe his Image, and turn man into Beaſt, Rom. 8. 13. If the Pleaſures of the Soul be your moſt predominant pleaſure, which you are moſt addicted to (tho' you attain as yet but little of it) then the Soul doth rule the Body, and you live like men: And this cannot well be till Faith ſhew the Soul thoſe higher Pleaſures in God and everlaſting Glory, which may carry it above all fleſhly pleaſures. By all this ſet together you may eaſily perceive, that the way of the Devil to corrupt and damn men, is to keep them from faith, that they may have no Heavenly Spiritual pleaſure, and to ſtrengthen ſenſuality, and give them their fill of fleſhly pleaſures to impriſon their minds that they may aſcend no higher: And that the way to ſanctify and ſave men, is to help them by faith to Heavenly pleaſure, and to abate and keep under that fleſhly pleaſure that would draw down their minds. And by this you may ſee how to underſtand the doctrine of mortification and taming the body, and abſtaining from the pleaſures of the fleſh: And you may now underſtand what perſonal miſchief Luſt doth to the Soul.

§. 12. 10. Your own Experience and conſciences will tell you, that if it be not exceedingly moderated, it unfitteth you for every holy duty! You are unfit to meditate on God, or to pray to him, or to receive his word, or ſacrament: And therefore nature teacheth thoſe that meddle with holy things to be more continent than others; which Scripture alſo ſecondeth: 1 Sam. 21. 4, 5. Such ſenſual things and ſacred things do not well agree too near.

Rev. 14. 4.

§. 13. 11. And as by all this you ſee ſufficient cauſe, why God ſhould make ſtricter Laws for the bridling of Luſt, than fleſhly luſtful Perſons like; ſo when his Laws are broken by the unclean, it is a ſin that Conſcience (till it be quite debauched) doth deeply accuſe the guilty for, and beareth a very clear teſtimony againſt: O the unquietneſs! the horrour! the deſpair that I have known many perſons in, even for the ſin of ſelf-pollution that never proceeded to fornication! And how many adulterers and fornicators have we known that have lived and died in deſpair, and ſome of them hanged themſelves! Conſcience will condemn this ſin with a heavy condemnation, till cuſtom or infidelity have utterly ſeared it.

Saith Chryſoſtom, The Adulterer even before damnation is moſt miſerable: ſtill in fear, trembling at a ſhadow, fearing, them that know, and them that know not: always in pain, even in the dark.

§. 14. 12. And it is alſo very obſervable, that when men have once maſtered Conſcience in this point, and reconciled it to this ſin of fornication, it's an hundred to one that they are utterly hardned in all abomination, and ſcarce make conſcience of any other villany whatſoever! If once fornication go for nothing, or a ſmall matter with them, uſually all other ſin is with them of the ſame account: If they have but an equal temptation to it, lying, and ſwearing, and perjury, and theft, yea and murder, and treaſon would ſeem ſmall too: I never knew any one of theſe but he was reconcileable and prepared for any villany that the Devil ſet him upon: And if I know ſuch a man, I would no more truſt him, than I would truſt a man that wants nothing but Intereſt and Opportunity to commit any heynous ſin that you can name. Though I confeſs I have known divers of the former ſort, that have committed this ſin under horrour and deſpair, that have retained ſome good in other points, and have been recovered; yet of this latter ſort, that have reconciled their Conſciences to fornication, I never knew one that was recovered, or that retained any thing of Conſcience or honeſty, but ſo much of the ſhew of it as their Pride and worldly Intereſt commanded them: and they were malignant enemies of goodneſs in others, and lived according to the unclean Spirit which poſſeſſed them. They are terrible Words, Prov. 2. 18, 19. For her houſe inclineth unto death, and her paths unto the dead: None that go unto her return again, neither take they hold on the paths of life. Age keepeth them from actual filthineſs and luſt (and ſo may Hell; for there is no fornication): but they retain their debauched ſeared Conſciences.

When an Adulterer asked Ivo whether he ſhould make a Vow againſt his ſin, he anſwered him, Adultery is as bad as perjury: If thou dare be an adulterer, thou dareſt forſwear thy ſelf. Lacrt. Herod durſt behead John, that durſt be inceſtuous.

§. 15. 13. And it is the greater ſin becauſe it is not committed alone; but the Devil taketh them by couples: Luſt enflameth luſt: And the fewel ſet together makes the greateſt flame: Thou art guilty of the ſin of thy wretched companion, as well as of thine own.

§. 16. 14. Laſtly the miſerable effects of it, and the puniſhments that in this life have attended it, do tell us how God accounteth of the ſin; It hath ruined perſons, families and Kingdoms: And God hath born his teſtimony againſt it, by many ſignal judgements, which all Hiſtories almoſt acquaint you with. As there is ſcarce any ſin that the New-teſtament more frequently and bitterly condemneth, (as you may ſee in Pauls Epiſtles, 2 Pet. 2. Jude &c.) ſo there are not many that Gods Providence more frequently purſueth with ſhame and miſery on earth: And in the latter end of the world, God hath added one concomitant Plague not known before, called commonly, the Lues Venerea, the Venereous Pox; ſo that many of the moſt bruitiſh ſort, go about ſtigmatized with a mark of Gods vengeance, the prognoſtick or warning of a heavier vengeance. And there is none of them all (that by great Repentance be not made new creatures) but leave an infamous name and memory, when they are dead, (if their ſin was publickly known.) Let them be never ſo great, and never ſo gallant, victorious, ſucceſsful, liberal, and flattered or applauded while they live, God ordereth it ſo, that Truth ſhall ordinarily prevail, with the Hiſtorians that write of them when they are dead; and with all ſober men, their names rot and ſtink, as well as their Bodies: Prov. 10. 7. The memory of the juſt is bleſſed, but the name of the wicked ſhall rot. So much of the Greatneſs of the ſin. Boniface Arch-Biſhop of Mentz writing to Ethilbald an Engliſh King that was a fornicator, Epiſt. 19. ſaith [Fornication is a reproach not only among Chriſtians, but Pagans——For in old Saxony, if a virgin had thus ſtained her Fathers houſe, or a married woman, breaking the marriage covenant had committed adultery, ſometime they force her to hang her ſelf with her own hand, and over her aſhes when ſhe is burnt, they hang the Fornicator. Sometimes they gather a band of women, they lead her about ſcourging her with rods; and cutting off her cloaths at the girdle, and with ſmall knives cutting and pricking all her body, they ſend her from Village to Village thus bloody and mangled with little wounds; And ſo more and more (incited by a zeal for chaſtity), do meet her and ſcourge her again, till they leave her either dead, or ſcarce alive; that others may fear Adultery and Luxury: And the Wineds which is the filthieſt and worſt ſort of Men, do keep the love of Matrimony with ſo great a zeal, that the woman will refuſe to live when her husband is dead. And after ſome reproofs of the fornicating King, he addeth theſe further Stories [Ceolred your Highneſs predeceſſor, as they witneſs who were preſent, he being ſplendidly banquetting with his Earls, was by the evil ſpirit that drew him to violate Gods Law, ſuddenly diſtracted in his ſin; ſo that without repentance and confeſſion, being raging mad and talking with the Devil, and abominating Gods Prieſts, he departed out of this life, no doubt to the torments of Hell. And Oſred (King of the Deiri and Bernicii) the ſpirit of luxury carried in fornication and defiling the ſacred Virgins in the Monaſteries, till ſuch time as by a vile and baſe kind of death, he loſt his glorious Kingdom, together with his youthful and luxurious life. Wherefore moſt dear ſon, take heed of the Ditch into which thou haſt ſeen others fall before thee——] Vid. Auct. Bib. Pat. To. 2. pag. 55, 56.

And how great Sufferings was laid on Prieſts, Monks and Nuns that had committed fornication, by ſeveral years impriſonment and ſcourging, ſee ib. pag. 84. in an edict of Carloman by the advice of a Council of Biſhops.

And Epiſt. 85. p. 87. Bonifac. writteth to Lulio, that he was fain to ſuffer a Prieſt to officiate, Baptize, Pray, &c. that had long ago committed fornication, becauſe there was none but he alone to be had in all the country, and he thought it better to venture that one mans ſoul than let all the people periſh, and deſireth Lullo's counſel in it. By all which we may ſee how heinous a ſin fornication was then judged.

Object. Object. But (ſay the filthy ones), did not David commit the ſin of Adultery? Did not God permit them many Wives among the Jews? How many had Solomon? Therefore this is no ſuch great ſin as you pretend: Thus every filthineſs a little while will plead for it ſelf.

Anſw. Anſw. David did ſin: And is the ſin ever the leſs for that? It's eaſier to forbear it, than undergo the tears and ſorrows which David did endure for his ſin! Beſides the bitterneſs of his Soul for it, his Son Abſalom rebelleth and driveth him out of his Kingdom, and his own Wives are openly defiled: And yet God leaveth it as a perpetual blot upon his name. Solomon's ſin was ſo great that it almoſt ruined him and his Kingdom: Tho' experience cauſed him to ſay more againſt it, than is ſaid in the Old-Teſtament by any other, yet it is a controverſy among Divines whether he was ever recovered and ſaved: and ten tribes of the twelve were therefore taken from his line, and given to Jeroboam. And is this any Encouragement to you to imitate him? Chriſt telleth you in the caſe of divorcement, that God permitted (not allowed, but forbore) ſome ſuch ſins in the Jews becauſe of the Hardneſs of their hearts, Mat. 10. 5. but from the beginning it was not ſo; but one man and one woman were conjoyned in the primitive inſtitution. And the ſpecial reaſon why plurality was connived at among the Jews, was for the fuller peopling of the Nation; they being the only covenanted People of God; and being few among encompaſſing Enemies, and being ſeparated from the people of the earth, their ſtrength and ſafety and glory lay much on their increaſed number, and therefore ſome inordinancy was connived at for their multiplication, but never abſolutely allowed and approved of. And yet fornication is puniſhed ſeverely; and Adultery with Death.

II. The Directions againſt Fornication.

Dir. 1. §. 18. Direct. 1. If you would avoid uncleanneſs, avoid the things that diſpoſe you to it, as Gluttony, or fulneſs of diet, and pampering the fleſh; Idleneſs, and other things mentioned under the next Title, of ſubduing luſt. The abating of the filthy Deſires is the ſureſt way to prevent the filthy act: which may be done, if you are but willing.

Dir. 2. §. 19. Direct. 2. Avoid the preſent Temptations: Go not where the ſnare lieth without neceſſity: Abhor the Devils bellows that blow up the fire of luſt; ſuch as enticing apparel, filthy talk, and ſights, of which more alſo under the next Title.

Dir. 3. §. 20. Direct. 3. Carefully avoid all opportunity of ſinning. Come not near the Door of her houſe, ſaith Solomon, Prov. 5. 8. Avoid the company of the perſon thou art in danger of. Come not where ſhe is: This thou canſt do if thou art willing: None will force thee: If thou wilt go ſeek for a thief, no wonder if thou be robbed. If thou wilt go ſeek fire to put in the thatch, no wonder if thy houſe be burnt. The Devil will ſufficiently play the Tempter: Thou needeſt not help him: that's his part; leave it to himſelf; It's thy part to watch againſt him: And he will find thee work; If thou watch as narrowly and conſtantly as thou canſt, it's well if thou eſcape. As thou loveſt thy ſoul, avoid all Opportunities of ſinning: Make it impoſſible to thy ſelf; Much of thy ſafety lieth in this point. Never be in ſecret company with her thou art in danger of; but either not at all, or only in the ſight of others: Eſpecially contrive not ſuch Opportunities; as to be together in the night, in the dark, or on the Lords-day when others are at Church (one of the Devils Seaſons for ſuch works) or any ſuch opportunity, leiſure and ſecreſie: For opportunity it ſelf is a ſtrong temptation: as it is the way to make a Thief, to ſet money in his way, or ſo to truſt him as that he can eaſily deceive or rob you and never be diſcovered; ſo it is the way to make your ſelf unclean to get ſuch an opportunity of ſinning, that you may eaſily do it without any probability of impediment or diſcovery from men. The chief point in all the art or watch is, to keep far enough off. If you touch the pitch you will be defiled. Whoſoever toucheth her ſhall not be innocent, Prov. 6. 29. Can a man take fire in his Boſom, and his Cloaths not be burnt? Can one go upon hot Coals and his feet not be burnt? ſo he that goeth in to his Neighbours wife, verſ. 27, 28. Bring not the fire and the Gunpowder too near. If thou canſt not keep at a diſtance, nor forbear the preſence of the bait, thou art not like to forbear the ſin.

Dir. 4. §. 21. Direct. 4. Reverence thy own Conſcience: Mark what it ſpeaketh now, for it will ſhortly ſpeak it in a more terrible manner: Hear it voluntarily; for it is terrible to hear it when thou canſt not reſiſt: Treat with Conſcience in the way while it is reconcileable: for thou knoweſt not how terrible a Tormenter it is. I doubt not but it hath given thee ſome gripes for thy very luſt, before it ever came to practice: But the ſoreſt of its gripes now, are but like the playing of the Cat with the mouſe, before the killing gripe is given. Doth no man ſee thee? Conſcience ſeeth thee: And thou art a wretch indeed if thou reverence not Conſcience more than man: As Chryſoſtom ſaith, [Suppoſe no man know the Crime but himſelf and the Woman with whom he did commit it! How will he bear the Rebukes of Conſcience; when he carrieth about with him ſo ſharp and bitter an accuſer? For no man can over-run himſelf; and no man can avoid the Sentence of this court within him: It is a tribunal not to be corrupted with money, nor perverted by flattery; for it is divine, being placed in the ſoul by God himſelf: The leſs the Adulterer now feeleth it, the more he haſteneth to the perdition of his Soul.] Doſt thou not feel a ſentence paſt within thee! A terrible ſentence, telling thee of the wrath of a revenging God? Bleſs God that it is not yet an irreverſible ſentence; but ſue out thy pardon quickly leſt it come to that. Doſt thou not feel,

feel, that thou art afraid and ashamed to pray or to addresse thy self to God? Much more afraid to think of dying, and appearing before him? If thy sin make thee ready to fly from him now, if thou knewest how, canst thou look him in the face at last; or canst thou hope to stand with comfort at his bar? Art thou fit to live in Heaven with him, that makest thy self unfit to pray to him? Even lawful procreation (as I said before) doth blush to come too near to holy Exercises: As Chrysostom saith, [Die quo liberis operam dedisti legitime, quamvis crimen illud non sit, orare tamen non audes —— Quod si ab incontaminato lecto resurgens times ad orandum accedere; quum in Diaboli lecto sis, cur horribile Dei nomen audes invocare?] Conscience is a better friend to thee than thou dost imagine when it would reclaim thee from thy sin: And will be a sharper enemy than thou canst now imagine, if thou obey it not.

Plutarchs Roman. Quest. 65. is, Why the Bridegroom is not to have any light when he first cometh to Bed to his Bride? and answereth

[Happily this was instituted to shew how sinful and damnable all unlawful company of Man and Woman together is, seeing that which is lawful and allowed, is not without some blemish and note of shame.]

Dir. 5. §. 22. Direct. 5. Suppose thou sawest written upon the door of the house or chamber where thou entrest to sin, Whoremongers and Adulterers God will judge: Heb. 13. 4. And write that, or such sentences upon thy Chamber door, or at least upon thy heart. Keep thy eye upon the terrible threatnings of the dreadful God. Darest thou sin, when vengeance is at thy back? Will not the thought of Hell-fire quench the fire of lust, or restrain thee from thy presumptuous sin? Dost thou not say with Joseph, How shall I do Gen. 39. 7. this great wickedness and sin against God? As it is written of a chast woman that being tempted by a Fornicator, wisht him first at her request to hold his finger in the fire: and when he refus'd, answer'd him, why then should I burn in Hell to satisfy you? So ask thy self, can I easilier overcome the Flames of Hell, than the flames of lust?

Dir. 6. §. 23. Direct. 6. Remember man that God stands by: If he were not there, thou could'st not be there: for in him thou livest, and movest and art: He that made the eye must see, and he that made the light and darkness, doth see as well in the dark as in the light: If thou imagine that he is absent or ignorant, thou believest not that he is God: For an absent and ignorant God, is no God. And darest thou, I say darest thou, commit such a villany and God behold thee? what! that which thou would'st be ashamed a Child should see? which thou would'st not do if a mortal man stood by? Dost thou think that thy locks, or secresie or darkness, have darkned or shut out God? Dost thou not know that he seeth not only within thy Curtains, but within thy heart? O what a hardned heart hast thou that in the sight of God, thy maker and thy judge, darest do such wickedness! Ask thy Conscience man, would I do this if I were to die to morrow, and go to God? would I do this if I saw God, yea or but an Angel in the room? If not, should'st thou do it, when God is as sure there as if thou sawest him? O remember man that he is a Holy God, and hateth uncleanness, and that he is a consuming fire? Heb. 12. 29.

Dir. 7. §. 24. Direct. 7. Suppose all the while that thou sawest the Devil opening thee the door, and bringing thee thy mate, and driving on the match, and perswading thee to the sin: What if he appeareth to thee openly to play his part, as sure as he now playeth it unseen? would not thy lust be cooled? and would not the Devil cure the disease which he hath excited in thee? why then dost thou obey him now, when he is as certainly the instigator as if thou sawest him? why man, hast thou so little Reason, that seeing and not seeing will make so great a difference with thee? what if thou wert blind, would'st thou play the Fornicator before all the company, because thou feel'st them not? when thou knowest they are there? If thou know any thing, thou knowest God is there: And thou mai'st feel by the temptation that Satan is in it. Wilt thou not be ruled by the Laws, unless thou see the King? wilt thou not fear the infection of the Plague unless thou see it? Use thy Reason for thy soul as well as for thy Body; and do in the case as thou would'st do if thou saw the Devil tempting thee, and Christ forbidding thee.

§. 25. Direct. 8. If thou be unmarried, marry, Dir. 8. if easier remedies will not serve. It is better to marry than to burn, 1 Cor. 7. 9. It is Gods Ordinance partly for this end. Marriage is honourable and the bed undefiled, Heb. 13. 4. It is a resemblance of Christs Union with his Church, and is sanctified to believers, Eph. 5. 1 Cor. 7. Perhaps it may call thee upon great troubles in the world, if thou be unready for that state (as it is with Apprentices): Forbear then thy sin at easier rates, or else the lawful means must be used though it undo thee. It's better thy Body be undone than thy Soul, if thou wilt needs have it to be one of them: But if thou be married already, thou art a monster and not a man, if the remedy prevail not with thee: But yet the other directions may be also serviceable to thee.

§. 26. Direct. 9. If less means prevail not, open Dir. 9. thy case to some able faithful Friend, and engage them to watch over thee; and tell them when thou art most endangered by the temptation: This will shame thee from the sin, and lay more engagements on thee to forbear it. If thou tell thy friend, Now I am tempted to the sin, and now I am going to it; he will quickly stop thee: Break thy secresy, and thou loosest thy opportunity. Thou canst do this if thou be willing: If ever thy Conscience prevail so far with thee, as to resolve against thy sin, or to be willing to escape, then take the time while Conscience is awake and go tell thy friend: and tell him who it is that is thy wicked companion, and let him know all thy haunts, that he may know the better how to help thee. Dost thou say, that this will shame thee? It will do so to him that it's known to: But that is the benefit of it, and that's the reason I advise thee to it, that shame may help to save thy soul. If thou go on, the sin will both shame and damn thee: and a greater shame than this is a gentle remedy in so foul and dangerous a disease.

§. 27. Direct. 10. Therefore, if yet all this will Dir. 10. not serve turn, Tell it to many, yea rather tell it all the Town than not be cured: And then the publick shame will do much more: Confess it to thy Pastor, and desire him openly to beg the Prayers of the Congregation for thy pardon and recovery. Begin thus to crave the fruit of Church Discipline thy self; so far should'st thou be from flying from it, and spurning against it as the desperate hardned sinners do. If thou say, This is a hard lesson, remember that the suffering of Hell is harder. Do not say that I wrong thee, by putting thee upon scandal and open shame: It is thou that putt'st thy self upon it, by making it necessary, and refusing all easier remedies. I put thee on it, but on supposition that thou wilt not be easilier cured: Almost as Christ puts thee upon cutting off a right hand, or plucking out a right eye lest all the Body be cast into Hell: This is not the way that he commandeth thee first to take: he would have thee avoid the need of it: but he tells thee that it's better to do so than worse; and that this is an easie suffering in comparison of Hell. And so I advise thee, if thou love thy credit, forbear thy sin in a cheaper way; but if thou wilt not do so, take this way rather than damn thy soul. If the shame of all the Town be upon thee, and the Boys should hoot after thee in the Streets, if it would drive thee from thy sin, how easie were thy suffering in comparison of what it is like to be? Concealment is Satans great advantage It would be hard for thee to ſin thus if it were but opened.

Tit. 2. Directions againſt inward filthy luſts.

Dir. 1. §. 1. Direct. 1. BEcauſe with moſt the temperature of the Body hath a great hand in this ſin, your firſt care muſt be about the body to reduce it unto a Temper leſs inclined to luſt: And here the chief remedy is faſting and much abſtinence. And this may the better be born, becauſe for the moſt part it is perſons ſo ſtrong as to be able to endure it that are under this Temptation. If your Temptation be not ſtrong, the leſs abſtinence from meat and drink may ſerve turn. (For I would preſcribe you no ſtronger Phyſick than is needful to cure your diſeaſe.) But if it be violent and leſſer means will not prevail, it's better your Bodies be ſomewhat weakened, than your ſouls corrupted and undone. Therefore in this caſe, 1. Eat no Breakfaſt nor Suppers; but one meal a day, unleſs a bit or two of Bread and a ſup or two of Water in the morning, and yet not too full a Dinner, and nothing at night. 2. Drink no Wine or ſtrong Drink, but Water if the ſtomach can bear it without ſickneſs, (and uſually in ſuch hot Bodies it is healthfuller than Beer.) 3. Eat no hot Spices or ſtrong or heating or windy meats: Eat Lettice and ſuch cooling Herbs. 4. If need require it, be often let Blood, or purged with ſuch Purges as copiouſly evacuate ſerofity, and not only irritate. 5. And oft bath in cold Water. But the Phyſician ſhould be adviſed with, that they may be ſafely done.

§. 2. If you think this courſe too dear a cure, and had rather cheriſh your fleſh and luſt, you are not the perſons that I am now directing; for I ſpeak to ſuch only as are willing to be cured, and to uſe the neceſſary means that they may be cured? If you be not brought to this, your conſcience had need of better awakening. I am ſure Chriſt ſaith that when the Bridegroom was taken from them, his Diſciples ſhould faſt, Mar. 2. 19, 20. And even painful Paul was in faſting often, 2 Cor. 6. 5. & 11. 27. and kept under his body, and brought it into ſubjection, leſt by any means when he had preached to others, himſelf ſhould become a caſt away, 1 Cor. 9 27. Act. 10. 30. & 14. 23. And I am ſure that the ancient Chriſtians that lived in ſolitude and eat many of them nothing but bread and water, or meaner fare than bread, did not think this cure too dear. Yea, ſmaller neceſſities than this engaged them in faſting, 1 Cor. 7. 5. This unclean Devil will ſcarcely be caſt out but by prayer and faſting, Mar. 6. 29. Luk. 2. 37

§. 3. And I muſt tell you that Fulneſs doth naturally cheriſh Luſt, as fewel doth the fire. Fulneſs of bread prepared the Sodomites for their filthy luſts. It's no more wonder that a ſtuffed paunch hath a luſtful fury, than that the water runs into the Pipes when the Ciſtern is full, or than it is wonder to ſee a dunghil bear weeds, or a Carrion to be full of crawling Magots. Plutarch ſpeaks of a Spartan that being asked why Lycurgus made no Law againſt Adultery, anſwered, There are no Adulterers with us: But ſaith the other, what if there ſhould be any? ſaith the Spartan, Then he is to pay an Ox ſo great, as ſhall ſtand on this ſide the River Tayget and drink of the River Eurota: ſaith the other, that is impoſſible: And ſaith the Spartan, Et quo pacto Spartæ exiſtat adulter in qua divitiæ, deliciæ, & Corporis adſcitius cultus probro habentur? & contra verecundia, modeſtiâ, ac obedientia Magiſtratibus debitæ obſervatio decori laudiq; dantur? that is, And how can there be an Adulterer at Sparta, where riches, delights and ſtrange attire or ornament are a diſgrace or reproach? and contrarily ſhamefacedneſs, modeſty and the obſervance of due obedience to Magiſtrates is an honour and praiſe? And if Rich Men think it their priviledge to fare ſumptuouſly and ſatisfie their appetites, they muſt take it for their Priviledge to feed their luſt? But God giveth no man plenty for ſuch uſes; nor is it any excuſe for eating and drinking much, becauſe you have much, no more than it would be to your Cooks to put much Salt in your meat more than in poorer mens, becauſe you have more. He that obſerveth the filthy and pernicious effects of that Gluttony which is accounted rich mens honour and felicity, will never envy them that miſerable happineſs, but ſay rather as Antiſthenes, Heſtiam filiis contingat in delicis vivere: Let it befal the Children of my enemies to live in delights: but that the curſe is too heavy for a Chriſtian to uſe to any of his Enemies. But for himſelf he muſt remember that he is the Servant of a Holy God, and hath a Holy work to do, and Holy ſacrifices to offer to him, and therefore muſt not pamper his fleſh, as if he were preparing a ſacrifice for Venus. For as 1 Theſ. 4. 3, 4. This is the will of God, even your ſanctification, that you abſtain from fornication, that every one of you ſhould know how to poſſeſs his Veſſel in Sanctification and honour, not in the luſt of concupiſcence as the Gentiles that know not God. As the Philoſopher anſwer'd Antigonus when he asked him whether he ſhould go to a merry feaſt that he was invited to, Thou art the Son of a King: ſo it is anſwer enough for a Chriſtian againſt Temptations to voluptuouſneſs, I am the Son of the moſt Holy God. If thou be invited to Feaſts where urgency or allurement is like to make thee break thy bounds, go not, or go back when thou ſeeſt the bait. As Epaminondas in Plutarch finding exceſs at a feaſt that he was invited to, went away when he ſaw it, ſaying, Ego te ſacrificare, non laſcivire putaram: ſo ſay thou, I came to dine, and not to be wanton or luxurious; to ſupport my body for duty, and not to pamper it for luſt. Plutarch marvelleth at the folly of thoſe men that dreſt the charms of Witches leſt they hurt them, and fear not but love the charms of diſhes which hurt a thouſand where Witches hurt one. Withdraw the fuel of exceſs, and the fire of luſt will of it ſelf go out: or at leaſt this enemy muſt be beſieged and ſtarved out, when it connot be conquered by ſtorm.

It's Zeno's compariſon in Laert. l. 7. c. 1. In Laert. l. 6. c. 1. Laert. l. 2. c. 38.

Dir. 2. §. 4. Direct. 2. Take heed of Idleneſs, and be wholly taken up in diligent buſineſs, of your lawful callings, when you are not exerciſed in the more immediate ſervice of God. David in his idleneſs or vacancy catch thoſe ſparks of luſt, which in his troubles and military life he was preſerved from. Idleneſs is the ſoil, the culture, and the opportunity of Luſt. The idle perſon goeth to School to the Devil: He ſets all other employment aſide, that the Devil may have time to teach him and treat with him and ſollicit him to evil: Do you wonder that he is thinking on luſtful objects, or that he is taken up in feaſting and drinking, in chambering and wantonneſs? why he hath nothing elſe to do. Whereas a laborious diligent perſon hath a body ſubdued and hardned againſt the mollities, the effeminateneſs of the wanton; and a mind employed and taken up with better things: Leave thy Body and mind no leiſure to think of tempting filthy objects, or to look after them. As Hierom ſaith, Facito aliquid operis ut ſemper Diabolus inveniat te occupatum: Be ſtill doing ſome work that the Devil may always find thee buſie. And do not for thy fleſhly eaſe remit thy labours and indulge thy fleſh. Riſe early and go late to bed, and put thy ſelf upon a neceſſity of diligence all the day: undertake and engage thy ſelf, in as much buſineſs as thou art able to go thro', that if thou wouldſt, thou maiſt not be able to give any indulgence to the fleſh: For if thou be not ſtill preſſed by neceſſity, Luſt will ſerve it ſelf by idleneſs, and the fleſh will lye down if it feel not the ſpur: Therefore are the Rich and idle more luſtful and filthy than the poor labouring people. The ſame Bed is the place of ſloth and Luſt. Hear a Heathen and refuſe not to imitate him. Seneca ſaith, [No day paſſeth me

Nullus mihi per otium dies exit: partem noctium ſtudiis vendico: Non vaco ſomno ſed ſuccumbo, & oculos vigilia fatigatos, cadenteſque in opere detineo.—— Malè mihi eſſe malo quam molliter; ſi mollis es, paulatim effœminatur animus, atque in ſimilitudinem otii ſui: & pigritiæ in qua jacet ſolvitur: Dormio minimum & breviſſimo ſomno utor: ſatiùs eſt mihi vigilare deſiiſſe: Aliquando dormiſſe ſcio, aliquando ſuſpicor.

in idleneſs: Part of the night I reſerve for ſtudies, I do not purpoſely ſet my ſelf to ſleep, but yield to it when it overcometh me: and when my eyes are wearied with watching, and are falling, I hold them to their work: —— I had rather it went ill with me than delicately or tenderly. If thou be delicate or tender, the mind by little and little is effeminate, and is diſſolved into the ſimilitude of the idleneſs and ſloth in which it lyeth. I ſleep very little, and take but a ſhort nap: It ſufficeth me to have ceaſed watching: ſometimes I know that I ſlept, ſometime I do but ſuſpect it.] Ariſtotle ſaith, Nature made nothing to be idle: And Plato calls Idleneſs the Plague of Mortals. If thou be reſerved to ſerve and pleaſe thy fleſh, then never ask advice againſt thy luſt, for it's part of the pleaſure of it: and then no wonder if thou refuſe this Phyſick as too bitter, and the remedy as too dear: But if thou be reſolved to be cured and to be ſaved, ſtick not at the pains: give up thy ſelf totally to thy buſineſs, and luſt will dye for want of food.

§. 5. Direct. 3. If thou wouldſt be free from luſt, keep far enough from the tempting object. If poſſible dwell not in the houſe with any perſon that thou feeleſt thy ſelf endangered by: If that be not poſſible avoid their company, eſpecially in private: Abhor all laſcivious and immodeſt actions. Doſt thou give thy ſelf the liberty of wanton dalliance, and luſtful embracements, and yet think to be free from luſt? wilt thou put thy hand into the fire when thou art afraid of being burnt? Either thou haſt the power of thy own heart, or thou haſt not: If thou haſt, why doſt thou not quench thy luſt? If thou haſt not, why doſt thou caſt it upon greater temptations, and put it farther out of thy power than it is? Fly from a tempting object for thy ſafety, as thou wouldſt fly from an enemy for thy life. Theſe Loving enemies are more dangerous than hating enemies: They get the Key of our hearts, and come in and ſteal our treaſure with our conſent, or without reſiſtance, when an open enemy is ſuſpected and ſhut out.

Dir. 4. §. 6. Direct. 4. Command thy Eyes, and as Job 31. 1. make a Covenant with them, that thou maieſt not think on tempting objects: Shut theſe Windows and thou preſerveſt thy heart. Gaze not upon any alluring object. A look hath kindled that fire of luſt in many a heart, that hath ended in the fire of Hell. It's eaſier to ſtop luſt at theſe outward doors, than drive it out when it hath tainted the heart. If thou canſt not do this much, how canſt thou do more? An ungoverned eye fetcheth fire to burn the ſoul that ſhould have governed it.

Plutarch de Curioſitate, praiſeth Cyrus that would not ſee Panthra; and reproveth them that caſt a wanton eye at women in Coaches as they paſs by, and look out at Windows to have a full view of them, and yet think they commit no fault, ſuffering a curious eye and a wandring mind, to ſlide and run every way, pag. 142.

Dir. 5. §. 7. Direct. 5. Linger not in the pleaſant ſnares of luſt, if thou feel but the leaſt beginnings of it: but quickly caſt water on the firſt diſcerned ſpark, before it break out into a flame. The Amorous Poet can teach you this, Ovid. de Rem. Am. If ever delay be dangerous it is here. For delay will occaſion ſuch engagements to ſin, that you muſt come off at a far dearer rate. If the meat be undigeſtible, it's beſt not look on it: it's the next beſt, not to touch or taſte it; but if once it go down, it will coſt you ſickneſs and pain to get it up again; and if you do not, you periſh by it.

Dum licet, & modici tangunt præcordia motus,
Si piget in primo limine ſiſte pedem.
Opprime dum nova ſunt ſubiti mala ſemina morbi:
Et tuus incipiens ire reſiſtat equus.
Nam mora dat vires.——

Dum novus eſt cœpto potius pugnemus amori:
Flamma recens parva ſparſa reſedit aquâ.
Interea tacitæ ſerpunt in viſcera flammæ.
Et mala radices altius arbor agit.

§. 8. Direct. 6. Abhor laſcivious immodeſt ſpeech: As ſuch words come from either vain or filthy hearts, and ſhew the abſence of the fear of God, ſo they tend to make the hearer like the ſpeaker. And if thy ears grow but patient and receptive to ſuch diſcourſe, thou haſt loſt much of thy innocence already. Chriſtians muſt abhor the mentioning of ſuch filthy ſins, in any other manner, but ſuch as tends to bring the hearers to abhor them. Be not deceived; evil words corrupt good manners, 1 Cor. 15. 33. Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the uſe of edifying, that it may miniſter grace to the hearers, and grieve not the holy ſpirit of God. Corrupt communication is rotten ſtinking communication: and none but Dogs and Crows love Carrion. But fornication and all uncleanneſs and (πλεονεξία) inordinate luſt or luxury, let it not be once named among you, as becometh Saints; neither filthineſs nor fooliſh talking, nor jeſting, &c. Dir. 6.

§. 9. Direct. 7. Abhor the covering of filthy luſt with handſome names to make it the more acceptable. Their diſcourſe is more dangerous that would thus dreſs up an ugly luſt, than theirs that ſpeak of it in naſty language. Thus among the bruitiſh party, it goeth under the names of Love, and having a Miſtreſs, and Courting, and ſuch like. But (as one ſaith that's cited in Stobæus): It is doubled. Luſt that is commonly called Love, and doubled Love is ſtark madneſs. If filthineſs will walk abroad, let it go for filthineſs, and appear as it is. Dir. 7.

§. 10. Direct. 8, Avoid the Reading of Romances and Love ſtories: which are the Library of Venus; or the Devils Books of the Luſtful art; to cover over filthineſs with cleanly names, and bewitch the fantaſies of fools with fine words: To make men conceive of the ready way to Hell, under the notions and images of Excellency, Beauty, Love, Gallantry: And by repreſenting ſtrong and amorous paſſions, to ſtir up the ſame paſſions in the Reader. As he that will needs read a Conjuring Book, is well enough ſerved if Devils come about his ears, ſo they that will needs read ſuch Romances and other Books of the Burning art, it is juſt with God to ſuffer an unclean Devil to poſſeſs them, and to ſuffer them to catch the Feavor of Luſt, which may not only burn up the heart, but cauſe that pernicious deliriation in the brain, which is the ordinary ſymptom of it. Dir. 8.

§. 11. Direct. 9. Avoid all wanton Stage-plays and Dancings, which either cover the odiouſneſs of luſt, or produce temptations to it. As God hath his preachers and holy aſſemblies and exerciſes, for the Communion of Saints and the ſtirring up of Love and holineſs; ſo theſe are Satans inſtruments and aſſemblies and exerciſes, for the communion of ſinners, and for the ſtirring up of luſt and filthineſs. They that will go to the Devils Church deſerve to be poſſeſſed with his Principles, and numbred with his Diſciples. The ancient Chriſtians were very ſevere againſt the ſeeing of theſe ſpectacula, ſhews or plays; eſpecially in any of the Clergy. Dir. 9. Vide Petrarch. de ſpect. Dial. 30.

§. 12. Direct. 10. Avoid all tempting unneceſſary ornaments or attire, and the regarding or gazing on them upon others. It is a procacious luſtful deſire to ſeem comely and amiable, which is the common cauſe of this exceſs. The Folly or Luſt or both of faſhioniſts and gawdy Gallants, is ſo conſpicuous to all in their affected dreſs, that never did Pride more croſs it ſelf, than in ſuch publications of ſuch diſgraceful folly or luſt. They that take on them to be adverſaries to luſt, and yet are careful when they preſent themſelves to fight, to appear in luxurii conſpicuus turpiores videantur, Leſt being conſpicuous in luxury, they ſhould ſeem the more deformed. Dir. 10. Lyſander forbad his daughters to wear the brave attire which Dionyſius ſent them, Ne

the moſt adorned manner, and do all that Harlots can do to make themſelves a ſnare to fools, do put the charitable hard to it, whether to believe that it is their tongues or their backs that are the lyar. As Hierome ſaith, Thou deſerveſt Hell though none be the worſe for thee: For thou broughteſt the poyſon if there had been any to drink it. Let thy apparel be ſuited not only to thy rank but to thy diſeaſe. If thou be inclined to luſt, go the more meanly clad thy ſelf, and gaze not on the ornaments of others. It's folly indeed that will be enamoured on the Taylors work, yet this is ſo common, that it's frequently more the apparel than the perſon that enticeth firſt! and homely rags would have prevented the deceit. As the Poet ſaith [Auferimur cultu: gemmis auroq; teguntur Omnia: pars minima eſt ipſa puella ſui. Ovid. de Remed. Am.]

Dir. 11. §. 13. Direct. 11. Think on thy tempting object as it is within, and as it ſhortly will appear without. How ordinary is it for that which you call Beauty to be the portion of a fool; and a fair skin to cover a ſilly childiſh peeviſh mind; and a ſoul that is enſlaved to the Devil. And as Solomon ſaith, Prov. 11. 22. As a jewel of Gold in a Swines ſnout, ſo is a fair woman without diſcretion. And will you luſt after ſuch an adorned thing? Think alſo what a dunghil of filth is covered with all theſe ornaments that it would turn thy ſtomach if thou ſaweſt what is within them. And think what a face that would be if it were but covered with the Pox? and what a face it will be when ſickneſs or age hath conſumed or wrinkled it: And think what thy admired Carkaſs will be when it hath lain a few days in the grave; Then thou wouldſt have little mind of it? And how quickly will that be? O man, there is nothing truly amiable in the Creature, but the image of God; the wiſdom and holineſs and righteouſneſs of the ſoul. Love this then, if thou wilt Love with wiſdom, with purity and ſafety: For the Love of Purity is pure and ſafe.

Dir. 12. §. 14. Direct. 12. Think on thy own death and how faſt thou haſteth to another world. Is a luſtful heart a ſeemly temper for one that is ready to dye, and ready to ſee God, and come into that world where there is nothing but pure and holy doth abide.

Dir. 13. §. 15. Direct. 13. Conſider well the tendency and fruits of luſt, that it may ſtill appear to your minds as ugly and terrible as it is indeed. 1. Think what a ſhame it is to the ſoul; that can no better rule the body, and that it is ſo much defiled by its luſts. 2. Think what an unfit companion it is to lodge in the ſame heart with Jeſus Chriſt and the Holy Spirit, ſhall a member of Chriſt be thus polluted? ſhall the Temple of the Holy Ghoſt be thus turned into a Swine ſty? Is luſt fit to dwell with the Love of God? wilt thou entertain thy Lord with ſuch odious company? what an unkindneſs and injury is this to God, that when he that dwelleth in the higheſt Heavens condeſcendeth to take up a dwelling in thy heart, thou ſhouldſt bring theſe Toads and Snakes into the ſame room with him? Take heed leſt he take it unkindly and be gone: He hath ſaid he will dwell with the humble and contrite heart, but where ſaid he, I will dwell in a luſtful heart? 3. Think how unfit it makes thee for prayer, or any holy addreſs to God. What a ſhame and fear and deadneſs it caſts upon thy ſpirit? 4. And think how it tends to worſe. Luſt tendeth to actual filthineſs, and that to Hell: cheriſh not the Eggs if thou wouldſt have none of the Brood: It's an eaſie ſtep from a Luſtful heart to a defiled body, and a ſhorter ſtep thence to everlaſting horror than you imagine: As St. James ſaith [Every man is tempted when he is drawn aſide of his own luſt and enticed; then when luſt hath conceived, it bringeth forth ſin, and ſin when it is finiſhed bringeth forth death, Jam. 1. 13, 14. Gal. 6. 8. If ye ſow to the fleſh, of the fleſh ye ſhall reap corruption. Remember that Luſt is the ſpawn of ſin, and ſin is the way to Hell.

§. 16. Direct. 14. Be ſure to keep up a holy conſtant Government over thy Thoughts. Suffer them not to go after tempting, filthy, ſenſual things. As ſoon as ever a thought of Luſt comes into thy mind, abhor it and caſt it out. Abundance of the cure and of thy ſafety lyeth upon thy Thoughts. They that let their Thoughts run uncontrolled, and feed on filthineſs, are already fornicators in the heart; and are hatching the Cockatrice Eggs; and no wonder if from Thoughts they proceed to deeds. O what a deal of uncleanneſs is committed by the Thoughts which people are little aſhamed of, becauſe they are unſeen of men! If the thoughts of many were open to beholders, what wantonneſs and luſt would appear in many adorned Sepulchres: Even in the time of holy Worſhip; when once ſuch give the unclean ſpirit poſſeſſion of their thoughts, how hardly is he caſt out? they can ſcarce look a comely perſon in the face, without ſome vicious thought. If Hierome confeſs that in his Wilderneſs, his Thoughts were running among the Ladies at Rome, what may we think of them that feed ſuch filthy Phantaſies. Say not, you cannot rule your Thoughts. You can do much if you will, and more than you do: If money and honour can make an ungodly Preacher command his Thoughts to holy things, in the ſtudies of Divinity through much of his life, you may ſee that your Thoughts are much in your power (but of this before.)

Dir. 14.

Dir. 15. §. 17. Direct. 15. If other means ſerve not, open thy caſe to ſome friend, and ſhame thy ſelf to him, as I adviſed under the former Title. Confeſſion and ſhame and advice will help thee.

Dir. 16. §. 18. Direct. 16. Above all go to Chriſt for help, and beg his ſpirit, and give up thy Heart to better things: O if it were taken up with God and Heaven and the holy life that's neceſſary thereto, theſe things are ſo Great and Holy and ſweet, and of ſuch concernment to thee, that they would leave little room for Luſt within thee, and would make thee abhor it, as contrary to thoſe things which have thy heart. No ſuch cure for any carnal Love as the Love of God; nor for fleſhly luſts as a ſpiritual renewed Heavenly mind. Thou wouldſt then tell Satan that God hath taken up all the room, and thy narrow Heart is too little for him alone; and that there is no room for luſt or the thoughts that ſerve it. A true Converſion which turneth the heart to God, doth turn it from this with others ſins, though ſome ſparks may ſtill be unextinguiſhed: It was once noted that many turn from other ſects to the Epicureans but none from the Epicureans to any other ſect: The reaſon was becauſe nature is inclined to ſenſuality in all, and when it is confirmed by uſe and doctrine, Philoſophy is too weak to maſter it: But Chriſt calleth and ſaveth Epicures, and Publicans and Harlots, and hath cleanſed many ſuch by his grace, which teacheth men to deny ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, and to live ſoberly, righteouſly and godly in the world. Philoſtratus tells us of a ſudden change upon one Iſæus, that turned him from Luxury to exceeding temperance: ſo that when one asked him, Is not yonder a handſome woman? he anſwered, The diſeaſes of my eyes are cured: when they askt him which diſh was the pleaſanteſt, he anſwered, Deſii curare; I have done regarding ſuch things: and told them the reaſon that marvelled at his change, Becauſe he found that he did but gather fruits out of Tantalus garden. They are deceitful luſts, Eph. 4. 22. And Satan himſelf will reproach thee for ever, if he can deceive thee by them. As Alexander when he had taken Darius his gallantry and ſumptuous Houſes and Furniture, reproaches him with it ſaying, Hoccine erat imperare? was this to rule? ſo Satan would shew thee thy lusts and say, was this to be a Christian and seek salvation.

PART VI.

Directions against sinful excess of Sleep.

§. 1. OF this something is said already, Chap. 5. Part 1. §. 51. and more afterwards in the Directions against Idleness. Therefore I shall say but little now. 1. I shall shew you, when sleep is excessive: 2. Wherein the sinfulness of it consisteth: 3. What to do for the cure of it.

§. 2. I. Sleep is given us for the necessary remission of the animal operations, and of the labour or motion of the exteriour parts, by the quieting of the senses, or shutting them up; that the Natural and Vital operations may have the less disturbance. It is necessary, 1. To our Rest: 2. To Concoction: Therefore Weariness and want of Concoction are the chief indications, to tell us how much is needful for us. Sleep is sinfully excessive, 1. When it is Voluntarily more than is needful to our health. 2. When it is unseasonable, at forbidden times.

§. 3. It is not all weariness or sleepiness that maketh sleep lawful or needful: for some is contracted by laziness, and some by many diseases, and some by other constant causes which makes men almost always weary. Nor is it all want of concoction that sleep is a remedy for, some may be caused by excess of eating which must be cured a better way, and many diseases may cause it which require other cure. Therefore none must indulge excess upon these pretences. Nor must a present sense of the pleasure of sleeping, or the displeasure of waking, be the judge: For sluggards may think they feel it do them good, and that early rising doth them hurt, but this good is but their present ease, and this hurt is but a little trouble to their head, and eyes, and lazy flesh, just at the time. But Reason and experience must judge what Measure is best for your Health, and that you must not exceed: To some five hours is enough: To the ordinary sort of healthful persons six hours is enough: To many weak valetudinary persons seven hours is needful: To sick persons I am not to give Directions.

§. 4. 2. Sleep is excessive at that particular Time when it is unseasonable: As 1. When we are asleep when we should be doing some necessary business which calls for present dispatch. 2. Or when we should be hearing the Sermon, or praying, in publick or private: In a word, when it puts by any greater duty which we should then perform. As when the Disciples slept when Christ was in his agony: Could ye not watch with me one hour? watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation, Matth. 26. 40, 41.

§. 5. It is a foppery and abuse of God and our selves, to think that the breaking of our sleep is a thing that of it self pleaseth God: or that rising to pray at midnight is more acceptable to God than at another hour: usually such rising to pray is sinful, 1. Because it is done in an erroneous conceit that God accepts it better than in the day time. 2. Because they waste time in dressing and undressing. 3. Or else hurt their health by cold in the Winter, and so lose more time than they redeem by shortning their lives. 4. And usually they are more drousie and unfit. But to rise in the night to prayer is meet, on some extraordinary occasion that calls for it (as to pray with, or for a dying person, or such like;) or when an extraordinary fervor and fitness prepareth us for it; and when we can stay up when we are up, and not lose time in going to bed again. But ordinarily that way is to be chosen that best Redeemeth time: and that is, to consider just how much sleep our health requireth, and to take it if we can together without interruption, and to rise then and go about our duties. But those that cannot sleep in the Night, must redeem that Time as discretion shall direct them.

§. 6. It is the Voluntariness of the excess that the sinfulness principally consisteth in: And therefore the more voluntary the more sinful. In a Lethargy or Caros it is no sin: And when long watching, or some bodily weakness or distemper make it almost unavoidable, the sin is the smaller: Therefore in case of long watching and heaviness, Christ partly excused his Disciples, saying, The Spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak, Matth. 26. 41. But when it cometh from a flesh-pleasing sloth, or from a disregard of any holy exercise that you are about, it is a grievous sin. And though it be involuntary just at the time, and you say, I would fain forbear sleeping now if I could, yet if it be Voluntary remotely and in its Causes, it is your sin: You would now forbear sleeping; but you would not forbear that pampering your body, and stuffing your Guts which causeth it: you would not deny the flesh its ease to avoid it.

§. 7. II. The sinfulness of excess of sleep lyeth in these particulars: 1. That it is a sinful wasting of every minute of that time which is consumed in it. And this is a very grievous thing to a heart that is sensible of the preciousness of time, when we think how short our lives are, and how great our work is, it should tell us how great a sin it is, to cast away any of this little time, in needless sleep. And yet what abundance of it with many is thus spent. Almost half their whole lives is spent in bed, by many drones, that think they may sleep because they are rich, and have not a necessity of labouring to supply their wants. I was never tempted, (that I remember) so much to grudge at God's natural ordering of man, in any thing, as that we are fain to waste so much of our little time in sleep, nor was I ever tempted to grudge at my weakness so much on any account as this, that it deprived me of so much precious time, which else might have been used in some profitable work. The preciousness of Time makes excessive sleeping to be a great sin, according to the measure of the excess.

Nil tempus tam pretiosum quam de vita naufragorum quod primo deputatur. Ber.

§. 8. 2. It is a neglect of all our powers and parts which should all that time be exercised. Reason is idle and buryed all that while: All your wisdom and knowledge is of no use to you: All the learning of the greatest Scholar in the world, is of no more service than if he were illiterate, nor all the prudence and policy of the wisest, than if they were meer Ideots: All the strength and health of the strongest is of no more service than if they were sick, nor the skill of the greatest artist, than if he had never learnt his art, nor any of your limbs or senses, than if you were lame, or blind, or deaf, or senseless. And I leave it to any mans consideration and judgment, whether if Drunkenness be so odious a sin, because it depriveth a man voluntarily of the use of his Reason and parts, it must not be a very great sin to do the same by sleeping, by frequent, voluntary, excessive sleeping. For no man I think is Drunk so often as the sluggard is dead in sleep: Sluggards quite kill their Reason when most Drunkards do but maim it, or make it sick. Sluggards bury their wits and parts, usually ten times as long in the year, as the filthiest drunkards do. And hath God given you Reason, and parts, and strength for no better use, than to bury it for so considerable a part of your lives?

Dormiens nemo ullius pretii est. Plato in Laert.

§. 9. 3. Excess of sleep is guilty of all the omissions of those Duties, which should all that time have been performed: Of the omission of every holy thought, and word and deed which should have been then exercised: And of the omission of all the duties of your Callings: Of the omission of every prayer you should have then prayed, and every Chapter you should have read, and all the good which you should have got to your ſelves, or done to others; to Wife, Husband, Children, Parents, Servants, Neighbours. And you know that omiſſions are one half and the greater half of the ſins of the world; And that God will condemn the wicked at laſt for their omiſſions Matth. 25. for not feeding the poor, not clothing them, not viſiting: and that he requireth the improvement of all his talents; and that it is his terrible ſentence, Matth. 25. 26, 30. Thou wicked and ſlothful ſervant, &c. Caſt ye the unprofitable ſervant into outer darkneſs; there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth. What then ſhall we think of the wilful omiſſion, not of one duty, but of all duty whatſoever, not now and then, but conſtantly for an hour or two or three once in four and twenty hours! No Love of God, no deſires towards him, no good is exerciſed all that time.

Queſt. Whether love of ſleep may be a mortal ſin?

§. 10. Queſt. Can the Love of ſleep alone be the mortal reigning ſin in any one? The reaſon of the doubt is, becauſe that the mortal ſin is a ſin of miſtaken intereſt, that is, ſuch as hath a mans chiefeſt Love, and is preferred before God, which it ſeems ſo ſmall a thing as ſleep or eaſe cannot be, but it ſeems a meer neglect or remiſneſs in the way of duty, and not to be choſen as any mans felicity.

Anſw. The ſin that is ſet up againſt the Love of God as a mans ultimate end and happineſs, is fleſh-pleaſing in the General, or Carnal ſelf-love: And he that is guilty of this can hardly be imagined to exerciſe his ſenſual deſire only in the way of ſloth and ſleep. It is certain that he preferreth the greateſt Pleaſure of his fleſh which he can attain before the leſs; and therefore as to the Habit or Inclination, he is as much addicted to Covetouſneſs, Gluttony, Ambition, or other ways of ſenſuality: And if they are within his reach, that he can hope to attain them, he will actually deſire ſuch greater pleaſures, more than this: For there is no man that is an unregenerate ſenſualiſt that hath mortified Covetouſneſs, Luxury and Pride, and yet is captivated only by ſleep or ſloth: The ſame grace which truly mortifieth the Greater would mortifie the leſs. But it is poſſible that a Beggar or ſome ſuch perſon that hath no other ſenſual pleaſure but Idleneſs in view or hope, may exerciſe his ſenſuality principally this way! Not but that radically he preferreth riches and honour before his beggarly ſloth and eaſe; but thoſe deſires having no matter to work upon, do not ſtir in him; becauſe he hath no hope of reaching ſuch a thing. The ſum is, 1. Carnal ſelf-love is the great oppoſite to the Love of God. 2. This ſelf love worketh towards carnal pleaſure, and to the greateſt moſt. 3. Habitually therefore the Love of Riches, honour and voluptuouſneſs is ſtronger than the Love of eaſe. 4. Actually the love of eaſe may be the ſtrongeſt in ſome. 5. But if thoſe perſons were as capable of the higher fleſhly pleaſures they would love them actually more. 6. It is not the omitting of ſome particular duties through the love of eaſe, which proveth ſuch a ſenſual unſanctified ſtate of ſoul; but the preferring of mens eaſe before a Holy life in the main: As when men ſo far love their eaſe, that they will not make it the chief of their deſires and employments to ſeek the Kingdom of God and his righteouſneſs, Matth. 6. 33.

The overcoming of exceſſive ſleep is eaſie, if you be but throughly willing.

Dir. 1. §. 11. Direct. 1. The firſt thing to be done, is to correct that ſluggiſh flegmatick temper of body which inclineth you to it, which is chiefly to be done by ſuch an abſtinence or temperate dyet, as I gave directions for before. A full belly is fit for nothing elſe but ſleep or luſt. Reduce your dyet to that meaſure which is needful to your health, and eat not any more to pleaſe your appetites. And let faſting cure you when you have exceeded.

Dir. 2. §. 12. Direct. 2. Labour hard in your Callings that your ſleep may be ſweet while you are in it; or elſe you will lye in bed on pretence of neceſſity, becauſe you cannot ſleep well when you are there. Then you will ſay, you muſt take it out in the morning, becauſe you ſleep not in the night. But ſee that this be not cauſed by Idleneſs: Weary your bodies in your daily labours: For the ſleep of the labouring man is ſweet, Eccleſ. 5. 12.

Dir. 3. §. 13. Direct. 3. See that thou have a Calling which find thee imployment for all thy time which Gods immediate ſervice ſpareth. Yea, which ſomewhat urgeth thee to diligence: Otherwiſe thou wilt lye in bed, and ſay, thou haſt time to ſpare, or nothing to do: You can riſe when you have a journey to be gone, or a buſineſs of preſſing neceſſity to be done: Keep your ſelves under ſome conſtant neceſſity, or urgency of buſineſs at the leaſt.

Dir. 4. §. 14. Direct. 4. Take pleaſure in your Callings, and in the ſervice of God. Sluggards themſelves can riſe to that which they take much pleaſure in: As to go to a Merriment, or Feaſt, or Play, or Game, or to a good bargain, or any thing which they delight in. If thou hadſt a Delight in thy Calling, and in reading the Scripture, and praying, and doing good, thou couldſt not lye contentedly in bed, but wouldſt long to be up and doing, as Children to their play: The wicked can riſe early to do wickedneſs, becauſe their hearts are ſet upon it: They can be drunk, or ſteal, or whore, or plot their ambitious and covetous deſigns, when they ſhould ſleep: And if thy heart were ſet as much on good, as theirs is on evil, wouldſt not thou be as wakeful and as readily up? Prov. 4. 16. 1 Theſſ. 5. 6, 7.

Dir. 5. §. 15. Direct. 5. Remember the grand importance of the buſineſs of your ſouls which always lyeth on your hands, that the greatneſs of your work may rouze you up. What, lye ſlugging in bed, when you are ſo far behind hand in knowledge and grace, and aſſurance of ſalvation; and have ſo much of the Scripture and other Books to read and underſtand? Haſt thou not grace to beg for a needy ſoul? Is not Prayer better work than exceſs of ſleeping? Great buſineſs in the world can make you riſe, and why not Greater?

Dir. 6. §. 16. Direct. 6. Remember that thou muſt anſwer in Judgment for thy time: And what comfort wilt thou have, to ſay I ſlugg'd away ſo many hours in a morning? And what comfort at death when time is gone, to review ſo much caſt away in ſleep?

Dir. 7. §. 17. Direct. 7. Remember that God beholdeth thee, and is calling thee up to work. If thou underſtoodſt his Word and Providence, thou wouldſt hear him as it were, ſaying as the Mariners to Jonah, What meaneſt thou, O ſleeper? Ariſe, call upon thy God. Wilt thou lye ſleeping inordinately when God ſtands over thee, and calls thee up? If the King, or any great perſon, or friend, did but knock at thy door, thou wouldſt riſe preſently to wait upon them. Why, God would ſpeak with thee by his word, or hear thee ſpeak to him by prayer; and wilt thou lye ſtill and deſpiſe his Call?

Dir. 8. §. 18. Direct. 8. Remember how many are attending thee while thou ſleepeſt. If it be Summer, the Sun is up before thee that hath gone ſo many thouſand miles while thou waſt aſleep: It hath given a days light to the other half of the world ſince thou laidſt down, and is come again to light thee to thy work, and wilt thou let it ſhine in vain? All the creatures are ready in their places to aſſiſt thee, and art thou aſleep?

Dir. 9. §. 19. Direct. 9. Conſider whether thou wilt allow thy ſervants to do the like: They muſt be up and at work, or you will be offended, and tell them that they are no ſervants for you, and that you hire them not to ſleep. And do you not owe God more ſervice than they owe you? Doth God hire you to ſleep?

Is

Is it any lawfuller for you than them to sleep one minute more than is needful to your health? No, not a minute: If you are sicklier than they, that's another matter; (But see that sulness and idleness cause it not.) But otherwise your Riches are no excuse to you: Will you loyter more than they, because you receive more? and do less service, because you have more to pay? Or is it your priviledge to be so miserable, as to lose that time which poor men save?

Dir. 10. §. 20. Direct. 10. Remember that your morning hours are the chiefest part of all the day for any holy exercises or special employment of the mind. The mind is fresh and clear and there is less interruption by worldly business; whereas when others are up and about their business you will have interpellations. Those that have tryed it can say by experience, that the morning hours are the flower of their time, for prayer or studies: And that early rising is a great part of the art of Redeeming Time.

Dir. 11. §. 21. Direct. 11. Remember how many are condemning you by their diligence while you are slugging away your time: How many holy persons are then at prayer in secret, wrestling fervently with God for their salvation: Or reading and meditating in his word? What do they get while you are sleeping! The blessed man doth delight in the Law of the Lord, and meditate in it day and night: And you love your ease, and are sleeping day and night: Will not all these be witnesses against you? So will the diligent in their Callings; and so will the worldlings and wicked that rise early to their sin! How many thousand are hard at work while you are sleeping? Have you not work to do as well as they?

Dir. 12. §. 22. Direct. 12. Remember that sensuality or flesh-pleasing is the great condemning sin that turns the heart from God: And if it be odious in a drunkard or fornicator, why is it not so in you? Mortifie the flesh, and learn to deny it its inordinate desires, and your sin is almost cured.

Dir. 13. §. 23. Direct. 13. For then the executive part is easie when you are willing: It is but agreeing with some one to awaken you, and a little cold water will wash away your drowsiness if you consent.

PART VII.

Directions against sinful Dreams.

§. 1. DReams are neither good nor sinful simply in themselves, because they are not rational and voluntary, nor in our power. But they are often made sinful by some other voluntary Act: They may be sinful by participation and consequently. And the acts that make them sinful, are either such as go before, or such as follow after.

§. 2. 1. The antecedent causes are any sinful act which distempereth the body, or any sin which inclineth the fantasie and mind thereto; or the omission of what was necessary to prevent them. 2. The causes which afterwards make them objectively sinful, are, the ill uses that men make of them: as when they take their dreams to be Divine Revelations, or trust to them, or are affrighted by them as ominous or as prophetical; and make them the ground of their actions, and seduce themselves by the phantasms of their own brains.

Dir. 1. §. 3. Direct. 1. Avoid those bodily distempers as much as you can which cause sinful dreams, especially fulness of dyet: A full stomach causeth troublesome dreams and lustful dreams: And hath its ill effects by night and by day.

Dir. 2. §. 4. Direct. 2. Endeavour the cure of those sinful distempers of the mind which cause sinful dreams. The cure of a worldly mind is the best way to cure worldly covetous dreams: And the cure of a lustful heart is the best way to cure lustful dreams: And so of the rest: Cleanse the fountain, and the waters will be sweeter day and night.

Dir. 3. §. 5. Direct. 3. Suffer not your Thoughts, or tongue, or actions to run sinfully upon that in the day, which you would not dream sinfully of in the night. Common experience telleth us, that our dreams are apt to follow our foregoing thoughts and words, and deeds. If you think most frequently and affectionately of that which is good, you will dream of that which is good. If you think of lustful filthy objects, or speak of them, or meddle with them, you will dream of them: And so of covetous and ambitious dreams, and they that make no conscience to sin waking, are not like much to scruple sinning in their sleep.

Cogitationes sanctiores sequuntur somnia blandiora & delectabiliora Greg. Moral.

Dir. 4. §. 6. Direct. 4. Commend your selves to God by prayer before you take your rest, and beseech him to set a guard upon your fantasie when you cannot guard it. Cast the cure upon him, and fly to him for help by faith and prayer in the sense of your insufficiency.

Dir. 5. §. 7. Direct. 5. Let your last thoughts still before your sleep be holy, and yet quieting and consolatory thoughts. The dreams are apt to follow our last Thoughts. If you betake your selves to sleep with worldliness or vanity in your minds, you cannot expect to be wiser or better when you are asleep, than when you are awake. But if you shut up your dayes thoughts with God, and sleep and then upon any Holy subject, it is like to use them as it finds them. Yet if it be distrustful, unbelieving, fearful thoughts which you condole with your dreams may favour of the same distemper. Frightful and often sinful dreams do follow sinful doubts and fears. But if you sweeten your last Thoughts with the Love of Christ: and the remembrance of your former mercies, or the foresight of eternal joyes, or can confidently cast them on your selves upon some promise, it will tend to the quietness of your sleep, and to the savouriness of your dreams: And if you should dye before morning will it not be most desirable that your last thoughts be holy?

Iturus in somnum aut quid tecum defert in memoria & cogitatione in quo bla cide conformatis, quæ eam jam niare jubet: sic tibi nox ut dies ille transitur, & in delitiis tuis placide ut decuit in pace quiescas, facilè excitabis, & surgens promptus eris ad redeundum in id, unde non totus discessisti.

Dir. 6. § 8. Direct. 6. When you have found any corruption appearing in your dreams, make use of them for the renewing of your repentance, and exciting your endeavours to mortifie that corruption. A corruption may be perceived in dreams, 1. When such dreams as discover it are frequent: 2. When they are earnest and violent: 3. When they are pleasing and delightful to your fantasies: Not that any certain knowledge can be fetcht from them, but some conjecture as added to other signs. As if you should frequently, earnestly and delightfully dream of preferments and honours, of the favours of great men, suspect ambition, and do the more to discover and mortifie it. If it be of riches, and gain, and money, suspect a covetous mind. If it be of revenge or hurt to any man that you dislaste, suspect some malice and quickly mortifie it: So if it be of lust, or feasting, or drinking, or vain recreations, sports and games, do the like.

Dir. 7. §. 9. Direct. 7. Lay no greater stress upon your dreams, than there is just cause. As 1. When you have searcht, and find no such sin prevailing in you as your dreams seem to intimate, do not conclude that you have more than your waking evidence discovers. Prefer not your sleeping signs before your waking signs and search. 2. When you are conscious that you indulge no corruption to occasion such a dream, suppose it not to be faulty of it self, and lay not the blame of your bodily temperament, or unknown causes, upon your soul; with too heavy and unjust unjuſt a charge. 3. Abhor the preſumptuous folly of thoſe that uſe to prognoſticate by their dreams. and meaſure their Expectations by them, and caſt themſelves into hopes or fears by them. Saith Diogenes, What folly is it to be careleſs of your waking thoughts and actions, and inquiſitive about your Dreams? A mans happineſs or miſery lieth upon what he doth when he is awake, and not upon what he ſuffereth in his ſleep.

CHAP. IX.

Directions for the Government of the Tongue.

Tit. 1. The General Directions.

Dir. 1. §. 1. Direct. 1. UNderſtand in general of what Moment and Concernment it is that the Tongue be well governed and uſed. For they think that words are inconſiderable, will uſe them inconſiderately. The Conceit that Words are of ſmall moment (as ſome ſay of Thoughts, that they are free) doth cauſe Men to uſe their tongues as if they were free, ſaying, Our lips are our own: who is Lord over us? Pſal. 12. 4.

The greatneſs of the ſins and duties of the Tongue. Pſal. 57. 8. Pſal. 16. 9. Pſal. 30. 12.

§. 2. 1. The tongue of man is his Glory: by which expreſſively he excelleth the Brutes: And a wonderful Work of God it is, that a Man's Tongue ſhould be able to articulate ſuch an exceeding number of Words: And God hath not given Man ſo admirable a Faculty for Vanity and ſin: The nobler and more excellent it is, the more to be regarded, and the greater is the Fault of them that do abuſe it. Hilary compareth them to an ill Barber that cuts a Mans Face, and ſo deformeth him, when his work was to have made him more neat and comely. So it is the Office of the tongue to be excellently ſerviceable to the good of others, and to be the Glory of Mankind: The ſhame therefore of its Faults is the more unexcuſable.

§. 3. 2. The tongue is made to be the Index or Expreſſer of the Mind: Therefore if the Mind be regardable, the tongue is regardable. And if the mind be not regardable, the Man is not regardable. For our Lord telleth us, that the Tree is known by its fruit: an evil Tree bringeth forth evil Fruits: and out of the abundance of the heart the Mouth ſpeaketh. And Ariſtotle ſaith, that [Such as a man is, ſuch are his Speeches, ſuch his works, and ſuch his life. Therefore by vain or ſinful words you tell men the vanity and corruption of your minds.

Matth 7. 16, 17, 18. Matth. 12. 33, 34.

Lingua index mentis. Ariſtippus being asked, Quid differat ſapiens ab inſipiente? Mitte, inquit, ambos nudos ad ignotos, & diſces. Laert. in Ariſtip.

§. 4. 3. Mens works have a great dependance on their words: Therefore if their deeds be regardable, their words are regardable. Deeds are ſtirred up, or cauſed by words. Daily Experience telleth us the power of ſpeech. A ſpeech hath ſaved a Kingdom, and a ſpeech hath loſt a Kingdom. Great Actions depend on them, and greater conſequents.

§. 5. 4. If the men that we ſpeak to be regardable, words are regardable. For words are powerful inſtruments of their good or hurt. God uſeth them by his Miniſters for Mens Converſion and ſalvation: And Satan uſeth them by his Miniſters for men's ſubverſion and damnation. How many thouſand Souls are hurt every Day by the words of others! Some deceived, ſome puffed up, ſome hardned, and ſome provoked to ſinful Paſſions! And how many thouſand are every day edified by words! either inſtructed, admoniſhed, quicked or comforted. Paul ſaith, The weapons of our warfares are mighty through God: And Pythagoras could ſay, that Tongues cut deeper than Swords, becauſe they reach even to the ſoul: Tongue-ſins and duties therefore muſt needs be great.

2 Cor. 10. 4.

§. 6. 5. Our Tongues are the Inſtruments of our Creatour's praiſe; purpoſely given us to ſpeak good of his name, and to declare his works with rejoycing. It is no ſmall part of that ſervice which God expects from Man, which is performed by the Tongue; nor a ſmall part of the end of our Creation: The uſe of all our higheſt faculties, parts and Graces are expreſſively by the Tongue. Our Wiſdom and Knowledge, our Love and Holineſs are much loſt as to the Honour of God, and the good of others, if not expreſſed. The tongue is the Lanthorn or Caſement of the ſoul, by which it looketh out, and ſhineth unto others. Therefore the ſin or duty of ſo noble an inſtrument are not to be made light of, by any that regard the honour of our Maker.

Pſal. 66. 2. & 96. 2. & 135. 3. & 148. 13. & 29. 2. & 100.

§. 7. 6. Our words have a great reflection and operation upon our own hearts. As they come from them, ſo they recoil to them, as in prayer and conference we daily obſerve. Therefore for our own good or hurt, our words are not to be made light of.

§. 8. 7. Gods Law and Judgment will beſt teach you what regard you ſhould have to words. Chriſt telleth you, that by your words you ſhall be juſtified, and by your words you ſhall be condemned, Matth. 12. 37. And it is words of Blaſphemy againſt the Holy Ghoſt, which are the unpardonable ſin, James 3. 2. If any man offend not in word, the ſame is a perfect man, and able to bridle the whole body. V. 6. The Tongue is a fire; a world of Iniquity: ſo is the tongue amongſt our Members, that it defileth the whole Body; and ſetteth on fire the courſe of nature, and it is ſet on fire of Hell: Jam. 1. 26. If any Man among you ſeem to be Religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this mans Religion is vain. 1 Pet. 3. 10. For he that will love life and ſee good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they ſpeak no guile. Matth. 12. 36. But I ſay unto you, that every idle word that Men ſhall ſpeak, they ſhall give account thereof in the Day of judgement. The third Commandment telleth us, that God will not hold him guiltleſs that taketh his name in vain. And Pſal. 15. 1, 2, 3. Speaking the truth in his heart, and not backbiting with the tongue, is the mark of him that ſhall abide in Gods Tabernacle, and dwell in his Holy Hill. And the very work of Heaven is ſaid to be the perpetual praiſing of God, Rev. 14. 11. Judge now how God judgeth of your words.

Matth. 12. 31. They who uſe but few words need not many Laws, ſaid Chaylus, when he was asked why Lycurgus made ſo few Laws. Plut. Apophtheg. p. 423.

§. 9. 8. And ſome conjecture may be made by the Judgement of all the world. Do you not care your ſelves what men ſpeak of you and to you? Do you not care what language, your children, or ſervants, or neighbours give you? Are not words againſt the King treaſonable and capital as well as deeds? The wheel of Affairs, or courſe of nature is ſet on fire by words, Jam. 3. 6. I may conclude then with Prov. 18. 21. Death and life are in the power of the tongue: and Prov. 21. 23. Whoſo keepeth his mouth and his tongue, keepeth his ſoul from trouble.

Dir. 2. The Duties of the Tongue.

§. 10. Direct. 2 Underſtand well and remember the particular Duties of the Tongue: For the meer reſtraint of it from evil is not enough: And they are theſe, 1. To glorify God by the magnifying of his Name: To ſpeak of the praiſes of his Attributes and Works. 2. To ſing Pſalms of Praiſe to him, and delight our Souls in the ſweet commemoration of his Excellencies. 3. To give him thanks for the Mercies already received, and declare to others what he hath done for our Souls and Bodies, for his Church and for the World.

4. To

4. To pray to him for what we want, and for our brethren, for the Church, and for the Converſion of his and our Enemies. 5. To appeal to him and ſwear by his name when we are called to it lawfully. 6. To make our neceſſary Covenants and Vows to him, and to make open profeſſion of our belief, ſubjection and obedience to him, before men. 7. To preach his word, or declare it in diſcourſe, and to teach thoſe that are committed to our care, and edifie the ignorant and erroneous as we have opportunity 8. To defend the truth of God by conference or diſputation; and confute the falſe Doctrine of deceivers. 9. To exhort men to their particular Duties, and to reprove their particular ſins; and endeavour to do them good as we are able. 10. To confeſs our own ſins to God and man as we have occaſion. 11. To crave the advice and help of others for our ſouls; and enquire after the will of God, and the way to ſalvation. 12. To praiſe that which is good in others, and ſpeak good of all men, ſuperiours, equals and inferiours, ſo far as there is juſt ground and cauſe. 13. To bear witneſs to the truth, when we are called to it. 14. To defend the cauſe of the juſt and innocent, and vindicate them againſt falſe accuſers; and excuſe thoſe cauſes and perſons that deſerve excuſe. 15. To communicate and convey to others the ſame good impreſſions and affections of mind, which God hath wrought on us, and not only the bare truths themſelves which we have received. 16. Laſtly, To be inſtruments of common converſe; of expreſſing our mutual affections and reſpects, and tranſacting all our worldly buſineſs: for learning, arts, manufactures, &c. Theſe are the Uſes and Duties of the Tongue.

Plato Recte dicere, in quatuor ſcindit: 1. Quid dicere oportet: 2. Quam multa dicere: 3. Ad quos: 4. Quando ſit dicendum: Ea oportet dicere quæ ſint utilia & dicenti & auditori: Nec nimis multa nec pauciora quam ſatis eſt. Si ad peccantes ſeniores dicendum ſit, verba illi ætati congrua loquamur: ſin vero ad juniores dicendum ſit, majore auctoritate utamur in dicendo. Laert. in Plat.

Dir. 3. The Sins of the Tongue.

§. 11. Direct. 3. Underſtand and remember what are the ſins of the Tongue to be avoided. And they are very many, and many of them very great: The moſt obſervable are theſe.

§. 12. 1. (Not to ſay any more of the Sins of omiſſion; becauſe it is eaſie to know them, when I have named the Duties, which are done or omitted,) among the Sins of Commiſſion, the firſt that I ſhall Name is Blaſphemy, as being the Greateſt; which is the Reproaching of God: to ſpeak contemptuouſly of God, or to vilifie him, or diſhonour him by the denying of his Perfections, and to debaſe him by falſe Titles, Doctrines, Images, Reſemblances, as likening him to man in any of our imperfections; any thing that is a reproaching of God is Blaſphemy. Such as Rabſhekah uſed when he threatned Hezekiah; and ſuch as Infidels and Hereticks uſe, when they deny his Omnipreſence, Omniſcience, Government, Juſtice, particular Providence or Goodneſs: and affirm any evil of him, as that he is the author of ſin, or falſe of his word, or that he governeth the world by meer deceit, or the like.

§. 13. 2. Another ſin of the Tongue is falſe Doctrine, or teaching things falſe and dangerous as from God: If any falſly ſay, he had ſuch or ſuch a point by Divine Inſpiration, Viſion or Revelation, that maketh him a falſe Prophet. But if he only ſay falſly, that this or that Doctrine is contained in the Scripture, or delivered by Tradition to the Church, this is but to be a falſe Teacher: which is a ſin greater or leſs according to the aggravations hereafter mentioned.

§. 14. 3. Another of the ſins of the Tongue is an oppoſing of Godlineſs indirectly, by falſe application of true Doctrine, and an oppoſing of Godly perſons for the ſake of godlineſs, and cavilling againſt particular truths and Duties of Religion: or indirectly oppoſing the Truth or duty under pretence of oppoſing only ſome controverted Mode or Imperfection in him that ſpeaketh or performeth it: A defending of thoſe points and practices which would ſubvert or undermine Religion: A great Endeavour to make all ſerious godlineſs ſeem a needleſs thing. There are many that ſeem Orthodox, that are impious and malicious oppoſers of that Truth in the Application, which themſelves do notionally hold, and poſitively profeſs.

§. 15. 4. Another great ſin of the Tongue, is the prophane deriding of ſerious Godlineſs, and the mocking, and jeſting, and ſcorning at Godly perſons as ſuch: or ſcorning at ſome of their real or ſuppoſed Imperfections, for their Piety ſake, to make them odious, that Piety through them might be made odious. When Men ſo ſpeak, that the drift and tendency of their ſpeech, is to draw Men to a diſlike of Truth or holineſs: and their mocks or ſcorns at ſome particular Opinion, or Practice, or Mode, doth tend to the contempt of Religion in the ſerious practice of it: When they mock at a Preacher of the Goſpel, for ſome expreſſions or Imperfections, or for truth itſelf, to bring him and his doctrine into contempt: or at the Prayers and Speeches of Religious perſons to the injury of Religion.

§. 16. 5. Another great ſin of the Tongue, is unjuſtly to forbid Chriſt's Miniſters to preach his Goſpel, or ſpeak in his Name; or to ſtand up againſt them and contradict, reſiſt and hinder them in the preaching of the truth: and as Gamaliel calls it, to fight againſt God, Acts 5. 39. Yet thus they did by the Apoſtles, v. 46. When they had called the Apoſtles and beaten them, they commanded that they ſhould not ſpeak in the Name of Jeſus, and let them go. So Acts 4. 18, 19. And they called them and commanded them not to ſpeak at all, nor teach in the Name of Jeſus: but Peter and John anſwered and ſaid unto them, Whether it be right in the ſight of God, to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye; for we cannot but ſpeak the things which we have ſeen and heard. 1 Theſ. 2. 15, 16. Who both killed the Lord Jeſus, and their own Prophets, and have perſecuted us: and they pleaſe not God and are contrary to all men: Forbidding us to ſpeak to the Gentiles that they might be ſaved, to fill up their ſins alway: for the wrath is come upon them to the uttermoſt. As Dr. Hammond Paraphraſeth it, [And this generally is the ground of their quarrel to us, that in ſpight of their prohibition, we preach to the Gentiles——].

§. 17. 6. Another ſin of the Tongue, is Prophane Swearing either by God or by Creatures: And alſo all light and unreverent uſe of the Name and Attributes of God, of which more afterwards.

§. 18. 7. Much more is Perjury or Forſwearing a moſt heinous ſin, it being an appealing to God, the Author and Defender of Truth, to bear witneſs to an untruth, and to judge the offender; and ſo a craving of Vengeance from God.

§. 19. 8. Lying alſo is a great and common ſin of the Tongue: of which more anon.

§. 20. 9. Another ſin of the Tongue, is hypocritical diſſembling, which is worſe than meer lying: when Mens Tongues agree not with their Hearts, but ſpeak good words in prayer to God, or conference with men, to cover evil Intentions or affections, and to repreſent themſelves to the hearers as better than they are.

§. 21. 10. Another is Oſtentation or proud boaſting, either of mens wit, and learning, or greatneſs, or riches, or honour, or ſtrength, or beauty, or parts, or piety, or any thing that men are proud of. As the faithful do make their boaſt in God, (Pſal. 34. 2. Pſal. 44. 8.) and in the Croſs of Chriſt, by which they are crucified to the world, (Gal. 6. 14.) So the covetous boaſt themſelves in the the mulitude of their riches, Pſal. 49. 6. and the Workers of Iniquity boaſt themſelves againſt the righteous, and the proud do triumph and ſpeak hard things, Pſal. 94. 2, 3, 4. Even againſt the Lord do they boaſt, in their boaſting againſt his people, Ezek. 35. 13. So far as Pride prevaileth with men, they are apt to boaſt themſelves to be ſome body, Acts 5. 36. Either openly as the more fooliſh do, or cunningly by the help of fair pretences, as the more ingenious proud ones do.

Quod facere inutile eſt, ne diſcere quidem: nam ſi facere nequivero, videbo. Pittaci Sent. in Laert.

§. 22. 11. Another Sin of the Tongue, is unſeaſonable ſpeaking of common things when holy things ſhould be preferred; as on the Lords Day, or at the time of publick Worſhip, or when the Company, Occaſion, or Opportunity call for holy Speeches: Worldlings are talking as Saul of their Aſſes, when they ſhould talk of a Kingdom, 1 Sam. 9. & 10. To ſpeak about your Callings and Common Affairs is lawful, ſo it be moderately and in ſeaſon: But when you talk all of the World and Vanity, and never have done, and will ſcarce have any other talk in your mouths, and even on Gods day will ſpeak your own words, (Iſa. 58. 13.) this is prophane and ſinful ſpeaking.

§. 23. 12. Another common ſin of the Tongue, is a tempting and perſwading others to ſin, enticing them to gluttony, drunkenneſs, wantonneſs, fornication, or any other crime; as men that not only do the ſame, but have pleaſure in them that do them, Rom. 1. 32. This is to be the Inſtruments and ſervants of the Devil, and moſt directly to do his work in the world. The ſame I may ſay of unjuſt excuſing, extenuating or defending the ſins of others, or commanding, alluring, affrighting, or encouraging them thereto.

§. 24. 13. Another is, a carnal manner of handling the ſacred things of God, as when it is done with lightneſs, or with unſuitable curioſity of words, or in a ludicrous toyiſh manner, eſpecially by the Preachers of the Goſpel themſelves; and not with a ſtyle that's grave and ſerious, agreeable to the weight and majeſty of the truth.

Didymus Alex. on Jam. 3. of Bridling the Tongue, ſaith, Non putandum eſt de peccato prolativi ſermonis, quæ ſolœciſmos & barbariſmos quidam vocant, hæc fuiſſe dicta.

§. 25. 14. Another is an imprudent, raſh and ſlovenly handling of holy things: when they are ſpoken of ſo ignorantly, unskilfully, diſorderly or paſſionately, as tendeth to diſhonour them, and fruſtrate the deſired good ſucceſs.

§. 26. 15. Another ſin of the tongue is the reviling or diſhonouring of ſuperiours: When Children ſpeak unreverently and diſhonourably to, or of their Parents, or Subjects of their Governours, or Servants of their Maſters, either to their Faces, or behind their backs. 2 Pet. 2. 10. They are not afraid to ſpeak evil of Dignities, Jude 8.

§. 27. 16. Another is, the imperious contempt of Inferiours, inſulting over them, provoking and diſcouraging them; Epheſ. 6. 4. Fathers provoke not your Children to wrath.

§. 28. 17. Another ſin of the Tongue is Idle talk, and multitude of uſeleſs words: a babling loquacity, or unprofitableneſs of ſpeech: when it is ſpeech that tendeth to no edification, nor any good uſe for mind or body or affairs.

§. 29. 18. Another ſin is Fooliſh talk, or jeaſting in levity and folly, which tendeth to poſſeſs the minds of the hearers with a diſpoſition of levity and folly, like the ſpeakers: Epheſ. 5 4. Fooliſh talking and jeaſting are things not convenient. Honeſt mirth is lawful, and is the Art which is moſt ſanctified, as being from a holy principle, and about a holy matter, or to a holy end: as Rejoycing in the Lord always, Phil. 4. 4. If any be merry let him ſing Pſalms, Jam. 5. 13. But ſuch a light and frothy jeaſting as is but the vent of habitual levity by idle words is not allowable. But eſpecially thoſe perſons do moſt odiouſly abuſe their tongues and Reaſon, who counterfeit ideots or fools, and uſe their wit to cover their jeaſts with a ſeeming folly, to make them the more ridiculous, and make it their very profeſſion to be the Jeatters of great men. They make a trade of heinous ſin.

§. 30. 19. Another ſin is Filthy ſpeaking, Eph. 5. 4. Obſcene and ribbald talk; which the Apoſtle calls corrupt or rotten communication, Epheſ. 4. 29. when wanton filthy minds do make themſelves merry with wanton filthy ſpeeches: This is the Devils preparative to whoredom and all abominable uncleanneſs: For when the tongue is firſt taught to make a ſport of ſuch filthy ſins, and the Ear to be delighted in it, or be indifferent to it, there remaineth but a ſmall ſtep to actual filthineſs.

§. 31. 20. Another ſin of the tongue is curſing; when men wiſh ſome miſchief cauſleſly or unwarrantably to others: If you ſpeak but in paſſion or jeaſt, and deſire not to them in your hearts the hurt which you name, it is nevertheleſs a ſin of the tongue, as it is to ſpeak blaſphemy or treaſon in a paſſion or in jeaſt: The Tongue muſt be ruled as well as the heart. But if really you deſire the hurt which you wiſh them, it is ſo much the worſe: But it is worſt of all, when paſſionate factious men will turn their very Prayers into Curſings, calling for fire from Heaven, and praying for other mens deſtruction or hurt; and pretending Scripture Examples for it; as if they might do it unwarrantably, which others have done in other caſes in a warrantable manner.

§. 32. 21. Slandering is another ſin of the tongue when out of malice and ill-will, men ſpeak evil falſly of others to make them odious or do them hurt: Or elſe through uncharitable credulity, do eaſily believe a falſe report, and ſo report it again to others; or through raſhneſs and unruſineſs of tongue, divulge it, before they try it, or receive either juſt proof, or any warrantable call to mention it.

§. 33. 22. Another ſin is Backbiting and venting ill reports behind mens backs, without any warrant: Be the matter true or falſe, as long as you either know it not to be true, or if you do, yet vent it to make the perſon leſs reſpected, or at leaſt without a ſufficient cauſe, it is a ſin againſt God, and a wrong to men.

§. 34. 23. Another ſin is raſh cenſuring, when you ſpeak that evil of another, which you have but an uncharitable ſurmiſe of; and take that to be probable which is but poſſible, or that to be certain which is but probable againſt another.

Exiſtimant loquacitatem eſſe facundiam, & maledicere omnibus, bonæ conſcientiæ ſignum arbitrantur. Hieron. Cont. Helvid.

§. 35. 24. Another ſin is Railing, reviling, or paſſionate provoking words, which tend to the diminution of charity, and the breach of peace, and the ſtirring up of diſcord, and of a return of railing words from others, contrary to the Love and patience and meekneſs and gentleneſs which becometh Saints.

§. 36. 25. Another ſin is cheating, deceiving, over reaching words: when Men uſe their tongues to defraud their Neighbours in bargaining for their own gain.

§. 37. 26. Another ſin of the tongue is falſe witneſs-bearing, and falſe accuſing; a ſin which cries to God for vengeance, who is the Juſtifier of the Innocent.

§. 38. 27. Another ſin of the tongue is the paſſing an unrighteous ſentence in judgment: when Rulers abſolve the guilty or condemn the juſt, and call evil good and good evil, and ſay to the Righteous, Thou

§. 39.

§. 39. 28. Another sin of the Tongue is Flattery; which is the more heinous by how much more hurtful: And it is most hurtful, 1. When it tendeth to delude men in the greatest things, even the state of their souls; The flattery of a Preacher that deceiveth men as in the name of Christ, is of all other flattery the most pernicious: To make the unregenerate believe that they are regenerate, and the ungodly to believe that they are Godly, and the unjustified to believe that they are justified, and the Children of Satan to believe that without Conversion they may be saved; to make a worldling, a swearer, a glutton, a drunkard, a fornicator, a formal hypocrite, or a hater of holiness; believe that such as he may come to Heaven without the sanctifying renewing work of the Holy Ghost, this is the most eminent service of the Devil that the Tongue of any man can do him, except it be the very open oppossers of Religion: As the Devil useth more to flatter men to Hell, than to frighten them thither, so do his Ministers and instruments. And all doctrines of Libertinism and looseness, which warrant men to do evil and to neglect a holy life, are of the two a more dangerous way of flattery, than that which consisteth but in misapplication. Thus also carnal friends do use to flatter a sinner into presumption and false hopes, when they see him convinced of his sin and misery, and say, [Trouble not your self, God is merciful, and you have lived well, and been a good neighbour, and done no body harm, and if such as you be not saved, God help a great many.] Thus when a convinced sinner is striving to get out of the Devils snares, the servants of Satan rock him asleep again by false and flattering speeches and deceit.

Indignum hominem divitiarum gratiâ laudare noli. Bias in Laert.

2. Flattering is pernicious when it tendeth to the hurt of many: as when Rulers are deceived and perverted by it to the destruction of the people and themselves, Prov. 26. 28. A lying tongue hateth those that are afflicted by it, and a flattering mouth worketh ruine. See 1 Thes. 2. 5. Ezek. 12. 24. Psal. 12. 2, 3.

§. 40. 29. Another sin is a jearing, mocking, deriding or scorning at others, either for their infirmities of body or mind, or for their virtues, or through envy and malice or pride or a custome of deriding scornful speech. Scorners delight in scorning, Prov. 1. 22. See Psal. 22. 7. & 44. 13. & 79. 4. especially when sinners scorn at the reproofs and counsels of the godly, and cast them all back into their faces with contempt: For he that reproveth a scorner getteth himself a blot, Prov. 9. 7, 8. A scorner loveth not one that reproveth, Prov. 15. 12.

§. 41. 30. Another tongue-sin is Idolatry or false worship: the praise of fools, or praying to them: or making songs or speeches or disputes for them: as also the false worship of the true God. These among others are the sins of the Tongue to be avoided. No wonder if there be yet more, for the Tongue is [ὁ κόσμος τῆς ἀδικίας] a world of iniquity, Jam. 3. 6.

Dir. 4. §. 42. Direct. 4. When you have thus understood the duties and sins of the Tongue, and the greatness of them, the next thing which you must be most careful and diligent about is, that you keep all that upon the heart which should be upon the tongue, and keep the heart clean from that which the tongue must be kept clean from. The principal work must be about the heart. For out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. 1. The tongue will be no other way effectually governed: If the heart be upon the world, the tongue will most commonly be upon the world: you may force it a little against your hearts, but it will be but to a very unconstant obedience: when you ever so little loose the reins it is gone. If the heart be proud, the tongue will speak proudly: If the heart be lustful, or vain, or malicious, the words will ordinarily be so too. 2. Or if you can force the tongue to go against the heart, it is but an hypocritical reformation. A vain, a proud, a worldly, a wanton, a malicious or ungodly heart will condemn you, though the tongue were forced to speak humbly, chastely, patiently, or piously. Therefore if you would overcome the vanity, or worldliness, or wantonness, or any other corruption of your speech, first set your selves to overcome the same corruption in your hearts, and to revive and actuate the contrary graces: And if you would use your tongues to the honour of God, and the edification of men, wind up the spring of those holy affections which must be as water to the mill. It is the use of the tongue to express the mind: And it is the use of holy speech to be the expression of a holy mind: And do you think to express that which you have not? Will you make a duty of a lie? If you would speak of Christ, or Heaven with seriousness, see that your hearts are seriously set upon Christ and Heaven. When you go into any company where you should speak for God, and for the hearers good, endeavour before hand to get a deep impression on your hearts, of those attributes or truths of God which you would express; and to revive the sense of that upon your selves which you would make others sensible of. Stir up within you the Love of God, and the Love of holiness and truth, and a love of the souls of them you speak to; and then you will be as a Conduit which runs as soon as the Cock is turned, because it's always full of water.

Loqui quæ sentis, & sentire quæ loqueris, ut Seneca. Fidum nihil lingua loqui valet, dum cordi duplex altè insedit sensus: Sent. Pittaci in Laertio. Bias percontanti homini impio quid esset pietas, nihil respondet; cumque ille silentii causam scisceitaretur, Quia, inquit, de rebus nihil ad te pertinentibus quæris. Laert.

§. 43. Direct. 5. Labour for understanding in the matters on which you should discourse: Ignorance denyeth provision for discourse, or furnisheth you only with chaff and vanity; and maketh you so speak as that it were better to say nothing. Knowledge and wisdom is a continual store-house of good and profitable talk; such as the scribe instructed to the Kingdom of Heaven, that bringeth out of his treasure things new and old, Matth. 13. 52. When a man understandeth the matter which he is to speak of, he is furnished to speak understandingly of it to others, and to defend it against gainsayers, Psal. 37. 30. 31. The mouth of the righteous speaketh wisdom and his tongue talketh of judgment: The Law of his God is in his heart; none of his steps shall slide, Prov. 10. 31, 32. The mouth of the just bringeth forth wisdom: but the froward tongue shall be cut out: The lips of the righteous know what is acceptable: but the mouth of the wicked speaketh frowardness. Wise men are never unprovided for wise speech: But the mouth of fools bewrayeth their folly, Prov. 15. 2. The tongue of the wise useth knowledge aright; but the mouth of fools poureth out foolishness, Prov. 14. 3. In the mouth of the foolish is a rod of pride; but the lips of the wise shall preserve them, Prov. 18. 6, 7. A fools lips enter into contention, and his mouth calleth for strokes. A fools mouth is his destruction, and his lips are the snare of his soul. But you'll say, To tell us that we should get wisdom is a word soon spoken, but not a thing that's easily or quickly done: It's very true: And therefore it's as true that the tongue is not easily well used and governed; for men cannot express the wisdom which they have not, unless it be by rote: Therefore you must take Solomons counsel, Prov. 2. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. My son, if thou wilt receive my words, and hide my commandments with thee; so that thou encline thine ear to wisdom, and apply thy heart to understanding; yea,

Dir. 5.

yea if thou cryeſt after knowledge and lifteſt up thy voice for underſtanding; If thou ſeekeſt her as ſilver and ſearcheſt for her as for hidden treaſures; Then ſhalt thou underſtand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God: For the Lord giveth wiſdom, &c.——

Dir. 6. Jam. 1. 19. Slow to ſpeak, ſlow to wrath. Prov. 17. 28.

§. 44. Direct. 6. In the mean time learn to be ſilent till you have learnt to ſpeak. Let not your tongues run before your wits; ſpeak not of that which you do not well underſtand, unleſs as Learners to receive inſtruction: Rather of the two ſpeak too little than too much. Thoſe that will needs talk of things which they underſtand not, do uſe either to ſpeak evil of them, (as Jud. 10.) when they are good, or to ſpeak evilly of them, be they good or bad. He that cannot hold his tongue well cannot ſpeak well. There is a time to keep ſilence, and a time to ſpeak, Eccleſ. 3. 9. Amos 5. 13. There is a time ſo evil that the prudent ſhould keep ſilence. At ſuch a time, Nihil æquè proderit quam quieſcere, & minimum cum aliis loqui & plurimum ſecum, Saith Seneca: It's then the beſt way to be quiet, and to ſay little to others, and much to your ſelves. You have two ears and one tongue: Hear twice and ſpeak once: we oftner repent of ſpeaking than of being ſilent. Few words are quickly anſwered for: To be wary and ſparing of your ſpeech doth not only avoid abundance of contention, danger and repentance, but alſo procureth you a reputation of wiſdom. Plutarch ſaith well, that Pauca loquentibus paucis legibus opus eſt. There needs but few Laws for them that ſpeak but few words. When one ſaid to the Cynick when he was much ſilent [If thou art a wiſe man thou doſt fooliſhly; If thou be a fool thou doſt wiſely:] He anſwered, Nemo ſtultus tacere poteſt: A fool cannot hold his tongue: And he that cannot hold his tongue cannot hold his peace. Pythagoras his council in this agreeth with Chriſts, Aut ſile, aut aſſer ſilentio meliora: Either be ſilent, or ſay ſomething that is better than ſilence. It was a wiſe anſwer of him that being asked whom covetous Landlords, and whom covetous Lawyers hated moſt, did anſwer to the firſt, Thoſe that eat little and ſweat much (For they uſually live long, and ſo their Leaſes are not ſoon expired:) and to the ſecond [I hope that ſpeak little and love much.] For ſuch ſeldom make any work for Lawyers. Two things are requiſite in the matter of your ſpeech, that it be ſomewhat needful to be ſpoken, and that it be a thing which you underſtand: Till then be ſilent.

§. 45. Direct. 7. Take heed of haſty raſhneſs in your ſpeech and uſe deliberation, eſpecially in great or in doubtful things. Think before you ſpeak: It's better to try your words before you ſpeak them, than after: A preventing trial is better than a repenting tryal: But if both be omitted, God will try them to your greater coſt. I know in matters that are throughly underſtood a wiſe man can ſpeak without any further premeditation, than the immediate actuating of the knowledge which he doth expreſs: But when there is any fear of miſ-underſtanding, or a diſability to ſpeak fitly and ſafely without fore-thoughts, there haſty ſpeaking without deliberation (eſpecially in weighty things) muſt be avoided. Prov. 29. 20. ſeeſt thou a man that is haſty in his words? there is more hope of a fool than of him; eſpecially take heed in ſpeaking either to God in prayer, or in the name of God or as from God in preaching or exhortation; or about the holy matters of God in any of thy diſcourſe, Eccleſ. 5. 1, 2. Keep thy foot when thou goeſt to the houſe of God, and be more ready to hear than to offer the ſacrifice of fools; for they conſider not that they do evil (that is, watch thy ſelf in publick worſhip, and be forwarder to learn of God and to obey him, as ſenſible of thy ignorance and ſubject to his will, than to offer him thy ſacrifice (as if he ſtood in need of thee) while thou neglecteſt or rejecteſt his commands.) Be not raſh with thy mouth, and let not thy heart be haſty to utter any thing before God: for God is in Heaven and thou upon earth, therefore let thy words be few: For a dream cometh through multitude of buſineſs, and a fools voice is known by multitude of words: That is, Come to God as an obedient learner and a receiver, and not as a giver: and therefore be readier to hear what he hath to command thee, than to pour out many words before him, as if he would accept and hear thee for thy babling: If loquacity and forwardneſs to talk many undigeſted words be a ſign of folly among men, how much more when thou ſpeakeſt to God that is in Heaven.

Dir. 8.

§. 46. Direct. 8. Keep a holy government over all your paſſions (as aforeſaid) and eſpecially try all thoſe words with ſuſpicion which any paſſion urgeth you to vent. For Paſſion is ſo apt to blind the judgement, that even holy paſſions themſelves muſt be warily managed, and feared, as you carry fire among ſtraw or other combuſtible matter. As grievous words ſtir up anger, Prov. 15. 1. So anger cauſed grievous words. Be not haſty in thy ſpirit to be angry; for anger reſteth in the boſome of fools, Eccleſ. 7 9. To govern the tongue when you are in any Paſſion (either Love, or fear, or grief, or anger) is like the governing of a Ship in ſtorms and Tempeſts, or the managing of a Horſe that is fierce and heated. Prov. 14. 16, 17. The fool rageth and is confident: He that is ſoon angry dealeth fooliſhly. Prov. 21. 19. It is better to dwell in the Wilderneſs than with a contentious angry woman. Prov. 29. 22. An angry man ſtirreth up ſtrife, and a furious man aboundeth in tranſgreſſion. There is no ruling the tongue if you cannot rule the paſſions: Therefore it's good council, Prov. 22 24. Make no friendſhip with an angry man, and with a furious man thou ſhalt not go; leſt thou learn his way, and get a ſnare to thy ſoul.

§ 47. Direct. 9. Foreſee your opportunities of profitable diſcourſe, and your temptations to evil ſpeeches: For we are ſeldom throughly prepared for ſudden unexpected accidents. Conſider when you go forth what company you are like to fall into, and what good you are like to be called to, or what evil you are likeſt to be tempted to: Eſpecially conſider the ordinary ſtated duties and temptations of your daily company and converſe.

Dir. 10.

§. 48. Direct. 10. Accordingly (beſides your aforeſaid general preparations) be prepared particularly for thoſe duties and thoſe temptations: Carry ſtill about with you ſome ſpecial preſervatives againſt thoſe particular ſins of ſpeech which you are moſt in danger of, and ſome ſpecial proviſions and helps to thoſe duties of ſpeech which you may be called to. As a Surgeon will carry about with him his Inſtruments and Salves which he is like to have uſe for, among the perſons that he hath to do with: And as a Traveller will carry ſuch neceſſaries ſtill with him as in his travel he cannot be without. If you are to converſe with angry men, be ſtill furniſhed with patience and firm reſolutions to give place to wrath, Rom. 12. 19. If you are to converſe with ignorant ungodly men, go furniſhed with powerful convincing reaſons, to humble them and change their minds: If you are to go amongſt the caviling or ſcorning enemies of holineſs, go furniſhed with well digeſted arguments for the defence of that which they are likeſt to oppoſe; that you may ſhame and ſtop the mouths of ſuch gainſayers. This muſt be done by the word of the Spirit, which is the word of God, Ephel. 6. 17. Therefore be well acquainted with the Scripture, and with particular plain Texts for each particular uſe: By them the man of God is compleat, throughly furniſhed to every good work, 2 Tim 3. 17.

If it be ſpeech unmeet for the hearing of a grave and reverend man, will you ſpeak it before God? will you ſpeak wantonly or filthily, or fooliſhly or maliciouſly, when God forbiddeth it, and when he is preſent and heareth every word, and when you muſt certainly give account to him of all?

Tit. 2. Special Directions againſt prophane ſwearing, and uſing Gods name unreverently and in vain.

§. 1. I. TO ſwear is an affirming or denying of a thing with an appeal to ſome other thing or perſon as a witneſs of the truth or avenger of the untruth, who is not producible as Witneſs or Judge in humane courts. An affirmation or negation is the matter of an oath: The peculiar appellation is the form: It is not every appeal or atteſtation that maketh an oath. To appeal to ſuch a witneſs as is credible and may be produced in the Court, from a partial incredible witneſs, is no oath. To appeal from an incompetent Judge or an inferior Court, to a competent Judge or higher Court, is no ſwearing. To ſay, [I take the King for my witneſs, or I appeal to the King,] is not to ſwear by the King: But to ſay, [I take God to witneſs, or I appeal to God as the Judge of the truth of what I ſay] is to ſwear by God. But to appeal to God as a righteous Judge againſt the injuſtice or cruelty of men, without relation to his atteſting or judging any affirmation or negation of our own, is no ſwearing by him, becauſe there wanteth the Matter of an Oath. An Oath is an appeal to ſome ſupernatural or higher and more terrible power, than that of the Court or perſon we ſwear to, to make our teſtimony the more credible, when other evidences of certainty or credibility are wanting. So that a legal teſtimony or appeal are not ſwearing. What an Oath is. Deut 6. 13. & 10. 20.

§. 2. Swearing is either juſt and lawful, or ſinful and abuſive. To a juſt and lawful oath it is neceſſary, 1. That it be God alone ultimately that we ſwear by: Becauſe no witneſs and avenging Judge above humane Courts can be appealed to but God: And therefore to ſwear by any creature properly and in the ſenſe as God is ſworn by, is to idolize it, and to aſcribe it to the properties of God. (Of which more anon.) 2. It is neceſſary to a juſt oath, that the matter be true as it is aſſertory or negative, and alſo if it be promiſſory, that the matter be, 1. Honeſt and lawful, 2. and poſſible: And where any one of theſe are wanting, it is unlawful. 3. It is needful that there be an honeſt end: For the end is a principal ingredient in all moral good and evil. 4. It is needful that it be done upon a ſufficient call and honeſt motives, and not unneceſſarily or without juſt reaſon. 5. And the manner and circumſtances muſt be lawful. What's a lawful Oath. Iſa. 48. 1. Jer. 4. 2.

§. 3. An oath is an equivocal word, taken ſometimes for that which is formally ſo, as before deſcribed; and ſometime for that which is but the matter and expreſſive form without any real intent of ſwearing. Or, an Oath is taken either for the whole humane act compleatly, containing the word ſignifying and the purpoſe ſignified; or elſe for the outward ſign or words alone. (As the word Prayer ſignifieth ſometime the bare form of words, and ſometime the words and deſire ſignified by them: And as the word ſacrament is ſometime taken for the external ſigns only, and ſometime for the ſigns with the mutual covenanting and actions ſignified.) Here it may be queſtioned.

§. 4. Queſt. Whether it be ſwearing or not, which is frequently uſed by ignorant careleſs people, who uſe the words or form of an oath, in meer cuſtome, not knowing what an oath is, nor having any thought or purpoſe of appealing to God, or to the creature by which they ſwear. The reaſon of the doubt is, becauſe it ſeemeth to be but the matter or external part of an oath; and it is the form that ſpecifieth and denominateth: He that ſhould ignorantly ſpeak the words of an oath in Latine or Greek while he underſtandeth not the language and intendeth no ſuch thing, doth not ſwear. Queſt.

Anſw. How far the Intent of the ſwearer (as of the Baptizer or Baptized to Baptiſm) is neceſſary to the Being of an Oath?

§. 5. Anſw. 1. In the full and propereſt ſenſe of the word, It is before God no oath if there be no intent of confirming your ſpeech by an Appeal to God, or to that which you ſwear by. As a ludicrous waſhing and uſing the words of Baptiſm, is no true Baptiſm, no more than a Corpſe is a man (And thus it is true which the Papiſts ſay, that the Intention of the Baptizer is neceſſary to the being of Baptiſm: That is, It is neceſſary to the Being of ſacramental adminiſtration to the Baptizer himſelf: before God, that he really intend to Baptize: And it is neceſſary to the Being of Baptiſm before God in the perſon baptized that he himſelf if at age, or thoſe that have power to dedicate him to God if he be an infant, do really intend it: And it is neceſſary to the Being of the external ordinance in foro Eccleſiæ, before the Church, that both the Baptizer and Baptized do profeſs or ſeem to intend it:) 2. But if you uſe ſuch words as are the ordinary form of an oath in a language which you underſtand, ſo as the hearers may juſtly ſuppoſe you to underſtand it, it is an oath, coram hominibus, before men, and in the latter narrower ſenſe of the word: And it ſhall be obligatory and pleadable againſt you in any Court of juſtice by thoſe you ſwear to: Yea and God himſelf, doth take you thereby to be obliged thus to men: And if it be a prophane cauſeleſs ſwearing, men muſt call it an oath; for they ſee not the heart; even as they muſt take him to be baptized that profeſſeth to intend it: And in foro humano, it is ſo indeed: And God himſelf will account you a ſinner, even one that uſe the external form of an oath, and that which before men, is an oath, to the wrong of his name and honour and to the ſcandal of others. And it will not excuſe you that you knew not that it was an oath, or that you knew not the nature of an oath, or that you raſhly uſed it, not conſidering that it was an oath: For you were bound to have known and to have conſidered: You ſhould have done it, and might have done it if you would. But if they were words which you could not know to have been the form or expreſſions of an oath, but the hearers might perceive that you meant no ſuch thing, but ſomething elſe, then you are excuſable, if you had juſt cauſe to uſe them.

How far ſwearing by Creatures is a ſin.

§. 6. II. As to the caſe of ſwearing by Creatures, how far it is ſinful; it is juſt like the caſe of worſhipping Images, or by Images: He that worſhippeth an Image or any Creature as God, and ultimately terminateth his worſhip in it, doth commit direct and full Idolatry: Which is ſo much the greater ſin, by how much the baſer the thing is which he idolizeth: But if he make the Image or Creature but his medium of that worſhip which ſhould be immediately offered to God, in whom it is ultimately terminated, then it is not groſs Idolatry, but it is falſe and forbidden worſhip of the true God: But if the Creature be made but the medium of that worſhip which God would have offered him by a medium, then it is lawful ſo to uſe or worſhip it; (As to honour and admire God as appearing in his works; to give that worſhip or honour to our Parents and Rulers as his Officers, which is ultimately terminated in God) juſt ſo is it in the caſe of ſwearing: For ſwearing is a part of the worſhip of God. He that ſweareth by any Creature as a God, or as the avenger of thoſe that by falſhood elude the judgement of man, doth commit Idolatry in it; As Julian did when he ſwore by the Sun; (which he praiſed by his Orations and worſhipped as God.) But he that only ſweareth ſo by a Creature, as to intend God ultimately as the witneſs and avenger, but yet ſo as that the creature only is named, or ſo named as hath an appearance of Idolatry or tendeth to entice the mind from God, or ſcandalouſly to obſcure his honour, or in any other forbidden way, doth ſwear by the true God intentionally, but in a ſinful manner. But he that directly ſweareth by God (upon a juſt call), and by the creature (or nameth the creature rather,) but in a juſt and clear and inoffenſive ſubordination to God, is excuſable. So we uſe to lay our hands on the Bible and thus to ſwear [So help me God, and the Contents of this Book]. Thus on great occaſions many good men in their writings to clear themſelves from ſome calumny have ſaid [I call God, and Angels, and Men to witneſs]. Many in naming Creatures intend rather a Curſe than a ſwearing by the Creature: As [If it be not ſo, let God deſtroy me by this fire or this water, &c.]

Deut. 10. 20. Iſa. 45. 23. Iſa. 65. 16. Jer. 4. 2. Amos 8. 14. Hoſ. 4. 15. Zeph. 1. 5. Jer. 12. 16. Iſa. 19. 18.

Queſt. Is it lawful to lay hands on the book and kiſs it in ſwearing as is done in England?

Reſp. To take an Oath as impoſed in England with laying the hand on the Bible and kiſſing it, is not unlawful.

Proved 1. That which is not forbidden by God is Lawful (before God) But ſo to take an Oath is not forbidden by God——Therefore, &c. The minor will be ſufficiently proved by diſproving all the pretenſes of a prohibition. The major needeth no proof.

2. If it be forbidden it is either, 1. As an Act in Worſhip not commanded, and ſo will-worſhip, 2. Or as a ſignificant Ceremony in worſhip not commanded. 3. Or as an uncommanded ſignificant Ceremony, which hath in it ſelf ſome forbidden matter or manner. But it is not forbidden in any of theſe reſpects: Therefore not at all.

I. Not as an Act not commanded in worſhip: For à quatenus ad omne valet conſequentia: Then all Acts in worſhip not commanded would be unlawful, which is falſe: For, 1. The Acts uſed in ſwearing, Gen. 24. 2. & 14. 22. Apoc. 10. 5. Were not commanded and yet lawful: Of which more anon. 2. God hath not commanded what Tune to ſing a Pſalm in, what diviſion to make of the Bible into Chapters and Verſes, whether to uſe a written or a printed Bible, what words, what method, what particular text to chooſe, what tranſlation to uſe, with many ſuch like.

II. Not as a ſignificant Ceremony not commanded: For then all ſuch ſhould be forbidden, which is not true. For, 1. Abrahams ſwearing by lifting up the hand (and ſo the Angels Apoc. 10) and Abrahams ſervant by putting his hand under the thigh, were ſignificant Ceremonies: And he that will ſay they were commanded muſt prove it: The contrary may well by us be ſuppoſed, 1. Becauſe no ſuch Law is notified in Scripture, and here non apparere and non eſſe are equal, becauſe of the perfection of Gods Laws. 2. Becauſe it is mentioned, as Paræus and other Commentators note, as ſome accuſtomed rite, and ſo dependeth not on any particular precept to Abraham alone as a Prophet. 3. Becauſe it is not one but ſeveral ſorts of ſwearing Rites that are mentioned, Lifting up the hand, and putting it under the thigh.

2. Almoſt all Chriſtians take ſome uncommanded ſignificant Ceremony in ſwearing to be lawful. The Ceremony mentioned by Paræus ibid. as uſed in the Palatinate is ſuch, of lifting up three fingers, Hodie nos juramus, digitis tribus dextræ ſublatis invocantes vindicem S. Trinitatem. The Engliſh Annotations tell you, that the cuſtoms of countrys are very various in this point, yet moſt agree in adding ſome outward atteſtation of Action or geſture to words in taking of an Oath to make it better remembred and more regarded, than bare words of affirmation, promiſe or imprecation. And Joſephus (cited by Grotius) tells us, 'twas then the cuſtom among the Jews to ſwear by this Ceremony of putting the hand under the thigh (whether in token of ſubjection, or becauſe it was the place of the ſword the inſtrument of revenge, as Grotius and others, or in expectation pectation of the promiſed ſeed as the Fathers thought.) And the caſe of Joſeph's adjuration ſhews it. Vid. Perer. in Gen. 14 & 24.

3. An Action of another part of the Body is no more forbidden to expreſs the mind by, than of the tongue. God never ſaid, you ſhall no way expreſs your minds in things ſacred or civil, but by the Tongue. A Change of the Countenance may expreſs it: a frown or a pleaſant look. (Index animi Vultus.) Paul did lift up the hand to the Jews when he would ſpeak for himſelf: Chriſt made as if he would have gone further, Luke 24. Words are not natural ſigns, but invented and arbitrary in particulars, though the Power of ſpeaking words ſo invented and learned be natural. If it be lawful to uſe ſignificant words, not commanded in worſhip, it is lawful to uſe ſignificant Actions (under due regulation.) Therefore all the antient Churches, without one contradicter that ever I read of, did uſe many ſuch. Though Auguſtine Ep. ad Januar. ſadly complaineth that then they were grown to an oppreſſive number; yet he never ſpeaketh againſt the thing it ſelf. To ſtand up at the Creed is a ſignificant expreſſion of conſent, which not only all the Churches elſe, but the old Non-conformiſts never ſcrupled, nor do the preſent as far as I can learn: Whether to ſit, ſtand, or kneel, at ſinging Pſalms, is left at liberty. To put off the Hat is a ſignificant ceremony or act in worſhip, not commanded in it ſelf, nor uſed of old for the ſame ſignification as now: And where the covering of the head doth ſignifie Reverence, it is better than to be bare. In one country cuſtom maketh ſtanding up, in another ſitting and hanging down the head, in another kneeling, in another proſtration, to be the ſign of Reverence, which accordingly may be uſed in God's Service. When covenants between God and the People, are renewed, conſent may lawfully be expreſſed either by ſtanding up or by holding up the hand (by which ſuffrages in things ſacred were uſed to be given) or by ſubſcribing or by voice. For God hath commanded us the expreſſing of conſent, reverence, &c. But left the word geſture or expreſſing ſign to liberty. He that affirmeth that God hath left no other ſignification of our minds in ſacred things to our liberty, but tied us to words alone, muſt prove what he ſaith (which he muſt do againſt Scripture, againſt nature, and againſt all the judgment and cuſtom of all Chriſts Churches and of the world.)

III. If laying the hand on the Book and Kiſſing it be unlawful for any ſpecial matter or manner forbidden more than other ſignificant acts, it is for ſome of the reaſons named by you: which now I will anſwer.

I. Object. It ſavoureth of the Romiſh Superſtition. Anſw. 1. Not at all: Prove that if you can: 2. Superſtition is the feigning of things to be Pleaſing or Diſpleaſing to God which are not, and uſing or diſuſing them accordingly: whatever be the Etymologie of the word (Superſtitum Cultus, or ſupra Statutum, &c) it is certain that the common uſe of it among Heathens (as Plutarch at large,) and Chriſtians was, for an erroneous undue fear of God, thinking this or that was diſpleaſing or pleaſing to him, to be done or to be avoided which was not ſo, but was the conceit of a frightned miſtaking mind. Therefore to ſay that God is diſpleaſed with this ſignification of the mind, when it is not ſo, nor can be proved, is ſuperſtition. And this is not the ſolitary inſtance, of Satans introducing ſuperſtition under pretence of avoiding ſuperſtition. 3. The ſenſe of the Law is to be judged of by the Law, and by the notorious doctrine and profeſſion of the Law-makers and of the Land: which here renounceth the ſuperſtitious uſe of it. But I confeſs I was more afraid that the Papiſts had too much derogated from the Scripture, than given too much to it. And they profeſs that they ſwear not by a creature; Vid. Perer. ubi ſup. in Gen. 24. 2.

Object. But Paræus, &c. in Gen. 24. 2. ſaith, Non abſque ſuperſtitione fit cum ſuper crucifixum aut codicem Evangelii digitis impoſitis juratur, ut fit in Papatu. Anſw. 1. But that ſame Act which in Papatu is ſuperſtitious becauſe of ſuperſtitious conceits and ends, is not ſo in all others that have none ſuch. 2. It is no new thing to be quick in accuſing our adverſaries: but Paræus addeth not a ſyllable of proof; And if he had, it muſt have been ſuch, as toucht not us, or elſe invalid.

Object. Some good men have ſcrupled it. Anſw. 1. Ten thouſand to one ſuch, have not ſcrupled it. 2. They are not our Gods nor Law. 3. The Quakers and the Old Anabaptiſts (and they ſay Origen) ſcrupled, yea, condemned all ſwearing, or all impoſed Oaths. And if we avoid all as ſin which ſome good men have ſcrupled, we ſhall make Superſtition a great part of our Religion: And when on the ſame Grounds we have but practiſed all as Duty, which ſome good men have taken for Duty, we ſhall quite out-go the Papiſts. He that readeth Beda, Boniface, and abundance ſuch pious Writers will ſoon ſee, that Godly or Fanatical Religious perſons Dreams, Viſions, ſtrict Opinions, confident Aſſertions, and credulous believing one another, with the hope of improving ſuch things againſt Pagans and Jews, for Chriſtianity, brought in almoſt all the Legends and ſuperſtitions of the Papiſts.

II. Object. 2. Our Common-Law Commiſſions, that give authority to examine perſons, direct it to be done ſupra ſacramenta ſua per ſancta Dei evangelia fideliter præſtanda: And in the form of Adminiſtrations in Eccleſiaſtical Courts the words are Ad ſancta Dei Evangelia rite & legitime jurati: Whether theſe forms do not infer that in their firſt uſe, (at leaſt,) perſons either ſwore by the Evangeliſts or offended in that mode of Swearing: And our Common Law calls it a Corporal Oath, from touching the Book. Object.

Anſw. 1. To know the ſenſe of our preſent Law it is not neceſſary that we know the ſenſe of the firſt uſers of the form. For the Law is not now the Kings Law that firſt made it: (He hath no Law that hath no Government,) but the Kings Law that now reigneth, and beareth his ſenſe. 2. To juſtify our obedience to a Law, it is not neceſſary that we prove every Phraſe in that Law to be fitly expreſſed. 3. But examine it well, and try whether it be not alſo fit and laudable. Anſw.

1. There are three things conjoined in the Oaths in queſtion; 1. A teſtimony aſſertory or a promiſe. 2. An Oath, 3. An Imprecation. The Aſſertory Teſtimony here is the firſt thing intended; and the Oath and Imprecation are but as a means to make that Teſtimony or Promiſe valid. 2. The publiſhed Doctrine of England, in the 39 Articles, the book of Ordination, &c. is, that the Holy Scriptures contain all things neceſſary to Salvation, as being Gods Law or Rule of our Faith and Life. All our Duty to God is there commanded: All the Promiſes on which we hope are there contained: All the puniſhments which the perjured or any ſinner muſt feel, and ſhould fear, are there threatned. Therefore 3. The Laying on the hand and Kiſſing the Book, is an Action directly related to the Imprecation, and not to the Oath, but only by conſequence, as the Imprecation is ſubſervient to the Oath, as the Oath is to the Aſſertion. So that this is the plain paraphraſe of the whole [I do believe that God the Ruler of all the world, is the Judge of ſecrets which are above mans judgment, the Searcher of hearts, and the hater and avenger of perjury, according to this his holy word by which he governeth us: And to this God I appeal as to the truth of this my teſtimony, conſenting my ſelf, to loſe all the benefit of his promiſes to be juſt, and to bear all the puniſhment here threatned to the Perjured, if I lie.]

And what could be ſaid more fitly, 1. To own the Proteſtant doctrine that the Scripture is Gods perfect word: that the evil to be feared, and the good to be hoped for, is all there contained, and is all the fulfilling of that word? 2. And to put the word in its due ſubordination to God? And our ordinary form of ſwearing ſheweth this [So help you God, and the Contents of this Book.] Whether you will call this [ſwearing upon or by the Goſpel] or call it [a corporal Oath] or a ſpiritual Oath, is only de nomine, and is nothing to the matter thus truly deſcribed. Sacramentum ſignifieth the Oath it ſelf, and Ad ſancta evangelia is a fit phraſe: or if ſuper ſacramenta ſignifie the two Sacraments of the Goſpel, it can mean no more than [As one that by the reception of the Sacrament doth profeſs to believe this Goſpel to be true, I do renounce the benefits of it, if I lie:] And in this ſence it hath been ſome mens cuſtom to receive the Sacrament when they would ſolemnly ſwear.

Object. III. Object. Some ſeem to object againſt kiſſing the Book, as having the greater appearance of giving too much to it, or putting ſome adoration on it; and becauſe this Ceremony of kiſſing is held to be of later date than laying on the hand.

Anſw. Anſw. The Ceremony ſignifieth that I love and approve the Goſpel, and place the hope of my ſalvation in it. And the publick Doctrine of the Kingdom before cited, ſheweth us a full Expoſition what we aſcribe to it. But as ſome ſcrupulous Brethren in Scotland gratify the Papiſts by rejecting the Oath of Supremacy, which is the moſt thorny hedge againſt them, and this while they cry out againſt Popery; ſo others would gratify the Papiſts, by ſuggeſting that we give too much to the Bible, and adore it; when the very ſum of Englands Proteſtaniſm, is their juſt aſcribing to the Holy Scriptures its ſufficiency as to all things neceſſary to ſalvation. Thus Satan undoeth ſtill by overdoing.

Object. IV. Object. Laying on the hand, and kiſſing the Book, ſeem of the ſame nature with the Croſs in Baptiſm, and other ſignificant Ceremonies: And an Oath is part of the Worſhip of God: Therefore not to be taken, with theſe Ceremonies, or elſe will ſeem to juſtify the other.

Anſw. Anſw. 1. Significant words, geſtures, or actions are not therefore evil, becauſe they are ſignificant, (unleſs bruitiſhneſs be a Vertue): Nor becauſe any call them by the name of Ceremonies (elſe that name might be put on any thing by an enemy to deprive us of our liberty). Therefore I can judge of no Ceremony by that General name alone, till it be named it ſelf in ſpecie. 2. Of the Croſs in Baptiſm, ſee my Diſputations of Church-Government of Ceremonies written long ago. There are theſe notorious differences in the Caſe: 1. The Croſs is an Image uſed in Gods Worſhip; Though not a Permanent, yet a Tranſient Image, and uſed as an Image of the Croſs of Chriſt, though but in Water or Oyl. And God hath more ſpecially forbidden Images uſed in his Worſhip, than he hath done a Profeſſing ſignificant Word, Geſture or Action, which is no Image, nor uſed as ſuch. 2. The Croſs ſeemeth to be a third Sacrament of the Covenant of Grace, while it is uſed as a Symbol of Chriſtianity, and a dedicating Sign (as the Canon calleth it) by which before the Church, there is made a ſolemn ſelf-obligation, as Sacramentally, to renounce the Devil, the World and the Fleſh, and manfully to fight under Chriſts banner as his faithful Servants and Souldiers to our lives end: Implying our truſt and hope in Chriſt crucified for the benefits of his death. So that if it be not a compleat third Sacrament, it hath ſo much of that which is proper to a Sacrament (like the Sacramentum Militare, whence the Name came into the Church) that for my part, I dare not uſe it, tho' I preſume not to cenſure thoſe that do, nor to condemn all other uſes of the Croſs, which the Ancients abounded in, as ſudden particular profeſſing Signs, much below this ſolemn covenanting uſe. And I think the King would not take it well, when he hath made the Star the Badge of the Knights of the Garter, (if any Subject will preſume to make another Symbolum Ordinis (tho' yet many a ſignificant Geſture or Act may be uſed without offence). So I fear Chriſt would not take it well of me if I preſume to make or uſe another Symbol or Teſſera of Chriſtianity, Eſpecially with ſo much of a Covenanting Sacramental Nature. But what's this to things or Geſtures ſignificant of no ſuch kind? You ſee then the difference of theſe Caſes.

But if you were able to prove the Croſs as harmleſs as the Swearing Ceremony, I would be for the Croſs, and not againſt the laying the hand on the Book and kiſſing it: For 1. I am not of their mind that form their Judgment of other Particulars to ſuit with their preconceived Opinions of things of the ſame rank or quality: not make the Intereſt of my former Conceptions, to be the meaſure of my after judging. 2. Nor do I think it ſo great an Honour to be ſtrict in my Opinions, as diſhonour to be ſuperſtitious, and to add to Gods Law, by ſaying that he forbiddeth what he doth not, or to be affectedly ſingular in denying lawful things, with a Touch not, taſte not, handle not, &c. Nor do I eſteem him to be the wiſeſt, beſt or holieſt perſon, who is narroweſt or ſtricteſt in his opinions, but who is Righteſt; nor him that maketh moſt things to be ſins, but him that committeth leaſt ſin, which is ſuch indeed; nor him that maketh moſt Laws to himſelf and others, but him that beſt obeyeth Gods Laws.

Queſt. 1. May one that ſcrupleth thus ſwearing himſelf, yet Commiſſioned, give an Oath thus to another that ſcrupleth it not? Queſt.

Anſw. 1. If the thing be (as is proved) lawful, his Scruple will not make him innocent in neglecting the duty of his place. 2. If the Subſtance of the Oath were lawful, and only the Mode or Ceremony were ſinful (as ſuſpected), then. 1. If the Commiſſioner muſt himſelf particularly Command that Mode, it were unlawful for him to do it. 2. But if he only command, and give the Oath as an Oath, leaving the Mode without his Approbation or Command, to the Taker, and the Law, he may ſo give the Oath: And thus Chriſtians in all Ages have taken it for Lawful to make Covenants even with Infidels and Idolaters, and to take a Turks Oath by Mahomet, when it is only the Oath that we demand, and the Mode is his own, which we had rather be without, and give no approbation of. And if a King may thus demand an Infidels or Idolaters Oath (as God himſelf doth mens duty, when he knoweth that they will ſin in doing it) much more may one do ſo, in caſe of a doubtful Ceremony, which he is neither the author nor approver of. But I think this in queſtion, is lawful, fit and laudable. Anſw.

§. 7. III. As to the caſe of Taking Gods Name in vain (which for brevity I joyn with ſwearing) it is done, 1. Either in the groſſeſt and moſt hainous ſort; 2. Or in a lower ſort. 1. The groſſeſt ſort of taking Gods Name in vain, is by Perjury; or calling him in for witneſs to a lye. For among the Jews, Vanity and a Lye, were words frequently taken in the ſame ſignification. 2. But the lower ſort of taking Gods name in vain, is when it is uſed lightly, unreverently, contemptuouſly, jeaſtingly, or without juſt cauſe: And in theſe alſo there is prophaneneſs How God's Name is taken in vain? See Dr. Hammond. Pract. Catech. on the third commandment. Jer. 5. 2. Rev. 19. 12.

phaneneſs and a very great ſin, which is aggravated according to the Degree of the contempt or prophanation. It is a great ſin unreverently in common talk to make a by-word, of ſaying, [O Lord, or O God, or O Jeſus, or God help us; or Lord have mercy on us, or God ſend this or that] or any way to take Gods Name in vain: But to uſe it in jears and ſcorns at Religion, or make Play books, or Stage-playes with ſuch prophane contemptuous jears, is one of the greateſt villanies that mans tongue can be guilty of againſt his Maker. (Of which anon.)

Dir. 1. §. 8. IV. Direct. 1. For the avoiding of all this prophaneneſs in ſwearing and taking the Name of God in vain, the firſt Direction muſt be this General one, to uſe all the Directions given in Chap. 1. for a wicked mans attaining true Converſion: and withal to obſerve how great an evidence this ſin is of a graceleſs ungodly miſerable ſoul. For it is ſuppoſed to be an ordinary or frequent ſin, and therefore to have no effectual Principle in the heart which is againſt it; and therefore to have the principal room in the will; and therefore to be unrepented of, (as to any ſaving renewing repentance): If thou hadſt any true grace, it would teach thee to fear and honour God more: To make light of God is inconſiſtent with Godlineſs, if it be in a predominant degree: for they are directly contrary.

Dir. 2. §. 9 Direct. 2. Get thy heart ſenſible of the intrinſick evil of thy ſin. It would never be ſo eaſily and familiarly committed by thee, if thou didſt not think it ſmall. That thou maiſt know it, conſider of theſe following aggravations.

Saith Fitz-Herbert. l. 1. c. 23. n. 17. I cannot but lament, that ſo great an impiety as Blaſphemy is, being ſo common, doth paſs unpuniſhed: whereas in other Countreys the leaſt Blaſphemies are ſeverely chaſtned: Inſomuch that in Spain I have known a Man ſet in the Market place the greateſt part of a day gaping with a Gagg in his Mouth for ſwearing only By the Life of God.

See Jer. 5. 21, 22. Job 42. 5, 6. & 38. 2, 3, &c. 10. 1. Conſider who that God is whom thou abuſeſt: Is he not the Great and terrible Majeſty: that made the world, and upholdeth it, and ordereth it by his will; the Governour and Judge of all the earth; infinitely excelling the Sun in glory: A God moſt Holy, and in holineſs to be mentioned: And wilt thou make a by-word of his Dreadful Name! Wilt thou prophanely ſwear by this Holy Name? and uſe the Name of thy God as thou wouldſt ſcarce uſe the Name of thy Father or thy King? Wilt thou unreverently and contemptuouſly toſs it like a foot-ball? Doſt thou know no more difference between God and Man? Know God, and thou wilt ſooner tremble at his Name, than thus unreverently abuſe it.

§. 11. 2. Conſider who thou art that thus venture ſt to prophane the holy Name of God? Art thou not his creature and his ſubject? bound to honour him? Art thou not a Worm, unable to reſiſt him? Can he not tread thee into Hell, or ruin thee, and be avenged on thee with a word or leſs? He need to ſay no more, but Thus I will have it, to execute his Vengeance on the greateſt of his Enemies: If he will it, it will be done. And art thou then a perſon fit to deſpiſe this God, and abuſe his Name? Is it not a wonder of condeſcenſion in him, that he will give leave to ſuch Worms as we to pray to him, and to praiſe and worſhip him, and that he will accept it at our hands! And yet canſt thou venture thus to ſlight him and deſpiſe him? I have oft heard the ſame impious tongue, reproach the Prayers of the godly, as if they were too bold and familiar with God, and pleading againſt long or often praying, becauſe man muſt not be ſo bold with God, and perſwading others that God accepts it not, which yet it ſelf was bold familiarly to ſwear by his Name, and uſe it lightly and in common talk. And indeed Gods Servants muſt take heed of rude and unreverent boldneſs even in prayer! How much more than is the boldneſs of thy prophaning Gods holy Name to be condemned? Muſt they take heed how they uſe it in Prayer and Praiſe, and dareſt thou abuſe it by Oaths, and Curſes, and vain ſpeech?

§. 12. 3. Doſt thou not ſometime pray by that Name which thou prophanely ſweareſt by? If not, thou ſeemeſt utterly to renounce God, and art a miſerable wretch indeed: But if thou do, what an Hypocrite doſt thou ſhew thy ſelf to be in all thy Prayers, that takeſt on thee to reverence that Name of God, which thou canſt toſs unreverently, and ſwear and curſe by when thou art off thy knees? It is part of Biſhop Hall's Character of the Hypocrite, that he boweth to the Name of Jeſus, and ſweareth by the Name of God, and prayeth to God at Church, whom he forgets or ſweareth by, the reſt of the Week. Doth not thy conſcience gripe thee for this Hypocriſie, when in thy prayers thou thinkeſt of this abuſe of God?

§. 13. 4. Think Man, what uſe thou wilt have for that Holy Name in thy diſtreſs, which thou now abuſeſt? When ſickneſs and death cometh, then thou wilt cry, Lord, Lord! Then the name of God will be called on more reverently. And dareſt thou now make a foot-ball of it? Doſt thou not fear leſt it ſhould be then thy terrour, to remember on thy death-bed when thou art calling upon God, O this is the Name that I was wont to ſwear by, or to take in vain.

§. 14. 5. Remember that Millions of Glorious Angels are magnifying that great and holy Name, which thou art prophaning and taking in vain. And doſt thou not wonder that they do not ſome of them become the Executioners of the vengeance of God againſt thee? and that the Earth doth not open and ſwallow thee up? Shall a Worm on Earth be toſſing that holy name, or ſwearing by it prophanely, which a world of Glorious Angels are magnifying.

§. 15. 6. Conſider that thou art more impious than they that prophane things hallowed and conſecrated to God. Was Belſhazzer puniſhed with the loſs of Kingdom and Life for carouſing in the Veſſels of the Sanctuary? Wouldſt thou think him to be prophane, that ſhould make a Stable of the Church, and ſhould feed his Swine with the Communion Cup? and doſt thou not know that the Name of God himſelf hath a higher degree of Holineſs, than any place or Utenſils of his Worſhip have? and therefore that it is a greater prophaneneſs to abuſe his Name, than to abuſe any of theſe? Doth not thy Tongue then condemn thee of Hypocriſie, when thou wouldſt exclaim againſt any that ſhould thus prophane the Church, or Font, or Communion Cup, or Table, and yet thy ſelf doſt ordinarily prophane the very Holy Name of God, and uſe it as a common Name?

§. 16. 7. Conſider how unworthily thou requiteſt God, for giving thee thy tongue and ſpeech. He gave thee this noble faculty to honour him by: And is this thy thanks, to uſe it to diſhonour him, by ſwearing and taking his Name in vain?

§ 17. 8. Thy infectious breath corrupteth others: It tendeth to bring God into common contempt among his own Creatures, when they hear his name contemptuouſly ſpoken of.

§. 18. 9. Thou forgetteſt how tender and jealous God hath ſhewed himſelf to be, of the honour of his holy Name; and what terrible Threatnings he hath denounced againſt the Prophaners of it, and what judgments he hath executed on them, Lev. 19. 12. Ye ſhall not ſwear by my Name falſly: neither ſhalt thou prophane the Name of thy God: I am the Lord. So Lev. 18. 21. And of the Prieſts it is ſaid, Lev. 21. 6. They ſhall be holy unto their God, and not prophane the Name of their God.

So

1 King. 8. 16, 18, 19. 29, & 9 3. 7. 2 Sam. 7. 13. Deut. 14. 23. Pſal. 145. 1, 2. Iſa. 26. 8, 13. Pſal. 86. 9, 12. & 135. 13. Cant. 1. 3. Joh. 12. 28.

So Lev. 22. 2. & v. 31, 32. Therefore ſhall ye keep my commandments, and do them: I am the Lord: Neither ſhall ye prophane my holy Name, but I will be hallowed among the children of Iſrael: I am the Lord which hallow you, Deut. 28. 58, 59. If thou wilt not obſerve to do all the words of this Law that are written in this Book, that thou maiſt fear this glorious and fearful name, THE LORD THY GOD, then the Lord will make thy plagues wonderful, and the plagues of thy ſeed: Great plagues and of long continuance; and ſore ſickneſſes and of long continuance. Worſhipping God and truſting in him, is called, A walking in his Name; and calling upon his Name. See Mic. 4. 5. Pſal. 99. 6. The place of his publick Worſhip, is called, The place where he putteth or recordeth his Name, Exod. 20. 24. Deut. 12. 5, 11, 21. Iſa. 29. 23. They ſhall ſanctifie my Name, and ſanctifie the holy One of Jacob, and ſhall fear the God of Iſrael. Iſa. 48. 11. For how ſhould my Name be polluted? and I will not give my glory to another. God telleth Moſes, and Moſes telleth Aaron when his Sons were ſlain, I will be ſanctified in them that come nigh unto me, and before all the people I will be glorified, Lev. 10. 3. So Lev. 24. 10. 14. A man that in ſtriving with another blaſphemed and curſed, was ſtoned to death. And in the third Commandment, it is terrible enough that God ſaith, The Lord will not hold him guiltleſs that taketh his Name in vain.

Luke 11. 2

§. 19. 10. Doſt thou not uſe to ſay the Lords Prayer, and therein, Hallowed be thy Name, Matth. 6. 9. And wilt thou prophane that Name which thou prayeſt may be Hallowed? Is it Hallowing it, to ſwear by it and uſe it unreverently and vainly in thy common talk! Or will God endure ſuch Hypocriſie as this? or regard ſuch Hypocritical prayers?

§. 20. 11. Thy cuſtomary ſwearing is an uncharitable accuſation of the hearers, as if they were ſo incredulous, that they would not believe a man without an Oath, and ſo prophane, that they delight in the prophanation of the Name of God, which is the grief of every honeſt hearer.

§. 21. 12. Thou accuſeſt thy ſelf as a perſon ſuſpected of lying, and not to be believed: For among honeſt men a word is credible without an Oath: Therefore if thou were but taken for an honeſt man, thy bare word would be believed: And by ſwearing thou telleſt all that hear thee that thou ſuppoſeſt thy ſelf to be taken for a perſon whoſe word is not to be believed. And what need haſt thou to tell this ſo openly to others if it be ſo?

§. 22. 13. And by ſwearing thou declareſt the ſuſpicion to be true, and that indeed thou art not to be believed: ſo far art thou from making thy ſayings more credible by it. For he that hath ſo little conſcience and fear of God, as to ſwear prophanely, can hardly be thought a perſon that makes any conſcience of a lye. For it is the ſame God that is offended by the one as by the other. A ſwearer warranteth you to ſuſpect him for a lyar.

§. 23. 14. Both ſwearing and taking Gods Name in vain are the greater ſins, becauſe you have no ſtronger a Temptation to them. Commonly they bring no honour, but ſhame: They bring no ſenſual pleaſure to the ſenſes, as gluttony, and drunkenneſs, and uncleanneſs do: And uſually they are committed without any profit, to entice men to them: You get not the worth of a penny by your ſin: ſo that it is hard to find what draweth you to it; or why you do it, unleſs it be to ſhew God that you fear him not, and unleſs you intend to bid defiance to him, and do that which you think will offend him in meer deſpight. So that one would think a very little grace might ſerve to cure ſuch a fruitleſs ſin: And therefore it is a ſign of graceleſneſs.

§. 24. 15. How terribly doſt thou draw Gods vengeance upon thy ſelf? Curſing thy ſelf is a begging for vengeance: Prophane ſwearing is a prophane contemptuous appeal to the judgment of God: And dareſt thou, even in thy ſins, appeal to the Judgment of God? Doſt thou fear it no more? To this Judgment then thou ſhalt go! But thou wilt quickly have enough of it, and find what it was for ſtubble to appeal to the conſuming fire, Heb. 12. 29.

§. 25. Direct. 3. Remember Gods preſence, and keep his fear upon thy heart, and remember his judgment to which thou art haſtening, and keep a tender conſcience, and a watch upon thy tongue, and then thou wilt eaſily eſcape ſuch a ſin as this. Dareſt thou abuſe Gods Name before his face? Dir. 3.

§. 26. Direct. 4. Write over thy doors or bed, where thou maiſt oft read it, the third Commandment, or ſome of theſe terrible paſſages of holy Scripture, Matth. 5. 34, 35, 36, 37. I ſay unto you, ſwear not at all: neither by Heaven——Nor by the Earth—— Nor by thy Head—— But let your communication be yea, yea, nay, nay: for whatſoever is more than theſe, cometh of evil, Jam. 5. 12. Above all things, my brethren, ſwear not, neither by the Heavens, neither by the earth, nor any other Oath; but let your yea be yea; and your nay, nay; leaſt ye fall into condemnation (or hypocriſie, as Dr. Hammond thinks it ſhould be read) Zech. 5. 3. Every one that ſweareth ſhall be cut off, Jer. 23. 10. Becauſe of ſwearing the Land mourneth, Hoſ. 4. 2. Think well on ſuch Texts as theſe. Dir. 4.

§. 27. Direct. 5. Love God and honour him as God, and thou canſt not thus deſpiſe and abuſe his Name. Thou wilt reverence and honour the name of that perſon that thou loveſt and reverenceſt and honoureſt. It is Atheiſm and want of Love to God, that makes thee ſo prophane his Name. Dir. 5.

§. 28. Direct. 6. Puniſh thy ſelf after every ſuch Crime with ſuch a voluntary mulct, or penalty as may help to quicken thy obſervation and remembrance. If none execute the Law upon thee (which is twelve pence an Oath) lay more on thy ſelf, and give it to the poor. Though you are not bound to do juſtice on your ſelves, you may medicinally help to cure your ſelves, by that which hath a rational aptitude thereto. Dir. 6.

Tit. 3. Special Directions againſt Lying and Diſſembling.

§. 1. THat you may know what Lying is, we muſt firſt know what Truth is, and what is the Uſe of Speech. Truth is conſiderable, 1. As it is in the things known and ſpoken of. 2. As it is in the conception or knowledge of the mind; 3. As it is in the expreſſions of the tongue. 1. Truth in the things known is nothing but their Reality; that indeed they are that which their names import, or the mind apprehendeth them to be: This is that which is called both Phyſical and Metaphyſical Truth. 2. Truth in the conception or knowledge of the mind, is nothing elſe but the agreement or conformity of the knowledge to the thing known: To conceive of it truly, is to conceive of it as it is: Miſtake or error is contrary to this Truth. 3. Truth as it is in the expreſſions is indeed a two-fold relation. 1. The primary relation is of our words or writings, to the matter expreſſed: And ſo Truth of ſpeech is nothing but the agreeableneſs of our words to the things expreſſed: when we ſpeak of them as they are. 2. The ſecondary relation of our words is to the mind of the Speaker: For the natural uſe of the tongue, is to expreſs the mind What Truth is? Vid. Auguſtin. de Veritat.

mind as well as the matter: And thus Truth of Speech is nothing but the agreeableneſs of our words to our thoughts or judgments. Truth as it is the agreement of Thoughts or words to the matter, may be called Logical Truth: And this is but the common Matter of Moral or Ethical Truth, which may be found partly in a Clock, or Watch, or Weather-cock, or a Seamans Chart. The agreement of our words to our minds, is the more proper or ſpecial matter of Moral Truth: The form of it as a Moral Virtue is its agreement to the Law of the God of Truth: And as the Terminus entreth the definition of relations, ſo our words have reſpect to the Mind of the hearer or reader, as their proper Terminus; their uſe being to acquaint him, 1. With the matter expreſſed; 2. With our minds concerning it: Therefore it is neceſſary to the Logical Truth of ſpeech, that it have an aptitude rightly to inform the hearer, and to the Ethical Truth, that it be intended by the ſpeaker really to inform him, and not to deceive him. (Suppoſing that it is another that we ſpeak to.)

§. 2. You ſee then that to a Moral Truth all theſe things are neceſſary: 1. That it be an agreement of the words with the matter expreſſed (as far as we are obliged to know the matter.) 2. That it be an agreement of the words, with the ſpeakers mind or judgment. 3. That the expreſſions have an aptitude to inform the hearer of both the former truths. 4. That we really intend them to inform him of the truth, ſo far as we ſpeak it. 5. That it be agreeable to the Law of God; which is the Rule of duty, and diſcoverer of ſin.

§. 3. In ſome ſpeeches the Truth of our words as agreeing to the Matter and to the Mind is all one, viz. when our own conception or judgment of a thing is all that we aſſert: As when we ſay [I think, or I believe, or I judge that ſuch a thing is ſo.] Here it is no whit neceſſary to the Truth of my words, that the Thing be ſo as I think it to be. (For I affirm it not to be ſo) but that indeed I think as I ſay I think. But that our words and minds agree, is always and inſeparably neceſſary to all Moral Truth.

How far we are bound to ſpeak the truth.

§. 4. We are not bound to make known all that is true (for then no man muſt keep a ſecret) much leſs to every man that asketh us: Therefore we are not bound to endeavour the Cure of every mans ignorance or error in every matter: For we are not bound to talk at all to every man. And if I be not bound to make known the truth at all, or my mind at all, I am not bound to make known all the truth; or all that is in my mind; No, not to all thoſe to whom I am bound to make known part of both. If I find a man in an ignorance or error which I am not bound to cure, (nay, poſſibly it were my ſin to cure it; as to open the ſecrets of the Kings Counſels or Armies to his Enemies, &c.) I may and muſt ſo fit my ſpeech to that man, even about thoſe matters, as not to make him know what he ſhould not know either of the matter or of my mind: I may either be ſilent, or ſpeak darkly, or ſpeak words which he underſtandeth not, (through his own imperfection) or which I know his weakneſs will miſunderſtand: But I muſt ſpeak no falſhood to him. Alſo there is a great difference between ſpeaking ſo, as not to cure the ignorance or error of the hearer which I found him in; and ſo ſpeaking as to lead him into ſome new error: I may do the former in many caſes, in which I may not do the latter. And there is great difference between ſpeaking ſuch words as in the common uſe of men are apt to inform the hearers of the truth, though I may know, that through ſome weakneſs of their own, they will miſunderſtand them, and be deceived by them; and the ſpeaking of words which in common uſe of men have another ſignification than that which I uſe them to: By the former way, the hearer ſometime is the deceiver of himſelf, and not the ſpeaker, when the ſpeaker is not bound to reveal any more to him: But by the latter way, the ſpeaker is the deceiver. Alſo there is great difference to be made between my ſpeaking to one to whom it is my duty to reveal the truth, and my ſpeaking to a man to whom I am not bound to reveal it; yea, from whom my duty to God, and my King or Country, bind me to conceal it. By theſe grounds and diſtinctions you may know what a Lye is, and may reſolve the ordinary doubts that are uſed to be raiſed about our ſpeaking truth or falſhood. As,

§. 5. Queſt. 1. Am I bound to ſpeak the Truth to every one that asketh me? Anſw. You are not bound to ſpeak at all in every caſe to every one that asketh you: And he that is ſilent, ſpeaketh not the truth. Queſt. 1

§. 6. Queſt. 2. Am I bound to ſpeak the Truth to every one that I anſwer to? Anſw. Your Anſwer may ſometimes be ſuch as ſignifieth but a denying to anſwer, or to reveal what is demanded of you. Queſt. 2

§. 7. Queſt. 3. Am I bound to ſpeak all the Truth, when ever I ſpeak part of it? Anſw. No: It is Gods Word that muſt tell you when, and how much you muſt reveal to others: And if you go as far as God alloweth you, it followeth not, that therefore you muſt go further. A Soldier taken by the enemy may tell the truth when he is asked in things that will do no harm to his King and Country; but he muſt conceal the reſt, which would advantage the enemy againſt them. Queſt. 3. Matth. 26. 63. Mar. 14. 61. & 15. 5. Luk. 23. 9. Joh. 19. 9. Jer. 38. 26, 27.

§. 8. Queſt. 4. Is it always a ſin to ſpeak a Logical falſhood; that is, to ſpeak diſagreeably to the thing which I ſpeak of? Anſw. Not always: For you may ſometimes believe an untruth without ſin. For you are to believe things according to their evidence and appearance: Therefore if the deceit be unavoidably cauſed by a falſe appearance or evidence, without any fault of yours, it is not then your fault to be miſtaken. But then your expreſſions muſt ſignifie no more certainty than you have, nor no more confidence, than the evidence will warrant. When you ſay, ſuch a thing is ſo: the meaning muſt be but, I am perſwaded it is ſo: For if you ſay, I am certain it is ſo, when you are not certain, you offend. Queſt. 4.

§. 9. Queſt. 5. Is it always a ſin to ſpeak falſly or diſagreeably to the matter, when I know it to be falſe? that is, Is it always a ſin to ſpeak contrary to my judgment or mind? Anſw. Yes: for God hath forbidden it, and that upon great and weighty Reaſons, as you ſhall hear anon. Queſt. 5

§ 20. Queſt. 6. Is it a ſin when I ſpeak not a known untruth, nor contrary to my opinion, nor with a purpoſe to deceive? Anſw. Yes; it is oft a ſin when there is none of this. For if it be your Duty to know what you ſay, and to deliberate before you ſpeak, and your duty to be acquainted with the truth or falſhood which you are ignorant of, and your duty to take heed that you deceive not another negligently, and yet you neglect all theſe duties, and by a culpable ignorance and negligence deceive both your ſelves and others, then this is a ſin, as well as if you knowingly deceived them. Queſt. 6.

§. 11. Queſt. 7. But though it be a ſin, it remaineth doubtful whether it be a lye? Anſw. This is but lis de nomine, a Controverſie about the Name and not the Thing. As long as we are agreed that it is a ſin againſt God, and to be avoided, whether you call it a Lye, or by another name, is no great matter. But I think it is to be called a Lye: Though I know that moſt definers follow Cicero, and ſay that a Lye is, A falſhood ſpoken with a purpoſe to deceive; yet I think, that where the Will is culpably neglective of Queſt. 7.

not deceiving, an untruth ſo, negligently, uttered deſerveth the name of a Lye.

Queſt. 8. §. 12. Queſt. 8. Muſt my words to free them from falſhood be always true in the proper literal ſenſe? Anſw. No: Auguſtin's determination in this caſe is clear truth, Quod figuratè dicitur non eſt mendacium, (i. e. eo nomine.) To ſpeak Ironically, Metonymically, Metaphorically, &c. is not therefore to lye. For the truth of words lying in that aptitude to expreſs the thing and mind, which is ſuited to the intellect of the hearers, they are True words that thus expreſs them, whether properly or figuratively: But if the words be uſed figuratively contrary to the hearers and the common ſenſe of them, with a purpoſe to deceive, then they are a lye, notwithſtanding you pretend a Figure to verifie them.

Queſt. 9. §. 13. Queſt. 9. Muſt my words be uſed by me in the common ſenſe, or in the hearers ſenſe? Anſw. No doubt but ſo far as you intend to inform the hearer, you are to ſpeak to him in his own ſenſe. If he have a peculiar ſenſe of ſome word, differing from the common ſenſe, and this be known to you, you muſt ſpeak in his peculiar ſenſe. But if it be in a caſe that you are bound to conceal from him, the queſtion is much harder: Some think it an untruth and ſinful to ſpeak to him in words which you know he will uſe to his own deceit: Others think that you are not bound to fit your ſelves to his infirmity, and ſpeak in his dialect contrary to common ſenſe: And that it is not your fault that he miſunderſtandeth you, though you foreſee it, where it will not profit him to underſtand you, nor your ſelves are obliged to make him underſtand you, but the contrary: The next will open this.

Qu. 10. §. 14. Queſt. 10. Is it lawful by ſpeech to deceive another, yea, and to intend it? Suppoſing it be by truth? Anſw. It is not a ſin in all caſes, to contribute towards another mans error or miſtake. For, Act. 23. 6, 7, 8, 9. 1. There are many caſes in which it is no ſin in him to miſtake, nor any hurt to him: Therefore to contribute to that which is neither ſin or hurt is of it ſelf no ſin: Yea, there are ſome caſes in which an error (though not as ſuch) may be a duty: As to think charitably and well of an hypocrite as long as he ſeemeth to be ſincere. Here if by charitable reports I contribute to his miſtake, it ſeemeth to be but my duty. For as he is bound to believe, ſo I am bound to report the beſt while it is probable. 2. There are many caſes in which a mans ignorance or miſtake may be his very great benefit: His life or eſtate may lie upon it: And I may know that if he underſtood ſuch or ſuch a thing, he would make uſe of it to his ruine. 3. There are many caſes in which a mans (innocent) error is neceſſary to the ſafety of others, or of the Common-wealth. 4. It is lawful in ſuch caſes to deceive ſuch men by Actions (as an Enemy by Military Stratagems, or a Traytor by ſigns which he will miſtake.) And words of truth which we foreknow he will miſtake (not by our fault, but by his own) do ſeem to be leſs queſtionable, than actions which have a proper tendency to deceive. 5. God himſelf hath written and ſpoken thoſe words which he fore-knew that wicked men would miſtake and deceive themſelves by: And he hath done thoſe works, and giveth thoſe mercies which he knoweth they will turn to a ſnare againſt themſelves. And his Dominion or Prerogative cannot here be pleaded to excuſe it, if it were unholy. And in this ſenſe (as to Permitting and Occaſioning) it is ſaid, Ezek. 14. 9. And if the Prophet be deceived, I the Lord have deceived that Prophet. Yet muſt we not think with Plato, that it is lawful to lye to an enemy to deceive him: For, 1. All deceit that is againſt Charity or Juſtice is ſinful. 2. And all deceit that is performed by a lye. As Auguſtine ſaith, There are ſome lyes which are ſpoken for anothers ſafety or commodity, not in malice, but in benignity, as the Midwives to Pharoah——Theſe lies are not commended in themſelves, but in the deceit (or charity) of them: They that thus lye will deſerve (that is, be in the way) to be at laſt delivered from all lying: There is alſo a lying in jeaſt, which deceiveth not; becauſe he that is ſpoken to, knoweth it to be ſpoken in jeaſt: And theſe two ſorts are not faultleſs: But the fault is not great: A perfect man muſt not lye to ſave his life——But it is lawful to ſilence the truth though not ſpeak falſly. In Pſal. And in Enchirid. he ſaith, [Mihi non abſurdum, &c.] It ſeemeth not abſurd to me that every lye is a ſin: But it is a great matter or difference, with what mind, and in what matters a man lyeth. Some think a Phyſician may lye to entice his Patient to take a Medicine to ſave his life: He may lawfully deceive him by hiding a Medicine, and by true ſpeeches and dark, which he thinketh will be miſunderſtood, but not by falſhood.

Qu. 11. §. 15. Queſt. 11. Wherein lyeth the proper vice of lying? Is it in deceiving? or in ſpeaking falſly? or in ſpeaking contrary to the thoughts? Anſw. It is the Aggravation of a lye, that it be an injurious deceit. But the malignity of the ſin doth not conſiſt in the meer deceit of another mans intellect: For, (as is ſaid) it may be a great benefit to many men to be deceived: A Patients life may be ſaved by it, when his Phyſician findeth it neceſſary to his taking a Medicine, which without deceit he will not take. And ſo children and weak-headed people muſt be uſed: Now ſuch a charitable deceit as ſuch can be no ſin. Therefore the common nature of a lye conſiſteth not, only, in the purpoſe of deceiving, but in the ſpeaking falſly contrary to the mind: Elſe it would follow either that all deceit is ſin, or that all lying or falſe ſpeaking is lawful, where the deceit of another is charitable or lawful: which are neither of them to be granted. Yet it is not every untruth that is a lye. Some Schoolmen diſtinguiſh between mentiri (as being contra mentem ire) and mendacium dicere, as if to tell a lye were not always to lye, becauſe not contrary to the mind. But then by mendacium they mean no more than falſum.

§. 16. I conclude then, that [A Lye is the voluntary aſſerting of a falſhood] And the more it tendeth to the injury of another, the more it is aggravated; but it is one thing to be injurious, and another thing to be a lye. When I name [a falſhood] I mean that which is art to deceive the hearer: So that it is neceſſary to the Being of a lye, that it be deceitful, tho' the purpoſe of deceiving be found only in the more explicite ſort of lyes: For falſum diciter à fallendo: It were not falſe if it were not deceitful, or apt to deceive. For an unapt or figurative expreſſion which hath a right ſenſe as uſed by the ſpeaker and hearer, is no falſhood: In one Language a double negative affirmeth; and in another a double negative is a more vehement kind of denyal: and yet neither is to be called by the others an untruth. By [aſſerting] I mean any expreſſion that maketh the falſhood our own, as diſtinct from a hiſtorical narration: For it is not lying to repeat a lye, as only telling what another ſaid. By [Voluntary] I mean not only that which is done knowingly upon actual will and deliberate choice, or conſent; but alſo that which is done ex culpa voluntatis, by the fault of the will, and is to be imputed to the will: For it is of great neceſſity to obſerve this about every ſin, that whereas we truly ſay, that all ſin is Voluntary, and no further ſin than Voluntary

What a Lye is?

How ſin is Voluntary?

Tolle voluntatem, nec erit diſcrimen in actu.

Licitum eſt aliquando ſalva veritate, illa verba proferre, ex quibus probabiliter novimus auditores aliquid concludere falſi. Hoc enim non eſt mentiri vel falſum teſtari, ſed tantum occaſionem alteri præbere errandi non ad peccatum committendum ſed potius vitandum. Ames. Caſ. Conſc. l. 5. c. 53. See Luke 24. 28. John 7. 8, 10.

Voluntary, yet by [Voluntary] here is not meant only that which is actually willed; but all that the will is guilty of. For it is true that Auſtin ſaith, Ream linguam non facit niſi rea mens: The tongue is not made guilty but by a guilty mind. But then it muſt be known, that the Mind or Will is guilty of forbidden Omiſſions as well as Actions: And ſo it is a lie or Voluntary untruth, when the mind and will do not reſtrain the tongue from it when they ought. As 1. When a man erreth or is ignorant thro' wilful ſloth or neligence, and ſo ſpeaketh falſly when he thinks it true; this is a culpable falſhood (and ſo a lye) becauſe he might have avoided it and did not: And this is the caſe of moſt falſe Teachers and Hereticks. So alſo if a man will thro' Paſſion, Cuſtom, or Careleſneſs, let his tongue run before his wits, and ſpeak falſly for want of conſidering or heeding what he ſaith, this is a culpable untruth, and a lye, and it is Voluntary, becauſe the Will ſhould have prevented it and did not: though yet there was no purpoſe to deceive.

§. 17. You ſee then that there are two degrees of Lying. 1. The groſſeſt is the ſpeaking of a known falſhood with a purpoſe to deceive. 2. The other is the ſpeaking falſly thro' culpable ignorance, error or inconſiderateneſs.

Dir. 1. §. 18. Direct. 1. Be well informed of the Evil of the ſin of Lying: For the common cauſe of it is, that men think that there is no great harm in it, unleſs ſome one be greatly wronged by it: But is it not forbidden by God only becauſe it wrongeth others, but it hath all this evil in it.

§. 19. 1. Lying is the perverting of Mans noble faculties, and turning them clean contrary to their natural uſe. God gave man a tongue to expreſs his mind, and reveal the Truth; and Lying doth monſtrouſly turn it to the hindring of the mind and truth, yea, to the venting of the contrary to both. And as it is the evil of Drunkenneſs to be a voluntary madneſs or corruption of ſo noble a faculty as Reaſon, ſo it is the fault of Lying, to be corrupting, perverting and deforming both of the mind and Tongue; and by confuſion a deſtroying of Gods work and creature as to its proper uſe.

Verba propterea inſtituta ſunt, non ut per ea ſe invicem homines fallant, ſed ut eis quiſque in alterius notitiam cogitationes ſuas proferat. Aug. Enchirid.

Verbis ergo uti ad fallaciam, non ad quod ſunt inſtituta, peccatum eſt.

§. 20. 2. Lying is the Enemy and Deſtroyer of Truth: And Truth is a thing Divine, of unſpeakable excellency and uſe. It is Gods inſtrument by which he maketh man wiſe and good and happy. Therefore if he ſhould not make ſtrict Laws for the preſervation of ſo excellent a thing as Truth, he ſhould not ſecure the happineſs of the world. As to the ſecuring of mens lives it is not enough to make a Law that you ſhall not kill men without juſt cauſe, (though that be all that the Law intendeth to attain): for then every man being left to judge, would think there were juſt cauſe whenever his paſſion or intereſt told him ſo: But the Law is, You ſhall not kill at all without the judgment of the Magiſtrate. So if the Law againſt Lying did intend no more than the ſecuring Men from the Injuries of Error and deceit, yet would it not have been a ſufficient means, to have ſaid only, You ſhall not injure men by Lying: for then men would have judged of the Injury by their own Intereſts and Paſſions: But much more is it needful to have a ſtricter Law, when Truth it ſelf is the thing that God intendeth to ſecure, as well as the Intereſt of men. In the eyes of Chriſtians, and Heathens, and all mankind that have not unman'd themſelves, there appeareth a ſingular Beauty and Excellency in Truth. Ariſtotle could ſay, that the Nature of Man is made for Truth. Cicero could ſay, that Quod verum, ſimplex, ſinceriumque eſt, id naturæ hominis accommodatiſſimum eſt. Verity and Virtue were ever taken as the inſeparable Perfections of man. Pythagoras could ſay, that to Love Truth and do Good, were the two things that made man likeſt to God, and therefore were his two moſt excellent Gifts. Plato could ſay, that Truth was the beſt rhetorick and the ſweeteſt oration. Epictetus could ſay, that Truth is a thing immortal, eternal, of all things moſt precious; better than friendſhip as being leſs obnoxious to blind affections. Jamblichus could ſay, that as Light naturally and conſtantly accompanieth the Sun, ſo Truth accompanieth God and all that follow him. Epaminondas is praiſed for that he would not lye, no not in jeaſt. Pomponius Atticus was ſo great a hater of a lye, that all his friends were deſirous to truſt him with their buſineſs, and uſe him as their Counſellor. He knoweth not what uſe mens underſtanding or his tongue were made for, that knoweth not the excellency of Truth. Let a Pilate only ask as a ſtranger what is Truth? Joh. 18. 38. as Pharoah asked, who is the Lord? For this end Chriſt himſelf came into the world to bear witneſs to the Truth, and every one that is of the Truth will hear him, John 18. 37. He is the Truth Joh. 14. 6. and full of Grace and Truth, Joh. 1. 14. Grace and Truth came by him, Joh. 1 17. His Spirit is given to guide his ſervants into the Truth, Joh. 16. 13. and to ſanctify them by the truth, Joh. 17 19. that knowing the truth, it might make them free, Joh. 8. 32. The Fruit of the ſpirit is in all Truth, Epheſ. 5. 9. His Miniſters can do nothing againſt the Truth, but for the Truth, 2 Cor. 13. 8. Truth is the girdle that muſt gird our Loyns, Epheſ. 6. 14. The Church is the pillar and ground of Truth, 1 Tim. 3. 15. The faithful are they that believe and know the Truth, 1 Tim. 4. 3. Speaking the truth in Love, is the way of the Churches Growth and Edification, Epheſ. 4. 15. Repentance is given men, to the acknowledging of the Truth, that they may eſcape out of the power of the Devil, 2 Tim. 2. 25, 26. The Dullards are they that are never able to come to the knowledge of the truth, 2 Tim. 3. 7. They are men of perverſe Minds that reſiſt the Truth, 2 Tim. 3. 8. They that receive not the Truth in the Love of it cannot be ſaved, 2 Theſſ. 2. 10. All they are damned that believe not the Truth, 2 Theſ. 2. 12, 13. You ſee what Truth is in the judgement of God and all the ſober world. Therefore a lie that is contrary to Truth as darkneſs to Light, muſt be equally odious as truth is amiable: No wonder therefore if it be abſolutely forbidden of God.

Every lye is evil and to be avoided, ſaith Ariſtot. Ethic. l. 4. See Pſal. 5. 7. Prov. 6. 17, 19. & 12. 22. & 19. 5, 9. & 21. 28. Rev. 21. 27. & 22. 15. Joh. 8. 44. Col. 3. 9.

§. 21. 3. You may the eaſilier perceive this by conſidering, that other faults of the Tongue, as idle talk, ſwearing and ſuch like, are forbidden, not only becauſe they are a hurt to others, but for the intrinſical evil in the thing it ſelf; Great reaſon therefore that it ſhould be ſo in this.

§. 22. 4. Lying is a vice which maketh us moſt unlike to God. For he is called the God of truth, Pſal. 31. 5. Deut. 32. 4. All his Ways are mercy and truth, Pſal. 25. 10. His judgment is according to Truth, Rom. 2. 2. It is impoſſible for God to lie, Heb. 6. 18. Tit. 1. 2. His word is the word of truth, Pſal. 119. 43. Col. 1. 5. 2 Tim. 2. 15. Jam. 1. 15. 2 Cor. 6. 7. And who ſhall dwell in his Tabernacle, but thoſe that ſpeak the truth in their hearts, Pſal. 15. 2. The diſconformity of the ſoul to God then, being its greateſt deformity, in things wherein it is made to be conform to him, it may hence appear that lying is an odious ſin. And this may the eaſilier appear, if you conſider, what a caſe the world were in if God could lie, and were not of undoubted truth: we ſhould then be ſure of nothing; and therefore could have no ſure Information by his word; no ſure direction and guidance by his precepts; and no ſure Conſolation in any of his promiſes. Therefore that which maketh us so unlike to the true God, must needs be odious.

Numb. 23. 19. 1 Sam. 15. 29. 1 Joh. 5. 10.

§. 23. 5. Lying is the Image or work of the Devil, and Lyars are his Children in a special sort: For Christ telleth us that he abode not in the truth, for there is no truth in him: When he speaketh a lye he speaketh of his own: For he is a lyar and the father of it, Joh. 8. 44. The Proud, the Malicious and the Lyars, are in a special sort the Children of the Devil; for these three are in Scripture in a special manner made the Devils sins. Therefore sure there is an intrinsical evil and odiousness in a lye. It was Satan that filled the hearts of Ananias and Sapphira to Lye to the Holy Ghost, Act. 5. 3. To change the Truth of God into a lye, and to make God a lyar are therefore the most odious sins, Rom. 1. 25. 1 Joh. 5. 10. Because it is a feigning him to be like the Devil: And should we make our selves like him then by the same vice? If you love not the Devils sin and image, love not a lye.

1 King 22. 22, 23. I will be a lying spirit in the mouths of all his Prophets. 2 Chro. 18. 21, 22.

§. 24. 6. Lying destroyeth humane converse, and bringeth most pernicious confusion into the affairs of mankind. If Truth be excluded, men cannot buy and sell and trade and live together: It would be sufficient to destroy their rational converse if they had no tongues: But much more to have false tongues: Silence openeth not the mind at all: Lying openeth it not when it pretendeth to open it; and falsly representeth it to be what it is not. And therefore though you say, that your Lyes do no such hurt; yet seeing this is the nature and tendency of Lying as such, it is just and merciful in the Righteous God, to banish all Lying by the strictest Laws: As the whole nature of Serpents is so far at enmity with the nature of man, that we hate and kill them though they never did hurt us, because it is in their nature to hurt us: So God hath justly and mercifully condemned all lying, because its nature tendeth to the desolation and confusion of the World; and if any indulgence were given to it, all iniquity and injustice would presently like an inundation overwhelm us all.

It was one of the Roman Laws, tab. 12. Qui falsum testimonium dixisse convictus erit, e saxo Tarpeio dejiciatur.

§. 25. 7. Lying tendeth directly to perjury it self. It is the same God that forbiddeth them both: And when once the heart is hardened in the one, it is but a step further to the other. Cicero could observe that He that is used to lye will easily be perjured. A seared conscience that tolerateth one, will easily be brought to bear the other.

§. 26. 8. There is a partiality in the Lyar that condemneth, himself and the sin in another, which in himself he justifieth: For there is no man that would have another lye to him. As Austin saith, [I have known many that would deceive, but never any that would be deceived.] If it be good, why should not all others lye to thee? If it be bad, why wilt thou lye to others? Is not thy tongue under the same Law as theirs? Dost thou like it in thy Children and in thy Servants? If not, it should seem much worse to thee in thy self, as thou art most concerned in thy own actions.

Hic autem homines fallunt & falluntur: Miseriores sunt cum mentiendo fallunt, quam cum mentientibus credendo falluntur. usque adeo tamen rationalis natura refugit falsitatem, & quantum potest devitat errorem, ut falli nolint, etiam quicunque amant fallere. August. Enchirid. c. 17.

§. 27. 9. Judge what lying is by thy own desire and expectation to be believed: Wouldst thou not have men believe thee, whether thou speak truth or not? I know thou wouldst: For the Lyar loseth his end if he be known to lye, and be not believed. And it is a reasonable desire or expectation in thee to have men to believe a Lye? If thou wouldst be believed, speak that which is to be believed.

§. 28. 10. Lying maketh thee to be always incredible and so to be useless or dangerous to others: For he that will lye doth leave men uncertain whether ever he speak truth, unless there be better Evidence of it, than his credibility. As Aristotle saith, [A Lyar gets this by lying that no body will believe him when he speaks the truth.] How shall I know that he speaketh truth to day who lyed yesterday? unless open Repentance recover his credibility. Truth will defend it self, and credit him that owneth it at last: But falshood is indefensible, and will shame its Patrons. Saith Petrarch excellently, As Truth is immortal, so fiction and lye endureth not long: Dissembled matters are quickly opened: As the hair that is combed and set with great diligence is ruffled with a little blast of wind: And the paint that is laid on the face with a deal of labour is washed off with a little sweat: The craftyest lye cannot stand before the truth; but is transparent to him that nearly looketh into it; every thing that is covered is soon uncovered: Shadows pass away; and the native colour of things remaineth: It is a great labour to keep hidden long. No man can live long under water: He must needs come forth, and shew the face which he concealed. At the fartherst God in the day of judgment will lay open all.

Petrarch. l. 1. de vit. solet.

§. 29. Direct. 2. If you would avoid lying take heed of guilt. Unclean bodies need a cover; and are most ashamed to be seen. Faultiness causeth Lying; and Lying increaseth the fault. When men have done that which they are afraid or ashamed to make known, they think there is a necessity of using their art to keep it secret. But wit and craft is no good substitute for honesty: Such patches make the rent much worse. But because the corrupted heart of man will be thus working and flying to deceitful shifts, prevent the cause and occasion of your lying. Commit not the fault that needs a lye. Avoiding it is much better than hiding it, if you were sure to keep it never so close. As indeed you are not: For commonly truth will come to light. It is the best way in the World to avoid lying, to be innocent; and do nothing which doth fear the light: Truth and honesty do not blush, nor desire to be hid. Children and Servants are much addicted to this crime: When their folly, or wantonness, or appetites, or slothfulness, or carelessness hath made them faulty, they presently study a lye to hide it with: Which is to go to the Devil to intreat him to defend or cover his own works. But wise and obedient and careful and diligent and conscionable Children and Servants, have need of no such miserable shifts.

Dir. 2. Sæpe delinquentibus promptissimum est mentiri. Cier.

§. 30. Direct. 3. Fear God more than man, if you would not be Lyars. The excessive fear of man is a common cause of Lying: This maketh Children so apt to lye, to escape the rod: And most persons that are obnoxious to much hurt from others, are in danger of Lying to avoid their displeasure. But why fear you not God more whose displeasure is unspeakably more terrible? Your Parents or Master will be angry, and threaten to correct you: But God threatneth to damn you; and his wrath is a consuming fire: No mans displeasure can reach your souls, and extend to eternity: Will you run into Hell to escape punishment on Earth? Remember whenever you are tempted to escape any danger by a lye, that you run into a thousand fold greater danger, and that no hurt that you escape by it can possibly be half so great as the hurt it bringeth. It's as foolish a course as to cure the tooth-ach by cutting off the head.

§. 31. Direct. 4. Get down your Pride and over-much regard of the thoughts of men, if you would not be lyars. Pride makes men so desirous of reputation, and so impatient of the hard opinions of others, that all the honest endeavours of the Proud are too little to procure the reputation they desire, and therefore Lying must make up the rest. Shame is so intolerable a suffering to them, that they make lies the familiar cover of their nakedneſs. He that hath not Riches, hath Pride, and would be thought ſomebody, and therefore will ſet out his eſtate by a lye. He that hath not eminency of Parentage and Birth, if he have Pride will make himſelf a Gentleman by a lye. He that is a contemptible perſon at home, if he be Proud, will make himſelf honourable among ſtrangers by a lye. He that wanteth Learning, Degrees, or any thing that he would be proud of, will endeavour by a lye to ſupply his wants: Even as wanton Women by the actual lye of Painting would make themſelves Beautiful, through a proud deſire to be eſteemed. Eſpecially he that committeth a ſhameful crime, if he be Proud will rather venture on a lye than on the ſhame. But if your Pride be cured, your temptation to lying will be as nothing: You will be ſo indifferent in matters of honour or reputation, as not to venture your ſouls on Gods diſpleaſure for it: Not that any ſhould be impudent, or utterly regardleſs of their reputation: But none ſhould over-value it, nor prefer it before their ſouls, nor ſeek it by unlawful means. Avoid ſhame by well-doing and ſpare not: (Only ſee that you have a higher end.) Seneca ſaith, There are more that abſtain from ſin through ſhame, than through virtue or a good will: It's well when virtue is ſo much in credit, and vice in diſcredit, that thoſe that have not the virtue would fain have the name, and thoſe that will not leave the vice would ſcape the ſhame: And it's well that there are humane motives to reſtrain them that care not for Divine ones. But as humane motives cauſe no ſaving virtues; ſo deviliſh and wicked means are far from preventing any pernicious hurt, being the certain means to procure it.

Avoid both the extreams, which Petrarch mentioneth: Nam ut multi qui ſe bonos, ſic aliqui qui ſe malos fingerent ſunt reperti; quod vel humani favoris peſtilentem auram; vel inviſam bonorum temporalium ſarcinam declinarent. Quod de Ambroſio lectum eſt. Quam ſimilis amicitiæ adulatio? non imitatur tantum illam ſed vincit: eo ipſo gratioſos facit quo lædit. Senec.

Dir. 5. §. 32. Direct. 5. Avoid Ambition and humane unneceſſary dependance if you would avoid lying. For the ambitious give up themſelves to men; and therefore flattering muſt be their trade: And how much of lying is neceſſary to the compoſition of flattery I need not tell you. Truth is ſeldom taken for the fitteſt inſtrument of flattery. It's contrarily the common road to hatred: Libere & ſine adulatione veritatem prædicantes, & geſta parvæ vitæ arguentes, gratiam non habent apud homines, ſaith Ambroſ. They that Preach Truth freely and without flattery, and reprove the deeds of a wicked life, find not favour with men: Veritatem ſemper inimicitiæ perſequuntur. Hatred is the ſhadow of Truth, as envy is of Happineſs. When Ariſtippus was asked why Dionyſius ſpake ſo much againſt him, he anſwered, for the ſame reaſon that all other men do: Intimating that it was no wonder if the Tyrant was impatient of Truth and plain dealing, when it is ſo with almoſt all mankind: They are ſo culpable, that all but flatterers ſeem to handle them too hard, and hurt their ſores. And herein lyeth much of the miſery of Great men, that few or none deal truly with them, but they are flattered into perdition: Saith Seneca, Divites cum omnia habent, unum illis deeſt; ſcilicet qui verum dicat: ſi enim in clientelam fœlicis hominis potentiumque perveneris, aut veritas aut amicitia perdende eſt: One thing Rich men want when they have all things, that is, a man to ſpeak the truth: For if thou become the dependant or client of proſperous or great men, thou muſt caſt away (or loſe) either the Truth or their friendſhip. Hierome thought that therefore Chriſt had not a houſe to put his head in, becauſe he would flatter no body and therefore no body would entertain him in the City. And the worſt of all is, that where flattery reigneth, it is taken for a duty, and the neglect of it for a vice: As Hieron. (ad Cel.) ſaith, Quodque graviſſimum eſt, quia humilitatis ac benevolentiæ loco ducitur, ita fit ut qui adulari neſcit, aut invidus aut ſuperbus reputetur, i. e. And, which is moſt grievous, becauſe it goes for humility and kindneſs, it comes to paſs that he that cannot flatter is taken to be envious or proud. But the time will come that the flatterer will be hated even by him that his fallacious praiſes pleaſed. Deceit and lyes do pleaſe the flattered perſon but a while, even till he find the bitterneſs of the effects, and the fruit have told him that it was but a ſugered kind of enmity: And therefore he will not long be pleaſed with the flatterer himſelf. Flattery ever appeareth at laſt, to be but perniciosa dulcedo as Auſtin calls it. Saith the ſame Auſtin (in Pſal. 59.) There are two ſorts of perſecutors; the oppoſer (or diſpraiſer) and the flatterer: But the tongue of the flatterer hurteth more than the hand of the perſecutor. And think not that any mans greatneſs or favour will excuſe thee or five thee harmleſs in thy lyes; for God that avengeth them is greater than the greateſt. Saith Auſtin (li. de mendac.) Quiſquis autem eſſe aliquod genus mendacii, quod peccatum non ſit putaverit, decipiet ſemetipſum turpiter, cum honeſtam ſe deceptorem arbitretur aliorum, i. e. *whoever thinks that there is any kind of lye that is no ſin, he deceiveth himſelf foully, whileſt he thinks himſelf an honeſt deceiver of others. §. 34. Direct. 7. Learn to truſt God if you would not be lyars. For lying is the practice of him that thinks he muſt provide and ſhift for himſelf. Even Abraham's and Iſaac's equivocation (ſaying their Wives were their Sifters) and Davids feigning himſelf mad, proceeded from ſome diſtruſt in God: They would not have thought it neceſſary ſo to ſhift for their lives if they had fully truſted God with their lives. Gehezi's Covetouſneſs and lying did both proceed from a want of confidence in God. If a man were confident of Gods Protection, and that he had better ſtand to Gods choice in all things than his own, what uſe could he think he hath for lying, or for any ſinful ſhift?

Dir. 7. Jer. 7. 4, 8.

§. 35. Direct. 8. Be not too credulous of bad reports if you would not be lyars. Malice is ſo mad, and ſo unconſcionable a ſin, and the tongues of men are commonly ſo careleſs of what they ſay, that if you eaſily believe evil, you do but eaſily believe the Devil, and thereby make your ſelves his ſervants in divulging malicious lyes. You think becauſe they are ſpoken by many, and ſpoken confidently, you may lawfully believe or report what you hear! But this is but to think that the Commonneſs of Lyars, and their malice and impudence will warrant you to follow them, even becauſe they are ſo bad. Will you bark and bite becauſe that Dogs do ſo? If a man be ſtung with an Adder, you ſhould help to cure him, and not deſire your ſelves to ſting him: Selfiſh and intereſſed and malicious and partial factious perſons, are ſo commonly lyars, and impudent in their lyes, that it behoveth you if you would not be lyars your ſelves, to take heed of reporting any thing they ſay. §. 36. Direct. 9. Be not rash in speaking things before you have tryed them. Consider what you say, and know before you speak. Is it not a shame when you have spoken fully to come off with saying, I thought it had been true? But why will you speak upon thought, and not stay till you better understood the case? If the matter requireth such haste in speaking, you should have said no more than, I think it is so. Prove all things, and then hold that which is good, and assert that which is true. Saith Cicero, (de Nat. Direct. 11. Get a tender Conscience, and walk as in the sight and hearing of God, and as one that is passing to his Judgment. A seared Conscience dare venture upon lyes or any thing: but the fear of God is the souls preservative. What makes men lye, but thinking they have to do with none but men? For they think by a lye to deceive a man, and hide the truth: But if they remembred that they have most to do with God, and that he is always present who cannot be deceived, and that his Judgment will bring all secret things to light, and detect all their lyes before all the world, they would not hire a torn and dirty Cloak at so dear a rate, for so short a time. No wonder if men are lyars, that fear not God, and believe not the day of Judgment.

Act. 5. 4. Isa. 59. 13. Ezek. 13. 5. 19.

Dir. 12. §. 39. Direct. 12. To save others from lying as well as your selves, be sure to watch against it in your Children, and wisely help them to see the evil of it. For Children are very prone to it; and unwise correction frightneth them into lyes to save themselves, as indulgence and connivance doth encourage them to it. Make them oft read such Texts as these: Lev. 19. 11. Ye shall not steal, nor deal falsly, nor lye one to another, Psal. 15. 2. He that speaketh the truth from his heart, &c. Isa. 36. 8. He said, surely they are my people; Children that will not lye; so he was their Saviour. Joh. 8. 44. The Devil is a lyar and the father of it: Rev. 21. 27. & 22. 15. There shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth——— or maketh a lye——— For without are dogs——— and whoever loveth and maketh a lye. Psal. 63. 11. The mouth of him that speaketh lyes shall be stopped. Psal. 101. 11. He that speaketh lyes shall not tarry in my sight. Prov. 19. 5, 9. A false witness shall not be unpunished, and he that speaketh lyes shall not escape (shall perish, 9.) Prov. 29. 12. If a Ruler hearken to lyes all his servants are wicked. So Psal. 31. 18. & 52. 3. Psal. 119. 163. I hate and abhor lying, but thy Law do I love. Prov. 13. 5. A righteous man hateth lying. Ephes. 4. 35. Wherefore putting away lying, speak every man truth with his neighbour, for we are members one of another: q. d. A man would not lye to deceive his own members: no more should we to deceive one another. In a word, where the Love of God and man prevaileth, there truth prevaileth: but where self-love, partiality, and carnal self-interest prevail, there lying is a houshold servant, and thought a necessary means to these ends.

Prov. 17. 7. Hos. 4. 8.

But because Lying is so common and so great a sin, and many cases occur about it daily, though I think what is said offereth matter enough to answer them, I shall mention some more of them distinctly, to help their satisfaction who cannot accomodate general answers to all their particular cases.

Quest. 1. Is frequent known lying a certain sign of a graceless state, that is, a mortal sin, proving the sinner to be in a state of damnation? Quest. 1.

Answ. The difficulty of this case doth no more concern Lying, than any other sin of equal malignity. Therefore I must refer you to those places where I have opened the difference between Mortal reigning sins and Infirmities. At present take this brief solution. 1. It is a thing of too great difficulty to determine just how many acts of a great sin, may consist with a present state of grace, (that is, of right by Covenant to Heaven.) 2. All sin which consisteth with an habitual predominant Love of God and Holiness, consisteth with a state of Life, and no other. 3. He that seldom or never committeth such external crimes, and yet Loveth not God and Heaven and Holiness above all the pleasures and interests of the flesh, is in a state of death. 4. It is certain that this Love to God and Holiness is not predominant, whose carnal Interest and lust hath ordinarily in the drift and tenor of his life, more power to draw him to the wilful committing of known sin, than the said Love of God and Heaven and Holiness have to keep him from it. For his servants men are whom they obey, whether it be sin unto death, or obedience unto righteousness. 5. Therefore the way to know whether sin be mortified or mortal is, 1. By feeling the true bent of the will, whether we love or hate it. 2. By observing the true bent and tenor of our lives, whether Gods Interest in us, or the contrary, be predominant when we are our selves, and are tempted to such sins. 6. He that will sin thus as oft as will stand with saving grace, shall never have the assurance of his sincerity; or the peace or comfort of a sound believer, till he repent and lead a better life. 7. He that in his sin retaineth the spirit of Adoption, or the Image of God, or habitual divine Love, hath also Habitual and Virtual Repentance for that very sin, before he actually Repenteth! Because he hath that Habitual Hatred of it, which will cause actual Repentance, when he is composed to act according to his predominant habits. 8. In the mean time the state of such a sinner is, neither to be unregenerate, Carnal, unholy as he was before Conversion, and so to lose all his Right to Life; nor yet to have so full a Right as if he had not sinned: But a bar is put in against his claim, which must be removed before his Right be full, and such as is ripe for present possession. 9. There are some sins which all men continue in while they live. As defect in the degrees of faith, hope, love, &c. vain thoughts, words, disorder, passions, &c. And these sins are not totally involuntary: Otherwise they were no sins, Yea, the Evil is prevalent in the will against the Good, so far as to commit those sins, though not so far as to vitiate the bent of heart or life. 10. There are some sins which none on earth do actually actually Repent of, viz. Thoſe that they know not to be ſins; and thoſe that they utterly forget, and thoſe faults which they are guilty of juſt at the time of dying. 11. In theſe caſes Virtual or Implicite or Habitual Repentance doth ſuffice to the preventing of damnation. As alſo a Will to have lived perfectly ſufficeth in the caſe (of continued imperfections.) 12. Things work not on the Will as they are in themſelves, but as they are apprehended by the underſtanding: And that which is apprehended to be either of doubtful evil, or but a little ſin and of little danger, will be much leſs reſiſted, and ofter committed, than ſins that are clearly apprehended to be great. Therefore where any ſort of Lye is apprehended thus as of ſmall or doubtful evil, it will be the oftner committed. 13. If this apprehenſion be wrong and come from the predominancy of a carnal or ungodly heart, which will not ſuffer the underſtanding to do its office, nor to take that to be evil which he would not leave, then both the Judgment and the Lye are mortal and not mortified pardoned ſins. 14. But if this miſapprehenſion of the underſtanding do come from natural impotency, or unavoidable want of better information, or only from the fault of a vicious inclination, which yet is not predominant, but is the remnant of a vice which is mortified in the main; then neither the errour nor the often lying, is a mortal but a mortified ſin. As for inſtance, If falſe Teachers (as the Jeſuits) ſhould perſwade a juſtified perſon, that a lye that hurteth no man, but is officious, is but a venial or no ſin, it is poſſible for ſuch a perſon often to commit it, though he err not altogether innocently. 15. Though it is true that all good Chriſtians ſhould not indulge the ſmalleſt ſin, and that true Grace will make a man willing to forſake the leaſt, yet certain experience telleth us, that ſome conſtant ſinning (afore-named) doth conſiſt with grace in all that have it upon earth; And therefore that Leſſer ſins (as thoughts, paſſions) are not reſiſted ſo much as greater be, and therefore that they are more indulged and favoured, or elſe they would not be committed. No good men riſe up with ſo great and conſtant watchfulneſs, againſt an idle thought or word, or a diſorder in prayer, &c. as they do againſt a heinous ſin.

Rom. 7. 20, 21, 22, 23.

He that would have this and all ſuch Caſes reſolved in a word, and not be put on trying the Caſe by all theſe diſtinctions, muſt take another Caſuiſt, or rather a Deceiver inſtead of a Reſolver; For I cannot otherwiſe reſolve him.

Queſt. 2. Is it not contrary to the light of Nature, to ſuffer e. g. a Parent, a King, my Self, my Country, rather to be deſtroyed, than to ſave them by a harmleſs lie?

Anſw. No: Becauſe, 1. Particular good muſt give place to common. And if once a Lie may paſs for Lawful in caſes where it ſeemeth to be good, it will overthrow humane converſe, and debauch mans nature and the world.

2. And if one evil may be made a means for good, it will infer that others may be ſo too, and ſo will confound good and evil, and leave vicious man to take all for good which he thinks will do good. That is not to be called a harmleſs Lie, which is ſimply evil, being againſt the Law of God, againſt the order of nature, the uſe of humane faculties, and the intereſt and converſe of the ſociable world.

3. The error of the objectors chiefly conſiſteth in thinking that nothing is further hurtful and morally evil than as it doth hurt to ſome men in corporal reſpects. Whereas that is evil, which is againſt the univerſal Rule of Rectitude, againſt the will of God, and againſt the nature and perfection of the agent, much more if it alſo tend to the hurt of other mens ſouls, by giving them an example of ſinning.

4. And though there may ſometimes be ſome humane probability of ſuch a thing, yet there is no certainty that ever it will ſo fall out, that a Lye ſhall ſave the Life of King, Parent or your ſelves. For God can open the eyes of that enemy whom you think to blind by a lye, and cauſe him to know all the truth, and ſo take away that Life which you thought thus to have ſaved.

5. And there are lawful means enough to ſave your lives when it is beſt for you to ſave them. That is, Obey God, and truſt him with your lives, and he can ſave them without a lye if it be beſt: And if it be not, it ſhould not be deſired.

6. And if men did not erroneouſly over-value life, they would not think that a Lye were neceſſary for it. When it is not neceſſary to Live, it is not neceſſary to Lye for Life. But thus one ſin brings on another: when carnal men over value Life it ſelf and ſet more by it than by the fruition of God in the Glory of Heaven, they muſt needs then over-value any means which ſeemeth neceſſary to preſerve it. See Job 13. 7, 8, 9, 10. Prov. 13. 17. Rom. 6. 15. & 3. 7, 8, 9. Pſal. 5. 7. Hoſ. 4. 2 Joh. 8. 44. Rev. 21. 27. & 22. 15. Col. 3. 9. 1 Joh. 2. 21.

7. Yet as to the degree of evil in the ſin I eaſily grant (with Auguſtine Enchirid.) that Multum intereſt quo animo & de quibus quiſque mentiatur: Non enim ita peccat qui conſulendi, quomodo ille qui nocendi voluntate mentitur: nec tantum nocet qui viatorem mentiendo in adverſum iter mittit, quantum is qui viam vitæ mendacio fallente depravat.

Object. Are not the Midwives rewarded by God for ſaving the Iſraelitiſh children by a lie? Object.

Anſw. I need not ſay with Auſtin, The fact was rewarded, and the Lie pardoned; For there is no ſuch thing as a lie found in them. Who can doubt but that God ſhould ſtrengthen the Iſraelitiſh women to be delivered without the Midwives: And who can doubt but when the Midwives had made known the Kings murderous command, that the women would delay to ſend for the Midwives till (by the help of each other) the Children were ſecured? Which yet is imputed to the Midwives, becauſe they confederated with them, and delayed to that end. So that here is a diſſembling and concealing part of the truth, but here is no lie that can be proved. Anſw.

Object. But Heb. 11. 31. & Jam. 2. Rahab is ſaid to be juſtified by faith and works, when ſhe ſaved the Spies by a lie. Object.

Anſw. It is uncertain whether it was a lie, or only an equivocation, and whether her words were not true of ſome other men that had been her gueſts. But ſuppoſe them a lie (as is moſt like) the Scripture no more juſtifieth her lie then her having been an harlot. It is her believing in the God of Iſrael, whoſe works ſhe mentioned, that ſhe is commended for, together with the ſaving of the Spies with the hazard of her own life. And it is no wonder if ſuch a woman in Jericho had not yet learned the ſinfulneſs of ſuch a lie as that. Anſw.

Object. But at leaſt it could be no mortal ſin, becauſe, Heb. 11. 31. & Jam. 2. ſay ſhe was juſtified. Object.

Anſw. It was no mortal ſin in her (that is, a ſin which proveth one in a ſtate of death) becauſe it had not thoſe evils that make ſin mortal: But a lie in one that doth it knowingly, for want of ſuch a predominancy of the authority and Love of God in the ſoul, as ſhould prevail againſt the contrary motives, habitual, is a mortal ſin, of an ungodly perſon. It is pernicious falſhood and ſoul deluſion in thoſe Teachers, that make poor ſinners think that it is the ſmalneſs of the outward act or hurt of ſin alone, that will prove it to be, as they call it, Venial, or mortified, and not mortal.

Queſt. 3. Is deceit by Action Lawful, which ſeemeth Queſt. 3.

eth a Practical lie? And how ſhall we interpret Chriſts making as if he would have gone farther. Luke 24. 28. and Davids feigning himſelf mad, and common ſtratagems in war, and doing things purpoſely to deceive another?

Anſw. Anſw. 1. I have before proved that all Deceiving another is not a ſin, but ſome may be a duty: As a Phyſician may deceive a Patient to get down a medicine to ſave his life, ſo he do it not by a lie.

2. Chriſts ſeeming to go farther was no other, than a lawful concealment or diſſimulation of his purpoſe, to occaſion their importunity: For all diſſimulation is not evil, though lying be. And the ſame may be ſaid of lawful ſtratagems as ſuch.

3. David's caſe was not ſinful as it was meer diſſimulation to deceive others for his eſcape. But whether it was not a ſinful diſtruſt of God, and a diſſimulation by too unmanly a way, I am not able to ſay, unleſs I had known more of the circumſtances.

Queſt. 4. Queſt. 4. Is it lawful to tempt a child or ſervant to lie, meerly to try them?

Anſw. Anſw. It is not lawful to do it without ſufficient cauſe, nor at any time to do that which inviteth them to lie, or giveth any countenance to the ſin, as Satan and bad men uſe to tempt men to ſin by commending it, or extenuating it. But to lay an occaſion before them barely to try them (as to lay mony or wine or other things in their way, to know whether they are thieves or addicted to drink, that we may the better know how to cure them: and ſo to try their veracity) is not unlawful. For, 1. The ſin is virtually committed when there is a Will to commit it, though there ſhould be no temptation or opportunity. 2. We do nothing which is either a commendation of the ſin, or a perſwading to it, nor any true cauſe either Phyſical or Moral; but only an occaſion. 3. God himſelf who is more contrary to ſin than any creature, doth thus by tryal, adminiſter ſuch occaſions of ſin to men that are vitiouſly diſpoſed, as he knoweth they will take. And his common mercies are ſuch occaſions. 4. God hath no where forbidden this to us: We may not do evil that good may come by it: but we may do good when we know evil will come of it by mens vice. 5. It may be a needful means to the cure of that ſin, which we cannot know till it be thus detected.

Queſt. 5. Q. 5. Is all equivocation unlawful?

Anſw. Anſw. There is an equivocating which is really Lying; As when we forſake the uſual or juſt ſenſe of a word, and uſe it in an alien unuſual ſenſe, which we know will not be underſtood, and this to deceive ſuch as we are bound not to deceive.

But there is a uſe of equivocal words which is lawful and neceſſary: (For humane language hath few words which are not of divers ſignifications) As, 1. When our equivocal ſenſe is well underſtood by the hearers, and is not uſed to deceive them, but becauſe uſe hath made thoſe words to be fit; as all metaphors are equivocal, and yet may be uſed. 2. When the equivocal ſenſe is the moſt uſual or obvious, and if it be not underſtood, it is through the hearers fault or extraordinary dulneſs. 3. When a Robber, or uſurping Tyrant, or any cruel enemy that hath no authority to do it, ſhall ſeek to enſnare my life by queſtions, I may lawfully anſwer him in ſuch doubtful words as purpoſely are intended to deceive him, or leave him ignorant of my ſenſe, ſo be it they be not lies or falſe in the ordinary uſage of thoſe words. 4. And to ſuch a perſon I may anſwer doubtfully when it is apparent that it is a doubtful anſwer, and that I do it as profeſſing that I will anſwer him no more particularly nor plainly, but will conceal the reſt.

Queſt. 6. Queſt. 6. Whether all mental reſervation be unlawful?

Anſw. This needeth no other anſwer than the former. If the expreſſed words be a Lie, the mental reſervation will not make them juſtifiable as a truth. But if the expreſſed words of themſelves be true, then the mental reſervation may be lawful, when it is no more than a concealment of part of the truth in a caſe where we are not bound to reveal it. Anſw.

But of both theſe caſes I muſt refer the Reader to what I have ſaid about Vows, Tom. 3. Chap. 5. Tit. 2. without which he will not know my meaning.

Queſt. 7. May Children, Servants or Subjects, in danger, uſe words which tend to hide their faults? Queſt. 7.

Anſw. 1. When they are bound not to hide the fault, they may not: Which is, 1. When due obedience, or, 2. the greater good which will follow, require them to open it. Anſw.

2. When they are not bound to open it, they may hide it by juſt means, but not by Lies or any evil. In what caſes they may hide a fault by juſt means, I ſhall here ſay no more to.

Queſt. 8. May I ſpeak that which I think is true, but am not ſure? Queſt. 8.

Anſw. If you have a juſt call, you may ſay you think it is true; but not flatly that it is ſo. Anſw.

Queſt. 9. May I believe and ſpeak that of another, by way of news, diſcourſe or character, which I hear reported by godly credible perſons, or by many? Queſt. 9.

Anſw. 1. The main doubt is when you have a call to ſpeak it, which is anſwered after, Tom. 4. at large. Anſw.

2. You may not ſo eaſily believe and report evil of another as good.

3. You muſt not believe ill of an other any further than evidence doth conſtrain you: Yet you may believe it according to the degree of evidence or credibility, and make uſe of the report for juſt caution or for good; But not to defame another, upon uncertainty, or without a call.

4. The ſin of Receiving, and ſpreading falſe reports of others upon hearſay, is now ſo common among thoſe that do profeſs Sobriety and Religion, that all men ſhould take heed of it in all company, as they would do of the plague in an infectious time. And now it is ſo notorious that falſe news and ſlanders of others are ſo common, neither good mens words nor common fame, will allow you (or excuſe you) to believe or report any evil of another, till you are able to prove that it is your duty: But all Chriſtians ſhould joyn in Lamenting and reproving this common uncharitable ſin.

Tit. 4. Special Directions againſt Idle talk, and Babling.

§. 1. Direct. 1. Underſtand well what is idle talk: For many take that to be vain which is not, and many take not that to be vain which is. I ſhall therefore open this before I go any further. Dir. 1.

§. 2. The Judgment of infidels and impious men here are of little regard: 1. Some of them think prayer to be but vain words, becauſe God knoweth our wants and hearts, Job 22. 2, 3. and our ſervice is not profitable to him: As if he had bid us ſeek him in vain, Iſa. 45. 19. Theſe I have elſewhere confuted. 2. Others think frequent preaching vain, and ſay as the Infidels of Paul, Act. 17. 18. What will this Babler ſay: and as Pharaoh, Exod. 5. 9. Let them not regard vain words: But God ſaith, Deut. 32. 46, 47. Set your hearts to all the words which I teſtifie among you ——— for it is not a vain thing for you, becauſe it is your life. ——— 3. Some carnal wretches think all vain in Gods ſervice, which is ſpiritual, and which they underſtand not, or which is above the reach of a fleſhly mind. 4. And ſome think all vain in Preaching, Conference, Writing or Prayer, which is long. But Chriſt ſpake no vain words when he prayed all night, Luk. 6. 12. What is not idle talk. Job 21. 15. Mal. 3. 14. Job 34. 9. Heb. 13. 15.

Nor

Nor are we bid to pray in vain, when we are bid pray continually, instantly and importunately. 1 Thes. 5. 17. Act. 6. 4. Luk. 18. 1, 2. Nor did Paul speak idly when he preacht till midnight, Act. 20. Godliness is not vain which is profitable to all things, 1 Tim. 4. 8. Indeed as to their own salvation the wicked may make our preaching vain, but the word of God returneth not empty. The oblations of the disobedient are vain, Isa. 1. 13. and the prayer of the wicked abominable to the Lord, but the prayer of the upright is his delight, Prov. 15. 8. 4. Some think all preaching vain of that which they know already, whereas they have most need to hear of that, lest they condemn themselves by sinning against their knowledge. 2 Pet. 1. 12, 13. Rom. 14. 22. 6. Some think it vain if the same things be often preached on, or repeated (see Phil. 3. 1.) though yet they never received and obeyed them: Or if the same words be oft repeated in prayer, though it be not from emptiness or affectation but fervency: Mark 14. 39. Psalm 136. & 119. 7. Unbelivers think our boasting in God is vain, 2 Kings 18. 20. Isa. 49 4,5. 8. And some malicious adversaries charge it on Ministers as Preaching in vain, whenever the hearers are not converted: See Heb. 4. 2. Gal. 5. 2. & 3. 4. & 4. 11. Isa. 53. 1.

§. 3. On the other side many that are godly mistake in thinking, 1. That all talk is vain which is 1 King. 18. not of absolute necessity to some great use and end. 27. 2. And that all mirth and pleasant discourse is vain. Prov. 29. 9. Whereas the Holy Ghost saith, Prov. 17. 22. A merry heart doth good like a medicine, but a broken spirit dryeth the bones, Prov. 15. 13. A merry heart maketh a cheerful countenance; but by sorrow of the heart the spirit is broken. Gen. 26. 8. King Abimelech saw Isaac sporting with Rebekah his wife. Laughing (as the Hebrew is) or playing (as the Chaldee, and Samaritan, and Sept.) or jesting (as the Syriack, Arabick and Vulgar Latine.)

§. 4. Observe these qualifications, and your mirth and sporting talk will not be idle. 1. Let it be such and so much as is useful to maintain that cheerfulness of mind and alacrity of spirits, which is profitable to your health and duty: For if bodily recreations be lawful, then tongue-recreations are lawful when they are accommodate to their end. 2 Let your speech be Savoury, seasoned with Salt, and not corrupt and rotten Communication. Jest not with filthiness or sin. 3. Let it be harmless to others. Make not your selves merry with the Sins or Miseries of other Men. Jest not to their wrong. 4 Let it be seasonable, and not when another frame of mind is more convenient, nor when graver or weightier discourse should take place. 5. Let it be moderate and not excessive, either wasting time in vain, or tending to habituate the mind of the speakers or hearers to levity, or to estrange them from things that should be preferred. 6. See that all your mirth and speech be sanctified by a holy end; that your intent in all be to whet your spirits, and cheer up and fit your selves for the service of God, as you do in eating and drinking and all other things. 7. And mix (with cautelous reverence) some serious things, that the end and use be not forgotten, and your mirth may not be altogether as empty and fruitless as that of the unsanctified is. Sporting, pleasant, and recreating talk is not vain but lawful upon these conditions. 8. Still remembring that the most holy and profitaJam. 5. 13. ble discourse must be most pleasant to us, and we must Is any merry? Let him sing Psalms not through a weariness of it, divert to carnal mirth, as more desirable, but only use natural honest mirth as a necessary concomitant to exhilarate the spirits.

§. 5. Idle or vain words then, are such as are unprofitable and tend not to do good. I here forbear to speak of those Idle words which are also worse than vain, as mentioned before among the sins of the tongue. Idle words are, 1. Either simply such which tend to no good at all. 2. Or comparatively such; which are about some small or inconsiderable good; (or non quod juste non sufficit, aut utrest one the other) when you should be speaking of greater things. The litaris ca former sort are always idle, and therefore always vet. Gregor. Moral. sinful: The latter sort are sometimes lawful in themselves, that is, when great matters are not to be talked of: In its season it is lawful to speak about the saving of a penny, or a point, or a pin: But out of season, when greater matters are in hand, this is but idle sinful talk.

What is idle talk? The sorts of it.

§. 6. Also there is a great deal of difference between now and then an Idle word, and a babling prating custom, by which it becometh the daily practice of some loose tongued persons, so that the greater part of the words of all their lives are meerly vain.

§. 7. The particular kinds of Idle talk are scarce to be numbred. Some of them are these.

§. 7. 1. When the tongue is like a vagrant beggar or masterless dog that is never in the way, and never out of the way, being left to talk at random about any unprofitable matter that comes before it: And such will never want matter to talk of: every thing they see or hear is the subject of their chat: And one word begetteth occasion and matter for another, without end.

§. 8. 2. Another sort of idle talk is the vain 1 Cor. 3. 20. Rom. 1. 21. discourses (by word or writing) of some learned men, in which they bestow an excessive multitude of words about some small impertinent thing; not to edifie, but to shew their wit; which Seneca reprehends at large.

§. 9. 3. Another sort of idle talk is vain and immoderate Disputings, about the smaller circumstances of Religion, or frequent discourses about such unedifying things while greater matter should be talkt of, Tit. 3. 9. But avoid fooliſh queſtions, and genealogies, and contentions, and ſtrivings about the Law, for they are unprofitable and vain. 1 Tim. 1. 5, 6, 7. Now the end of the Commandment is charity, out of a pure heart, and of a good Conſcience, and of faith unfeigned; from which ſome having ſwerved, have turned aſide unto vain jangling, deſiring to be teachers of the Law, underſtanding neither what they ſay, nor whereof they affirm. 1 Tim. 6. 20. O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy truſt, avoiding profane and vain babblings, and oppoſition of ſciences falſly ſo called, which ſome profeſſing have erred concerning the faith. 2 Tim. 2. 16. But ſhun prophane and vain babblings, for they will increaſe unto more ungodlineſs. Tit. 1. 10, 11. There are many unruly and vain talkers——&c.

§. 10. 4. Another sort of Idle talk, is the using of a needless multitude of words, even about that which is good and necessary in it self, but might better be opened in a briefer manner. Even in preaching or praying words may be vain; which is when they are not suited to the matter and the hearers: For you must note that the same words are necessary to one sort of hearers, which are vain as to another sort. And therefore as Ministers must take heed that they suit their manner of speech to their auditors, so hearers must take heed lest they censoriously and rashly call that vain which is unnecessary to them, or such as they; There may be present many ignorant persons that the preacher is better acquainted with than you: And the ignorant lose that which is concisely uttered; They must have it at large, in many words, and oft repeated, or else they understand it not, or remember not that which they understand. But yet a real excess of words even about holy things must be avoided. Eccles. 5. 23. Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any thing before God: for God is in Heaven,

Job 35. 16. Saith Huge, there is a time when nothing, and a time when something should be spoken; but never a time when All should be spoken.

ven, and thou upon earth; therefore let thy words be few: For a dream cometh through the multitude of business, and a fools voice is known by the multitude of words. Two causes of idle words in prayer must be avoided: 1. Emptiness and rashness. 2. Affectation: That is, 1. Affectation to words, as if you should be heard for saying so many words over and over, (as the Papists in their Jesus Psalter say over the name Jesu nine times together, and those nine times, fifteen times over, besides all their repetitions of it, in the petitions themselves between. So in the Titles of the B. Virgin, in her Litany, p. 525.) Hypocrites in all ages and Religions have the same trifling way of devotion; as Christ sheweth of the very Heathen that used this way: Matth. 6. 7. But when ye pray use not vain repetitions, as the Heathens do, for they think they shall be heard for their much speaking: Be ye not therefore like unto them. 2. There is an Affectation of length that causeth idle words in prayer: When men think that it is for the honour of their parts to spend so much time, and speak so long together, or when their superstitious consciences in secret tye them to hold on so long, and have not matter or affection answerable to fill up the time, no marvel if it be filled up with words that are too much guilty of vanity.

The Spartans banished an Orator for saying, He could speak all day of any subject. Erasm.

See the Manuel of Prayers Printed at Antwerp. 1658. pag. 507.

§. 11. 5. Another kind of Idle talk is that which is purposely contrived to humour idle fancies, and recreate vitious minds, and pass away mens precious time: Such are abundance of Love-books, Romances, Plays and Play-books; volumes of Vanity, and hours full of studied vanity (and worse): And such is much of the talk of feigned fools and jesters: Vices which I can hardly express so odious as I apprehend them.

§. 12. 6. Another sort is a custom of inordinate jesting: This vein or disposition is so strong in some, that when they have a list to vent a jest, they cannot hold, but out it must come whatever it cost, and be it never so frivolous and vain. Eph. 5. 4.

§. 13. 7. Another sort is foolish talk, that hath not wit enough to make it edifying. Eph. 5. 4. And among Idle talkers how much of it is foolish! How weary would it make a man to hear the talk of many babblers? How insipid is it? How sottish? Like the talk of a mad man, or a drunken man, or a man in his sleep: It's far pleasanter not only to hear a bird chirp, but a swine grunt, than to hear much of their discourse. See Prov. 10. 14. & 12. 11. & 28. 19 1 Pet. 2. 15. Prov. 15 2, 14.

Use 2. The Aggravations of it.

§. 14. Direct. 2. Understand also the aggravations of idle words, which of them are the greatest sins, that they may be most carefully avoided. Tho' all idle words are sins, yet all are not equally sinful: The worst are such as these that follow.

Megabyzus a great Persian Lord, was told by Anell. that while he was silent they reverenced him for his gold and rich attire, but when he talkt of what he understood not, the boys in the shop laughed at him. Plutarch de Tranquil. Ani. pag. 154.

§. 15. 1. When Idle words are frequent, multiplied, and made their common talk and custom: which is the case of some men, but of abundance of loquacious women, whose natural disposition inclineth them thereto. One that hath but little wit, and much self conceitedness, and passion, will have a torrent of words for a drop of sense: If they meet but with a person so patient and idle as to give them the hearing: they will fit a whole hour together with you, yea many hours, to tell you first how the affairs go between them and their husbands or children or servants; and then talk of their cattle, house, or land; and then tell you of news, and enter into a long discourse of other matters when they understand not, nor have any thing to do with: and next they talk of the weather; and then of the market, what's cheap and what's dear; and then they tell you what this body said to them, and what the other body said, and then they tell you a story of the old times, and how the world is changed, and how much better the former times were than these: then they tell you what wrong such a one did them, and what he said of them, and how bad this or that man is, and what they said or did amiss; and what the report of the country is of such and such; then they tell you what cloaths such a one wears, and how fine and gallant such a one is, and who keepeth a good house, and who is niggardly and sparing: Then they tell you what meat was at such and such a table or feast; and if they be at meat, they have something to say about every dish, and every sort of meat or drink; especially news takes up much of their discourse: And it's well if in all this, the Sermon of the Preacher or his Prayer, or his Life, be not brought in to fill up the empty places of the discourse; and it may be the KING and his Council, and his Laws, and his doings shall be defiled by these Parrots unreverent prattlings, as well as meaner things and persons: So that as Theophrastus saith, He that would not fall in to a feavor, let him run from them in all the haste he can: I should rather think it would cast one into the scurvy, if wearisness be so great a symptom of it as they say. He that hath nothing to do in this world, nor nothing to do for the world to come; and that hath no use for his time, or wit, or tongue, or hands, but waketh as he sleepeth, and liveth as he must lye when he is dead; he that hath neither master, work, nor wages, but thinks he is made to see leaves wag or hear flies buzze, let him choose such a companion, and let him sit and hear such people chat. For my part, I can easilier endure to have them call me morose, or proud, or uncivil, or any thing; nay I had rather be digging, or plowing, or ridding chanels, than endure the tediousness of their discourses. Dionysius sent one to be put to death, for finding fault with his poetry; but called him again to try him once more: and the man rose up in the midst of his recitation, saying, Come, let me go to the Gibbet, as choosing to dye rather than to be so wearied: I am not so impatient; but I should be glad if I could sleep well while I am tyed to such company. And if I had one to send to schoole that were sick of the talking evil, the morbus loquendi, I would give (as Isocrates required) a double pay to the Schoolmaster willingly, one part for teaching him to hold his tongue, and the other half for teaching him to speak. I should think many such men and women half cured, if they were half as weary of speaking, as I am of hearing them. He that lets such twarling Swallows build in his chimney, may look to have his pottage savor of their dung. Nay though they may have some learning and goodness to season their discourse, their too much loquacity will make ones stomach turn against it; and the surfeit may make some queazy stomachs distaste even the more wholesome food. Pompey was so weary of Tully's talkativeness that he wisht he had been on Cæsars side, for then he would have feared me (saith he) whereas now his familiarity wearieth me.

See Ezek. 33. 30. Sollius Apollinar. Sidon. in his discription of K. Theodoricus saith that at his feasts, Maximum tunc pondus in verbis est: quippe quum illic aut nulla narrantur aut seria.

Difficile est cum iis durare qui neque otii neque negotii tempora distinguere norunt. Theophrastus.

Omne supervacuum pleno de pectore manat.

§. 16. 2. It is an aggravation of the sin of loquacity and idle talk, when it is done in a proud self-conceitedness of your own wit, with an unmannerly contempt of others. This is the case of abundance that have not the manners or patience to stay till another man hath done his speech: They think others so long that their list will not hold till they come to end: Yea many pretended learned men and disputants have this disease, that without any shame, or respect to order, or their own reputation, they are in such haste to answer, and talk themselves, that they cut off the speech of others in the midst, as if they should say, Hold your tongue, and let me speak that am wiser; and their excuse is You are so long that I shall forget half before you come to the end. But if it be in a Disputation or about great matters, it is usually much more to the advantage of the truth and hearers, to speak all that necessarily must be considered together, in a continued ſpeech: For the parts of truth have ſuch a dependance one upon another, like the members of a body, or the wheels of a watch, that they are not underſtood diſjunctly, half the ſenſe of them being reſpective to the other parts: Therefore to deliver it (in ſuch caſes) by fragments, and chopping of words, and frequent interruptions one of another, is to chat or contend and not to open the truth with the clearneſs and gravity as it requireth. Theſe therefore that accuſe others of ſpeaking too long, to excuſe their uncivil interruptions; may take their anſwer from Auguſtine, Abſit ut multiloquium deputem quando neceſſaria dicuntur, quantalibet ſermonum multitudine ars prolixitate dicantur. The huge volumes of Auguſtine, Chryſoſtom, Suarez, Calvin, yea Toſtatus himſelf, are ſeldom accuſed of idle words. If you depute to each their equal ſhare of time, a compoſed diſcourſe is fitter and ſpareth time better, than interrupting altercations and exchange of words: And if your memory cannot hold all that's ſaid, either take notes, or crave the help of ſome repetition, or anſwer the part which you do remember.

§. 17. 3. Idle talk is worſt when it is about Holy things, and tendeth to profane them: When men unreverently babble about the Scriptures, or controverſies of Religion: Or when by fluent tongues men deſign the increaſe of ſome faction, or propogating ſome error, or the ſetting forth their parts. Saith Hierom (ad Nepot.) Verba volvere & apud imperitum vulgus admirationem ſui facere, indoctorum hominum eſt: Nihil tam facile quam vilem plebem & indoctam, volubilitate linguæ decipere, quæ quicquid non intelligit, plus miratur. Profane loquacity is the worſt kind of loquacity.

§. 18. 4. Idle words are the greater ſin when they are magnified and juſtified, and taken to be lawful, if not ſome excellent thing. As ſome unhappy Scholars that ſpend whole days and months about ſome trival unneceſſary ſtudies, while Chriſt the wiſdom of God, (or the ſubject of Divine Philoſophy) is neglected: He that heareth ſome of their ſuppoſed critical curioſities, would ſay with Paul, 1 Cor. 3. 20. The Lord knoweth the thoughts of the wiſe that they are vain: And if he compare their lives with their ſtudies, perhaps he will remember Rom. 1. 21. They became vain in their imaginations: Their fooliſh hearts were darkened, and profeſſing themſelves wiſe, they became fools. Col. 2. 8.

§. 19. 5. Idle words are an aggravated ſin, when they are ſtudied, and pompouſly ſet forth at great labour and coſt, as a matter to be gloried in: As in Plays and Romances: Worſe than Tobaco-houſes where men ſell ſmoak. The pleaſure, the love, the labour, the coſt, the time, the deceit, the temptation, the impenitency are the great aggravations of this ſin.

Dir. 3. The ſinfulneſs of much idle talk.

§ 20. Direct. 3. Underſtand and conſider the miſchief of the ſin of babling idle talk. For the common cauſe of it is, that men take it to be ſo ſmall a ſin, that they think there is no danger in it; and therefore they fear it no more than a ſcratcht finger.

§. 21. 1. (Beſides the general evil mentioned Tit. 1. Direct. 1.) conſider that much idle talk is a multitude of ſins. Though one idle word were never ſo ſmall a ſin, yet when it cometh to hundreds and thouſands, and is your daily hourly cuſtom, all ſet together cannot be ſmall. Many thouſand pence, is more than one ſhilling or pound. And your frequent cuſtome of idle talk, may amount to a greater ſinfulneſs, than Noah's once drunkenneſs, or David's once adultery, or Peter's once denying Chriſt. If a ſwearer ſhould ſwear as oft, or a lyar lye as oft, or a Thief ſteal as oft, as many women (and men too) ſpeak idly, what Monſters ſhould we take them for?

§. 22. 2. Idle talk excludeth all the good diſcourſe, and edifying ſpeech that ſhould have been uſed all that time: we have many greater uſes for our tongues: You have your buſineſs to talk of, and your God, and your ſouls, and your duties, and your ſins, and the life to come to talk of! O how many great and neceſſary things! And will you ſhut out all this edifying ſpeech, by your idle chat? Will you hinder others as well as your ſelves? Col. 3. 16. Ephes. 4. 29. Pſ. 119. 1.

§. 23. 3. Idle talk is a ſinful conſumer of time: You have greater buſineſs to ſpend your hours in: If you ſaw what a world you are ready to go to, and ſaw how near you are to it, you would think your ſelves that you had greater buſineſs than idle chat, to ſpend your time in. Do you know what you loſe in loſing all thoſe hours?

§. 24. 4. Idle talk corrupts the hearers minds, and tendeth to make them light, and vain, and empty, even as good diſcourſe doth tend to make them good. Why do you talk to others, but to communicate your ſenſe and affections to them by your words? And for all that many take it for a little ſin, I am ſure it is not a little hurt that it doth. If men were not uſed to be entertained with ſo much vain diſcourſe, they could not tell how to keep better things from their minds or mouths: nor would their thoughts be ſo habituated to vanity; nor would they make ſuch returns of idle words; whereas one vain diſcourſe begets another, and it is a multiplying and very infectious ſin.

§. 25. 5. As your tongues are miſ-employed, ſo your wits and minds are diſhonoured by vain talk. Even good words will grow contemptible when they are too cheap and common. A Fidler at the door goes but for a Rogue, though Muſick and Muſicians be honoured: Whoever took a talkative Babler for a wiſe man? He that is Logophilus is ſeldome Philologus much leſs Philoſophus. As Demoſthenes ſaid to a Prater, If thou kneweſt more, thou would ſay leſs. They ſeldome go for men of action and virtue that talk much: They that ſay much, uſually do little: Women, and Children, and old folks, are commonly the greateſt talkers: (I may add, mad folks). Livy noteth, that Souldiers that prate and brag much ſeldom fight well: And Eraſmus noteth, that Children that quickly learn to ſpeak, are long in learning to go. It is not the barking Cur that biteth. Let it be the honour of a Parrot to ſpeak much, but of a man to ſpeak wiſely. The mobility of their tongues (an honour common to an Aſpen leaf) is all their honour, that can multis verbis pauca dicere, ſay a little in a great many words; but multa paucis, much in few words, is the character of the wiſe, unleſs when the quality of the auditors prohibiteth it: And qui ſunt in dicendo breviſſimi, if the auditors can bear it, ſhall be accounted the beſt ſpeakers. I am not of his mind that ſaid, He oft repented ſpeaking, but never repented ſilence: But, except they be Miniſters, few men have ſo much cauſe to repent of ſilence as of ſpeech. Non quam multa, ſed non bene, muſt be the Chriſtians care. As one ſaid of Philoſophy, I may much more ſay of Religion, that *tho' an Orators excellency appeareth only in ſpeaking, yet the Philoſophers (*and the Chriſtians appeareth as much in ſilence.) Eccleſ. 5. 3, 7. Eccleſ. 10. 12, 13. Eccleſ 10. 14. Pſal. 37. 30. Prov. 17. 27, 28. & 10. 20. & 12. 18. & 10. 19. & 18. 4, 5. 6. & 21. 23.

§. 26. 6. Where there is much idle talk, there will be much ſinful talk, Prov. 10. 19. In the multitude of words there wants not ſin; but he that refraineth his lips is wiſe. There are lyes, or backbitings, or medling with other folks matters, or ſcurrilous jeaſts, if not many ſuch ſins that go along with a courſe of idle talk: It is the vehicle in which the Devil giveth his moſt poyſonous draughts. Saith Lipſius, It is given to Praters, Non multa tantum ſed male; to ſpeak ill, as well as to ſpeak much.

§. 27. 7. Vain words hinder your own edification: Who knoweth if you would hold your tongues, but Prov. 24. 8, 9.

some one would speak wiselier, that might do you good?

§. 28. 8. And you weary the hearers (unless they are strangely patient) when you intend to please them (or else you might as well talk all that by your self): It is scarce manners for them, unless you be much their inferiors, to tell you they are aweary to hear you, and to intreat you to hold your tongues: But you little know how oft they think so: I judge of others by my self: I flye from a talkative person, as from a Bed that hath Fleas or Lice: I would shut my doors against them, as I stop my Windows against the Wind and Cold in Winter? How glad am I when they have done? and gladder when they are gone? Make not your selves a burden to your company or friends, by the troublesome noise of an unwearied tongue.

§. 29. 9. Many words are the common causes of contention: Some word or other will fall that offendeth those that hear it; or else will be carried to those that are absent, and made the occasion of heart-burnings, rehearsals, brawls, or Law suits. There is no keeping quietness, peace and love, with talkative prattlers; at least not long.

§. 30. 10. Are you not sensible what Pride and impudency is in it, when you think your selves worthiest to speak? As if you should say, you are all children to me: Hold your tongues, and hear me speak? If you had Christian Humility and Modesty, you would in honour prefer others before your selves, Rom. 12. 10. You would think your selves unworthiest to speak (unless the contrary be very evident) and desire rather to hear and learn. As Heroclitus being asked, Why he alone was silent in the company, answered, That you may talk: So when you talk above your parts, it is as if you told the company, I talk that all you may be silent.

§. 31. 11. It is a voluntary sin and not repented of: For you may easily forbear it if you will; and you wilfully continue in it: And therefore impenitency is your danger.

§. 32. 12. Lastly, Consider how unprofitable a sin it is: And how little you have to hire you to commit it: What get you by it? Will you daily sin against God for nothing?

Dir. 4. Isa. 32. 4, 5, 6. Matth. 12. 34, 39. 2 Cor. 4. 13. Joh. 3. 11. 1 Joh. 4. 5. Prov. 16. 23. Psal. 40. 5. Cant. 7. 9.

§. 33. Direct. 4. If you would not be idle talkers, see that your hearts be taken up with something that is good: And that your tongues be acquainted with, and accustomed to their proper work and duty: An empty head and heart are the causes of empty, frothy, vain discourse. Conscience may tell you when your tongues run upon vanity, that at that time there is no sense of sin or duty, or the presence of God upon your hearts: No holy Love; no Zeal for God; but you are asleep to God and all that is good; and in this sleep you moither and talk idly of any that cometh into your mind. Also you make not conscience of speaking of that which is good, or else it would keep out vanity and evil. Remember what abundance of greater matters you have to talk of! You have the evil of sin, the multitude and subtilty of temptations, and the way of resisting them, to talk of: You have your faults to lament, your evidences to enquire after, your mercies thankfully to open, the greatness and goodness and all the attributes of God to praise: You have all the works of God to admire: Even all the creatures in the world to contemplate, and all Gods admirable Providences, and Government to observe: You have the mysterie of Redemption, the person, and office, and life, and miracles, and sufferings, and glory, and intercession, and reign of Christ to talk of: And all the secret sanctifying operations of the Holy Ghost; and all the Ordinances of God, and all the means of Grace, and all our duties to God and man, and all the holy Scripture; besides death and judgment, and Heaven, and Hell, and the concernments of the Church of God and the case of the persons you speak to, who may need your instruction, exhortation, admonition, reproof or comfort: And is not here work enough to employ your tongues, and keep them from idle talk? Make conscience of those duties commanded, Ephes. 4. 29. Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use, of edifying, and may minister grace to the hearers, and grieve not the holy Spirit of God. Ephes. 5. 18, 19. Be not drunk with Wine wherein is excess, but be filled with the Spirit, speaking to your selves in Psalms and Hymns, and Spiritual Songs, singing and making melody in your hearts to the Lord, giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. 1 Pet. 4. 11. If any man speak, let him speak as the Oracles of God. Sinful omission of good discourse, is the cause of sinful commission of vanity. Specially when the heart it self is vain: For as a man is, so is he apt to speak. 1 John 4. 5. They are of the world, therefore speak they of the world. Isa. 32. 6. For the vile person will speak villany, and his heart will work iniquity, to practice hypocrisie, and to utter error against the Lord.

Prov. 23. 16. Psal. 145. 6, 11, 12, 13, 21. Psal. 119 172. Psal. 49. 3. & 35. 28.

§. 34. Direct. 5. Walk always with God as in his presence, and in the awe of his Laws and judgment, that conscience may be kept awake and tender. You will be restrained from vain talk, if you perceive that God is hearing you, and if you remember that your tongue is under a Law, and that for every idle word men shall give account in the day of judgment. Mat. 12. 36, 37. and that by your words you shall be justified or condemned: If the Law of God were in your hearts, Psal. 40. 8. and hidden there, Ps. 119. 11. Your heart would be fixed, Ps. 57. 7. His word then would be the rejoycing of your heart, Ps. 119. 111. And your tongues would then be talking of judgment, Ps. 37. 30. A tender conscience will smart more with an idle word, than a seared senseless conscience with an Oath, or lye, or slander. For the Fear of God is clean, Psal. 19. 9. and by it men depart from evil, Prov. 16. 6. Be thou therefore in the fear of the Lord all the day long, Prov. 23. 17.

Dir. 5. Jer. 8. 6. Prov 6. 22, Psal 77. 12. & 105. 114. 149. 11.

§. 35. Direct. 6. Avoid idleness, if you would avoid idle talk: The drones of the Common-wealth that have nothing else to do, but visit, and compliment, and prate of other mens matters; and that can have while to sit whole hours together, upon no business, are they that are most guilty of idle chat. Idle Gentlemen, and Beggars, and idle gossiping Women, and Old men that are void of the fear of God, and Children that have no business to do, are they that can sit talking away their time to as little purpose, as if they had been all the time asleep. All idle persons swarm with the Vermine of idle thoughts and words.

Dir. 6. 1 Tim. 6. 13. 1 Pet. 4. 15.

§. 36. Direct. 7. If you would avoid idle talk, avoid idle talkative companions: Or if you cannot avoid them, answer them not, but let them talk alone, unless it be to reprehend them, or turn them to more profitable talk. For when you hear vanity, it will incline you to speak vanity: And these ungodly persons speak every one vanity to his neighbour, as if their tongues were so their own, that no Lord might control them, Psal. 12. 1, 2, 3, 5, 6. The Philosopher could say, That which you would not hear, do not speak; and that which you would not speak, do not hear. Most are like Parrots that will oftest speak the words which they oftest hear. How hard is it to avoid idle talk amongst idle talkers? One vain word draws on another, and there is no end.

Dir. 7. Garrulo non respondere convitium est.

§. 37. Direct. 8. Avoid vain works, if you would avoid vain words. For a man that engageth himself in vain employment, doth lose all the words as vain, vain, which he uſeth about that employment. What a life then do they live, that have an unlawful Calling? When their very buſineſs and Trade is ſin, the adjuncts, the words about it, muſt be ſin, and ſo all their lives are a continued ſin: I had rather therefore be the baſeſt drudge, than one of theſe men: Eſpecially Stage-players ſhould think of this: And thoſe that ſpend whole hours, yea, half days, if not nights, in gaming, or vain, and ſinful ſports, what abundance of idle words do they uſe about them: Every caſt of the Dice, and every Card they play, hath an idle word; ſo that a ſober man would be a weary and aſhamed to hear them.

Dir. 8.

Dir. 9. §. 38. Direct. 9. Plunge not your ſelves into exceſs of worldly buſineſs, as ſome do, that undertake more without neceſſity, than they can diſcharge: For ſuch neceſſitate a variety of thoughts and words: And all that are ſpent in ſerving them in thoſe their vain employments, are vain; though the work for the matter of it be not vain.

Dir. 10. §. 39. Direct. 10. Let not a vicious mind make that ſeem neceſſary or convenient which is vain. Carnal hearts that are acquainted with no better things, think nothing vain, that pleaſeth their ſenſual inclinations, or which their carnal intereſt doth require. A man-pleaſer thinketh Civility obligeth him to obſerve his unneceſſary viſits and complements, and to anſwer idle talkers, and not ſit ſilent by them, nor contradict them: And ſo it muſt be a point of good manners to break the Law of God: And as they think it uncivil not to pledge every drinker in his healths, ſo not to anſwer every twatler in his talk.

Dir. 11. §. 40. Direct. 11. Take heed of a Proud ſelf-conceited mind that thinks too well of your own diſcourſe: Get but Humility, and you will rather chooſe to hear, than to ſpeak. But when all your fancies and impertinences ſeem ſome excellent matters to you, then you are with Child till you are delivered of them, and then all muſt reverence and ſilently attend your pride and folly; or be taken as neglecters of you for diſregarding it.

Dir. 12. §. 41. Direct. 12. Avoid Paſſion and paſſionate companions: For paſſion is talkative, and will not be chekct, but reſiſteth the reſtraint of reaſon, and multiplieth words that are worſe than vain?

Prov. 14. 17. 15. 18. Eccleſ. 7. 8, 9.

Dir. 13. §. 42. Direct. 13. Take heed of an inordinate jeaſting vein: For it habituateth the mind to fooliſh levity, and knows no bounds, and breeds idle words, as thick as putrified fleſh breeds Vermine: And it is the greater ſin, becauſe it is ordinary, and with a certain pleaſure and pride, and glorying in vanity, and ſinful levity and folly.

Eccl. 2. 2. Eccl. 7. 6. Eph. 5. 4.

Dir. 14. §. 43. Direct. 14. Underſtand particularly what ſervice you have to do for God or men in every company you come in, and ſo fit your words to the preſent duty and company. For thoſe words are vain and inconvenient in one company that are neceſſary or convenient in another. If you be to converſe with the ignorant and ungodly, turn your diſcourſe into a compaſſionate way of inſtruction or exhortation. If with men wiſer and better than your ſelves, enquire and learn of them, and draw that from them which may edifie you.

Prov. 22. 17. Pr. 12. 18. & 13. 20. & 15. 2, 7, 31.

Dir. 15. §. 44. Direct. 15. Affect not an unneceſſary curioſity of ſpeech, but take thoſe for the fitteſt words, which are ſuited to the Matter, and to thy Heart, and to the Hearers? Otherwiſe your ſpeech will be ſtudiedly and affectedly vain: And you will glory in that as elegant, which is your ſhame: Hypocritical words that come not from the heart, are dead and corrupt, and are but the Image of true ſpeech, as wanting that verity and ſignificancy of the mind which is their life. Words are like Laws, that are valued by the Authority, and Matter, and End, more than by the curioſity and elegancy: Or like money, that is valued by the Anthority, Metal and Weight, and not by the curioſity of its Sculpture, Imagery, or matter. All that is counterfeit, tho' curious, is vain.

You will elſe be but ingenioſi nugatores, as one called him that wrote a great Book on a little matter.

§. 45. Direct. 16. Suppoſe you had written down the idle words of a day (your own or any other prattlers,) and read them over all at night! Would you not be aſhamed of ſuch a Volume of Vanity and Confuſion? O what a Book it would be, that one ſhould thus write from the mouth of idle talkers? What a ſhame would it be to humane nature? It would tempt ſome to queſtion, whether man be a reaſonable creature, or whether all be ſo, at leaſt? Remember then, that all is recorded by God and Conſcience: And all this hodgepodge of vanity muſt be reviewed and anſwered for.

Dir. 16.

§. 46. The reſt that is neceſſary for Direction againſt Idle words, you may find Chap. 5. Part. 2. in the Government of the Thoughts (and in my Book of Self denyal.) In a word, (for I muſt not commit the fault which I am reproving) account not a courſe of idle talk for a ſmall ſin. Never ſuffer ſo looſe and ſlippery a member as your tongue to be unguarded; and never ſpeak that, of which you dare not ſay, as Pſal. 19. 14. Let the words of my mouth, and the meditations of my heart, be now and always acceptable in thy ſight, O Lord my ſtrength and my Redeemer.

§. 47. But eſpecially above others, theſe perſons ſhould watch againſt vain words: 1. Preachers who are doubly ſanctified perſons, and whoſe tongues being conſecrated to God, muſt not be ſacrilegiouſly alienated to vanity: Which is worſe than ſacrilegious alienation of the places, or utenſils, or revenews of the Church: hate it therefore more than theſe.

Who ſhould be moſt watchful here?

2. Ancient people, whoſe words ſhould be grave and wiſe, and full of inſtruction to ſuppreſs the levity of youth: Childhood, and Youth is Vanity: but Age ſhould not be ſo.

3. Parents and Maſters who ſhould be examples of gravity and ſtayedneſs to their families; and by their reproofs and chaſtiſements ſhould repreſs ſuch faults in their inferiors.

1 Tim. [illegible] Job 12. 12. Eccleſ. 11. 10.

4. Thoſe that are better qualified than others with knowledge and utterance, to uſe their tongues to edification. Vain ſpeech is a double ſin in them.

5. Thoſe that are noted for perſons of holineſs and Religion: For it is ſuppoſed, that they pray and ſpeak much againſt idle talk, and therefore muſt not themſelves be guilty of it. If any man among you ſeem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this mans Religion is vain. Jam. 1. 26. (See my Sermon on that Text.)

6. Thoſe that are ignorant, and need much the edifying ſpeech of others.

7. Thoſe that live among wiſe and holy perſons by whom they may be much edified.

8. Thoſe that are among twatlers, where they know they have more need to watch their tongues, than their Purſes among Cut purſes.

9. Thoſe (women eſpecially) that are naturally addicted to overmuch talk, who therefore ſhould be the more watchful, as knowing their diſeaſe and danger.

10. Both empty and angry perſons, who carry a continual temptation about them. All theſe ſhould be ſpecially watchful againſt idle talk.

And for the Time, 1. Specially when they are among thoſe that may receive moſt hurt by it. 2. And when you are going to holy duty, or newly come from it, &c.

Tit. 5. Special Directions againſt filthy, ribbald, ſcurrilous Talk.

Dir. 1. §. 1. Direct. 1. THe chief Direction againſt this filthy ſin, is General; to get out of a Graceleſs ſtate, and get a heart that feareth God, and then you dare not be guilty of ſuch impudency: God is not ſo deſpiſed by thoſe that fear him.

Dir. 2. §. 2. Direct. 2. Ceaſe not your holy Communion with God in his Worſhip, eſpecially in ſecret, and be not ſtrange to him, and ſeldom with him. And then you dare not ſo pollute thoſe lips, that uſe to ſpeak ſeriouſly to God. What! talk of luſt and filthineſs with that tongue that ſpake but even now to the moſt Holy God? Gods Name and preſence will awe you, and cleanſe you, and ſhew you that his Temple ſhould not be ſo defiled, and that he hath not called you to uncleanneſs but to holineſs; and that a filthy tongue is unſuitable to the holy praiſe of God: But while the reſt of your life is nothing but a ſerving the Devil and the fleſh, no wonder if ribaldry ſeem a fit language for you.

Dir. 3. §. 3. Direct. 3. Cleanſe your hearts of vanity and filthineſs; and then your tongues will be more clean. It is a vain or unchaſt heart that makes an unchaſte tongue.

Dir. 4. §. 4. Direct. 4. Remember what a ſhame it is to open and proclaim that filthineſs of thy heart which thou mighteſt have concealed. Chriſt telleth us how Luk. 6. 45. to expound thy words, that out of the abundance of thy heart, thy mouth ſpeaketh. And what needeſt thou tell people that it is the rutting-moon with thee? and that luſt and filthineſs are the Inhabitants of thy mind? If thou be not ſo far paſt all ſhame as to commit fornication in the open Streets, why wilt thou there talk of it?

Dir. 5. §. 5. Direct. 5. Remember that filthy talk is but the approach to filthy acts. It is but thy breaking the ſhell of modeſty, that thou maiſt eat the kernel of the Vomiting Nut. This is the tendency of it, whether thou intend it, or not. Canſt thou be offended with him, that believeth thou doſt that villany in ſecret, which thou talkeſt of openly? or that taketh thee to be preparing thy ſelf for a Whore? If the deed be bad, thy making a jeaſt of it cannot be good.

Dir. 6. §. 6. Direct. 6. Remember that thou bidſt defi- Ephes. 4. ance to Godlineſs and Honeſty: Corrupt communi- 29. cation grieveth the Spirit of God, Epheſ. 4. 29, 30. Epheſ. 5. 4 Canſt thou expect that the Holy Ghoſt ſhould dwell and work in ſo filthy a room, and with ſuch filthy company? Dareſt thou go pray or read the Scripture, or ſpeak of any holy thing, with thoſe lips that talk of filthy ribaldry? Doſt thou find thy ſelf fit to go to prayer, after ſuch diſcourſe? Or rather doſt thou not allow all that hear thee to think, that thou renounceſt God and Godlineſs, and never uſeſt any ſerious Worſhip of God at all? And if thou do pretend to Worſhip him with that filthy tongue, what canſt thou expect in anſwer to thy prayers, but a vengeance worſe than Nadab and Abihu's, Lev. 10. 1, 2, 3. Shall ſweet Water, and Bitter come from the ſame Fountain? Jam. 3. 11. Doſt thou bleſs God and talk filthily with the ſame tongue? and think he will not be avenged on thy hypocriſie?

Dir. 7. §. 7. Direct. 7. Conſider how thou bidſt defiance alſo to common civility: Thou doſt that which civil Heathens would be aſhamed of: As if thou hadſt a deſign to reduce England to the Cuſtoms of Cannibals and Savages in America, that go naked, and are paſt ſhame.

Dir. 8. §. 8. Direct. 8. Obſerve what Service thou doſt 1 Cor. 15. the Devil, for the corrupting of others; as if he 33. had hired thee to be a Tutor in his Academy, or one of his Preachers, to draw the minds of the hearers from Modeſty, and prepare them for the Stews. Eſpecially people can ſcarce have more dangerous Wild-fire caſt into their Fantaſies, than by hearing rotten filthy talk. And wilt thou be one of Venus's Prieſts?

Dir. 9. §. 9. Direct. 9. Remember how little need there is of thy Endeavour. Is not luſt and filthineſs ſo natural, and the Minds of all unſanctified and uncleanſed ones ſo prone to it, that they need no Tutor nor Inſtigator, nor pander to their luſts? This fire is eaſily kindled: The Bellows of thy ſcurrility are needleſs to make ſuch Gunpowder burn.

§. 10. Direct. 10. Preſently lament before God Dir. 10. and Man the filthineſs that thy tongue hath been guilty of, and waſh heart and tongue in the Blood of Chriſt; and fly from the company and converſe of the obſcene, as thou wouldſt do from a Peſt-houſe or any infectious peſtilential Air. And if thou hear ſuch rotten talk reprove it, or be gone, and let them ſee that thou hateſt it, and feareſt God.

§. 11. Obj. But, ſaith the filthy Mouth, I think Object. no harm: may we not jeaſt and be merry?

Anſw. What! haſt thou nothing to jeaſt with but Anſw. dung and filth and ſin and the defilement of Souls, and the offending of God? Wouldſt thou be unclean before the King, or caſt dung in mens faces, and ſay, I think no harm, but am in jeaſt?

§. 12. Obj. But, ſaith he, thoſe that are ſo de- Object. mure, are as bad in ſecret, and worſe than we.

Anſw. What! is a chaſte tongue a ſign of an un- Anſw. chaſte life? Then thou maiſt as equally take a meek and quiet tongue to be a ſign of an angry Man: or a lying tongue to be a ſign of a true man: Would the King take that Excuſe from thee, if thou talk Treaſon openly, and ſay, Thoſe that do not, are yet in ſecret as bad as I? I trow he would not take that for an Excuſe.

Tit. 6. Directions againſt Prophane Deriding, Scorning, or oppoſing Godlineſs.

§. 1. TO prevent the Replyes or Excuſes of the ſcorner, I muſt here tell you, 1. That by Godlineſs I mean nothing but an entire Devotedneſs to God and living to him: The Doctrine and Practice which is agreeable to the holy Scripture: I mean no fanſies of miſtaken men, nor the private Opinions of any ſect; but the practice of Chriſtianity it ſelf. The Explication.

§. 2. 2. And yet I muſt tell you, that it is the common practice of theſe Scorners to faſten more upon the concrete than the abſtract, the perſon, than the bare doctrine, and to oppoſe Godly Perſons as ſuch, when yet they ſay that they oppoſe not Godlineſs. The Reaſons of this are theſe: 1. Becauſe they dare be bolder with the perſon, than with the Rule and doctrine of God himſelf. If they ſcorn at the Bible, or at Godlineſs directly as ſuch, they ſhould ſo openly ſcorn at God himſelf, that the world would cry ſhame on them, and Conſcience would worry them: But as Godlineſs is in ſuch a neighbour, or ſuch a Preacher, or ſuch a man, ſo they think they may reverence it leſs, and that what they do is againſt the perſon and not the thing.

2. In men they have ſomething elſe to pretend, to be the matter of their ſcorn: Godlineſs in men is latent, inviſible, unproveable as to the ſincerity of it; and obſcure as to the exerciſe: If he that ſcorneth a Godly man, ſay [He is not Godly, but an Hypocrite;] in this world there is no perfect Juſtification to be had, againſt ſuch a calumny; but the probable evidence of Profeſſion and a Godly life is all that can be brought. But Godlineſs as it is in Scripture lieth open to the view of all, and cannot be denied there, but by denying the Scriptures themſelves.

3 Godlineſs as in the Rule or holy Scripture is perfect, without any blemiſh that may give a ſcorner a pretence: But Godlineſs in men is very imperfect, and mixt with ſins, with faults which the world may oft diſcern, and the Godly themſelves are forwardeſt to confeſs: And therefore in them a ſcorner may find ſome plauſible pretence: And when he derideth theſe Profeſſours of Godlineſs as being all Hypocrites, he will not inſtance in their vertues, but in their faults; as in Noah's drunkenneſs, and Lots inceſt, and David's Adultery and Murder, and Peter's denying Chriſt:

Chriſt: Yet ſo as the dart ſhall be caſt at Piety it ſelf; and the Concluſion ſhall not be, to drive men from drunkenneſs, adultery or any ſin, but from ſerious Godlineſs it ſelf.

4. Godlineſs as in the Rule is to them a more unobſerved dormant thing, and doth not ſo much annoy them: (for they can ſhut their Bibles, or make nothing of it, but as a few good words): But Godlineſs in the Godly, exiſtent in their Teachers and Neighbours is more diſcernable to them, and more active, and more troubleſome to them, and ſo more hated by them. In a dead letter, or dead Saint, that troubleth them not, they can commend it: but in the living they are moleſted by it: And the nearer it is to them, the more they are exaſperated againſt it. The word is the ſeed of Godlineſs; which leaſt offendeth them, till it ſpring up and bring forth the fruit which condemneth their wicked lives.

§. 3. 3. And as Oppoſers and Scorners do uſually ſtrike at Godlineſs through the Perſon and his Faults, ſo they uſe to ſtrike at the Particular parts of Gods Worſhip, through ſome Modes or circumſtances, or imperfections of men in the performance. It is not Preaching or Praying that they ſcorn if you believe them, but this or that manner or Imperfection in Preaching and Praying. But the drift of all is, not to help any man to do it better, but to make them odious that are moſt ſerious in doing it at all, and thereby to perſwade men that it is a needleſs thing.

Socrates inter loquendum ſæpe, agente id orationis vehementiâ, jactare digitos ſolebat, ita ut à pleriſque rideretur, & deſpectui haberetur: quæ tamen omnia æquo animo ferebat. Laert. in Socrat.

§. 4. 4. Note alſo that it is not the Image or dead part of Religion that theſe men are moſt offended at, and oppoſe; but it is the Life and zeal and diligence of the Godly. So that if they differ not from themſelves in profeſſion about any Doctrine or Ceremony, yet they hate and ſcorn them for doing ſeriouſly the ſame which themſelves hypocritically profeſs.

§. 5. 5. Laſtly note alſo, that this is not a difference of one Sect or Party or Church againſt another, upon differing Opinions; but it is that which is among all Parties within themſelves, when there is any thing of ſerious Religion to be found. Even among the Papiſts there are ſome ſpiritual ſerious holy perſons, who are derided and oppoſed by the prophane that are of their own Church. Yea among the Heathens, Seneca and others tell us that ſtrictneſs in moral Vertue was made the ſcorn of the rude and ſenſual ſort of men: But tho' the quarrel be but that which was taken up from the beginning between the Womans and the Serpents ſeed, yet in all Countries where Church-differences cauſe contention, this Serpentine Enmity doth with Serpentine Subtilty creep in and make advantage of them, and take up the Nick-names, or ſharper Weapons which differing Chriſtians form againſt each other, to ſtrike at the heart of Chriſtianity it ſelf.

Si quis vero eorum mitior, & veritati aliquatenus propior, videretur, in hunc quaſi Britaniæ ſubverſorem omnia odia telaque ſine reſpectu contorquebantur, & omnia quæ diſplicuerint, deoque placuerint, æquali ſaltem lance pendebantur, ſi non gratiora fuiſſent diſplicentia. Gildas. Quod autem quædam de illo inhoneſta & maligna jactantur, nolo mireris: cum ſcias hoc eſſe opus ſemper diaboli, ut ſervos Dei mendacio laceret, & opinionibus falſis glorioſum nomen infamet; ut qui Conſcientiæ ſuæ luce clareſcunt, alienis rumoribus ſordidentur. Cyprian. de Cornel. Epiſt. ad Antonian. Hæc & nos viſimus aliquando. Tertul.

Dir. 1. §. 6. Direct. 1. For the cure of thoſe that are already infected with ſo heinous a ſin, the chief Direction is, to Underſtand the greatneſs of it, and the miſerable conſequents: as followeth.

§. 7. 1. Conſider what it is that thou derideſt: Doſt thou know againſt what thou openeſt thy mouth? 1. Thou derideſt or oppoſeſt men for Loving God with all their heart and ſoul and might: And doſt thou not confeſs that this is the duty of all men living, and that he is not worthy to be called a Chriſtian that loveth not God above all? Thou canſt not deny this. And yet wilt thou oppoſe it? Deny it not, for this is the very thing that thou oppoſeſt: either mens Loving God, or ſhewing their Love to him? If thou didſt but Love him as much as they, thou wouldſt ſeek and ſerve him as diligently as they. Doſt thou not know this thy ſelf, that if thou didſt Love him with all thy Heart and ſoul and ſtrength, thou wouldſt ſeek and ſerve and obey him with all thy Heart and ſoul and ſtrength? If the Godly do more than this, deride them and ſpare not. If they Love God and ſerve him with more than all the heart and ſoul and might, then call them Righteous overmuch. If thou know any one that Loveth God or ſerveth him more than he deſerveth, blame and oppoſe that man and ſpare not. Thou knoweſt that what thou Loveſt moſt, thou art diligent thy ſelf in ſeeking and remembring: Thou laboureſt for money becauſe thou loveſt it: And they labour in ſeeking and ſerving God becauſe they love him: And is it a work for any but a Devil, to oppoſe or ſcorn men for? for Loving or ſhewing their Love to God?

§. 8. 2. Thou derideſt men for delighting in that which is moſt Delectable: For Delighting in high and heavenly Knowledge, and in a Holy ſtate of ſoul and life, and for Delighting in the Law of God and meditating in it day and night, Pſal. 1. 2. and for delighting in holy Prayer, and the Praiſes of their Maker: and for delighting in the ſore thoughts and mention of eternal joys, and making their Calling and Election ſure. What is it but the exerciſe of theſe holy deſires and delights which thou derideſt? and would thou not be as ſerious in Religion and holineſs as they, if thou hadſt as much of theſe Delights as they? Canſt thou ſit at thy Pots, or follow thy game or ſports, or talk of vanity many hours together, becauſe thou Delighteſt in them? and yet doſt thou deride thoſe that Pray or hear Gods word opened to them many hours becauſe it is their delight? O poor ſouls! how quickly and how terribly will God acquaint thee, whether their delights or thine were the more rational and juſt? and whether their work or thine was fitter to be derided?

§. 9. 3. Thou ſcorneſt men for paying but what they owe to the God that Created and Redeemed them. Are they not his own? and did he not give them all their parts and powers? And are not all their abilities and poſſeſſions his? What have they which they received not of him? And is this thy juſtice and honeſty to deride men for offering to pay their debts? and to give God his own? If thou know any one that giveth him more than he oweth him, deride that ſuperſtitious over-righteous man, and ſpare not. But if men ſhould not be derided for paying their debts to thee, deride not men for paying their debt to God, and giving him that which is his own. As we muſt give to Cæſar that which is Cæſars, ſo we muſt give that to God alſo which is Gods.

§. 10. 4. Thou derideſt ſervants for obeying diligently their higheſt maſter? and for doing diligently the greateſt, beſt and needfulleſt work in all the world? And is this a good example for thy own ſervants? Sure if a man ſhould be mocked for ſerving God, he ſhould be mocked more for ſerving ſuch a one as thee? Doſt thou know where we may find a better maſter, whom we may ſerve with better encouragement than God? He hath made us his Stewards, and truſted us with his goods, and doſt thou ſcorn us for being faithful in our Stewardſhip? Thou derideſt his ſubjects for obeying the King of all the world?: And is this a good example to the Kings ſubjects? ſhould it be a matter of ſcorn to obey the King? or doſt thou think that Gods Authority is leſs: or obedience to him leſs commendable?

§. 11. 5. Nay thou derideſt men for doing but ſome part of their duty, and diſcharging but a little of their debt. For the holieſt man whom thou derideſt for doing too much, doth leſs than what he ought to do. Thou knoweſt that the beſt of men do love God and ſerve him leſs than he deſerveth; and that the carefulleſt come ſhort of the perfect keeping of his Laws, and yet wilt thou ſcorn men for doing ſo much, when they know, and thou confeſſeſt that they do too little? could they do all, they did but their duty, Luk. 17. 10.

§. 12. 6. Thou ſcorneſt men becauſe they will not ſet up themſelves, their own wit, and will, againſt their maker. God hath commanded them to give all diligence to make their calling and election ſure: 2 Pet. 1. 10. and to ſtrive to enter in at the ſtrait gate? and day and night to meditate in his Law? and to love him with all their heart and might? and to pray continually: And thou derideſt men for obeying theſe commands? Why, what wouldſt thou have us do man? ſhould we tell God that we are wiſer than he? and that he ſhall not have his will, but we will have our own? and that we know a better way than he hath appointed us? and that he is miſtaken, and would deceive us by his Laws? Wouldſt thou have men thus to be voluntarily mad, and profeſs themſelves open Rebels againſt God?

Mat. 7. 13. Pſal. 1, 2. 1 Theſ. 5. 17.

§. 13. 7. Thou ſcorneſt men becauſe they truſt him that is Truth and Goodneſs it ſelf. We cannot imagine that he can deceive us by his word, or that he maketh any Law for us that is not good, or requireth any duty of us that ſhall be to our hurt, or that we ſhall be loſers by. And therefore we reſolve to obey him as carefully as we can, becauſe we are confident that Goodneſs it ſelf will not abuſe us, and Truth it ſelf will not deceive us: And this is a matter to be ſcorned for? ſhould not Children truſt their Father?

Malignity is blinded the underſtanding that it maketh men aſcribe all the evil that befalleth them, to that which is the only way to happineſs: every bad ſucceſs that the Heathen Romans had, they imputed to the Chriſtians ſaith Paul. Diaconus lib. 3. when Radagaſus the Goth invaded the Romans. Pavor injuſtus Romam invadit; Declamatur à cunctis, ſe hac ideo perpeti, quod neglecta fuerunt magnorum ſacra Deorum: Magnis querelis ubiq; agere: & continuo de repetendis ſacris celebrandiſque inſtitutis: Fere in tota urbe blaſphemis ad nomen Chriſti, tanquam lues aliqua probris ingravantur, conaucuntur à Romanis adverſus Radagaſum duo Pagani dices, &c.

§. 14. 8. Thou derideſt men for not ſinning againſt their certain knowledge and experience. They know that a Holy life is beſt, though thou doſt not: They know the Reaſonableneſs of it: They know the ſweetneſs of it: They know the Neceſſity of it. And muſt they renounce their own underſtandings? muſt they be ignorant becauſe thou art ignorant? and put out their eyes becauſe thou art blind? Is it a crime for men to be wiſer than thou? and that in the matters of God and their ſalvation? They have tryed what a Holy life is, and ſo haſt not thou? They have tryed what a life of faith and obedience is: And muſt they renounce their own experience? Muſt they that have taſted it ſay Honey is bitter, becauſe thou that never didſt taſte it ſaith ſo? Alas, what unreaſonable men have we to deal with?

Saith Obſervat. of thoſe that run or act in publick Games, beſides the Prize which they hope for, do much increaſe their ſtrength and health by preparing their bodies for it: So beſides the hopes of Heaven, it is no ſmall comfort and advantage here in the way, which Chriſtians get by their holy lives.

§. 15. 9. Thou oppoſeſt and ſcorneſt men for Loving themſelves; yea for Loving their ſouls, and taking care of its health and welfare. For how can a man truly Love himſelf, and not Love his ſoul which is himſelf? And how can a man Love his ſoul, and not prefer it before the low concernments of his fleſh? and not take the greateſt care of its greateſt everlaſting Happineſs? Can a man truly Love himſelf, and yet damn himſelf, or loſe the little time in which he muſt (if ever) work out his ſalvation? You will not ſcorn him that is careful of your Children, or your very Cattle? You Love them, and therefore are careful of them your ſelves. And ſhall not he that Loveth his ſoul be careful of it. To Love our ſelves is natural to us as men: And how ſhall he Love his Neighbour that Loveth not himſelf?

§. 16. 10. Thou ſcorneſt men becauſe they Love Heaven above earth, and becauſe they are deſirous to live for ever with God and all the holy Hoſts of Heaven. For what is it that theſe men do ſo diligently, but ſeek to be ſaved? What do they but ſeek firſt the Kingdom of God, and his Righteouſneſs? and labour for the meat that periſheth not, Joh. 6 27. and lay up their treaſure in Heaven, Mat. 6. 20. and ſet their hearts there, Mat. 6. 21. and ſeek the things that are above, and have their converſation in Heaven, Col. 3. 1, 2, 3. Phil. 3. 19, 20. And if it be ſo ſcornful a matter to ſeek for Heaven, ſure thou never thinkeſt of coming to Heaven thy ſelf: Unleſs thou think to come thither by ſcorning at the ſeekers of it.

§. 17. 11. Thou derideſt men becauſe they are unwilling to be damned; and unwilling to do that which they know would damn them; or to neglect that without which there is no hope of eſcaping Hell. They believe the threatnings of God, and therefore they think no pains too great to eſcape his wrath. They think a Holy Life is both a neceſſary and an eaſie way to prevent everlaſting torment: But if thou think otherwiſe keep thy opinion till Grace or Hell ſhall make thee wiſer; and mock at a man that will not play with his own damnation, and leap into Hell as deſperately as thy ſelf.

§. 18. 12. Thou derideſt men becauſe they will not be the voluntary deſtroyers of themſelves: Were it not enough for thee to betray them unto others? or to murder any of thy neighbours thy ſelf? but thou muſt wiſh them to do it with their own hands? and deride them if they will not! O cruel Monſter! that wouldſt with a man to lye in the fire of Hell for evermore? and to go thither wilfully of his own accord? which is ten thouſand times worſe than to wiſh him to cut his own throat. Doſt thou ſay, [God forbid! I deſire no ſuch thing.] Why man, doſt thou do thou knoweſt not what? Doth not he tempt a man to be hanged, that tempteth him to kill and ſteal? When the righteous God hath unchangeably determined in his Law, that without Holineſs none ſhall ſee God, and that Chriſt ſhall come in flaming fire to render vengeance to them that obey not his Goſpel, and that all they ſhall be damned that obey not the truth, but have pleaſure in unrighteouſneſs; when God hath reſolved that Hell ſhall be the wages of ungodlineſs, doſt thou not deſire them to damn themſelves, when thou deſireſt them to be ungodly? If thou believe that there is any Hell at all, then tell me what it's poſſible for any man to do, to murder his ſoul and damn himſelf, but only to be ungodly? If this way do it not, there is no danger of any other. Tell me, doſt thou think that the Devil deſerveth to be called a Murderer of ſouls? If not, it ſeems thou wilt openly take the Devils part: But if he do deſerve it, then the Reaſon of all the World be judge, whether that man deſerve it not much more, that will do much more againſt himſelf, than the Devil ever did or can do? The Devil can but tempt, but thou wouldſt have men do the thing that he tempts them to, and actually to ſin, and neglect a holy life? And which is the worſe? he that doth the evil? or he that only perſwadeth them to it? If the Devil be called, Our Adverſary that like a roaring Lyon

Heb. 12. 14. 2 Theſ. 1. 8, 9. 10. 2 Theſ. 2. 12.

1 Pet. 5. 8.

Lyon goeth about night and day ſeeking whom he may devour: what ſhould that man be called that doth far more againſt himſelf, than all the Devils in Hell do againſt him? Sure he is a devourer or deſtroyer of himſelf. Tell me, thou diſtracted ſcorner! Is the Devils work thinkeſt thou Good or Bad? If it be Good, take thy part of it and boaſt of it when thou ſeeſt the end: If it be Bad (to deceive ſouls and entice them to ſin and Hell) why wouldſt thou have men do worſe by themſelves? He that ſinneth doth worſe than he that tempteth. Tell me, what way doth the Devil take to do men hurt, and damn their ſouls, but only by drawing them to ſin? He hath no other way in the World to undo any man, but by tempting him to that which thou tempteſt men to; even to ſin againſt God and to neglect a Holy life. So that it's plain that thou ſcorneſt and oppoſeſt men becauſe they will not be worſe than Devils to themſelves.

§. 19. 13. Moreover thou oppoſeſt men for not forſaking God! What is it to forſake God, but to refuſe to Love and honour and obey him as God? He hath told us himſelf that He that cometh to God muſt believe that God is, and that he is the Rewarder of them that diligently ſeek him, Heb. 11. 6. And is it not this diligent ſeeking him that thou derideſt? It's plain then that thou wouldſt ſcorn men away from God, and have them forſake him as thou haſt done.

§. 20. 14. Thou ſcorneſt men for not being Hypocrites: Becauſe they will be that in good earneſt which thou hypocritically calleſt thy ſelf, and wouldſt be thought: Thou calleſt thy ſelf a Chriſtian, and what is it but for being ſerious Chriſtians that thou derideſt them? Thou takeſt on thee to believe in God; and what is it but for obeying and ſerving God that thou derideſt them? Thou takeſt on thee to believe the Scripture to be the Word of God? And what is it but for following the holy Scriptures that thou derideſt them? Thou ſaidſt thou believeſt the Communion of Saints? and derideſt them that hold the Communion of Saints in practice: Thou ſaiſt thou believeſt that Chriſt ſhall judge the world? and yet ſcorneſt them that are ſerious in preparing for his judgment. Thou prayeſt that Gods name may be hallowed, and his Kingdom come, and his will be done, on Earth as it is in Heaven. And yet thou derideſt them that Hallow his name, and are Subjects of his Kingdom, and endeavour to do his will? O wretched Hypocrite! And yet that tongue of thine pretendeth that it is their Hypocriſie for which thou hateſt and derideſt them, when thou doſt it becauſe they be not ſuch blind and ſenſleſs Hypocrites as thy ſelf? Can there be groſſer Hypocriſie in the World, than to hate and ſcorn the ſerious practice of thy own profeſſion? and the diligent living according to that which thy own tongue profeſſeth to believe? If thou ſay that it is for doing too much, and being too ſtrict, I anſwer thee, If it be not the will of God that they do, though I would not deride them, I would ſeek to change them as well as thou! But if it be the will of God, then tell me, doſt thou think they do more than thoſe that are in Heaven do? or do they live more ſtrictly than thoſe in Heaven? If they do, then oppoſe them and ſpare not. If not, why prayeſt thou that Gods will may be done on Earth as it is in Heaven?

§. 21. 15. Thou derideſt men for doing that which they were made for: and that which they have their Reaſon and will and all their faculties for: Take them off this, and they are good for nothing: A Beaſt is good to ſerve Man, and the Plants to feed him: But what is Man good for, or what was he made for but to ſerve his Maker? And doſt thou ſcorn him for that which he came into the World for? Thou maiſt as well hate a Knife becauſe it can cut, or a Sythe for Mowing, or a Clock for telling the hour of the day, when it was made for nothing elſe.

§. 22. 16. Thou derideſt men for being ſaved by Chriſt, and for imitating his example: What came Chriſt for into the World but to deſtroy the works of the Devil? and to ſave his people from their ſins: and to redeem us from all iniquity, and purifie to himſelf a peculiar people zealous of good works. And hath Chriſt, to the aſtoniſhment of men and Angels, come down into fleſh, and lived among men, and given them his holy doctrine and example, and ſuffered death for them, and all this but to bring men to zealous Purity, and dareſt thou make a ſcorn of it after this? What is this but to ſcorn thy Saviour, and ſcorn all the work of Redemption, and tread under foot the Son of God, and deſpiſe his blood, his life and precepts? 1 Joh. 3. Mat. 1. 21. Tit. 2. 12.

§. 23. 17. Thou ſcorneſt men for being renewed and ſanctified by the Holy Ghoſt: What is the work of the Holy Ghoſt on us, but to ſanctifie us? And what is it to ſanctifie us? but to cleanſe us from ſin, and cauſe us entirely to devote our ſouls and lives to God? Doſt thou believe in the Holy Ghoſt or not? If thou do, what is that but to Believe in him as the ſanctifier of Gods Elect. And what didſt thou take Sanctification to be, but this purity and holineſs of heart and life: And yet dareſt thou deride it?

§. 24. 18. Thou derideſt men for imitating thoſe ancient Saints, whoſe names thou ſeemeſt thy ſelf to honour, and in honour of whom thou keepeſt Holydays. Thou takeſt on thee to honour the names of Peter, and Paul, and Stephen, and John, of Auguſtin, Hierom, Chryſoſtom and other ſuch ſaints of God: And yet wilt thou make a ſcorn of thoſe that ſtrive to imitate them? Search and ſee, if any of theſe men did (after their converſion) live in luxury, carding, dicing, prophaneneſs, and if any of them was againſt a Holy life, againſt much Praying, Hearing, Reading the Scriptures, meditating, exact obedience to God; then let not the ſhame be thine, but mine? He that is moſt unlike them, let him have the ſcorn.

§. 25. 19. Thou derideſt men for Repenting of their former ſin, and for accepting that mercy which Chriſt hath purchaſed, and God hath offered them, and ſent his meſſengers, to intreat them to accept? Can they Repent of their former ungodlineſs, and not turn from it and amend? If thou kneweſt what they know, thou wouldſt repent thy ſelf, and not deride men for repenting: If thou kneweſt the gift of God, thou wouldſt beg it and gladly accept of it thy ſelf, and not deride them that accept it.

§. 26. 20. Thou ſcorneſt men for keeping that Covenant, which thou alſo madeſt with God in thy Baptiſm thy ſelf. At the ſame time thou ſpeakeſt againſt the Anabaptiſts, that will not have their children baptized, and derideſt thoſe that keep their Covenant, which in Baptiſm they made: What a monſter of contradictions is an ungodly Hypocrite! Didſt thou not in Baptiſm renounce the fleſh, the world and the Devil, and give up thy ſelf in Covenant to God the Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt? And doſt thou not yet know what thou didſt? But ſcorn them that perform it? What is it to be given up to God in Baptiſm, but to take him for thy God, thy Saviour and Sanctifier, whom thou muſt Love, and ſeek, and obey in Holineſs, with all thy Heart, and Soul, and Might? He is a Covenant breaker indeed, that hates the keeping of it.

I have hitherto been ſhewing thee what it is that thou oppoſeſt and derideſt: I ſhall now tell thee further what thou doſt, in ſhewing thee the Aggravations of the ſin, and its importance.

§. 27.

§. 27. 2. Consider in all this, what an open enemy thou art to God, and an open Souldier for the Devil: What canst thou do more against God and do thy worst, than make a scorn of all his work and servants? He feareth not thy power or rage, thou canst not hurt him. How many millions of such worms as thou can he tread to Hell, or destroy in a moment? It is in his servants and service that he is honoured or opposed here, and that mortals shew their Love or hatred to him. And how canst thou devise, if thou wouldst do thy worst, to serve the Devil more notoriously, than by opposing and deriding the service of God? If such be not Satans Servants he hath none.

§. 28. 3. Consider what a terrible badge of misery, thou carriest about thee? thou beareſt the mark of Satan, Death and Hell in thy forehead as it were. If there were any doubt whether a Swearer, or drunkard, or Fornicator may be in a state of Grace, yet it is past all doubt, that a Scorner of Godliness is not: It were strange indeed for that man to be Holy that derideth Holiness: There is scarce any sort of men in the world, that are more undoubtedly in a state of damnation than thou art. It is dark to us what God will do with Infidels, and Heathens that never had the means of salvation: But what he will do with all the unbelieving and ungodly that have had the means, we know past doubt: much more what he will do with those, that are not only void of Holiness, but deride it. I deny not but yet if thou be converted thou maist be saved: And O that God would give thee repentance to the acknowledging of the truth, that thou mightest escape out of the Devils snares, who leads thee captive at his will, 2 Tim. 2. 25, 26. It is written of Basil, that by his prayers he caused the Devil to give back a writing, by which a wretched man had sold his soul to him, that he might enjoy his Masters daughter, and that the man repented and was delivered: If thou maist be so recovered it will be a happy day for thee. But till then it is as sure as the Scripture is sure, that thou art a miserable creature, and an undone man if thou die in that condition that thou art in. O with what fear shouldst thou rise and lie down, if thou hadst thy wits about thee, lest thou shouldst die before thou art converted?

Cyrillus Ariano-rem Episcopus, Hunnericum Regem persuasit, non posse peccatum atque longævum obtinere regnum, nisi nomen perderet innocentum. Qui tamen Dei judicio post non multos dies tum ſima morte præventus, fœtens vermibus exſpiravit, Victor. Utic. p. 369.

§. 29. 4. To scorn at Holiness is a defiance of grace, as if thou didst renounce Gods mercy: Thou dost thy worst to drive away all hope, and make thy case uncurable and desparate. For if ever thou be saved, it must be by this grace and holy life which thou derideſt: And is scorning grace the way to get it? And is it likely that the Holy Ghost will come and dwell in the man that scorneth his sanctifying works?

§. 30. 5. To scorn at Godliness, is a daring of God to give over his patience, and presently to execute his vengeance on thee? Canst thou wonder if he should make thee a monument of his Justice, and set thee up for all others to take warning by! Who is fitter for this, than the scornful oppoſers of his grace and service? Hasten not vengeance, man; it will come time enough. Will a worm defie the God of Heaven?

§. 31. 6. How little dost thou understand of all that thou oppoſest? Didst thou ever try a holy life? If thou hadst, thou wouldst not speak against it: If thou hast not, art thou not ashamed, to speak evil of that which thou dost not understand? It is a thing that none can throughly know, without experience: Try it a while, and then speak thy mind.

§. 32. 7. Didst thou ever consider how many Judgments are against thee, and whom thou dost contradict and scorn? 1. If thou scorn at serious Godliness, at Preaching, hearing, reading, Praying, Meditating, and strict avoiding sin; thou contradictest God himself; for none in all the world is so Holy, or so much for Holiness as he: And therefore ultimately it is him that all thy malice is against, even God the Father, and the Redeemer, and the Sanctifier. 2. Thou settest thy self against all the evidence of Scripture. 3. And against all the works of God: For all conspire to call the world to Holiness and strict obedience to God. 4. And thou contradictest all the Prophets and Apostles, and all the ancient Fathers of the Church; and all the Martyrs and Saints of God that were ever in the world, and all the learned faithful Ministers and Pastors of the Church that are or have been; and all the Godly throughout the world, and all that ever had experience of a holy life: And what art thou, that thou shouldst scorn all these? Art thou wiser than all the Ministers and godly persons in the world? than all the Apostles and holy Martyrs of Christ, that ever were? yea, than God himself?

§. 33. 8. Didst thou ever mark how unlike the speech of Christ and his Apostles was to thine? Did they deride men for being too diligent, for the pleasing of God and saving of their souls? Read but these places following and judge. Matth. 5. 8, 11, 20. & 6. 33, 21. & 7. 13, 14. 1 Pet. 4. 18. & 2 Pet. 3. 11. & 1. 10. Heb. 11. 6. Matth. 5. Rom. 8. 1, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 13. Phil. 3. 18, 19. Heb. 12. 28, 29.

§. 34. 9. Dost thou not thy self do as much for the world, as those that thou oppoſest do for Heaven? Art thou offended that they preach and pray so long? Art not thou longer about thy worldly business? And are not Gallants longer at a feast, or visit, or games and recreations? Art thou offended that they talk so much of Heaven? And dost not thou talk more of earth? And which of these dost thou think in thy Conscience, doth better deserve to be sought and talked of? Which will prove better at the last? And whose labour will be more worthy of derision?

§. 35. 10. What gain would it be to thee if thou hadst thy will, and Praying, and Preaching, and Holiness were as much banished from the world, as thou wouldst have it? And if men to please thee should displease God, and cast away their souls for ever? Would it do thee good for Earth to be so like to Hell? It is the grief of godly men already, to think how little Holiness is in the world: There is scarce a sadder thought that ever came into my heart than to survey all the Nations of the earth; and to think how ignorance and ungodliness abound, and how few there be that are truly holy? And what an inhumane creature is that who yet would have them fewer; and scorn out of the world, the little wisdom and piety that is left? Rom. 11. 1, 2.

And would it be any pleasure to thee in Hell, if men should accompany thee thither to humour thee? Nay, it would be thy everlasting torment, to see there so many for ever undone, by hearkning to thy wicked counsel. Say not, that thou art not so cruel, and it is not their damnation that thou desirest: No more it is not thy own that thou desirest: But all's one as to the effect, if thou desire the way to it. Thou maist as well give one man poison, and deride at another for eating and drinking, and yet say, it is not your death that I desire. But die they must, if they are ruled by thee?

§. 36. 11. Were not he a cruel man that would not do as much for the saving of his neighbours soul, as that which thou derideſt them for in the saving of their own? If thou were sick, should I refuse to pray for thy life? Or if I knew that I might save anothers soul, should I think any means or pains too much? If not, methinks I may be allowed to do as much for my ſelf, as charity bids me do for another.

§. 37. 12. Is it a ſeaſon to mock at Holineſs, when at the ſame time, there are ſo many millions of ſouls in Heaven that all came thither by the way of Holineſs? And ſo many millions of ſouls in Hell that all came thither for want of Holineſs? And while thou art prating againſt it, they are crying out in deſpair of the folly of their neglecting it? Would one of the ſouls in Heaven regard thy mocks if he were to live on earth again? Or would one of the ſouls in Hell be mocked thither, if they were but tryed with another life? If thou ſaweſt at this hour, what unholy ſouls in Hell are ſuffering, and what holy ſouls in Heaven enjoy, wouldſt thou ever mock again at Holineſs? For ſhame conſider what thou doſt; and ſee by faith the things that mortal eyes behold not.

§. 38. 13. What if men ſhould yield unto thy deriſions, and forſake a holy life to pleaſe thee? Wouldſt thou undertake to juſtifie them, or be anſwerable for them before that God, that required Holineſs, and will condemn all the unholy? Wouldſt thou bring them off, and ſave them from damnation! Alas, poor ſoul, how unable wilt thou be to ſave thy ſelf? And wilt thou take them for wiſe men, if they diſpleaſe the Lord, and go to Hell to humour ſuch a one as thou?

§. 39. 14. Thou wilt not thy ſelf be mockt out of thy Houſe, or Land, or Right, nor from thy meat, or drink, or reſt: wouldſt thou caſt theſe away, if another ſhould mock but thee for uſing them? I think thou wouldſt not. And wouldſt thou have wiſe men be mockt out of their Salvation?

§. 40. 15. Thou wouldſt not think it reaſonable that thy Children or Servants be derided for loving or obeying thee? Or thy very horſe diſpraiſed for ſerving thee? And do they owe thee more, than we all owe God?

§. 41. 16. God highly honoureth them and dearly loveth them, for that very thing that thou hateſt and derideſt them for. Joh. 16. 27. & 14. 21. He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that Loveth me: and he that loveth me ſhall be loved of my Father: and I will love him, and will manifeſt my ſelf to him. Pſal. 11. 7. The righteous Lord loveth righteouſneſs, his countenance doth behold the upright. Pſal. 146. 8. The Lord loveth the righteous. 2 Cor. 6. For ye are the temple of the living God: as God hath ſaid, I will dwell in them, and walk in them, and I will be their God and they ſhall be my people: wherefore come out from among them, and be ye ſeparate ſaith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you, and will be a father unto you, and ye ſhall be my ſons and daughters, ſaith the Lord, and Almighty. And dareſt thou ſcorn the ſons and daughters of the Almighty? Even for that very thing for which he hath promiſed to receive them, and to be a Father to them? How contrary then art thou to God, Mal. 3. 16, 17, 18. A Book of remembrance was written for them that feared the Lord and thought upon his name: and they ſhall be mine ſaith the Lord of Hoſts, in that day when I make up my Jewels: and I will ſpare them as a man ſpareth his own ſon that ſerveth him: And dareſt thou ſcorn Gods Jewels, and thoſe that are thus precious to him? 1 Sam. 2. 30. For them that honour me I will honour, and they that deſpiſe me ſhall be lightly eſteemed: And wilt thou be one of his deſpiſers, oppoſing that in others, for which God himſelf hath promiſed to honour them?

§. 42. 17. To hate and ſcorn at Holineſs is to hate and ſcorn at Gods own Image; and the cleareſt image of God that is under Heaven; even that which Chriſt came down from Heaven to give us the firſt draught of; even that copy of the holy life of Chriſt, which by the ſpirit of God is drawn upon the heart. And he that ſcorneth at this image of God doth ſcorn at the Holy Ghoſt that made it, and ſcorn at Chriſt who gave us the firſt pattern, and ſcorn at God himſelf whoſe image it is: Saith Chryſoſtome, God is loved and hated in his ſervants as a King is honoured or deſpiſed in his image. And he that dare ſcorn God, and ſcorn Jeſus Chriſt, and ſcorn the Holy Ghoſt, in the Image of God upon his children, methinks ſhould never have the face once to expect to be ſaved by the God that he doth ſcorn.

Luke 19. 27.

§. 43. 18. Thou art the ſhame of humane nature; and makeſt man ſo like a Devil, that it is hard to prove that the Devils can do much worſe than thou. Can there be a greater ſin, than for a creature to ſcorn and deride the Image and Laws of his Creator? And hate and oppoſe or perſecute men for obeying him, and ſeeking to pleaſe him and to ſave their ſouls? What couldſt thou do worſe if thou wouldſt ſtudy to be as bad as thou canſt? What a ſhame is it to thy underſtanding to be ſo blind? And to thy heart to be ſo wicked? It were not half ſo great a ſhame to ſcorn the Sun for ſhining, or the earth for bearing fruit? For though theſe are Gods creatures, yet they bear not the Image of his Holineſs as his children do. When he will condemn men at laſt it will be upon this account, Matth. 25. 40, 45. Verily I ſay unto you, in as much as you did it not (or did it) to one of the leaſt of theſe (my brethren) ye did it not (or did it) unto me. O wonderful, that the nature of man can ever come to this, to hate, and oppoſe, and ſcorn the Image and obedience of his Maker, and make a mock of the Holineſs of God! It is a great queſtion whether the very tempting men to ſuch ſins as theſe be not the Devils greateſt ſin: And to commit it is worſe than to tempt thee to commit it (cæteris paribus) And for a man that hath a Saviour offered him, thus to ſcorn his Saviours Grace, and mock his ſervants, muſt needs be far worſe than for the Devil to do it who hath no Saviour, no pardon offered, and no hope, but is ſhut up under endleſs deſparation. As it is worſe for a child to curſe his Father, or ſcorn him, than for an enemy to do it. Think and tremble, how near this deriding or oppoſing the work of the Holy Ghoſt, doth come to the unpardonable Blaſphemy againſt him.

Quid homini inimiciſſimum? Homo inquit, Martin. Dumienſ. de Moribus.

Mat. 12.

§. 44. 19. What villany may not be expected from thee, that canſt commit ſuch a ſin as this? May not thy neighbour look for any miſchief that thy carnal intereſt ſhall lead thee to do againſt him? Is it any wrong to thee to think that thou art a thief, a murderer, a whoremonger, a deceiver, unleſs it be for want of a temptation to commit them? Or that thou wouldſt be a Traytor againſt thy King and Country? Or perfidious to thy trueſt friend, if thou wert tempted to it? When thou ſcorneſt men for obeying God himſelf? Can that man ſtick at any wickedneſs that he is equally tempted to, who dare ſcorn his Maker, the Redeemer and the Sanctifier? and ſpit contempt upon Holineſs it ſelf, the Image of his Judge? For my part if ever I truſt thee or any ſuch man as thou, with life or liberty, or with the worth of a groat, it ſhall be thy Intereſt and not thy honeſty and conſcience that I'll truſt? I'll truſt thee little further than I would truſt the Devil himſelf that governs thee.

Pſal. 123. 4.

§. 45. 20. Laſtly, conſider what thou wilt think of thy ſelf for this at death and judgment? Will it comfort thee when thou art going to be judged of God, to think that thou art now going into the preſence of that God whom thou waſt wont to ſcorn? When thou ſeeſt Chriſt come with thouſands of his holy Angels to judge the world, will it comfort thee to think, This is he whoſe holy life, and precepts, and ſervants I mockt or perſecuted on earth? Now I muſt be judged by him that I derided. O dreadful caſe! For a ſcorner or perſecutor of Godlineſs, to go

Read well Jud. 14, 15. & Pſal. 1.

Prov. 9. 12. Prov. 20. 8. to be judged by that holy God whose ways he scorned and persecuted? If you say, It was not Christ but a man that you derided, See Mat. 25. 40, 45. Luke 10. 28. 14. 19. 27. Act. 9. 4. Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? If thou scorn a child for that in which he resembleth, imitateth or obeyeth his Father, thou wilt find in the day of judgment to thy woe, that it was the Father himself that was the utmost and principal object of thy scorn. Then I had rather be the vilest Toad than such a Man? Then wilt thou stand to what thou saidst? Wilt thou then maintain thy slanders and reproach? Wilt thou then condemn or scorn the godly, when thou seest them justified at Christs right hand, or glorified with him in Heaven? No! as Mal. 3. 18. When God makes up his jewels, Then shall ye return and discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not. Then how gladly would you eat all the words of reproach and scorn, that ever you uttered against a Saint? And wish that you had never spoken them? I tell you it is an unseemly thing for the same man now to scorn at godliness, who will so speedily tremble before the righteous God in the remembrance of it?

§. 46. I have thought these discoveries of the horridness of this sin, to be the best Directions against it: For as it is a sin thou gettest nothing by it, so it is a sin that thou maist easily leave if thou be willing. But for those that are yet but in the way to it, or in danger of it. I shall add these further Directions to keep them from so desperate a wickedness.

Dir. 1. §. 47. Direct. 1. Avoid the company of those distracted men, that dare revile the servants and ways of God. There is that in your corrupted natures, which will incline you to imitate the most horrid blasphemies if you often hear them. We have seen it in our days, that in imitation of others, men have been drawn to sins not to be named? To drink healths to the Devil, to make [God damn me] an ordinary by-word. Be not therefore companions of them.

Dir. 2. §. 48 Direct. 2. Take heed of sinning your selves into blindness of mind and hardness of heart. Forsake not God lest you be forsaken by him. It is men forsaken of God that ordinarily come to this desperate degree of sin: Insomuch that the Book of Homilies thus describing them saith, [The third sort he calleth scorners, that is, a sort of men whose hearts are so stuffed with malice, that they are not contented to dwell in sin, and to lead their lives in all kind of wickedness, but also they do contemn and scorn in others, all Godliness, true Religion, all honesty and virtue: Of the two first sorts of men, I will not say but they may take repentance and be converted unto God: Of the third sort, I think I may without danger of Gods judgment pronounce, that never any yet were converted unto God by Repentance, but continued still in their abominable wickedness, heaping up to themselves damnation against the day of Gods inevitable judgment.] Though I take this to be too severe, yet it's the judgment of the Church of England, and terrible to scorners that profess their assent to it.

Homil. 10. Part 2. Tom. 9. pag. 150. cited before in my Now or Never, p. 125.

Dir. 3. §. 49. Direct 3. Take heed of scorning at the very circumstances, or modes of worship which you dislike: For such scorns come so near to the worship it self, that the minds of the hearers may easily be hence drawn, to dishonour the substance for the sake of the derided mode or circumstance; and it plainly savoureth of a bold prophaneness which grave and sober Christians do abhor. In the case of Idolatry, or where the very substance of the worship is impious and forbidden, I deny not but Elias may (sometime and with wariness) be imitated, who derided Baals Priests: But to do thus upon smaller differences in the Manner or circumstances of worship, is the way to teach men to turn all Religion into matter of derision and contempt. If you see about the King some circumstance of clothing ornament or attendance of his followers, which you dislike or judge ridiculous, if you look towards him with a scornful laughter, it will not excuse you to say I laughed not at the King, but at such or such a thing about him: For his presence should have restrained you from that which seemeth to be a deriding of him: So here, I know you will say, it is not at Gods worship, but at such words or gestures of the Minister that I scorn: But take heed of dallying with holy things: Play not so near the consuming fire! Give not others occasion to deride the thing it self by your deriding the circumstances, though they were unapt: Have we not seen, while factious Christians raise jeasts and nicknames, and scorns against each other, how the prophane and common enemies of Religion, do take them up, and turn them against all serious godliness, to the trouble of others and their own damnation? And we have had experience in these contentious times, that it is the Sectaries and the Prophane that are apt to use these scoffs and scorns against the things and persons that they mislike; and that sober, peaceable, judicious men of all sides do abhor it. How unsavoury and prophane have all sober men thought it, when they heard some young and hot-brain'd persons mocking at the Common-prayer by the name of [Pottage] and at the Surplice by the name of [the Whore of Babylons Smock:] And from hence the same spirit led them as proudly and bitterly to deride at Ministers, Universities, Learning, Temples, Tythes, and all the appurtenances of worship! Yea at the Lords Day, and singing Psalms, and Preaching, and almost all the duties of Religion: For when once men will pretend to strive for God, with the spirit and weapons of Satan and the world, and flesh, there is no stop till they come to the bottom of impiety, and do Satans work in Satans way: And so on the other side, while some have too reproachfully scorned such, as Precisians or Puritans, who differed from them about the form of Church Government and Ceremonies, the rabble of the prophane soon got advantage by it, and turned these words to so common and bitter reproaches of the godly, sober, peaceable people of the Land, that Mr. Rob. Bolton saith, [I am perswaded there was never poor persecuted Word since malice against God first seized on the damned Angels, and the graces of Heaven dwelt in the heart of man, that passed thro' the mouths of all sorts of unregenerate men, with more distastfulness and gnashing of teeth, than the name of Puritan doth at this day: Which notwithstanding as it is now commonly meant, and ordinarily proceeds from the spleen and spirit of prophaneness and good fellowship, is an honourable nickname, that I may so speak, of Christianity and grace:] See more cited out of him, and Bishop Downam, Bishop Abbot, &c. in my Formal Hypocrite, pag. 210, 212, &c.

Nicknames themselves are the great engines of the Devil, and to be avoided: It was well with the Church when there was no other name but Christians put by Christs Disciples on each other; though by the enemies they were scornfully called Nazarenes, and a Sect and Heresie.

Disc. of Happiness. p. 193.

Dir. 4. §. 50. Direct. 4. Be very fearful of making the persons of the Godly contemptible, though for their real faults, lest the ungodly easily step thence to the contempt of Godliness it self. For it is easie to observe how commonly the vulgar judge of the Doctrine and Religion by the Person that professeth it. If a Papist or a Sectary live a holy life, take heed of making a scorn at their persons, notwithstanding thou takest the rise of thy derision from their mistakes: For even a mistaking Saint is dearly beloved and honoured of God: And where ever Holiness is, it is the most great resplendent & predominant thing in him that hath it: And therefore puts a greater honour on him, than any mistake or infirmity can dishonour him: As the person of a King must not be

Pliny saith that as Pearls though they lye in the bottom of the sea, are yet much nearer kin to Heaven, as their splendor and excellency, sheweth; so a godly and generous soul hath dependance on Heaven whence it comes, than on earth where it abideth. A good saying for a Heathen.

diſhonoured by a reproachful mention of his infirmities, leſt it reflect upon his office: So neither muſt the perſon of a holy man, leſt it reflect on his Religion. Not that any mans perſon ſhould credit or ſecure his Faults, nor that we ſhould judge of the faults or manners by the men, inſtead of judging of the Men by their manners: But you muſt judge of them by that which is predominant: and ſo blame their faults, as to preſerve the honour of their Virtues and Religion, and of their Perſons for their Virtues ſake. So blame the falls of Noah, and Lot, and David, and Peter, as may make the ſin more odious, but not ſo as may make their perſons contemptible, leſt it make their Religion next to be contemned. Mark here the difference between the mentioning of good mens falls by the Godly and by the Ungodly. The Godly mention them to make ſin appear a thing more to be feared and watcht againſt, and Holineſs to appear more excellent and neceſſary. But the ungodly mention them (and read them in Scripture.) to make themſelves believe that ſin is not ſo bad and dangerous a thing as Preachers tell them; and that Holineſs doth but little differ from a fleſhly life.

Dir. 5. §. 51. Direct. 5. Judge not of Gods Servants barely by report, without ſome conſiderable acquaintance with them. I cannot remember one of a multitude of the Enemies, Scorners and Perſecutors of Godlineſs, great or ſmall, high or low, but ſuch as never had the happineſs to be well acquainted with them, by any familiarity, or obſervation of the ſecret paſſages of their lives: But uſually they are ſuch as know them but by report, or by ſight, or ſmall acquaintance: And if they did but live with them in the ſame houſes, or were of their familiarity, it were the likelieſt way to change their minds and ſpeeches, (unleſs their acquaintance were only with ſome of the more ignorant, paſſionate or diſtempered ſort of Chriſtians.)

Dir. 6. §. 52. Direct. 6. Take heed of uncharitableneſs and malice, againſt any; but eſpecially the ſervants of Chriſt. For this blinds the judgement, and mads men with a venemous kind of paſſion, and will make them ſcorn and rage againſt the moſt holy ſervants of the Lord. The leaſt true Love to a Chriſtian as a Chriſtian, would do much to the cure of all this ſin.

Dir. 7. §. 53. Direct. 7. Take heed of being engaged in a ſect or faction, and take heed of the carnal zeal or ſchiſm, and of the ſpirit of faction, which ordinarily makes men think it lawful, if not neceſſary, to ſcorn the perſons that ſeem againſt them, that ſo they may diſable them from hindring the intereſt of their cauſe or party. Thus Papiſts, and thus———the factious ones of every party, think that their revilings are but the neceſſary diſarming of the enemies of God (for ſuch all muſt ſeem that differ from them:) And a ſtripping them of that honour by which they might do hurt. Thus good is pretended for the moſt odious evil, and God is ſet up againſt that love which is the fulfilling of his Law; and made the Patron of the ſcorners of his children: But ſurely he ſcorneth the ſcorners, Prov. 3. 34.

Prov. 1. 22, 27.

Dir. 8. §. 54. Direct. 8. Take heed of errour and infidelity: For if the underſtanding be once deluded, and take Religion it ſelf to be but a deceit or fanſie, and Godlineſs to be but conceit and hypocriſie, no wonder if it be made a ſcorn by ſuch. And ſuch ſcorners will juſtify themſelves in it, and think they do no harm: ſo great a plague is a blinded mind.

I have ſaid leſs againſt this Deviliſh ſin, than the nature of it requireth, becauſe I have already ſaid ſo much, eſpecially in three Treatiſes, viz. The Vain Religion of the formal Hypocrite: That called Now or Never; and a Saint or a Bruit.

I conclude with theſe earneſt requeſts to the Godly: 1. Give men no occaſion of ſcorn by your imprudence, ſcandal, ſelfiſhneſs or paſſions, as you tender the honour of God and mens Salvation. As Chryſoſtom ſaith, As he that beareth the Kings Standard in fight had need to be well guarded, ſo he that carryeth the Name and profeſſion of God and Godlineſs, [illegible] a quodam calce per capillos, & illius tolerantiam dixit, Quid ſi me aſinus calce impetiſſet? Num illi diem dixiſſem?

CHAP. X.

Directions for the Government of the body.

PART I.

Directions about our Labour and Callings.

Tit. 1. Directions for the Right choice of our Calling and ordinary Labour.

I Have already ſpoken of Chriſtian Works, and the Duty of our Callings, Chap. 3. Gr. Dir. 10. And am now only to ſubjoin theſe few Directions, for the right chooſing of your Callings? (For of the Uſing of them I muſt ſpeak more anon.)

Dir. 1. §. 1. Direct. 1. Underſtand how neceſſary a life of labour is, and the reaſons of the neceſſity.

Queſt. 1. Queſt. 1. Is labour neceſſary to all? Or to whom if not to all? Anſw. It is neceſſary (as a duty) to all that are able to perform it: But to the unable it is not neceſſary: As to Infants, and ſick perſons, or diſtracted perſons that cannot do it, or to priſoners, or any that are reſtrained or hindred unavoidably by others, or to people that are diſabled by age, or by any thing that maketh it naturally impoſſible.

Is labour neceſſary to all?

Queſt. 2. §. 2. Queſt. 2. What Labour is it that is neceſſary? Anſw. Some labour that ſhall employ the faculties of the ſoul and body, and be profitable (as far as may be) to others and our ſelves. But the ſame kind of Labour is not neceſſary for all.

What labour is neceſſary.

In ſome labours the mind is more employed than the body: As in the labours of a Magiſtrate, a Miniſter, a Phyſician, a Lawyer, &c. Though ſome in theſe may have much bodily labour alſo.

The Labour of ſome is almoſt only of the mind: As, 1. Of Students in Divinity, Philoſophy, Law, Phyſick, &c. who are but preparing themſelves for a Calling: 2. Of ſome Miniſters, or other Godly perſons, who by the iniquity of the place or times where they live, may for a ſeaſon be diſabled from appearing among men, and labouring for any except by the mind: being impriſoned, or driven into ſolitude, or otherwiſe made uncapable. 3. Of Men that have ſome extraordinary neceſſity for a ſeaſon, to converſe with God and themſelves alone: As men that are near death, and have need to lay by all other labours to prepare themſelves. Tho' uſually even they that are near death ſhould labour the good of others to the laſt; and in ſo doing they profit and prepare themſelves.

The Labour of ſome others is more of the Body, than the mind: As moſt Tradeſmen and day-labourers.

See 1 Cor. 9. 6. 2 Cor. 6. 1. 1 Cor. 16. 10. 2 Tim. 2. 15.

And the labour of ſome is equally of the body and mind, as ſome painful Miniſters and Phyſicians, Scribes, and Artificers of more ingenious profeſſions, as Watchmakers, Printers, Builders, &c. Some of theſe are fitteſt for one man, and ſome for another.

Queſt. 3. §. 3. Queſt. 3. May not Religion excuſe men from all other labour, ſave Prayer and contemplation? Anſw. Religion is our obligation to obey God: God bindeth us to do all the good we can to others: Some men that have ability, opportunity and a Call may be excuſed by Religion from worldly labours, (as Miniſters;) but not from ſuch ſpiritual labours for others which they can perform: He that under pretence of Religion, withdraweth from converſe, and forbeareth to do good to others, and only liveth to him-himself,and his own soul, doth make Religion a pretence against Charity, and the Works of Charity, which are a great part of Religion: For pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted of the world. Jam. 1. 27. Even when sickness,imprisonment or persecution disableth to do any more for others, we must pray for them. But while we can do more, we must.

Will Religion excuſe from labour? See before Chap. 6. Tit. 4. of this. And in my Treat. of Divine Life. Part 3.

Quest. 4. Will not Riches excuse?

§. 4. Quest. 4. Will not Riches excuse one from labouring in a Calling? Answ. No: but rather bind them to it the more: For he that hath most Wages from God, should do him most work. Tho' they have no outward want to urge them, they have as great a necessity of obeying God, and doing good to others, as any other men have that are poor.

Quest. 5. Why Labour is necessary?

§. 5. Quest. 5. Why is labour thus necessary to all that are able? Answ. 1. God hath strictly commanded it to all: And his Command is Reason enough to us, 2 Thess. 3. 10, 11, 12. For even when we were with you, this we commanded you, that if any would not work, neither should he eat. For we hear that there are some which walk among you disorderly, working not at all, but are busie-bodies: Now them that are such, we command and exhort by our Lord Jesus Christ, that with quietness they work and eat their own bread. See vers. 6. 14. 1 Thess. 4. 11. We beseech you brethren——that ye study to be quiet, and to do your own business, and work with your hands Ezek. 46. 1. Deut. 16. 15. Deut. 2. 7. Exod. 34. 21. as we commanded you, that ye may walk honestly (or decently) towards them that are without, and that ye may have lack of nothing. Gen. 3. 19. In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground. And in the fourth Commandment; Six days shalt thou labour. So Ephes. 4. 28. Prov. 31. 32, 33.

§. 6. 2. Naturally Action is the end of all our Powers; and the Power were vain, but in respect to the act: To be able to understand, to read, to write, to go, &c. were little worth, if it were not that we may Do the things that we are enabled to.

§. 7. 3. It is for Action that God maintaineth us and our abilities: work is the moral as well as the natural End of power. It is the act by the power that is commanded us.

§. 8. 4. It is Action that God is most served and honoured by: not so much by our being able to do good, but by our doing it: who will keep a servant that is able to work,and will not? Will his meer ability answer your Expectation?

§. 9. 5. The publick welfare, or the good of many, is to be valued above our own. Every Man therefore is bound to do all the good he can to others, especially for the Church and Commonwealth: and this is not done by Idleness, but by Labour! As the Bees labour to replenish their hive, so Man being a sociable creature,must labour for the good of the society which he belongs to, in which his own is contained as a part.

§. 10. 6. Labour is necessary for the preservation of the Faculties of the mind: 1. The labour of the Mind is necessary hereto, because unexercised Abilities will decay; as Iron not used, will consume with rust. Idleness makes men fools and dullards, and spoileth that little Ability which they have. 2. And the exercise of the Body is ordinarily necessary, because of the minds dependance on the Body, and acting according to its temperature and disposition: It is exceedingly helped or hindered by the Body.

Socrates was right-ly ad-dicted to the exer-

§. 11. 7. Labour is needful to our health and life: The Body it self will quickly fall into mortal diseases without it: except in some very few persons of extraordinary soundness.) Next to abstinence, labour is the chief Preserver of health. It stirreth up the natural heat and spirits, which perform the chief Offices for the life of Man: It is the proper Bellows for this vital fire: It helpeth all the concoctions of nature: It attenuateth that which is too gross: it purifieth that which beginneth to corrupt: it openeth obstructions: it keepeth the mass of blood and other nutritious humours in their proper temperament,fit for motion, circulation and nutrition; it helpeth them all in the discharge of their natural offices: It helpeth the parts to attract each one its proper nutriment,and promoteth every fermentation and assimulation by which Nature maintaineth the transitory still consuming oil and mass: It excelleth art in the preparation, alteration and expulsion of all the excrementitious matter,which being retained would be the matter of manifold Diseases: and powerfully fighteth against all the enemies of health: In a word, it doth incomparably excel the help of the most skilful Physicians and excellent Medicines in the world, for the preventing of most diseases incident to man: (and consequently to the Benefit of the soul it self, which cheerfully useth a cheerful and well tempered body; and useth a languishing sickly body, as the Rider useth a tired Horse,or as we use a sick or lazie servant, or a blunted Knife, or a Clock or Watch that is out of order.) I speak all this, of Bodily labour,which is necessary to the body, and consequently to the mind: For want of which abundance grow melancholy, and abundance grow sluggish and good for nothing;and abundance cherish filthy lusts, and millions yearly turn to earth before their time: For want of bodily labour, a multitude of the idle Gentry,and rich people, and young people that are slothful,do heap up in the secret receptacles of the body a dunghil of uncocted and excrementitious filth, and vitiate all the mass of humours which should be the fuel and oil of life,and die by thousands of untimely deaths(of Fevers,Palsies,Convulsions,Apoplexies,Dropsies, Consumptions, Gout, &c.) more miserably than if Thieves had murdered them by the Highway, because it is their own doing, and by their sloth they kill themselves. For want of bodily exercise and labour interposed, abundunce of Students and sedentary persons fill themselves with diseases, and hasten their death,and causelesly blame their hard studies for that which was caused by their bodily sloth: The hardest studies will do little harm to most men, if they do but by convenient interposed bodily labour, keep all the humours in their just temperament: when by a sluggish walk now and then, instead of labour and sweat, they defraud themselves. If the World knew but the Benefit of TEMPERANCE and LABOUR to the maintaining of mans health and life,and the mischiefs of EXCESS of meat and drink, and IDLENESS, the love of health and life would do that with them, which Gods authority will not do.

§. 12. 8. Labour and diligence do keep the mind upon a lawful employment, and therefore keep out many dangerous temptations, and keep the thoughts from vanity and sin: And also keepeth out vain words,and preserveth the soul from many sins,which a life of idleness and sloth doth cherish: It helpeth even unlearned persons more effectually to restrain their thoughts and words from sin, than the greatest knowledge and diligent watchfulness can do in an idle kind of life.

§. 13. 9. Diligent labour mortifieth the flesh, and keepeth under its luxurious inclinations, and subdueth that pride, and lust,and brutish sensuality which is cherished by an idle life.

§. 14. 10. Lastly, It is Gods appointed means for the getting of our daily bread: And as it is a more real honour to get our bread our selves, than to receive it by the gift of our friends or Parents, so is it more cise of his Body, as necessary to the health of Body and Mind. Laert. Plut. and out of Plato saith, that Soul and Body should be equally exercised together, and driven on as two Horses in a Coach, and not either of them overgo the other. Prec. of Health.

more comfortable to a well-inform'd mind. We may beſt believe that we have our food and proviſions in mercy, and that they ſhall be bleſt to us, when we have them in Gods appointed way: who hath ſaid, If any man will not work, neither ſhould he eat. 2 Theſſ. 3.

Dir. 2. §. 15. Direct. 2. As labour is thus neceſſary, ſo underſtand how needful a ſtated Calling is, for the right performance of your Labours. A Calling is a ſtated ordinary courſe of labour. This is very needful for theſe Reaſons. 1. Out of a Calling a Mans labours are but occaſional, or unconſtant, and ſo more time is ſpent in idleneſs than in labour. 2. A man is beſt skilled in that which he is uſed to. 3. And he will be beſt provided for it, with inſtruments and neceſſaries. 4. Therefore he doth it better than he could do another work, and ſo wrongeth not others, but attaineth more the ends of his labour. 5. And he doth it more eaſily; when a man unuſed, and unskilled, and unfurniſhed, toileth himſelf much in doing little. 6. And he will do his work more orderly, when another is in continual confuſion, and his buſineſs knoweth not its time and place, but one part contradicts another. Therefore ſome certain Calling or Trade of life is beſt for every man.

Queſt. 1. §. 16. Queſt. 1. May not a Man have a Calling conſiſting of occaſional uncertain works? Anſw. He that can have no better, may do thus: ſo be it they are conſiſtent works which he is able for: As a Footman may go of various Errands, and a Day-labourer may do many ſorts of works: But great variety will be a great inconvenience to him.

Queſt. 2. §. 17. Queſt. 2. May a man have divers Trades or Callings at once? Anſw. Yes no doubt, if it be for the common good, or for his own, and no Injury to any other; nor ſo inconſiſtent, as that one ſhall make him unfaithful in the other: Then God forbids it not.

The Queſtion, Whether a man may change his Calling, I anſwered before, Chap. 3. Direct. 10.

Dir. 3. §. 13. Direct. 3. Think not that a Calling can be lawful, when the work of it is ſin; nor that you or your labour, or your Gain in an unlawful Calling, ſhall be bleſt. An unlawful act is bad enough: But an unlawful Calling is a life of ſin: To make ſin a mans Trade, and Work, and Living, is a moſt horrid deſperate courſe of life. As mercenary Souldiers, that for their pay will fight againſt authority, right or innocency, and murder men for half a Crown a day: and thoſe that live by cheating, ſtealing, oppreſſing, whoring, or by reſetting ſuch; or upon the ſin of ſuch; or of Drunkards, Gameſters, or other ſenſual Vices, which they knowingly and willingly maintain.

Dir. 4. §. 19. Direct. 4. Think not that becauſe a Work is lawful, that therefore it is lawful to make a Calling of it. It is lawful to jeaſt in time and meaſure, but not lawful to be a Jeaſter as a Trade of life. If in ſome caſes it ſhould prove lawful to act a Comedy or Tragedy, it will not follow, that therefore it is lawful to be by Trade a Stage-player: If a Game at Cards or Dice may be in ſome caſes lawful, it follows not, that it is lawful to be a Gameſter by Trade. The like I may ſay of many others.

Dir. 5. §. 20. Direct. 5. It is not enough that the work of your Calling be lawful, nor that it be neceſſary, but you muſt take ſpecial Care alſo that it be ſafe, and not very dangerous to your ſouls. The Calling of a Vintner and Ale ſeller is lawful and needful: and yet it is ſo very dangerous that (unleſs it be in an extraordinary place or caſe) a man that loveth his ſoul, ſhould be loth to meddle with it, if he can have a ſafer to get his bread by. They get ſo little by ſober people, and their gain dependeth ſo much upon mens ſin, that it is a conſtant temptation to them to be the maintainers of it: And frail men that can ſo hardly ſtand on firm ground, ſhould be loth for a little money to walk ſtill upon the Ice, and to venture his ſoul in a life of ſuch temptations: For it's twenty to one but they will prevail.

Dir. 6. §. 21. Direct. 6. The firſt and principal thing to be intended in the choice of a Trade or Calling for your ſelves or Children, is the Service of God, and the publick good: And therefore (cæteris paribus) that Calling which moſt conduceth to the publick good is to be preferred. The Callings moſt uſeful to the publick good, are the Magiſtrates, the Paſtors and Teachers of the Church, Schoolmaſters, Phyſicyans, Lawyers, &c. Husbandmen, (Plowmen, Graziers, and Shepherds): and next to them are Mariners, Clothiers, Bookſellers, Taylors, and ſuch other that are employed about things moſt neceſſary to mankind: And ſome Callings are employ'd about matters of ſo little uſe (as Tobacco ſellers, Lace-ſellers, Feather-Makers, Periwig-makers, and many more ſuch) that he that may chooſe better, ſhould be loth to take up with one of theſe, tho' poſſibly in it it ſelf it may be lawful. It is a great ſatisfaction to an honeſt mind, to ſpend his life in doing the greateſt good he can; and a priſon and conſtant calamity to be tyed to ſpend ones life in doing little good at all to others, though he ſhould grow rich by it himſelf.

Dir. 7. §. 22. Direct. 7. When two Callings equally conduce to the publick good, and one of them hath the advantage of riches, and the other is more advantagious to your ſouls, the later muſt be preferred: And next to the publick good, the ſouls advantage muſt guide your choice: As ſuppoſe that a Lawyer were as profitable to the publick good as a Divine, and that it is the way to far more wealth and honour; yet the Sacred Calling is much more deſirable for the benefit of your ſouls: Becauſe it is an exceeding great help, to be engaged by our Callings to have the Word and Doctrine of Chriſt ſtill before us, and in our minds and mouths; when others muſt be glad to be now and then exerciſed in it, when their Hearts are cooled by the frequent and long diverſions of their worldly buſineſs: So that our Calling and work is to an honeſt heart a continual recreation, and preſerving, and edifying help to Grace. So a Schoolmaſters Calling is uſually but poor and very painful, requiring much cloſe attendance, but yet it is of ſo great uſe to the common good, and alloweth the mind ſo much leiſure and advantage to improve it ſelf in honeſt ſtudies, that it is fitter to be choſen and delighted in by a well tempered mind, than richer and more honoured employments. It's ſweet to be all day doing ſo much good.

Dir. 8. §. 23. Direct. 8. If it be poſſible chooſe a Calling which ſo exerciſeth the body, as not to overwhelm you with cares and labour, and deprive you of all leiſure for the holy and noble Employments of the mind: and which ſo exerciſeth your mind, as to allow you ſome exerciſe for the Body alſo. 1. That Calling which ſo taketh up body and mind, as neither to allow you commixed thoughts of greater things, nor convenient intermiſſions for them, is a conſtant ſnare and priſon to the ſoul: which is the caſe of many who plunge themſelves into more and greater buſineſs than they can otherwiſe diſpatch: and yet are contented to be thus continually alienated in their minds from God and Heaven, to get more of the World. Many poor Labourers (as Clothiers, Taylors, and other ſuch) can work with their hands, and meditate or diſcourſe of heavenly things without any hindrance of their work: when many men of richer Callings have ſcarce room for a thought or word of God or Heaven all day. 2. On the contrary, if the Body have not alſo its labour as well as the mind, it will ruine your health; and body, and mind will both grow uſeleſs.

Dir. 9. §. 24. Direct. 9. It is lawful and meet to look at the commodity of your Calling in the third place, (that

(that is, after the publick good, and after your perſonal good of ſoul and bodily health.) Though it is ſaid, Prov. 23. 4. Labour not to be rich: The meaning is, that you make not Riches your chief end: Riches for our fleſhly ends muſt not ultimately be intended or ſought. But in ſubordination to higher things they may: That is, you may labour in that manner as tendeth moſt to your ſucceſs and lawful gain: You are bound to improve all your Maſters Talents: But then your end muſt be, that you may be the better provided to do God ſervice, and may do the more good with what you have. If God ſhew you a way in which you may lawfully get more than in another way, (without wrong to your ſoul, or to any other) if you refuſe this, and chooſe the leſs gainful way, you croſs one of the ends of your Calling, and you refuſe to be Gods Steward, and to accept his gifts, and uſe them for him when he requireth it: You may labour to be Rich for God, tho' not for the fleſh and ſin.

Dir. 10. §. 25. Direct. 10. It is not enough that you conſider what Calling and labour is moſt deſirable, but you muſt alſo conſider what you or your children are fitteſt for, both in mind and body. For that Calling may be one mans bleſſing, which would be anothers miſery and undoing. A weak body cannot undergo thoſe labours which require ſtrength: And a dull and heavy mind and wit, cannot do the works which require great judgment and ingenuity. It hath been the calamity of the Church, and undoing of many Miniſters themſelves, that well meaning Parents out of love to the ſacred work of God, have ſet their Children to be Miniſters that were unfit for it: And many ſelf-conceited perſons themſelves are ready to thruſt themſelves into that holy Office, when they have ſome inconſiderable ſmattering knowledge, and ſome poor meaſure of gifts, overvalued by themſelves, that know not what is required to ſo great a work. Be ſure that you firſt look to the natural ingenuity of your children (or your ſelves) and then to their Grace and Piety: And ſee that none be devoted to the Miniſtry that hath not naturally a quickneſs of underſtanding, and a freedom of expreſſion, unleſs you would have him live upon the ruine of ſouls, and wrong of the Church and work of God; and turn an enemy to the beſt of his flock, when he ſeeth that they value him but as he deſerves: And let none be ſo unwiſe as to become a Preacher of that Faith, and Love and Holineſs which he never had himſelf. And even to the Calling of a Phyſician none ſhould be deſigned that have not a ſpecial ingenuity, and ſagacity, and natural quickneſs of apprehenſion; unleſs he ſhould make a Trade of killing men: For it is a Calling that requireth a quick and ſtrong conjecturing ability, which no ſtudy will bring a man that hath not a natural acuteneſs and aptitude thereto. Thus alſo as to all other Callings, you muſt conſider, not only the Will of the Child or Parents, but their natural fitneſs of body and mind.

Omnes qui ſunt, quique erunt, aut fuerunt, virtutibus aut doctrinis clari, non poſſunt unum ingenium accendere, niſi aliquæ intus in animo ſcintillæ ſint, quæ præceptoris ſpiritu excitatæ & adjutæ, ad virtutem ſe ipſæ erigant. Petrarch. Dial. 41. li. 2.

Dir. 11. §. 26. Direct. 11. Chooſe no Calling (eſpecially if it be of publick conſequence) without the advice of ſome judicious faithful perſons of that Calling. For they are beſt able to judge in their own profeſſion. Never reſolve on the Sacred Miniſtry without the advice of able Miniſters: Reſolve not to be a Phyſician, but by the counſel of Phyſicians; and ſo of the reſt: For abundance of perſons ignorantly conceit themſelves ſufficient, that are utterly inſufficient, and ſo live all their days, as wrongs and burthens unto others, and in ſin and miſery to themſelves.

Dir. 12. §. 27. Direct. 12. If thou be called to the pooreſt laborious Calling do not carnally murmur at it, becauſe it is wearieſome to the fleſh, nor imagine that God accepteth the leſs of thy work and thee: But chearfully follow it, and make it the matter of thy pleaſure and joy, that thou art ſtill in thy heavenly Maſters ſervice, though it be about the loweſt things. And that he that knoweth what is beſt for thee, hath choſen this for thy good, and tryeth and valueth thy obedience to him the more, by how much the meaner work thou ſtoopeſt to at his Command. But ſee that thou do it all in obedience to God, and not meerly for thy own neceſſity: Thus every Servant muſt ſerve the Lord in ſerving their Maſters, and from God expect their chief reward. Col. 3. 22, 23, 24. Epheſ. 6. 6, 7.

Tit. 2. Directions againſt Idleneſs and Sloth.

§. 1. HEre I muſt ſhew you what Idleneſs and Sloth is, and what are the ſigns of it: And then give you Directions how to conquer it. Sloth ſignifieth chiefly the indiſpoſition of the mind and body; and Idleneſs ſignifieth the actual neglect or omiſſion of our duties. Sloth is an averſneſs to labour, through a carnal love of eaſe, or indulgence to the fleſh. This averſneſs to labour is ſinful, when it is a voluntary backwardneſs to that labour which is our duty: Sloth theweth it ſelf, 1. In keeping us from our duty, and cauſing us to delay it, or omit it: And 2. In making us to do it ſlowly and by the halves: And both theſe effects are called Idleneſs, which is the omiſſion or negligent performance of our duties through a fleſh pleaſing backwardneſs to labour. What Sloth and Idleneſs is.

§. 2. By this you may ſee, 1. That it is not ſloth or ſinful Idleneſs to omit a labour which we are unable to perform: As for the ſick, and aged, and weak to be averſe to labour through the power of an unreſiſtable diſeaſe or weakneſs: Or when Nature is already wearied by as much labour as it can bear. 2. Or when Reaſon alloweth and requireth us to forbear our uſual labour for our health, or for ſome other ſufficient cauſe. 3. Or when we are unwillingly reſtrained and hindered by others: As by impriſonment, or denyal of opportunity: As if the Magiſtrate forcibly hinder a Preacher, or Phyſician, or Lawyer from that which otherwiſe he ſhould do. 4. Or if a miſtake or ſinful error only keep a man from his labour, it is a ſin, but not this ſin of ſloth: So alſo if any ſenſual vice or pleaſure beſides this love of eaſe take him off. 5. If it be a backwardneſs only to ſuch labour as is no duty to us, it is but a Natural and not a vitious ſloth. But involuntary averſeneſs to the labour of our duty thro' indulgence of fleſhly eaſe, is the ſinful ſloth or Lazineſs which we ſpeak of. What it is not.

§. 3. Sloth and Idleneſs thus deſcribed is a ſin in all: But a far greater ſin in ſome than in others. And you may thus know what ſloth it is that is the moſt ſinful. 1. The more ſloth is ſubjected in the mind it ſelf, and the leſs it is ſubjected in the Body, the greater is the ſin. For the mind is the nobler part, and immediate ſeat of ſin. 2. The ſmaller the bodily diſtempers or temptations are which ſeduce the mind, the greater is the ſin: For it ſhews the mind to be the more corrupted and tainted with the diſeaſe of ſloth. He that is under an unreſiſtible indiſpoſition of body, ſinneth not at all (unleſs as he voluntarily contracted that diſeaſe:) But if the bodys indiſpoſition to labour be great, but yet not unreſiſtible, it is a ſin to yield to it: But ſo much the ſmaller ſin (cæteris paribus) as the bodily diſeaſe is greater. He that hath ſome ſcorbutical laſſitude, or flegmatick heavineſs and dulneſs, doth ſin if he ſtrive not againſt it as much as he can, and as in reaſon he ſhould: It is not every bodily indiſpoſition that will excuſe a man from all labour, as long as he is able to labour notwithſtanding that diſeaſe: But if the diſeaſe be great, ſo that he reſiſteth his laſſitude with a great deal of labour, the ſin is the leſs: But he that hath a body ſound and able, that hath no diſeaſe to indiſpoſe him, ſinneth moſt The aggravations of it.

It was one of Solons Laws: Is qui ſectatutum otium, omnibus accuſare volentibus obnoxius eſto. Ut Laert. in Sol. Num ſolum aquas hauriturus inquit Cleanthes? nonne & fodio & rigo & omnia facio philoſophiæ cauſa? when they asked him why he would draw water.

of

of all if he be ſlothful, as ſhewing the moſt corrupted mind. 3. He is moſt ſinfully ſlothful who is moſt voluntarily ſlothful. As he that endeavoureth leaſt againſt it; and he that moſt loveth it, and would not leave it: And he that is leaſt troubled at it, and leaſt repenteth and lamenteth it, and contriveth to accomodate his ſloth. 4. The ſloth is (cæteris paribus) the worſt, which moſt prevaileth to the omiſſion or negligent performance of our duty: But that ſloth which doth but indiſpoſe us, but is ſo far conquered by our reſiſtance, as not to keep us from our duty, or not much and often, is the ſmaller ſin. 5. That it is the moſt ſinful ſloth (cæteris paribus) which is againſt the greateſt duties: To be backward to the moſt holy duties (as praying, and hearing, or reading the Word of God, &c.) or to duties of publick conſequence, is a greater ſin than to be lazily backward to a common toilſome work. 6. That is the moſt ſinful ſloth and idleneſs which is committed againſt the greateſt motives to labour and diligence: Therefore (in that reſpect) a poor mans ſloth is more ſinful than a rich mans, becauſe he is under the preſſure of Neceſſity: And in another reſpect the rich mans ſloth is worſt, becauſe he buryeth the greateſt Talents, and is idle when he hath the greateſt wages. A man that hath many children ſinneth more than another by his idleneſs, becauſe he wrongeth them all whom he muſt provide for: A Magiſtrate or Paſtor of the Church, doth ſin more incomparably than common people, if they be ſlothful; becauſe they betray the ſouls of men, or ſin againſt the good of many: As it is a greater ſin to be lazy in quenching a fire in the City, than in a common needleſs buſineſs: So it is a greater ſin to be ſlothful in the working out our Salvation, and making our calling and election ſure, when God, and Chriſt, and Heaven, and Hell are the motives to rowze us up to duty, and when the time is ſo ſhort, in which all our work to eternity muſt be done, I ſay, it is a far greater ſin, than to be ſlothful when only corporal wants or benefits are the motives which we reſiſt. Yet indeed the will of God is reſiſted in all, who forbiddeth us to be ſlothful in buſineſs, Rom. 12. 11.

The ſigns of Sloth.

§. 4. Sloth is a thing that is eaſily diſcerned: The ſigns of it are, 1. When the very thought of labour is troubleſome and unpleaſing, and eaſe ſeems ſweet. 2. When duty is omitted hereby and left undone. 3. When the eaſie part of duty is culled out, and the harder part is caſt aſide. 4. When the judgement will not believe, that laborious duty is a duty at all. 5 When that which you do, is done with an ill will, and with a conſtant wearineſs of mind, and there is no alacrity or pleaſure in your work. 6. When you do no more in much time, than you might do in leſs, if you had a willing ready mind. 7. When the backward mind is ſhifting it off with excuſes, or finding ſomething elſe to do, or at leaſt delaying it. 8. When you chooſe a condition of greater eaſe and ſmaller labour, before a laborious condition of life which in other reſpects is better for you. As when a Servant had rather live in an ungodly family where there is more eaſe (and fulneſs) to be had, than in a place of greateſt advantage for the ſoul, where there is more labour (and want.) 9. When little impediments diſcourage or ſtop you: The ſlothful ſaith, there is a Lyon in the way, Prov. 22. 13. His way is an hedge of thorns, Prov. 15. 19. He will not plow by reaſon of cold, Prov 20. 4. 10. When you make a great matter of a little buſineſs: It cannot be done but with ſuch preparation, and ſo much ado, that ſhews a ſlothful mind in the doer. Even the putting his hand to his mouth, and pulling it out of his boſome is a buſineſs with the ſluggard: That is, he maketh a great matter of a little one, Prov. 26. 15. & 19. 24. 11. Laſtly, The fruits of ſlothfulneſs uſe to detect it, in ſoul, and body, and eſtate: For it corrupteth, impoveriſheth and ruineth all. The weeds of Field or Garden, the vices of his ſoul, the ſins of his life, the duties omitted, or ſleepily performed, the diſorders of his family or charge, and uſually, or oft, his poverty, do detect him, Prov. 24. 30. & 12. 24, 27.

Prov. 26. 13.

How little have ſome men (ſcil. Miniſters themſelves) to ſhew of all the good they might have done thro' all their lives! The work they have done calls them idle.

§. 5. By this much it is eaſie to diſcern the impudent folly of the Quakers and ſome ignorant Ruſticks that rail againſt Magiſtrates and Miniſters for living idly, becauſe they do not plow or threſh, or uſe ſome mechanick Trade or Labour: As if the labour of their higheſt Callings were no labour, but meer idleneſs: Thus proud men ſpeak evil of that which they underſtand not! Had they tryed it, they would have found that the work of a faithful Miniſter is further diſtant from idleneſs, than a Threſher is: Doth not Chriſt and the Holy Ghoſt oft call them labourers, fellow-labourers with Chriſt, and workmen, and their work a labour? Luk. 10. 27. 1 Cor. 3. 9. 1 Tim. 5. 17, 18. 2 Tim. 2. 15 Mat. 10. 10. 1 Cor. 3. 13, 14, 15. & 9. 1. Epheſ. 4. 12. Phil. 2. 30.

§. 6. Hence alſo you may ſee, 1. That though all that can muſt labour, yet there is great diverſity of labours; and all men are not to do the ſame work. Magiſtrates, and Paſtors, and Lawyers, and Phyſicians muſt labour diligently: But they are not all bound to plow, and threſh, and uſe the more ſervile labours of their inferiours. 2. That every man muſt labour in the works of his own Calling, and do his own buſineſs, as 1 Theſſ. 4. 11. 2 Theſſ. 3. 11. And take that for the beſt employment for him, which God doth call him to, and not preſume to ſtep out of his place, and take the work of other mens Callings out of their hands. 3. That a man that is paid for his labour by another, (as Lawyers, Phyſicians, Schoolemaſters, Servants) do rob them by their idleneſs, when they withhold them from any part of that which they are paid for.

§. 7. Direct. 1. The firſt help againſt ſloth, is to be well acquainted with the greatneſs of the ſin. For no wonder if it be committed by them that think it ſmall: Firſt therefore I ſhall tell you what it is. Dir. 1.

§. 8. 1. God himſelf reckoneth it with heinous ſins, Ezek. 16. 49. Pride, fulneſs of bread, and abundance of idleneſs (the very character of the debauched part of the Gentry) is ſaid to have been Sodoms ſin, that was conſumed with fire from Heaven. And the Theſſalonians were forbidden to keep company with ſuch as lived diſorderly and did not work.

§. 9. 2. Idleneſs is a temporary deſtruction (as to their uſe) of all the faculties of mind and body which ſhould be exerciſed. It is contrary to Nature: For Nature made our faculties for uſe: You bury your ſelves alive: If it be a ſin to hide Gods leſſer Talents, what is it to bury our ſelves and all our powers? If it be pity to ſee a dead man, becauſe he is unuſeful to the world; Is it not pity and ſhame to ſee one voluntarily dead, that maketh himſelf uſeleſs by his ſloth? Should not the Church yard be the dwelling of the ſlothful, that he may be neareſt them in place, that he is neareſt to in quality.

§. 10. 3. Idleneſs and ſloth are conſumers of all the mercies of God: You are the barren ground where he ſoweth his ſeed, and none comes up. You return him but a crop of thorns and bryars, and ſuch ground is nigh to curſing (the final curſe,) whoſe end is to be burnt: Doth God daily feed, and cloth, and keep you, and protect and ſupport you, and teach and warn you, and all for nothing? Is Idleneſs that for which he hired you? Will you excuſe accuſe your Maker of ſo great impudence, and your Redeemer of more, as if he created and redeemed you to do nothing, or that which is as bad or worſe than nothing? He calleth to you, Why ſtand you idle? Matth. 20 3, 6. And it is a terrible ſentence that ſuch ſhall receive, Matth. 25. 26. Thou wicked and ſlothful Servant; Caſt the unprofitable Servant into outer darkneſs, &c.

Heb. 6. 8

§. 11. 4. Idleneſs is a robbing God, who is the Lord of us and all our faculties, and all our ſervice is his due: You rob him of the honour and ſervice that you might have done him by your diligence.

Prov. 10. 26. Pr. 18. 9. §. 12. 5. And it is a robbing your ſelves of all the good to ſoul or body, which by your labour and induſtry you might have got: The ſlothful man lyeth wiſhing till he periſh: Prov. 21. 25.

§. 13. 6. And it is a robbing of the Common-wealth, and of all thoſe to whom your labours, or the fruit of them was due. You are burdens to the Common-wealth; like Drones in the Hive, Col. 3. 22.

§ 14. 7. Slothfulneſs is a great conſumer of Time, (as is ſhewed Chap. 5.) You loſe not only all the Time when duty is omitted, but much of the time in which you perform it; while you rid no work, and do it as if you did it not. He that goeth but a mile an hour, loſeth his Time, though he be ſtill going, even as much as he that goeth two mile one hour, and ſits ſtill the next. O what abundance of their lives do idle perſons loſe? When time is gone, they will better underſtand the greatneſs of their ſin and loſs, that now make light of it.

§. 15. 8. Idleneſs is not a ſingle ſin, but a continued courſe of ſinning: An idle perſon is ſinning all the while he is idle: And that's with ſome a great part of their lives: And therefore it is the greater, becauſe the continuance ſheweth that it is not effectually Repented of.

§. 16. 9. Idleneſs is a deſtroyer of grace, and gifts, and natural parts: They will ruſt for want of uſe: The ſlothful is brother to him that waſter: Prov. 18. 9. Weeds will grow up and choak the fruit.

§. 17. 10. Idleneſs and ſloth is a fruit of fleſh-pleaſing; and ſo cometh from the moſt pernicious vice: It is but to pleaſe the fleſh, that one is drunk, and another gluttonous, and another a fornicator, and another covetous: And your Idleneſs and ſloth is but pleaſing the ſame fleſh in another way, which is forbidden as well as thoſe. And if ye live after the fleſh ye ſhall dye: Rom. 8. 13.

§. 18. 11. It is a ſtrengthening the fleſh againſt the Spirit, by indulging it in its eaſe and ſloth: and maketh it not only unruly and unſerviceable, but matterly and earneſt for its own deſires.

§. 19. 12. Idleneſs is, the Mother and Nurſe of many heinous ſins: 1. It cheriſheth luſt, and draweth people to fornication; which hard labour would have much prevented. 2. It is the time for fooliſh ſports, and vanity, and wantonneſs and exceſs of ryot, and all the miſchiefs which uſe to follow it. 3. It is the time for idle talk and medling with other folks matters: And therefore Paul reprehendeth the Idle as buſie bodies, or medlers with matters that concern them not, and twatlers and tale-carriers: 2 Theſ. 3. Prov. 26. 18 11. 1 Tim. 5. 13. 1 Theſſ. 4. 11. They that do not what they ſhould, will be doing what they ſhould not. 4. It is the time for gluttony and drunkenneſs, Prov. 24. 30. and gaming and all other ſenſuality. 5. Yea, it is the time for ſeditions and rebellions; as in Armies it is the time for Mutinies.

§. 20. 13. Idleneſs is the ſeaſon of Temptations: It is Satans ſeed time. It is then that he hath opportunity to tempt men to malice, revenge and all other villany that is committed.

§. 21. 14. Idleneſs is a diſorderly walking, 2 Theſſ. 3. 10, 11. Out of the way that God hath appointed us to eat our bread in, and receive his bleſſing in. The large deſcription of a virtuous woman, Prov. 31. 10. to the end is worthy to be ſtudied by the ſlothful. She ſeeketh Wooll and Flax, and worketh willingly with her hands: She is like the Merchants Ships: She bringeth her food from afar: She riſeth alſo while it is yet night and giveth meat to her houſhold, and a portion to her maidens: She conſidereth a field and buyeth it: With the fruit of her hands planteth a vineyard. She girdeth her loyns with ſtrength, and ſtrengtheneth her arms: She perceiveth that her merchandize is good; her candle goeth not out by night: She layeth her hands to the ſpindle, and her hands hold the diſtaff: She ſtretcheth out her hand to the poor, yea, ſhe reacheth forth her hand to the needy: She is not afraid of the Snow for her houſhold: For all her houſhold are clothed with ſcarlet ——— She looketh well to the ways of her houſhold, and eateth not the bread of idleneſs: I deſire our Ladies and Gentlewomen, that take this pattern to be below them, remember that it was not a Plowman but a King: And that the greateſt that ever Iſrael had, that gave this counſel as received from his Mother: Who concludeth, v. 30, 31. Favour is deceitful, and beauty is vain: But a woman that feareth the Lord, ſhe ſhall be praiſed: Give her of the fruit of her hands, and let her own works praiſe her in the gates. But if our Gallants ſhould have no meat or clothing but what were the fruit of their hands, it would make a foul change in their garb and dyet! And if their own works muſt be the matter of their praiſe, inſtead of the Names of their Anceſtors, Arms, Lands and Titles, it would alſo make a foul change in their Honours.

See Pſal. 128. 2. Thou ſhalt eat the labour of thy hands. Prov. 14. 23. & 13 11.

Cleanthes coactum aliquando ſtipem in medium familiarium intulit, dicens, Cleanthes alium Cleanthem poſſet nutrire ſi vellet. And when he was queſtioned in judgement, how he lived, Adeo robuſtus, & tam boni habitûs, the Gardiner that he work't for, and the Woman that baked his Meal, were the witneſſes that acquit him: Hard labour and hard fare enabled him for hard ſtudy. Laert. in Cleanth.

§. 22. 15. Idleneſs uſually bringeth Poverty: And it is a juſt and merciful chaſtiſement of God to cure the ſin: But ſuch can have little comfort in their wants; nor expect that others ſhould pity them as they would do the diligent. Yea, many when by idleneſs they are brought to poverty, by poverty are brought to murmuring and ſtealing, to the ruine both of ſoul, and body, and family, and reputation.

§. 23. 16. Idleneſs is a murderer of the body: Gluttony and Idleneſs kill moſt of the world before their Time: No two ſins more conſtantly bring this Curſe along with them.

§. 24. 17. Idleneſs maketh thee the ſhame of the Creation: Seeſt thou not how all the world is in action? How the Sun runneth his courſe for thee; the Waters flow, the ground bringeth forth: Thy Cattle labour for thee: and all things that are moſt excellent, are moſt active; and all things that are moſt unactive, are moſt vile, and dead, and droſſie: The Scripture ſendeth the ſlothful, even to the Ant to learn to labour, Prov. 6. 6. And ſhall the Ant, the Bee, and every creature be a witneſs againſt thee to condemn thy ſloth?

§. 25. 18. Laſtly, Idleneſs diſableth you from doing good to others. You ſhould work with your own hands, that you may have to give to him that needeth, Epheſ. 4 28. Or if you give out of your ſuperfluity that which coſt you no labour, it is not ſo much to your honour or comfort, as if you were purpoſely thrifty and laborious to do good: He that pleaſeth his fleſh with eaſe and fulneſs, and giveth his leavings (how much ſoever) to the poor, will never have that comfort and evidences of Gods acceptance and grace in it, as he that pampereth not his fleſh by his abundance, but giveth that to the poor which he getteth with his diligence, and which he denyeth to his inordinate deſires.

§. 26.

§. 26. Direct. 2. Thoſe perſons muſt be extraordinary watchful againſt this ſin of Idleneſs whoſe conſtitutions, unhappy educations, condition of life or company do moſt ſtrongly tempt them to it. It is a ſin that ſome have but little temptation to in compariſon of others: And ſome have need of a great deal of care and reſolution to eſcape it. 1. Thoſe are moſt ſubject to this ſin who have a flegmatick conſtitution, or dulneſs of ſpirits; or other bodily indiſpoſition to cheriſh it: Such therefore ſhould ſtrive the more againſt it, and not give way to any ſloth which they are able to reſiſt. Though their bodies are like a dull or tired Horſe, they muſt uſe the rod and ſpur the more. Such heavy perſons are more given to ſleep than others are; and yet they may reſiſt it and riſe early if they will, though they have a greater ſluggiſhneſs than others to overcome. So though they are more undiſpoſed to labour than more active perſons are, yet if they will do their beſt they may go as far as their ſtrength of body will enable them. And this they ſhould the rather ſtrive to do (unleſs they have a diſeaſe that labour is hurtful to) becauſe that cuſtome doth much to the encreaſing or decreaſing their bodily undiſpoſedneſs, and labour is the moſt effectual means to cure them of that fleſhly heavineſs which unfitteth them for their labour.

Platonem tradunt cum vidiſſet quendam aleis ludentem increpaſſe: & cum ille; Quam me in parvis reprehendis? diceret, reſpondiſſe, At eſt conſuetudo non parva res. Laert. in Plat.

§. 27. 2. Thoſe that have been unhappily bred up in Idleneſs have great cauſe to Repent of their ſinful life that's paſt, and be doubly diligent to Overcome this ſin: If their Parents have ſo far been their enemies, they ſhould not continue enemies to themſelves: Tho' uſually the Children of the Rich and Proud have this for their peculiar original ſin, and are very unhappy in their Parentage and Education in compariſon of the Children of wiſe and humble and induſtrious Parents, yet their own underſtanding and willingneſs, by the help of grace, may overcome it. If your Parents had trained you up to live by ſtealing, could not you leave it if you will, when you come to know that God forbiddeth it? ſo though they have bred you up in idleneſs, and done their part to undo you both in ſoul and body, to make your ſouls a ſty for ſin, and your bodies a skin full of diſeaſes, yet if you will do your part you may be recovered, at leaſt as to your ſouls; and cuſtom may conquer the fruits of cuſtome. You cannot do worſe than to go on, and ſpend the reſt of your life in ſin. If you had been ſtill-born or murdered in your Infancy, it had been no ſin for you to have lain idle in the common Earth: But to teach a living ſoul to be idle, and to train up the living to a Conformity to the dead, (ſave only that they eat, and ſpend and ſin, and carry their Ornaments on their backs, when the dead have theirs for a ſtanding Monument,) this was great cruelty and treachery in your Parents: But you muſt not therefore be as cruel and treacherous againſt your ſelves.

Callimachus in Attila reporteth that when certain Players came before Attila, to ſhew the agility of their Bodies in their Exerciſes, he was offended to ſee ſuch able active bodies no better employed, and commanded them to be exerciſed in ſhooting and other military acts: Which when they could not do, he commanded that they ſhould have no meat but what they got by hunting at a great diſtance, and ſo exerciſed them till they became excellent Soldiers. p. 353.

§. 28. 3. Thoſe that abound in wealth; and have no need to labour for any bodily proviſions, ſhould be eſpecially watchful againſt this ſin: Neceſſity is a conſtant ſpur to the poor (except thoſe that live upon begging, who are the ſecond rank of Idle perſons in the Land.) But the Rich and Proud are under a continual temptation to live idly. For they need not riſe early to labour for their bread: They need not work hard for Food or Rayment: They have not the crys of their hungry Children to rowze them up: They have plenty for themſelves and family without labour, and therefore they think they may take their eaſe. But it is a ſad caſe with poor Souls, when the Commands of God do go for nothing with them: Or cannot do as much to make them diligent as poverty or want could do: And when Gods Service ſeemeth to them unworthy of their labour, in compariſon of their own: It may be God may bring you unto a neceſſity of labouring for your daily bread; if you ſo ill requite him for your plenty. But it's better that your idleneſs were cured by grace, than by neceſſity: For when you labour only for your own ſupplies, your own ſupplies are your reward: But when you labour in true obedience to God, it's God that will reward you, Col. 3. 23, 24. I do with very much love and honour think of the induſtrious lives of ſome Lords and Ladies that I know, who hate idleneſs and vanity, and ſpend their time in diligent labours ſuitable to their places: But it is matter of very great ſhame and ſorrow, to think and ſpeak of the lives of too great a number of our gallants! To how little purpoſe they live in the World! If they take a true account of their lives (as God will make them wiſh they had done, when he calls them to account), how many hours, think you, will be found, to have been ſpent in any honeſt labour, or diligent work that is worthy of a Chriſtian, or a member of the Common-wealth? in compariſon of all the reſt of their time, which is ſpent in bed, in dreſſing, in ornaments, in idle talk, in playing, in eating, in idle wandrings and viſits, and in doing nothing, or much worſe. How much of the day doth idleneſs conſume in compariſon of any profitable work? O that God would make ſuch know in time, how dreadful a thing it is thus to imitate Sodom that was puniſhed with the vengeance of eternal fire, (Ezek. 16. 49. Jud. 7.) inſtead of imitating Chriſt. As for idle beggars they read not Books, and there fore I ſhall not write for them: They are in this more happy than the idle Gentry, that the Law compelleth them to work, and leaveth them not to themſelves.

Gallica, vix quiſquam te credet Equitem. Eraſm. Colloq. p. 483. of this Chap. 5. and read Luke 16. and Jam. 5.

§. 29. 4. Thoſe perſons that live in idle company have ſpecial cauſe to fear this ſin: For ſuch will entangle you in idleneſs, and greatly hinder you from conſcionable diligence.

§. 30 5. Thoſe Servants that live in great mens houſes, and are kept more for pomp and ſtate than ſervice, having little to do, ſhould ſpecially take heed of the ſin of idleneſs. Many ſuch take it for their happineſs to live idly, and take that for the beſt Service where they have leaſt work: But have you nothing to do for your ſelves, for ſoul nor body? If you have leiſure from your Maſters ſervice, you ſhould thankfully improve it in Gods ſervice and your own.

§. 31. Direct. 3. Settle your ſelves in a lawful Calling, which will keep you under a neceſſity of ordinary and orderly employment. As we cannot ſo eaſily bring our minds to a cloſe attendance upon God, in the Week days when we have out common buſineſſes to divert us, as we can do on the Lords Day which is purpoſely ſet apart for it, and in which we have the uſe of his ſtated Ordinances to aſſiſt us; even ſo a man that is out of a ſtated courſe of labour cannot avoid idleneſs ſo well as he that hath his ordinary time and courſe of buſineſs to keep him ſtill at work. It is a dangerous life to live out of a Calling. Dir. 3.

§. 32. Direct. 4. Take heed of exceſs of meat and drink and ſleep: For theſe drown the ſenſes, and dull the ſpirits, and load you with a burden of fleſh Dir. 4.

or humours, and greatly undiſpoſe the body to all diligent uſeful labours. A full Belly and drowſie Brain are unfit for work. It will ſeem work enough to ſuch to carry the load of fleſh or flegm, which they have gathered. A pampered body is more diſpoſed to luſt and wantonneſs than to work.

Dir. 5. §. 33. Direct. 5. A man-like Reſolution is, an effectual courſe againſt ſloth. Reſolve and it will be done. Give not way to a ſlothful diſpoſition. Be up and doing: You can do it if you do but reſolve: To this end, be never without Gods quickening motives (before mentioned) on your minds: Think what a ſin and ſhame it is to waſte your Time; to live like the dead; to bury a rational ſoul in fleſh; to be a ſlave to ſo baſe a thing as ſloth; to neglect all Gods work while he ſupporteth and maintaineth you, and looketh on; to live in ſloth, with ſuch miſerable ſouls, ſo near to judgment and Eternity. Such thoughts well ſet home will make you ſtir! when a drowſie Soul makes an idle body.

Dir. 6. §. 34. Direct. 6. Take pleaſure in your work and then you will not be ſlothful in it. Your very Horſe will go heavily where he goeth unwillingly, and will go freely when he goeth thither where he would be. Either your work is Good or bad: If it be bad avoid it, if it be good why ſhould you not take pleaſure in it? It ſhould be pleaſant to do good?

Dir. 7. §. 35. Direct. 7. To this end be ſure to do all your work as that which God requireth of you, and that which he hath promiſed to reward; and believe his acceptance of your meaneſt labours which are done in obedience to his will! Is it not a delightful thing to ſerve ſo great and good a Maſter, and to do that which God accepteth and promiſeth to reward? This intereſt of God in your loweſt and hardeſt and vileſt labour, doth make it honourable, and ſhould make it ſweet.

Dir. 8. §. 36. Direct. 8. Suffer not your fancies to run after ſenſual vain delights; for theſe will make you weary of your callings. No wonder if fooliſh youths be idle, whoſe minds are ſet upon their ſports? nor is it wonder that ſenſual Gentlemen live idly, who glut themſelves with corrupting pleaſures. The idleneſs of ſuch ſenſualiſts is more unexcuſable than other mens, becauſe it is not the labour it ſelf that they are againſt, but only ſuch labour as is honeſt and profitable: For they can beſtow more labour in play, or dancing, or running or hunting or any vanity, than their work required: And it is the folly and ſickneſs of their minds that is the cauſe, and not any diſability in their bodies: The buſieſt in evil, are ſlothfuleſt to good.

Dir. 9. §. 37. Direct. 9. Mortifie the fleſh, and keep it in an obedient dependance on the Soul, and you will not be captivated by ſloth. For idleneſs is but one way of fleſh-pleaſing: He that is a ſenſual ſlave to his fleſh, will pleaſe it in the way that it moſt deſireth! One man in Fornication, and another in Ambition, and another in Eaſe: But he that hath overcome and mortified the fleſh, hath maſtered this with the reſt of its Concupiſcence.

Dir. 10. §. 38. Direct. 10. Remember ſtill that Time is ſhort, and Death makes haſte, and judgment will be juſt, and that all muſt be judged according to what they have done in the body; and that your Souls are precious, and Heaven is Glorious, and Hell is terrible, and work is various and great, and hinderances are many; and that it is not idleneſs, but labour that [illegible] in the intervals of time; and this will powerfully expel your ſloth.

Dir. 11. §. 39. Direct. 11. Call your ſelves daily or frequently to account how you ſpend your time, and what work you do, and how you do it. Suffer not one hour or [illegible] you cannot give your Conſciences a juſt account of it.

12. §. 40. Direct. 12. Laſtly, Watch againſt the ſlothfulneſs of thoſe that are under your charges as well as againſt your own: Some perſons of honour and greatneſs are diligent themſelves, and beſtow their time for the Service of God, their King and Countrey, and their Souls and Families: (And I would we had more ſuch:) But if in the mean time, their Wives and Children and many of their Servants ſpend moſt of the day and year in idleneſs, and they are guilty of it, for want of a thro' endeavour to reform it, their burden will be found greater at laſt than thy imagined. In a word, though the labour and diligence of a believing Saint, and not that of a Covetous Worldling, is it that tends to ſave the Soul, and diligence in doing evil is but a making haſte to Hell; yet ſloth in it ſelf is ſo great a nouriſher of vice, and deadly an enemy to all that's good; and idleneſs is ſuch a courſe and ſwarm of ſin, that all your underſtandings, reſolution and authority, ſhould be uſed to cure it in your ſelves and others.

Tit. 3. Directions againſt Sloth and Lazineſs in things ſpiritual: And for zeal and Diligence.

§. 1. ZEal in things ſpiritual is contrary to ſloth and coldneſs and remiſneſs; and Diligence is contrary to Idleneſs. Zeal is the fervour, or earneſtneſs of the ſoul: Its firſt ſubject is the will and affections, excited by the judgment; and thence it appeareth in the Practice. It is not a diſtinct Grace or Affection; but the vigor and livelineſs of every grace, and their fervent operations. Rev. 3. 15, 19.

§. 2. Direct. 1. Be ſure that you underſtand the nature and uſe of zeal and diligence, and miſtake not a carnal degenerate ſort of zeal, for that which is ſpiritual and genuine. 1. There is a zeal and activity meerly Natural, which is the effect of an active temperature of body. 2. There is an affected zeal, which is hypocritical, about things that are good: When men ſpeak and make an outward ſtir, as if they were truly zealous, when it is not ſo. 3. There is a ſelfiſh zeal: When a proud and ſelfiſh perſon is fervent in any matter that concerneth himſelf; for his own opinions, his own honour, his own eſtate, or friends or intereſt: Or any thing that is his own. 4. There is a partial factious zeal: When error or pride or worldlineſs hath engaged men in a party, and they think it is their duty or intereſt at leaſt, to ſide with the Sect or Faction which they have choſen, they will be zealous for all the Opinions and ways of their eſpouſed Party. 5. There is a ſuperſtitious Childiſh carnal zeal, for ſmall, indifferent, inconſiderable things: Like that of the Phariſees (and all ſuch hypocrites) for their waſhings and faſtings, and other ceremonious Obſervances. 6. There is an envious malicious zeal, againſt thoſe that have the precedency, and croſs your deſires, or cloud your honour in the World, or that contradict you in your conceits and ways: Such is that at large deſcribed, Jam. 3. 7. There is a peeviſh contentious wrangling zeal, that is aſſaulting every man who is not ſquared juſt to your conceits. 8. There is a malignant zeal, againſt the Cauſe and Servants of the Lord, which carryeth men to perſecute them. See that you take not any of theſe, or any ſuch like for holy zeal.

Dir. 1. The kinds of falſe Zeal.

Mat. 23. 15.

§. 3. If you ſhould ſo miſtake, theſe miſchiefs would enſue: 1. Sinful zeal doth make men doubly ſinful: As holy zeal is the fervency of our grace, ſo ſinful zeal is the intention and fervency of ſin. 2. It is an honouring of ſin and Satan: As if ſin were a work, and Satan a Maſter worthy to be fervently and diligently followed. 3. It is the moſt effectual violent way of ſinning, making men do much evil in a little time; and making them more miſchievous and hurtful to others, than other ſinners are. 4. It blindeth the judgment, and maketh men take truth for falſhood, and good for evil, and diſableth Reaſon to do its office. 5. It is the violent reſiſter resister of all Gods means; and teacheth men to rage against the truth that should convince them: It stops mens Ears, and turns away their hearts from the Counsel which would do them good. 6. It is the most furious and bloody persecutor of the Saints, and Church of Jesus Christ: It made Paul once exceeding mad against them, Act. 26. 10, 11. and shut them up in Prison, and punish them in the Synagogues, and compel them to blaspheme, and persecute them even unto strange Cities, and vote for their death: Thus concerning Zeal he persecuted the Church, Phil. 4. 6. 7. It is the turbulent disquieter of all Societies: A destroyer of Love: a breeder and fomenter of contention; and an enemy to order, peace and quietness. 8. It highly dishonoureth God, by presuming to put his Name to sin and errour, and to entitle him to all the Wickedness it doth. Such zealous Sinners commit their sin as in the Name of God, and fight against him ignorantly by his own (pretended or abused) authority. 9. It is an impenitent way of sinning: The zealous sinner justifieth his sin, and pleadeth reason, or Scripture for it, and thinketh that he doth well, yea that he is serving God when he is murdering his Servants, Joh. 16. 2. 10. It is a multiplying sin, and maketh men exceeding desirous to have all others of the sinners mind: The zealous sinner doth make as many sin with him as he can.

See Jam. 3. Rom. 10. 2. Act. 21. 20, 22.

Yea if it be but a zeal for small and useless things, or about small Controversies or Opinions in Religion. 1. It sheweth a mind that is lamentably strange to the tenour of the Gospel, and the mind of Christ, and the practice of the great substantial things. 2. It destroyeth Charity and peace, and breedeth censuring and abusing others. 3. It dishonoureth holy zeal by accident, making the prophane think that all zeal is no better than the foolish Passion of deceived Men. 4. And it disableth the persons that have it to do good: even when they are zealous for holy truth and duty, the people will think it is but of the same nature with their erroneous zeal, and so will disregard them.

The signs of holy zeal.

§. 4. The Signs of holy zeal are these. 1. It is guided by a right Judgment: It is a Zeal for Truth and Good, and not for Falshood and Evil, Rom. 10. 2. 2. It is for God and his Church or Cause, and not only for our selves. It consisteth with meekness and self-denial and patience as to our own Concernments, and causeth us to prefer the Interest of God before our own, Numb. 12. 3. Exod. 32. 19. Gal. 4. 12. Act. 13. 9, 12. 3. It is always more careful of the Substance than the Circumstances: It preferreth great things before small: It contendeth not for small Controversies to the loss or wrong of greater truths: It extendeth to every known truth and duty; but in due proportion; being hottest in the greatest things, and coolest in the least. It maketh men rather zealous of good works, than of their controverted Opinions.

Mat. 23. 22, 23. Tit. 2. 14.

4. Holy Zeal is always charitable: It is not cruel and bloody nor of a hurting disposition, Luk. 9. 55. but is tender and merciful, and maketh men burn with a desire to win and save mens souls, rather than to hurt their bodies, 1 Cor. 13. Zeal against the sin is conjunct with Love and pity to the sinner, 2 Cor. 12. 21. 5. Yet it excludeth that foolish pity which cherisheth the sin, Rev. 2. 2, 1 King. 15. 13. 6. True Zeal is tender of the Churches Unity and Peace: It is not a dividing tearing zeal: It is first pure and then peaceable, gentle and easie to be intreated, full of mercy, and good fruits, Jam. 3. 17. 7. True zeal is impartial, and is as hot against our own sins, and our Childrens and other relations sins, as against anothers, Mat. 7. 4. 8. True zeal respecteth all Gods Commandments, and is not hot for one and contemptuous of another: It aimeth at perfection; and stinteth not our desires to any lower degree: It maketh a man desirous to be like to God, even Holy as he is Holy: It consisteth principally in the fervour of our Love to God: when false Zeal consisteth principally in censorious Wranglings against other Mens Actions or opinions: It first worketh towards good, and then riseth up against the hindering evil. 9. It maketh a Man laborious in holy duty to God, and diligent in all his work; and lieth not only in the heat of the brain, or rigid opinions, or heat of speech. 10. It is not a sudden flash, but a constant resolution of the soul: Like the natural heat, and not like a Fever (Tho' the feeling part is not still of one degree) Therefore it concocteth and strengtheneth, when false zeal only vexeth and consumeth.

2 Pet 2. 7, 8. Ezek. 9. 4. 1 Cor. 5. Gen. 38. 24. 2 Sam. 12. 5.

2 Cor. 8. 3. Act. 18. 25. Exod. 36. 6. Gal. 4. 15, 18.

§ 5. Direct 2. When you are thus acquainted with the nature of true zeal, consider next of its excellency and singular benefits, that there may be a love to it, and an honour of it in your hearts. To that end consider of these following commendations of it. Dir. 2.

§. 6. 1. Zeal being nothing but the fervour and vigour of every grace, hath in it all the beauty and excellency of that Grace, and that in a high and excellent degree. If Love to God be excellent, then zealous fervent Love is most excellent. The excellency of zeal and diligence.

§. 7. 2. The nature of holy Objects are such, so great and excellent, so transcendent and of unspeakable consequence, that we cannot be sincere in our estimation and seeking of them, without zeal. If it were about riches or honours, a cold desire and a dull pursuit might serve the turn, and well beseem us: But about God and Christ and Grace and Heaven, such cold Desires and Endeavours are but a contempt. To love God without zeal, is not to love him, because it is not a loving him as God. To seek Heaven without zeal and diligence is not to seek it, but contemn it. To pray for salvation without any zeal, is but hypocritically to bable, instead of praying: For no desire of Christ and Holiness and Heaven is saving, but that which preferreth them before all the Treasures and Pleasures of the World: And that which doth so, hath sure some zeal in it: so that some Zeal is essential to every Grace, as life and heat is to a man.

Ps. 69. 10. Joh. 2. 17. Gal. 4. 18. 2 Cor. 7. 11. Tit. 2. 14. Rev. 3. 15. 16, 19.

§ 8. 3. The Integrity and honesty of the Heart to God consisteth much in zeal. As he is true to his friend that is zealous for him, and not he that is indifferent and cold: To do his service with zeal is to do it willingly and heartily and entirely: To do it without zeal is to do it heartlesly and by the halves, and to leave out the life and kernel of the duty: It is the Heart that God doth first require.

Jam. 5. 16. Rom. 12. 11.

§. 9. 4. Zeal is much of the strength of duty and maketh it likeliest to attain its end. The Prayer of the faithful that's effectual must be fervent, Jam. 5. 16. Zeal must make us importunate suiters that will take no denial if we will speed, Luk. 18. 1, 8, &c. The Kingdom of Heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force. We must strive to enter in at the strait gate, for many shall seek to enter and not be able. Not every one that striveth is crowned, nor every one that runneth wins the prize; but he that doth it effectually so as to attain. No wonder if we be commanded to Love God with all our heart and soul and might, which is a Zealous Love: For this is it that overcometh all other love, and will constrain to dutiful obedience. As experience telleth us, it is the zealous and diligent Preacher that doth good, when the cold and negligent do but little: so is it in all other duties: The diligent hand maketh rich, and God blesseth those that serve him heartily with all their might.

Mat. 11. 12. Rom. 15. 30. Luk. 13. 24. 2 Tim. 2. 5. 1 Cor. 9. 24, 25, 26. Heb. 12. 1. Deut. 6. 5. Mat. 22. 37. 2 Cor. 5. 14. Prov. 10 4.

§. 10. 5. Zeal and diligence take the opportunity, which sloth and negligence let slip. They are up with the Sun; and work while it is day: They seek the Lord while he may be found, and call upon him while he is near: They know the Day of their Visitation

Joh. 9. 4. Isa. 55. 6. Luk. 19. 42.

Heb. 3. 7, 15. Mat. 25. fitation and Salvation: They delay not, but take the accepted time. When the slothful are still delaying and trifling, and hear not Gods voice while it is called to day, but harden their hearts, and sleep with their lamps unfurnished, and knock not till the door be shut. They stand and look upon their work while they should do it: they are never in readiness, when Christ and Mercy are to be entertained: They are still putting off their duty till some other time: till time be done, and their work undone, and they are undone for ever.

§. 11. 6. Zeal and diligence are the best improvers of time and mercy: As they delay not but take the present time, so they loyter not, but do their work to purpose. As a speedy Traveller goeth farther in a day, than a slothful one in many: so a zealous diligent Christian will do more for God and his soul in a little time, than a negligent dullard in all his life. It is a wonder to think what Augustine and Chrysostom did among the Ancients! what Calvin and Perkins: and Whittaker, and Reignolds, and Chamier, and many other Reformed Divines have done in a very little time! And what Suarez and Vasquez and Jansenius and Tostatus and Cajetan and Aquinas and many other Papists have performed by Diligence! when Millions of men that have longer time, go out of the World as unknown as they came into it; having never attained to so much knowledge as might preserve them from the reproach of bruitish ignorance, nor so much as might save their Souls from Hell: And when many that had diligence enough to get some laudable abilities, had never diligence enough to use them to any great benefit of others or themselves. Zeal and diligence are that fruitful well-manured soil, where God soweth his seed with best succes; and which returns him for his mercies an hundred fold; and at his coming gives him his own with usury, Mat. 25. 27, 28. But sloth and negligence are the grave of mercies, where they are buried till they rise up in judgement against the despisers and consumers of them. Aristotle and Plato, Galen and Hippocrates, improvers of nature, shall condemn these slothful neglecters and abusers of nature and grace: yea their Oxen and Horses shall be witnesses against many that served not God with any such diligence, as these beasts served them; yea many gallants of great estates never did so much service for the common good in all their lives as their very beasts have done. Their parts, their life and all is lost by them.

Mat. 13. 8, 23. Prov. 26. 18.

§. 12. 7. Zeal and diligence are the victorious enemies of sin and Satan. They beat not with sin: They are to it as a consuming fire is to the thorns and Briars. Zeal burneth up lust, and Covetousness and Pride and sensuality: It maketh such work among our sins, as diligent weeders do in your Gardens: It pulleth up the Tares, and burneth them: It stands not dallying with sin; nor tasting or looking on the bait, or disputing with, and hearkening to the Tempter; but casteth away the motion with abhorrence, and abstaineth from the very Appearance of evil, and hateth the garment spotted by the flesh, and presently quencheth the sparks of Concupiscence: It chargeth home, and so resisteth the Devil that he flyeth. When sloth and negligence cherish the sin, and encourage the tempter, and invite him by a cold resistance. The Vineyard of the Sluggard is overgrown with Nettles: his heart swarmeth with noisom thoughts and lusts, and he resisteth them not, but easily beareth them. If he feel sinful thoughts possessing his mind, he riseth not up with zeal against them: He hath not the heart to cast them out; nor make any effectual resistance: He famisheth his soul with fruitless wishes, because his hands refuse to labour. Negligence is the Nurse of sin.

1 Sam. 2. 23, 29. Rev. 3. 19. 1 Thes. 5. 22. Jude 23. Jam. 4. 7. 1 Pet. 5. 9. Eccl. 10. 18. Prov. 24. 30. Prov. 21. 15. Prov. 13. 4.

§. 13. 8. Zeal and Diligence, bear down all opposition against duty with power and success. Those impediments which stop a sluggard, are as nothing before them. As the Cart wheels which go slowly are easily stopt by a little stone or any thing in their way; when those that are in a swifter motion easily get over all. The Lyon that is in the sluggards way, is not so much as a barking Whelp in the way of a diligent zealous Christian. The cold doth not hinder him from plowing. A very scorn or mock, or threatning of a mortal man, will dismay and stop a heartless hypocrite; which do but serve as oyl to the fire, to inflame the courage of the zealous so much more. The difficulties which seem insuperable to the slothful, are small matters to the zealous: He goeth through that which the slothful calls impossible: And when the slothful sits still and saith, I cannot do this or that, the zealous diligent Christian doth it.

Prov. 22. 13. & 26. 13. Prov. 20. 4

§. 14. 9. Zeal and diligence take off the toyl and irksomness of duty, and make it easie: As a quick-spirited diligent servant maketh but a pleasure of his work, which a lazy servant doth with pain and weariness: And as a mettlesome Horse makes a pleasure of a journey, which a heavy jade goeth through with pain: so Reading and Hearing, and Prayer are easie to a zealous soul, which to another is an unwelcome task and toil.

§. 15. 10. Zeal is faithful, and constant, and valiant, and therefore greatly pleaseth God: It sticks to him thro' persecution: The fire consumeth it not: many Waters quench it not. But others are false hearted; and those that have but a cold Religion, will easily be drawn or driven from their Religion: They are so indifferent, that a little more of the World put into the ballance, will weigh down Christ in their esteem: The Hopes or Fears of temporal things, prevail with them against the hopes and fears of things eternal. No wonder therefore if God disown such treacherous Servants, and turn them away as unworthy of his Family.

§. 16. Direct. 3. Let the great Motives of holy Zeal and Diligence be set home and printed on your hearts: And often read them over in some quickning Books, that you may remember them and be affected with them. I have given you so many of these Moving exciting Considerations, in the third Part of my Saints Rest, and my [Saint or Bruit] and [Now or Never] and in my Sermon against Making Light of Christ, that I shall be but very brief in them at present.

Dir. 3. Read before Chap. 5. the cont. Dir. for Redeeming time.

§. 17. 1. When you grow cold and slothful remember how Great a Master you serve? should any thing be done negligently for God? And remember how Good a Master you serve. For whom you are certain that you can never do too much; nor so much as he deserveth of you; nor will he ever suffer you to be losers by him.

Motives of Zeal.

§. 18. 2. Remember that he is always present. In your converse with others, in your Prayers, your Reading and all your Duties: and will you loiter in his sight? when a very eye-servant will work while his master standeth by.

§. 19. 3. One serious thought of the end and consequence of all thy work, one would think, should put life into the dullest soul! say to thy sleepy frozen heart, Is it not Heaven that I am seeking? Is it not Hell that I am avoiding? And can I be cold and slothful about Heaven and Hell? Must it not go with me for ever according as I now behave my self? And is this the best that I can do for my salvation? Is it not God that I have to please and honour; and shall I do it slothfully?

§. 20. 4. One thought of the exceeding Greatness of our work, one would think should make us be zealous and diligent! To think what abundance of knowledge we have to get? and how much of every grace we want? and how much means we have to use?

uſe? and how much oppoſition and temptations to overcome? The humble ſenſe of the weakneſs of our ſouls, and the greatneſs of our ſins ſhould make us ſay, that whatever the Rich in grace may do, its labour that becomes the poor.

§. 21. 5. To remember how ſhort our time of working is, and alſo how uncertain; How faſt it flyeth away, how ſoon it will be at an end: and that all the time that ever we ſhall have to prepare for Eternity is now; and that ſhortly there will be no Praying, no Hearing, no Working any more on Earth. To look into the Grave, to go to the Houſe of Mourning; to conſider that this Heart hath but a little more time to think, and this tongue but a little more time to ſpeak, and all will end in the endleſs recompence; methinks this ſhould quicken the coldeſt heart.

1 Cor. 7. 29, 30. 1 Pet. 3. 11. Rev. 12. 12.

§. 22. 6. To remember how many millions are undone already by their ſloth and negligence: how many are in Hell lamenting their ſlothfulneſs on earth, while I am hearing, or reading, or praying to prevent it, one would think ſhould waken me from my ſloth: what if I ſaw them, and heard their cries! would it not make me ſerious? What if one of them had time and leave and hope again as I have? would he be cold and careleſs?

§. 23. 7. To think how many millions are now in Heaven, that all came thither by holy zeal and diligence, and are now enjoying the fruit of all their labour and ſuffering! To think of the bleſſed end of all their pains and patience, and how far they are now from repenting of it! methinks ſhould ſtir us up to zeal and diligence.

§. 24. 8. To foreſee what thoughts all the world will have of holy diligence at laſt! how the beſt will wiſh they had been better, and had done much more for God and their ſalvation! and how the worſt will wiſh when it is too late that they had been as zealous and diligent as the beſt! How earneſtly they will then knock and cry, Lord open to us, when it is all in vain! and ſay to the watchful diligent ſouls, Give us of your Oyl, for our Lamps are gone out, Matth. 25. To think how glad the moſt ungodly would then be if they might but have died the death of the righteous, and their latter end might be as his! And what heart-tearing grief will ſeize upon them for ever, to think how madly they loſt their ſouls, and ſluggiſhly went to Hell to ſpare their pains of that ſweet and holy work that ſhould have prevented it; Will not ſuch forethoughts awaken the moſt ſluggiſh ſtupid ſouls, that will but follow them till they can do their work?

Numb. 23. 10.

§. 25. 9. Remember that thou muſt be zealous and diligent in this or nothing: For there is nothing elſe that is worth thy ſeriouſneſs in compariſon of this: To be earneſt and laborious for periſhing vanities, is the diſgrace of thy mind, and will prove thy diſappointment, and leave thee at laſt in ſhame and ſorrow: when holy diligence will recompence all thy pains.

§. 26. 10. Remember alſo that thou haſt been ſlothful and negligent too long! And how doſt thou repent of thy former ſloth, if thou wilt be as ſlothful ſtill? Art thou grieved to think how many duties ſlothfulneſs hath put by, and how many it hath murdered and fruſtrated and made nothing of, and how much Grace and Mercy and Comfort it hath already deprived thee of? and how much better thy caſe were, if thou hadſt lived in as much holy diligence as the beſt thou knoweſt! And yet wilt thou be ſlothful ſtill?

§. 27. 11. Remember that thou haſt thy life and health and wit and parts, for nothing elſe but by thy preſent duty to prepare for everlaſting joys: that all Gods Mercies bind thee to be diligent; and every ordinance, and all his helps and means of grace, are given to further thee in the work! and Sun and Moon and Air and Earth, and all attend thee with their help: And yet wilt thou be cold and ſlothful, and fruſtrate all theſe means and mercies?

§. 28. 12. Remember how diligent thy Enemy is: Satan goeth about even Night and Day like a roaring Lyon ſeeking to devour! And wilt thou be leſs diligent to reſiſt him?

1 Pet. 5. 8

§. 29. 13. Think what an Example of diligence Chriſt himſelf hath left thee? And how laboriouſly bleſſed Paul and all the holy Servants of Chriſt did follow their Maſters work? did they pray and watch and work as ſlothfully as thou doſt?

§. 30. 14. Remember how hot and earneſt thou waſt formerly in thy ſin? and wilt thou now be cold and negligent in thy duty, when God hath ſet thee in a better way?

§. 31. 15. Obſerve how eager and diligent worldlings are for the world, and fleſh-pleaſers for their ſports and pleaſures; and proud perſons for their greatneſs and honour, and malignant perſons to oppoſe the Goſpel of Chriſt, and their own and other mens ſalvations: Look on them, and think what a ſhame it is to thee, to be more cold and remiſs for God.

§. 32. 16. Obſerve how an awakening pang of Conſcience, or the ſight of death when it ſeems to be at hand, can waken the very wicked to ſome kind of ſerious diligence at the preſent; ſo that by their confeſſions, and cries and promiſes and amendments while the fit was on them, they ſeemed more zealous than many that were ſincere. And ſhall not ſaving grace do more with you, than a fit of fear can do with the ungodly?

§. 33. 17. Remember of how ſad importance it is, and what it ſignifieth to be cold and ſlothful! If it be predominant ſo as to keep thee from a holy life it is damnable. The ſpirit of ſlumber is a moſt dreadful judgement. But if it do not ſo prevail, yet though thou be a child of God, it ſignifieth a great debility of Soul, and foretelleth ſome ſharp affliction to befal thee, if God mean to do thee good by a recovery. The decay of natural heat is a ſign of old age, and is accompanied with the decay of all the powers. And Sickneſſes and Pains do follow ſuch decays of Life. And as you will make your Horſe feel the rod or ſpur when he grows dull and heavy, expect when you grow cold and dull to feel the ſpur of ſome affliction, to make you ſtir and mend your pace.

§. 34. 18. Remember that thy ſloth is a ſinning againſt thy knowledge, and againſt thy experience, and againſt thy own Covenants, promiſes and profeſſion; and therefore an aggravated ſin. Theſe and ſuch like ſerious thoughts, will do much to ſtir up a ſlothful ſoul, to Zeal and Diligence.

§. 35. Direct. 4. Drown not your hearts in worldly Buſineſs or Delights: for theſe breed a loathing, and averſeneſs and wearineſs of holy things. They are ſo contrary one to the other, that the mind will not be eagerly ſet on both at once; but as it reliſheth the one, it more and more diſreliſheth the other. There is no heart left for God, when other things have carried it away.

Dir. 4. Luk. 8. 14.

§ 36. Direct. 5. Do all you can to raiſe your hearts to the Love of God, and a Delight in holy things, and then you will not be ſlothful, nor weary, nor negligent. Love and Delight are the moſt excellent remedy againſt a ſlow unwilling kind of duty. Know but how good it is to walk with God, and do his work, and thou wilt do it chearfully.

Dir. 5.

§. 37. Direct. 6. A ſecret root of unbelief is the mortal enemy of Zeal and diligence: Labour for a well-grounded belief of the word of God and the world to come, and ſtir up that belief into exerciſe, when you would have your ſlothful hearts ſtirred up.

Dir. 6.

When

When there is a secret questioning in the heart, What if there should be no life to come? What if the grounds of Religion are unsound? This blasteth the vigour of all endeavours, and inclineth men to serve God only with hypocritical halving and reserves; and maketh men resolve to be no further Religious, than stands with present fleshly happiness.

Dir. 7. Rom. 14. 21, 22. 1 Cor. 5. 6. Eph. 4. 29, 30.

§. 38. Direct. 7. Take heed of debauching Conscience by venturing upon doubtful things, much more, by known and wilful sin: For when once Conscience is taught to comply with sin, and is mastered in one thing, it will do its duty well in nothing, and zeal will quickly be extinct: Diligence will die when Conscience is corrupted or fallen asleep.

Dir. 8.

§. 39. Direct. 8. Live in a constant expectation of death: Do not foolishly flatter your self with groundless Conceits, that you shall live long. There is a great power in Death to rouze up a drowsy Soul, when it is taken to be near. And a great force in the conceit of living long, to make even good men grow more negligent and secure.

Dir. 9. Prov. 22. 24, 25. & 27. 17. Heb. 3. 13. & 10. 24, 25. Rom. 15. 14.

§. 40. Direct. 9. Live among warm and serious Christians; especially as to your intimate familiarity. There is a very great power in the Zeal of one to kindle zeal in others; as there is in fire to kindle fire: Serious, hearty, diligent Christians, are excellent helps to make us serious and diligent. He that travelleth with speedy travellers, will be willing to keep pace with them; and tired sluggards are drawn on by others: when he that travelleth with the slothful will go slowly as they do.

Dir. 10.

§. 41. Direct. 10. Lastly, Be oft in the use of quickning Means: Live, if you can attain it, under a quickning zealous Minister: There is Life in the word of God, which when it's opened and applied livelily will put life into the hearers: Read the holy Scriptures, and such lively writings as help you to understand and practice them. As going to the fire is our way when we are cold, to cure our benummedness, so reading over some part of a warm and quickning book, will do much to warm and quicken a benummed soul: And it is not the smallest help to roze us up to prayer or Meditation, and put life into us before we address our selves more nearly unto God. I have found it my self a great help in my studies, and to my preaching; when studying my own heart would not serve the turn, to awake me to serious fervency, but all hath been cold and dull that I have done, because all was cold and dull within, I have taken up a book that was much more warm and serious than I, and the reading of it hath recovered my heat, and my warmed heart hath been fitter for my work. Christians, take heed of a cold, and dull, and heartless kind of Religion: and think no pains too much to cure it: Death is cold, and life is warm; and Labour it self doth best excite it.

PART. II.

Directions about Sports and Recreations, and against Excess and Sin therein.

Dir. 1

§. 1. Direct. 1. IF you would escape the sin and danger, which men commonly run into by unlawful sporting, under pretence of lawful recreations; you must understand what lawful recreation is, and what is its proper end and use. No wonder else if you sin, when you know not what you do?

What lawful recreation is.

§. 2. No doubt but some sport and recreation is lawful, yea needful, and therefore a duty to some men. Lawful Sport or Recreation is the use of some Natural thing or Action, not forbidden us, for the exhilerating of the natural Spirits by the Fantasie, and due exercise of the natural parts, thereby to fit the body and mind for ordinary duty to God. It is some delightful exercise.

§. 3. 1. We do not call unpleasing Labour by the name of sport or recreation; though it may be better and more necessary. 2. We call not every Delight by the name of sport or recreation: For eating and drinking may be delightful, and holy things and duties may be delightful; and yet not properly sports or recreations. But it is the Fantasy that is chiefly delighted by sports.

§. 4. Qual. 1. All these things following are necessary to the Lawfulness of a sport or recreation, and the want of any one of them will make and prove it to be unlawful. 1. The end which you really intend in using it, must be to fit you for your service to God; that is, either for your Callings, or for his worship, or some work of obedience in which you may please and Glorify him. 1 Cor. 10. 31. Whether ye eat or drink, or whatever you do, do all to the Glory of God. It is just to your Duty, as the Mowers whetting to his Sithe, to make it for to do his work.

§. 5. Qual. 2. Therefore the person that useth it, must be one that is heartily devoted to God, and his Service, and really liveth to do his work, and please and glorifie him in the world: which none but the Godly truly do! And therefore no carnal ungodly person, that hath no such Holy end, can use any recreation lawfully: because he useth it not to a due end: For the end is essential to the moral good of any action: and an evil end must needs make it evil. Tit. 1. 15. Unto the Pure all things are Pure (that is, all things not forbidden); but unto them that are defiled and unbelieving is nothing pure, but even their mind and Conscience is defiled.

Quest.

§. 6. Quest. But must all wicked Men therefore forbear recreation? Answ. 1. Wicked men are such as will not obey Gods law if they know it; and therefore they enquire not what they should do, with any purpose sincerely to obey. But if they would obey; that which God commandeth them is immediately to forsake their wickedness, and to become the servants of God, and then there will be no room for the question. 2. But if they will continue in a sinful ungodly state, it is in vain to contrive how they may sport themselves without sin. But yet we may tell them that if the sport be materially lawful, it is not the matter, that they are bound to forsake, but it is the sinful end and manner? And till this be reformed they cannot but sin.

§. 7. Qual. 3. A lawful recreation must be a means fitly chosen and used to this end: If it have no aptitude to fit us for Gods service in our ordinary Callings and duty, it can be to us no lawful recreation. Tho' it be lawful to another that it is a real help to, it is unlawful to us.

§. 8. Qual. 4. 4. Therefore all Recreations are unlawful, which are themselves preferred before our Callings, or which are used by a Man that liveth idly, or in no Calling, and hath no ordinary work to make him need them. For these are no fit means, which exclude our end, instead of furthering it.

§. 9. Qual. 5. 5. Therefore all those are unlawful sports, which are used only to delight a carnal fantasie, and have no higher end, than to please the fickly mind that loveth them.

§. 10. Qual. 6. 6. And therefore all those are unlawful sports, which really unfit us for the duties of our Callings and the service of God: which, laying the benefit and hurt together, do hinder us as much or more than they help us! which is the case of all voluptuous wantons.

§. 11. Qual. 7. 7. All sports are unlawful which take up any part of the Time, which we should spend in greater works: such are all those that are unseasonable: (as on the Lords-Day without necessity, or when we should be at prayer, or any other duty): And all those that take up more time than the

the end of a recreation doth neceſſarily require (which is too common.)

§. 12. Qual. 8. 8. If a Recreation be Prophane, as making ſport of holy things, it is a mocking of God, and a villany unbeſeeming any of his creatures, and laying them open to his heavieſt vengeance. The children that made ſport with calling the Prophet Bald-head were ſlain by Bears. 2 King 2. 23.

§. 13. Qual. 9. 9. They are unlawful ſports which are uſed to the wrong of others: As Players that defame and reproach other men: And Hunters and Hawkers that tread down poor mens corn and hedges.

§. 14. Qual. 10. 10. It is ſinful to make ſport of other mens ſinning, or to act it our ſelves ſo as to become partakers of it: Which is too common with Comedians, and other prophane wits.

§. 15. Qual. 11. 11. Unclean obſcene recreations are unlawful! When filthineſs or wantonneſs is repreſented without a due expreſſion of its odiouſneſs; or with obſcene words or actions. Eph. 5. 3. But fornication and all uncleanneſs, or covetouſneſs, let it not be once named among you as becometh Saints, neither filthineſs, nor fooliſh talking, nor jeaſting, &c.

§. 16. Qual. 12. 12. Thoſe ſports are unlawful, which occaſion the multiplying of idle words about them; and engage the Players in fooliſh, needleſs, unprofitable prating.

§. 17. Qual. 13. 13. And thoſe ſports are ſinful, which plainly tend to provoke our ſelves or others to ſin: As to luſt, to ſwearing, and curſing, and railing, and fighting or the like.

§. 18. Qual. 14. 14. Thoſe alſo are ſinful, which are the exerciſe of Covetouſneſs, to win other mens mony of them: Or that tend to ſtir up covetouſneſs in thoſe you play with.

§. 19. Qual. 15. 15. Cruel recreations alſo are unlawful: As taking pleaſure in the beholding of Duellers, Fighters, or any that abuſe each other; or any other Creatures that needleſly torment each other.

§. 20. Qual. 16. 16. Too coſtly recreation alſo is unlawful: When you are but Gods ſtewards and muſt be accountable to him for all you have, it's ſinful to expend it needleſly on ſports.

§. 21. Qual. 17. 17. Unneceſſary recreations forbidden by our lawful Governors are unlawful: If they were before lawful to thee, yet now they are not; becauſe your King, your Paſtor, your Parents, your Maſters have power to rule and reſtrain you in ſuch things; and you muſt obey them.

§. 22. Qual. 18. 18. Laſtly, if you have the choice of divers recreations before you, you muſt chooſe the fitteſt: And if you chooſe one that is leſs fit and profitable, when a fitter might be choſen, it is your ſin: Tho' that which you chooſe were lawful, if you had no other.

§. 23. By all this it is eaſie to judge of our common Stage-Plays, gaming, Cards, Dice, and divers other ſuch kind of ſports. If they have but any one of theſe evil qualifications they are ſinful: And when are they uſed without very many of them? 1. They are too commonly uſed by men that never intended to fit themſelves for their work and duty by them: Yea by men that live not at all to the Pleaſing and Glorifying of God, and know not what it is to be obediently addicted to his ſervice: Yea by men that live not in any conſtant honeſt labour, but make a very trade of their recreations, and uſe them as the chief buſineſs of the day.

Qu. What to think of common Stage-plays, Gaming, Cards, Dice, &c.

§. 24. 2. They are ſports unfit for the ends of a lawful recreation, as will eaſily appear to the impartial. For it is either your Bodys or your Minds that need moſt the recreations: Either you are ſedentary perſons, or have a Calling of Bodily Labour: If you are ſedentary perſons (as Students, Scribes, and divers others) then it is your Bodys that have moſt need of exerciſe and recreation, and Labour is fitter for you than ſport; or at leaſt a ſtirring labouring ſport: And in this caſe to ſit at Cards, or Dice, or a Stage-play, is, inſtead of exerciſing your bodies, to increaſe the need of exerciſing them: It ſtirreth not your parts; it warmeth not your blood, it helpeth not concoction, attraction, aſſimilation, &c. It doth you much more harm than good, as to your very health. But if you are hard Labourers, and need Reſt for your Bodys and recreation for your minds; or are lame or ſickly that you cannot uſe bodily exerciſe, then ſurely a hundred profitable exerciſes are at hand which are more ſuitable to your caſe. You have books of neceſſity to read (as the word of God:) And books of profit to your ſouls, and Books that tend to increaſe your knowledge in common things; as Hiſtory, Geography, and Arts and Sciences! And ſhould not theſe be any of them pleaſanter than your Dice, and Cards, and Plays?

Tanto cum ſtrepitu ludi ſpectantur & artes. Hor.

§. 25. 3. At leaſt it is plain that they are not the fitteſt recreations for any man that intends a lawful end. If you are Students, or idle Gentlemen, is not walking, or riding, or ſhooting, or ſome honeſt bodily labour rather, that joyneth pleaſure and profit together, a fitter kind of exerciſe for you? Or if you are Labouring perſons, and need only pleaſure for your minds, ſhould you not take pleaſure in God, in Scripture, in holy conference, meditation, or good books? Or if indeed you need a relaxation from both theſe, have you not profitable Hiſtory or Geography to read? Have you not Herbs, and Flowers, and Trees, and Beaſts, and Birds and other Creatures to behold? Have you not Fields, or Gardens, or Medows, or Woods to walk into? Have you not your near Relations to delight in; your Wives, or Children, or Friends, or Servants? May you not talk with good, and wiſe, and chearful men, about things that are both pleaſing and edifying to you? Hath God given you ſuch a world of lawful pleaſures, and will none of them, nor all of them ſerve your turns, without unlawful ones; or at leaſt unfit ones (which therefore are unlawful): All theſe are undoubtedly lawful: But Cards, and Dice, and Stage-plays are at beſt, very queſtionable: Among wiſe and learned men, and good men, and no ſmall number of theſe, they are condemned as unlawful. And ſhould one that feareth God and loveth his ſalvation, chooſe ſo doubtful a ſport, before ſuch aburdance of undoubtedly lawful ones? If you be ſo proud or raſh as to reply, why ſhould I leave my ſport for another mans conceits or judgment? I will tell thee that which ſhall ſhame thy reply, and thee if thou canſt bluſh. 1. It is not ſome humorous odd fanatick that I alledge againſt thee, nor a ſingular Divine, but it is the judgment of the ancient Church it ſelf: The Fathers and Counſels condemn Chriſtians and Miniſters eſpecially, that uſe ſpectacula [ſpectacles], or behold Stage-plays and Dicing. 2. Even the oldeſt Canons of our own Church of England forbid Dicing to the Clergy, which is becauſe they reputed it evil, or of ill report. 3. Many Laws of Religious Princes do condemn them. 4. Abundance of the moſt learned holy Divines condemn them. 5. The ſobereſt and learnedeſt of the Papiſts condemn them. 6. And how great a number of the moſt Religious Miniſters and people are againſt them, of the age and place in which you live, you are not ignorant. And is the judgment of the ancient Church, and of Counſels, and Fathers, and of the moſt learned Proteſtants and Papiſts, and the moſt Religious people, beſides many ancient Laws and Canons, of no force with you in ſuch a caſe as this? Will you hold to a thing confeſſedly unneceſſary, againſt the judgement of ſo many that account them ſinful? Are you and your play-fellows more wiſe and learned than all theſe? Or is it not extremity of Pride for ſuch

Among the Ep. of Bonifac. Mog. There is a Councel held under Carloman King of France, which ſaith in the Kings name, [Nec non & illas Venationes & ſylvaticas vagationes cum canibus, ſervis Dei interdixi. mus. Similiter ut acipitres & falcones non habeant.] And ſure theſe is better than Cards and Dice which yet ſome Prieſts now uſe too much.

such unstudied empty men, to prefer their sensual Conceits, before such a concurrent stream of wiser and more ponderous judgments? Read but Dr. Jo. Reignolds his Treat. against Stage-Plays, against Albericus Gentilis, and you will see what a world of witnesses are against you. And if the judgment of Voetius, Amesius and other Learned men against all Lusory Lots be of no authority, at least it should move you that even Mr. Gataker, and others that write for the lawfulness of them in that respect (as Lusory Lots) do yet lay down the rest of the requisites to make them lawful, which utterly condemn our comon use of Cards and Dice, much more our Gamesters: So that all the sober Divines that ever I read or hear, condemn all these: And are you wiser than all of them?

§. 26. 4. Besides this, your Consciences know that you are so far from using them to fit you for your Callings, that you either live idly out of a Calling, or else you prefer them before your Callings: You have no mind of your work, because your mind is so much upon your play; you have no mind of your home or family, but are weary of your business; because your sports withdraw your hearts: And you are so far from using them to fit you to any holy duty, that they utterly unfit you, and corrupt your hearts with such a kind of sensual delight, as makes them more backward to all that is good; insomuch that many of you, even grow so desperate as to hate and scorn it. This is the benefit it bringeth you.

§. 27. 5. And you cannot but know what a Time-wasting sin it is: Suppose the game were never so lawful! Is it lawful to lay out so many hours upon it? as if you had neither souls, nor bodies, nor families, nor estates, nor God, nor death, nor Heaven to mind?

§. 28. 6. And how much prophaneness, or abuse of others is in many of your Stage Plays? How much wantonness and amorous folly, and representing sin in a manner to entice men to it, rather than to make it odious, making a sport and mock of sin; with a great deal more such evil? And your Cards and Dice are the exercise usually of Covetousness, the occasion of a great deal of idle talk, and foolish babble about every cast, and every Card; and oft-times the occasion of cursing, and swearing, and railing, and hatred of those that win your Money, and oft it hath occasioned fighting, and murder it self. And even your huntings are commonly recreations so costly; as that the charge that keepeth a pack of Hounds, would keep a poor mans family that is now in want: Besides the Time that this also consumeth.

It is one of the Roman Laws, 12. tab. Prodigo bonorum suorum administratio interdicta esto.

So that the case is clear, that our Gamesters and licentious sportful Gallants, are a sort of people that have blinded their minds and seared their Consciences, and despise the Laws and presence of God, and forget death and judgment, and live as if there were no life to come, neglecting their miserable souls, and having no delight in the word or holy worship of God, nor the forethoughts of eternal Joys, and therefore seek for their pleasure in such foolish Sports, and spend those precious hours in these vanities, which, God knows, they had need to spend most diligently, in repenting of their sins, and cleansing their souls, and preparing for another world.

Object. §. 29. If yet any impenitent Gamester or idle Time-waster shall Reply, I will not believe that my Cards, or Dice, or Plays are unlawful? I use them but to fit me for my Duty? What would you have all men live like hermites or anchorites without all pleasure? I answer you but by this reasonable request: Will you set your selves as dying men in the presence of God, and the sight of eternity, and provide a true answer to these few Questions; even such an answer as your Consciences dare stand to at the bar of God?

§. 30. Quest. 1. Dost thou not think in thy Conscience that thy Maker, and Redeemer, and his work and service, and thy family and calling, and the forethoughts of Heaven, are not fitter matters to delight a sober mind, than Cards or Stage-plays? And what can it be but a vain and sinful mind that should make these toys so pleasant to thee, and the thoughts of God and Heaven so unpleasant. Quest. 1.

§. 31. Quest. 2. Doth not thy Conscience tell thee, that it is not to fit thee for thy Calling or Gods service, that thou usest these sports, but only to delight a carnal fantasie? Doth not Conscience tell thee, that it is more the pleasure than the Benefit of it to thy soul or body, that draws thee to it? Dost thou work so hard, or study so hard all the day besides, as to need so much recreation to refresh thee? Quest. 2

§. 32. Quest. 3. Doth not thy Conscience tell thee, that if thy sensual fantasie were but cured, it would be a more profitable recreation to thy body or mind, to use some sober exercise for thy body, which is confined to its proper limits of time; or to turn to variety of labour, or studies, than to sit about these idle games? Quest. 3.

§. 33. Quest. 4. Dost thou think that either Christ or his Apostles used Stage plays, Cards or Dice: or ever countenanced such a temper of mind as is addicted to them? Or was not David as wise as you, that took up his pleasure in the word of God, and his melodious praise? Quest. 4.

§. 34. Quest. 5. Doth not your Conscience tell you, that your delight is more in your Plays and Games than it is on God? And that these Sports do no way increase your delight in God at all, but more unfit and undispose you? And yet every blessed mans delight is in the Law of the Lord, and in it he meditateth day and night, Psal. 1. 2. And do you do so? Quest. 5.

§. 35. Quest. 6. Do you bestow as much Time in Praying and reading the word of God, and meditating on it, as you do in your sports and recreations? Nay, do you not shuffle this over, and put God off with a few hypocritical heartless words, that you may be at your sports, or something which you love better? Quest. 6.

§. 36. Quest. 7. Doth not Conscience tell thee, that this precious time might be much better spent, in the works that God hath appointed thee to do? And that thy sinful soul hath need enough to spend it in far greater matters? Doth it become one that hath sinned so long, and is so unassured of pardon and salvation, and near another world, and so unready for it, to sit at Cards or be hearing a Stage-play, when he should be making ready, and getting assurance of his peace with God. Quest. 7.

§. 37. Quest. 8. Wouldst thou be found at Cards, or Plays when death cometh? If it were this Day, hadst thou not rather be found about some Holy, or some profitable labour? Quest. 8.

§. 38. Quest. 9. Will it be more comfort to thee when thou art dying, to think of the time which thou spendest in Cards, and Plays, and Vanity, or that which thou spendest in serving God, and preparing for eternity? Quest. 9.

§. 39 Quest. 10. Darest thou pray to God to bless thy Cards, and Dice, and Plays to the good of thy soul or body? Would not thy Conscience tell thee, that this were but a mocking of God, as praying for that which thou dost not intend, and which thy pleasures are unfit for? And yet no recreation is lawful, which you may not thus lawfully pray for a blessing on. Que. 10.

§. 40. Quest. 11. If you were sure your selves that you sin not in your Games, or sports, are you sure that your Companions do not? That they have Que. 11.

no luſt or vanity of mind at Stage plays, no Covetouſneſs, or ſinful pleaſure or paſſion at Cards, or Dice? If you ſay, we are not bound to keep all other men from ſin, I anſwer, You are bound to do your beſt towards it: And you are bound not to contribute willingly to their ſin: And are bound to forbear a thing indifferent, though not a duty, to avoid the ſcandalizing or tempting of another. If Paul would never eat fleſh while he lived rather than make Rom. 14. 21. a weak perſon offend, ſhould not your ſports be ſubject to as great Charity? He ſaith, 1 Cor. 8. 13. It is good neither to eat fleſh, nor to drink wine, nor any thing whereby thy weak brother ſtumbleth, or is offended, or made weak? Object. Then we muſt give over our meat, and drink, and cloaths, and all: Anſw. It followeth not that we muſt forſake our Duty, to prevent another mans ſin, becauſe we muſt forſake our pleaſure in things indifferent: If you knew what ſin is, and what it is to ſave or loſe ones ſoul, you would not make a ſport of other mens ſin, nor ſo eaſily contribute to their damnation, and think your ſenſual pleaſure to be a good excuſe. Rom. 15. 1, 2, 3. In ſuch caſes, we that are ſtrong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, (that is, to compaſſionate them as we do children in their weakneſs) and not to pleaſe our ſelves (to their hurt.) Let every one of us pleaſe his neighbour, for his good to edification (that is, prefer the edifying of anothers ſoul, before the pleaſure of your bodies) For even Chriſt pleaſed not himſelf——If Chriſt loſt his life to ſave men from ſin, will not you loſe your ſport for it?

Que. 12. To ſportful Youths. §. 41. Queſt. 12. What kind of men are they that are moſt addicted to thy games and plays, and what kind of men are they that avoid them, and are againſt them? Are there not more Fornicators, Drunkards, Swearers, Curſers, Coveters of other mens money, and prophane Neglecters of God and their Souls, among Gameſters and Players, than among them that are againſt them? Judge by the Fruits.

§. 42. And what I ſay to idle Gameſters, is proportionably to be ſaid to Voluptuous Youths; that run after Wakes, and May-games, and Dancings, and Revellings, and are carried by the Love of ſports and pleaſure, from the Love of God, and the care of their Salvation, and the Love of Holineſs, and the Love of their Callings; and into idleneſs, riotouſneſs and diſobedience to their Superiors: For the cure of this Voluptuouſneſs (beſides what is ſaid Chap. 4. Part 9.) Conſider, §. 43. 1. Doſt thou not know that thou haſt higher delights to mind? And are theſe toys beſeeming a noble ſoul, that hath Holy and Heavenly matters to delight in?

§. 44. 2. Doſt thou not feel what a plague the very Pleaſure is to thy affections? How it bewitcheth thee, and befooleth thee, and maketh thee out of Love with Holineſs, and unfit for any thing that's good?

§. 45. 3. Doſt thou know the worth of thoſe precious hours which thou playeſt away? Haſt thou no more to do with them? Look inwards to thy ſoul, and forward to eternity, and bethink thee better.

§. 46. 4. Is it ſport that thou moſt needeſt? Doſt thou not more need Chriſt, and Grace, and Pardon, and preparation for Death and Judgement, and aſſurance of Salvation? Why then are not theſe thy buſineſs?

Eccleſ. 11. 9. §. 47. 5. Haſt thou not a God to obey and ſerve? And doth he not alway ſee thee? And will he not judge thee? Alas, thou knoweſt not how ſoon. Though thou be now merry in thy youth, and thy Heart cheer thee, and thou walk in the ways of thy Heart, and the ſight of thy Eyes, yet know thou that for all theſe things God will bring thee into judgement.

§. 48. 6. Obſerve in Scripture what God judgeth of thy Ways. Tit. 3. 3. We our ſelves were ſometimes fooliſh, diſobedient, deceived, ſerving divers luſts and pleaſures —— —— 2 Tim. 2. 22. Fly youthful luſts: but follow after righteouſneſs, faith, charity, peace with them that call on the Lord out of a pure heart. Read 1 Pet. 4. 1, 2, 3, 4. 2 Pet. 3. 3. 1 Tim. 3. 4. Lovers of pleaſure more than Lovers of God. 1 Pet. 1. 14. 15. & 2. 11, 12.

§. 49. 7. You are but preparing for your future ſorrow, either by Repentance or deſtruction: And the greature is your pleaſure now, the greater will be your ſorrow and ſhame in the review.

Having ſpoken this much for the cure of ſinful ſports, I proceed to direct the more ſober in their recreations.

Dir. 2. §. 50. Direct. 2. When you underſtand the true nature and uſe of Recreations, Labour to be acquainted juſt how much, and what ſort of Recreation is needful to your ſelves in particular. In which you muſt have reſpect, 1. To your bodily ſtrength, 2. To your minds, 3. To your labours. And when you have reſolved on't, what and how much is needful and fit, to help you in your duty, allow it its proper time and place, as you do your meals, and ſee that you ſuffer it not to encroach upon your duty.

Dir. 3. §. 51. Direct. 3. Ordinarily joyn profit and pleaſure together that you loſe no time. I know not one perſon of an hundred, or of many hundred, that needeth any Game at all: there are ſuch variety of better exerciſes at hand to recreate them: And it is a ſin to idle away any time, which we can better improve! I confeſs my own nature was as much addicted to playfulneſs as moſt: and my judgement alloweth me ſo much recreation as is needful to my Health and Labour (and no more:) But for all that I find no need of any game to recreate me? When my mind needeth recreation, I have variety of recreating Books and Friends, and buſineſs to do that: And when my body needeth it, the hardeſt Labour that I can bear is my beſt recreation: walking is inſtead of games and ſports: as profitable to my body, and more to my mind: If I am alone, I may improve that time in meditation; If with others, I may improve it in profitable cheerful conference. I condemn not all ſports or games in others, but I find none of them all to be beſt for my ſelf: And when I obſerve how far the temper and life of Chriſt and his beſt ſervants was from ſuch recreations, I avoid them with the more ſuſpicion. And I ſee but few but diſtaſte it in Miniſters (even Shooting, Bowling, and ſuch more healthful games) to ſay nothing of Cheſs and ſuch other, as fit not the end of a recreation:) Therefore there is ſomewhat in it that nature it ſelf hath ſome ſuſpicion of. That ſtudent that needeth Cheſs or Cards to pleaſe his Mind, I doubt hath a carnal empty mind: If God and all his books, and all his friends, &c. cannot ſuffice for this, there is ſome diſeaſe in it that ſhould rather be cured than pleaſed. And for the Body, it is another kind of exerciſe that profits it.

Dir. 4. §. 52. Direct. 4. Watch againſt inordinate ſenſual Delight, even in the Lawfulleſt ſport: Exceſs of pleaſure in any ſuch vanity, doth very much corrupt and befool the mind: It puts it out of reliſh with ſpiritual things; and turneth it from God and Heaven and Duty.

Dir. 5. §. 53. Direct. 5. To this end keep a watch upon your thoughts and fantaſie, that they run not after ſports and pleaſures. Elſe you will be like Children that are thinking of their ſport, and longing to be at it, when they ſhould be at their Books or Buſineſs.

Dir. 6. §. 54. Direct. 6. Avoid the company of Revellers, Gameſters and ſuch time-waſters. Come not among them, leſt you be enſnared: Accompany your ſelves with thoſe that delight themſelves in God, 2 Tim. 2. 22.

Dir. 7. §. 55. Direct. 7. Remember death and judgement, and the neceſſities of your Souls. Uſually theſe ſports ſeem but fooliſhneſs to ſerious men: And they Eccl. 2. 2. ſay of this mirth, as Solomon, it is madneſs: And it is great and ſerious Subjects which maketh ſerious men. Death and the world to come, when they are ſoberly thought on, do put the mind quite out of reliſh, with fooliſh pleaſures.

Dir. 8. §. 56. Direct. 8. Be painful in your honeſt Callings. Lazineſs breedeth a love of ſports: When you muſt pleaſe your ſlothful fleſh with eaſe, then it muſt be further pleaſed with vanities.

Dir. 9. §. 57. Direct. 9. Delight in your relations and family duties and mercies. If you love the company and converſe of your Parents, or Children, or Wives, or Kindred as you ought, you will find more pleaſure in diſcourſing with them about holy things or honeſt buſineſs, than in fooliſh ſports. But Adulterers that love not their Wives, and unnatural Parents and Children that love not one another, and ungodly Maſters of Families, that love not their duty, are put to ſeek their ſport abroad.

Dir. 10. §. 58. Direct. 10. See to the ſanctifying of all your Recreations: When you have choſen ſuch as are truly ſuited to your need; and go not to them before you need, nor uſe them not beyond your need. See alſo that you lift up your hearts ſecretly to God, for his bleſſing on them; and mix them all along as far as you can with holy things; as with holy Thoughts or holy Speeches. As for Muſick, which is a lawful pleaſure, I have known ſome think it prophaneſs to uſe it privately or publickly with a Pſalm, that ſcrupled not uſing it in common mirth: When as all our mirth ſhould be as much ſanctified as is poſſible: All ſhould be done to the Glory of God: And we have much more in Scripture for the Holy Uſe of Muſick (publick and private,) than for any other uſe of it whatever. And it is the excellency of Melody and Muſick, that they are recreations which may be more aptly and profitably ſanctified by application to holy uſes, than any other. And I ſhould think them little worth at all, if I might not uſe them for the holy exhilirating or elevating of my ſoul, or affecting it towards God, or exciting it to duty.

Dir. 11. §. 59. Direct. 11. The ſickly and the Melancholy (who are uſually leaſt inclined to ſport) have much more need of Recreation than others, and therefore may allow it a much larger time than thoſe that are in health and ſtrength. Becauſe they take it but as Phyſick to recover them to health, being to abate again when they are recovered.

Dir. 12. §. 60. Direct. 12. Be much more ſevere in regulating your ſelves in your recreations, than in cenſuring others for uſing ſome ſports which you miſlike. For you know not perhaps their caſe, and reaſons, and temptations: But an idle Time waſting ſenſual ſporter, every one ſhould look on with pity as a miſerable wretch.

PART III.

Directions about Apparel, and againſt the Sin therein committed.

Dir. 1. §. 1. Direct. 1. Fitneſs is the firſt thing to be reſpected in your Apparel to make it a means to the end to which it is appointed. The Ends of Apparel are 1. To keep the body warm: 2. To keep it from being hurt: 3. To adorn it ſoberly ſo far as beſeemeth the common dignity of humane nature, and the ſpecial dignity of your places. 4. To hide thoſe parts, which nature hath made your ſhame, and modeſty commandeth you to cover.

§. 2. The Fitneſs of Apparel conſiſteth in theſe things: 1. That it be fitted to your Bodies: (as your Shooe to your foot, your Hat to your Head, &c.) 2. That it be ſuited to your Sex, that men wear not apparel proper to women, nor women that which is proper to men. 3. That it be ſuited to your Age: The young and the old being uſually hereby ſomewhat diſtinguiſhed. 4. That it be ſuited to your Eſtate, or not above it. 5. That it be ſuited to your Place or Office. 6. That it be ſuited to your Uſe and Service. As, 1. To cover your nakedneſs ſo far as health, or modeſty, or decency require. 2. To keep you from cold. 3. And from hurt in your labour: (as the Shooe doth the foot, the Glove the hand, &c.) 4. For ſober Ornament, as aforeſaid.

§. 3. Direct. 2. Among the ends and uſes of apparel the greateſt is to be preferred: The Ornament being the leaſt, is not to be pretended againſt any of the reſt. Therefore they that for Ornament, 1. Will go naked, in any part which ſhould be covered; or, 2. Will go coldly to the hurt or hazard of their health (as our ſemi Evites, or half-naked Gallants do:) 3. Or will either hurt their bodies (as our ſtrait-lac'd faſhioniſts) or diſable themſelves from their labour to travel or fit exerciſe, leſt they ſhould be hurt by their clothes which are fitted more to ſight than Uſe, all theſe croſs the ends of clothing. Dir. 2.

§. 4. Direct. 3. Affect not ſingularity in your apparel; that is, to be odd and obſervably diſtinct from all thoſe of your own rank and quality: Unleſs their faſhions be evil and intolerable (in pride, immodeſt, levity, &c.) and then your ſingularity is your duty. An unneceſſary affectation of ſingularity ſheweth, 1. A weakneſs of judgement: 2. A Pride of that which you affect: 3. And a placing of duty in things indifferent. And on the contrary, an imitating of Proud, or immodeſt faſhions, 1. Encourageth others in the ſin: 2. Sheweth a carnal, proud, or temporizing mind, that will diſpleaſe God himſelf to humour men, and avoid their contempt and diſeſteem. Dir. 3.

§. 5. Direct. 4. Run not into ſordid vileneſs or naſtineſs, or ridiculous humorrous ſquallid faſhions, under pretence of avoiding Pride. For, 1. This will bewray a great weakneſs of judgement. 2. It will make your judgement, to men that diſcern it, the more contemptible and uſeleſs to them in other things. 3. It will harden them in their exceſs while they think nothing but humour, folly or ſuperſtition doth reprove them. 4. You ſin by diſhonouring humane nature. God hath put a ſpecial honour upon man, and would have us do ſo our ſelves: And therefore hath appointed clothing ſince the fall: As nakedneſs, ſo over ſordid or ridiculous clothing wrongeth God in his creature. Dir. 4.

§. 6. Direct. 5. Be much more ſuſpicious of Pride and Exceſs in Apparel as the more common and dangerous extream. For Nature is incomparably more prone to this, than the other: And many hundreds, if not thouſands ſin in exceſs, for one that ſinneth in the defect: And this way of ſinning is more perillous. Here I ſhall ſhew you, 1. How Pride in apparel appeareth. 2. What is the ſinfulneſs of it. Dir. 5.

§. 7. 1. Pride appeareth in Apparel, when the matter of it is too coſtly. 2. When in the faſhion you are deſirous to be imitating thoſe that are above your eſtate or rank; and when you ſo fit your Apparel, as to make you ſeem ſome higher or richer perſon than you are. 3. When you are over curious in the matter, ſhape or dreſs, and make a greater matter of it than you ought: As if your comelineſs were a more deſirable thing than it is, or as if ſome meanneſs or diſliked faſhion were intolerable. 4. When your curioſity taketh up more Time in dreſſing you, than is due to ſo ſmall a matter, while far greater matters are neglected. 5. When you make too great a difference between your private and your publick habit: Going plain when no ſtrangers ſee you, you, and being exceſſively careful when you go abroad, or when ſtrangers viſit you. Theſe ſhew that Pride which conſiſteth in a deſire to appear either Richer or Comelyer than you are.

§. 8. Beſides theſe, there is a Pride which maketh men deſirous to ſeem more Learned than they are: which ſheweth it ſelf in affecting as the Titles, ſo the Habits of the Learned: Which hath ſome aggravations above the former.

Mark 12. 38. §. 9. And there is a Pride which conſiſteth in a deſire to ſeem more Grave and Reverend than you are: Thus Chriſt blameth the Phariſees affectation of long garments: When you ſhall wear a Habit of more Gravity than you have, it is Hypocriſie.

§. 10. And there is a Pride which conſiſteth in a deſire to ſeem more Mortified than you are, and Mat. 23. 5. more Holy: And ſo to affect thoſe diſcriminating Mal. 7. 15. Veſtments which ſignifie more of theſe than you have, is proud hypocriſie: And thus vile clothing is often the effect of Pride: And if men fall into that ſort of Pride, as to deſire to be noted as moſt mortified perſons, this is as ſuitable a badge for them, as bravery is for thoſe that are proud of their Comelineſs, and Grave Clothing of thoſe that are proud of their Gravity.

Queſt. 1. How Pride of Gravity and Holineſs appeareth about Apparel.

§. 11. Queſt. 1. But may we as eaſily diſcern this ſort of Pride in Clothing as the other? Anſw. No: becauſe the mean, and plain, and cheap clothing is commonly worn by perſons really mortified and ſober, and neceſſarily by the poor, and grave clothing by perſons that are really grave: And therefore we are bound to judge them to be that, which they ſeem by their apparel to be, unleſs by ſome other evidences than their apparel, their pride and hypocriſie appear: But when we judge a perſon vain that weareth vain clothing, and proud of their comelineſs that are inordinately careful in ſetting it out, we judge but according to the firſt and proper ſignification of their clothing. Hypocriſie is a thing unſeen to man: It is the viſible ſigns according to their proper ſignification that we muſt judge by: And therefore when we ſee perſons wear vain and curious attire, we may judge thereby that they are vain and curious: And if we be miſtaken, it is long of them that ſignified it: And when we ſee perſons wear grave or humble clothing, we muſt judge by it that they are grave and humble, till the contrary appear.

Queſt. 2.

§. 12. Queſt. 2. But how elſe will pride of Gravity or Mortifiedneſs appear? Anſw. When they boaſt of theſe themſelves, and are inſolent in cenſuring and reproaching thoſe that differ from them; when their diſcourſe is more againſt thoſe faſhions which they avoid, than againſt any faults of their own; when they affect to be ſingular in their apparel, even from the grave and humble perſons of their rank: But eſpecially when they make a noiſe and ſtir in the world with their faſhions, to be taken notice of, and to become eminent, and perſons talkt of and admired for their mortified garb. Thus many Sects amongſt the Popiſh Fryars go by Agreement or Vow in Clothes ſo differing from all other perſons in ſeeming humility and gravity, which muſt be the badge of their Order in the eye of the world, that the boaſt and affectation is viſible and profeſſed. And thus the Quakers that by the notoriety of their difference from other ſober perſons, and by their impudent bawling in the Streets and Churches, and railing againſt the Holieſt and humbleſt Miniſters and people that are not of their Sect, and this in the face of Markets and Congregations, do make a plain profeſſion or detection of their Pride. But where it is not openly revealed, we cannot judge it.

Queſt. 3. May not a deformity be hid by apparel or painting?

§. 13. Queſt. 3. Is it not lawful for a perſon that is deformed, to hide their deformity by their clothing? And for any perſons to make themſelves (by clothing, or ſpots, or painting) to ſeem to others as comely and beautiful as they can? Anſw. The perſon, and the matter, and the End and Reaſons, the principle and the probable conſequents, muſt all be conſidered for the right anſwering of this Queſtion. It is lawful to ſome perſons, by ſome means, for ſome good Ends and Reaſons, when a greater Evil is not like to follow it, to hide their deformities, and to adorn themſelves ſo as to ſeem more comely than they are: But for other perſons, by evil means, for evil ends and reaſons, or when it tendeth to evil conſequents, it is unlawful. 1. A perſon that is naturally very deformed, may do more to hide it by their ornaments, than one that hath no ſuch deformity may do to ſeem more comely: Becauſe one aſpireth no higher than to ſeem ſomewhat like other perſons; but the other aſpireth to ſeem excellent above others. And a perſon that is under Government may do more in obedience to their Governors, than another may do that is at their own choice. 2. If the matter of their ornament be but modeſt decent cloathing, and not immodeſt, inſolent, luxurious, vain or againſt Nature, or the Law of God or man, it is in that reſpect allowable: But ſo is no cover of deformity by unlawful means. 3. It may be lawful, if alſo it be to a lawful end, as to obey a Governor, or only to cover a deformity, ſo as not unneceſſarily to reveal it: But it is alway ſinful, when the end is ſinful. As 1. If it be to ſeem extraordinary beautiful or comely, when you are not ſo; or if it be to be obſerved and admired by beholders. 2. If it be to tempt the beholders minds to luſtful or undue affections. 3. If it be to deceive the mind of ſome one that you deſire in marriage: For in that caſe, to ſeem by ſuch diſſembling to be what you are not, is the moſt injurious kind of cheat, much worſe than to ſell a Horſe that is blind or lame for a ſound one. 4. If it be to follow the faſhions of proud Gallants, that you may not be ſcorned by them as not neat enough; all theſe are unlawful ends and reaſons. 4. So alſo the Principle or Mind that it cometh from, may make it ſinful: As 1. If it come from a luſtful wanton mind. 2. Or if it come from an over great regard of the opinion of ſpectators; which is the proper complexion of Pride: A perſon that doth it not in pride, is not very ſolicitous about it: Nor makes no great matter of it whether men take him to be comely or uncomely; and therefore he is at no great coſt or care to ſeem comely to them. If ſuch perſons be deformed, they know it is Gods work, and not their ſin; and it is ſin, that is the true cauſe of ſhame: And all Gods works are good, and for our good if we are his children: They know that God doth it to keep them humble, and prevent that pride, and luſt, and wantonneſs which is the undoing of many: And therefore they will rather be careful to improve it, and get the benefit, than to hide it, and ſeem comelier than they are. 5. Alſo the conſequents concur much to make the action good or bad: Tho' that be not your end, yet if you may foreſee, that greater hurt than good will follow, or is like to follow, it will be your ſin: As 1. If it tend the enſnaring of the minds of the beholders in procacious luſtful wanton paſſions, though you ſay, you intend it not, it is your ſin, that you do that which probably will procure it, yea, that you did not your beſt to avoid it. And though it be their ſin and vanity that is the cauſe, it is never the leſs your ſin to be the unneceſſary occaſion: For you muſt conſider that you live among diſeaſed ſouls! And you muſt not lay a ſtumbling block in their way, nor blow up the fire of their luſt, nor make your ornaments their ſnares; but you muſt walk among ſinful perſons as you would do with a Candle among Straw or Gunpowder; or elſe you may ſee the flame which you would not foreſee, when it is too late to quench it. But a proud and procacious luſtful mind is ſo very willing to be loved, and thought highly of, and admired and deſired, that no fear of God, or of the ſin and miſery of themſelves or others will

will ſatisfie them, or take them off. 2. Alſo it is ſinful to adorn your ſelves in ſuch faſhions, as probably will encourage pride and vanity in others, or ſeem to approve of it. When any faſhion is the common badge of the proud and vain ſort of perſons of that time and place, it is ſinful unneceſſarily to conform your ſelves to them; becauſe you will harden them in their ſin, and you joyn your ſelves to them as one of them by a kind of profeſſion. As when ſpotted faces (a name that former Ages underſtood not) or naked breaſts, or ſuch other faſhions, are uſed ordinarily by the vain, and brain-ſick, and heart ſick, proud and wanton party, it is a ſin unneceſſarily to uſe them: For 1. You will hinder their Repentance: 2. And you will hinder the great Benefit which the world may get, by their vain attire: For (though it be no thanks to them that intend it not,) yet it is a very great commodity that cometh to mankind by theſe peoples ſin: that fools ſhould go about in fools-coats, and that empty brains, and proud and wanton Hearts ſhould be ſo openly detected in the Streets and Churches: that ſober people may avoid them; and that wiſe and chaſte, and civil people may not be deceived by ſuch in marriage to their undoing: As the different clothing of the different Sexes is neceſſary to Chaſtity and Order; ſo it is a matter of great convenience in a Commonwealth, that Sots, and Swaggerers, and Phreneticks, and Idcots, and proud, and wanton luſtful perſons ſhould be openly diſtinguiſhed from others: As in a plague-time the doors of infected houſes are marked with a [Lord have mercy on us]: And the wiſeſt Magiſtrate knew not how to have accompliſhed this himſelf by a Law, as the wretches themſelves do by their voluntary choice: For if it were not voluntary, it would be no diſtinguiſhing badge of their profeſſion. Now for any honeſt civil people to join with them, and take up their livery, and the habit of their Order, is to profeſs themſelves ſuch as they, and ſo to encourage and approve them, or elſe to confound the proud and humble the vain and ſober, the wanton and the chaſte, and deſtroy the benefit of diſtinction.

By this you may ſee, that it is not ſo much the bare faſhion it ſelf that is to be regarded, as the ſignification and the Conſequents of it. The ſame faſhion when uſed by ſober perſons, to better ſignification and conſequents may be lawful, which otherwiſe is unlawful. Therefore thoſe faſhions that can hardly ever be ſuppoſed to have a good ſignification and conſequents, are hardly ever to be ſuppoſed lawful.

Note alſo, that any one of the aforeſaid evils maketh a faſhion evil, but it muſt be all the requiſites concurrent that muſt prove your faſhions good or lawful.

Queſt. 4. §. 14. Queſt. Is it not ſometime lawful to follow the faſhions? Anſw. It is always lawful to follow the ſober faſhions of ſober people; but it is not lawful to follow the vain, immodeſt, ill-ſignifying faſhions of the riotous, proud, and wanton ſort: unleſs it be in ſuch caſes of neceſſity as David was in, when he behaved himſelf like a mad man, or as Paul when he told them that he was a Phariſee, Acts 23. 6. to eſcape in a perſecution, or from Thieves or enemies. 2. Or unleſs for a time it prove as conducible to the good of others, as Pauls circumciſing Timothy was, or his becoming all things to all men, that he might win ſome. But to follow ill ſignifying faſhions, unneceſſarily, or for carnal ends, to avoid the diſcontented evil ſpeeches of carnal perſons, or to learn to act as like as they, this is undoubtedly a ſin.

Phil. 3. 10. Rom. 12. 2.

Dir. 6. §. 15. Direct. 6. Be ſure to avoid exceſs of coſtlineſs in your apparel: Remember that you muſt anſwer for all your eſtates: And one day it will prove more comfortable to find on your accounts [So much a year laid out in clothing the naked, than [So much a year in bravery or curioſity for your ſelves or your children.] Coſtly apparel devoureth that which would go far in ſupplying the neceſſities of the poor.

§. 16. Direct. 7. Be ſure you waſte not your precious time in needleſs curioſity of dreſſing. I cannot eaſily tell you how great a ſin, and horrible a ſign of folly and miſery, it is in thoſe Gallants that ſpend whole hours, yea, moſt part of the morning, in dreſſing and neatifying themſelves, before they appear to the ſight of others: ſo that ſome of them can ſcarce do any thing elſe before dinner time, but dreſs themſelves: The morning hours that are fitteſt for prayer, and reading the Word of God, are thus conſumed. They ſpend not a quarter ſo much time in the ſerious ſearching and adorning of their ſouls, nor in any holy ſervice of God; but God, and family, and ſoul, and all is thus neglected.

§. 17. Direct. 8. Next to the uſefulneſs of your apparel for your bodies and labours, let your Rule be to imitate the common ſort of the grave and ſober perſons of your own rank: Not here and there one that in other things are ſober, who themſelves follow the faſhions of the proud and vain; but the ordinary faſhion of grave and ſober perſons. For thus you will avoid both the levity of the proud, and the needleſs ſingularity of others. Dir. 8.

§. 18. Direct. 9. Regard more the hurt that your faſhion may do, than the offence or obloquy of any. For proud perſons to ſay you are ſordid, or not fine enough, and talk of your courſe attire, is no great diſgrace to you, nor no great hurt. But it is a greater diſgrace to be eſteemed Proud: It ſignifieth an empty childiſh mind, to be deſirous to be thought fine: It is not only Pride, but the Pride of a fool, diſtinct from the Pride of thoſe that have but manly wit. And you ought not thus to diſgrace your ſelves, as to wear the badge of Pride and folly, no more than an honeſt woman ſhould wear the badge and attire of a Whore. Moreover, mean apparel is no great temptation to your ſelves or others to any ſin: But proud and curious apparel doth ſignifie and ſtir up a luſtful or proud diſpoſition in your ſelves; and it tempteth thoſe of the ſame ſex to envy and to imitate you, and thoſe of the other ſex to luſt or wantonneſs. You ſpread the Devils Nets (even in the Churches and open Streets and Meetings) to catch deluded ſilly ſouls. You ſhould rather ſerve Chriſt with your apparel, by expreſſing humility, ſelf-denyal, chaſtity, and ſobriety, to draw others to imitate you in good, than to ſerve the Devil, and pride, and luſt by it, by drawing Men to imitate you in evil. Dir. 9.

§. 19. Direct. 10. Remember what a Body it is that you ſo carefully and curiouſly adorn: Well is it called by the Apoſtle A vile body, Phil. 3. 21. What a filly loathſome lump of dirt is it? What a thing would the Pox, or Leproſy, or almoſt any ſickneſs make it appear to be? What loathſome excrements within, are covered by all that bravery without? Think what it is made of, and what is within it, and what it will turn to? How long it muſt lye rotting in a darkſome grave, more loathſome than the common dirt; and then muſt turn to common earth: And is Purple and Silk, Luk. 19. 19. and a curious dreſs beſeeming that body that muſt ſhortly have but a Winding-ſheet, and muſt lye thus in the grave, and it's to be feared, the ſoul for this pride lie in Hell? Luk. 16. 23, 25. Is all this coſt and curioſity comely for one that knoweth that he is returning to the duſt? Dir. 10.

§. 20. Direct. 11. Remember that you have ſinful ſouls that have continual cauſe of Humiliation, and that have need of more care and adorning than your Bodies. And therefore your apparel ſhould expreſs your humiliation; and ſhew that you take more care for the Soul. How vile ſhould that ſinner be in his own eyes, who knoweth what he hath done againſt God? Dir. 11.

God? What mercy he hath ſinned againſt? What a God he hath offended? What a Saviour he hath ſlighted? What a Spirit of Grace he hath reſiſted? and what a Glory he hath undervalued and neglected? He that knoweth what he is, and what he hath done, and what he hath deſerved, and in what a dangerous caſe his ſoul yet ſtandeth, muſt needs have his ſoul habituated to a humble frame. Every penitent ſoul is vile in its own eyes, and doth loath it ſelf for its inward corruptions and actual ſins: And he that loatheth himſelf as vile, will not be very deſirous to have his ſinful corruptible body ſeem fine, nor by curious ornaments to attract the eyes of vain ſpectators. How oft have I ſeen proud vain Gallants ſuddenly caſt off their bravery and gawdy gay attire, and cloth themſelves in plainneſs and ſobriety, as ſoon as God hath but opened their Eyes, and humbled their ſouls for ſin, and made them better know themſelves, and brought them home by true Repentance! So that the next week they have not ſeemed the ſame perſons: And this was done by meer Humiliation without any arguments againſt their faſhions or proud attire. As old Mr. Dod ſaid, when one deſired him to preach againſt long hair: Preach them once to Chriſt and true Repentance, and they will cut their hair without our preaching againſt it: As Pride would be ſeen in Proud apparel; ſo humility will appear in a dreſs like it ſelf, though it deſire not to be ſeen. Mark 1 Pet. 3. 3, 4, 5. Whoſe adorning let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, or of wearing of Gold, or of putting on of apparel (that is, curious dreſſing or adorning the body beyond plain ſimplicity of attire). But let it be the hidden man of the heart in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet Spirit, which in the ſight of God is of great price; For after this manner (that is, with inward Holineſs and outward plainneſs) in the old time the holy women alſo who truſted in God, adorned themſelves, being in ſubjection to their own Husbands. O that God would print thoſe words upon your hearts, 1 Pet. 5. 5. Yea, all of you be ſubject one to another, and be cloathed with humility: For God reſiſteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. Plainneſs among Chriſtians is a greater honour than fine clothing, Jam. 2. 2, 3, 4, 5. 1 Tim. 2. 9, 10. In like manner alſo that women adorn themſelves in modeſt apparel with ſhamefaſtneſs and ſobriety, not with broidered hair, or Gold, or Pearl, or coſtly array: but (which becometh women profeſſing godlineſs) with good works. I intreat thoſe that are addicted to bravery or curioſity, to read Iſa. 3. from ver. 16. to the end.

And no wonder, when the light of Nature reduced the ſerious ſort of Philoſophers to ſo plain a Garb; as Socrates, Zenocrates, with almoſt all the Stoicks and Cynicks, and many of the Academicks and Pythagoreans.

Dir. 12. §. 21. Direct. 12. Make not too great a matter of your clothing, but uſe it with ſuch indifferency as a thing ſo indifferent ſhould be uſed! Set not your hearts upon it. For that is a worſe ſign than the exceſs in it ſelf. Take no thought wherewith ye ſhall be clothed: but remember how God cloths the Lillies of the field, Matth. 6. 28. If you have food and rayment, be therewith content, tho' it be never ſo plain, 1 Tim. 6. 8.

§. 22. Direct. 13. Be not too cenſorious of others for different faſhions of apparel. Be as plain and modeſt your ſelves as you can: But lay no greater ſtreſs on the faſhions of others than there is cauſe. If they be groſly impudent, diſown ſuch faſhions and ſeek to reform them: But to carp at every one that goeth finer than your ſelves, or to cenſure them as proud, becauſe their faſhions are not like yours, may be of worſe ſignification than the faſhions you find fault with. I have oft obſerved more pride in ſuch cenſures, than I could obſerve in the faſhions which they cenſured. When you have your eye upon every faſhion that is not according to your breeding, or the cuſtom of your rank or place, and are preſently branding ſuch as proud or vain, it ſheweth an arrogant mind, that ſteppeth up in the judgment-ſeat, and ſentenceth thoſe that you have nothing to do with, before they are heard, or you know their reaſons. Perhaps their faſhion was as common among the modeſt ſort where they have lived, as your faſhion is among thoſe that you have converſt with. Cuſtom and common opinion do put much of the ſignification upon faſhions of apparel. Dir. 13.

I Should next have given you ſpecial Directions about the Uſing of your Eſtates: about your Dwellings; about your Meat and Drink; and about your Honour or good Name. But being loth the Book ſhould prove too tedious, I ſhall refer you to what is ſaid before, againſt Covetouſneſs, pride and Gluttony, &c. and what is ſaid before and after, of Works of Charity and Family-Government. Of the proportion of our Eſtates to be given, ſee my Letter to Mr. Gouge.

AS to Sacred Habits, and the different Garbs, Laws, Orders of Life, Diet, &c. of thoſe called Religious Orders among the Papiſts, Regular and Secular, whether and how far ſuch are lawful or ſinful; they are handled ſo largely in the Controverſies of Proteſtants and Papiſts, that I ſhall paſs them by. Only remembring the words of the Clergy of Ravenna to Carolus Junior King of France, inter Epiſt. Hincmari Rhemenſis, Diſcernendi à plebe vel cæteris ſumus, doctrina non veſte, converſatione non habitu, mentis puritate non cultu. Docendi enim potius ſunt populi, quam ludendi, nec imponendum eſt eorum oculis, ſed mentibus præcepta ſunt infundenda.

CHAP. I.

Directions about Marriage; for Choice and Contract.

AS the Persons of Christians in their privatest capacities are Holy, as being Dedicated and separated unto God, so also must their Families be: HOLINESS TO THE LORD must be as it were written on their Doors, and on their Relations, their Possessions and affairs. To which it is requisite, 1. That there be a Holy Constitution of their Families. 2. And a Holy Government of them, and discharge of the several duties of the Members of the Family. To the right constituting of a Family, belongeth, 1. The right contracting of Marriage, and 2. The right choice and contract betwixt Masters and their Servants. For the first,

Dir. 1. §. 2. Direct. 1 Take heed that neither lust nor rashness do thrust you into a married condition, before you see such Reasons to invite you to it, as may assure you of the Call and approbation of God. For, 1. It is God that you must serve in your Married state, and therefore it is meet that you take His Counsel before you rush upon it: For He knoweth best Himself, what belongeth to His service. 2. And it is God that you must still depend upon, for the blessing and comforts of your Relation: And therefore there is very great reason that you take His advice and consent, as the chief things requisite to the match: If the consent of Parents be necessary, much more is the consent of God.

Quest. §. 3. Quest. But how shall a man know whether God call him to Marriage, or consent unto it? Hath he not here left all men to their liberties, as in a thing indifferent?

Answ. God hath not made any Universal Law commanding or forbidding Marriage; but in this regard hath left it indifferent to mankind: Yet not allowing all to marry (for undoubtedly to some it is unlawful): But he hath by other General Laws or Rules directed men to know, in what cases it is lawful, and in what cases it is a sin. As every man is bound to choose that condition in which he may serve God with the best advantages, and which tendeth most to his spiritual welfare, and increase in Holiness: Now there is nothing in Marriage it self which maketh it commonly inconsistent with these benefits, and the fulfilling of these Laws: And therefore it is said, that He that Marryeth doth well, 1 Cor. 7. 7, 38. that is, he doth that which of it self is not unlawful, and which to some is the most eligible state of life. But there is something in a single life which maketh it, especially to Preachers and persecuted Christians, to be more usually the most advantagious state of life, to these Ends of Christianity; And therefore it is said that He that marryeth not, doth better. And yet to individual persons, it is hard to imagine how it can choose but be either a duty or a sin; at least except in some unusual cases. For it is a thing of so great moment as to the ordering of our hearts and lives, that it is hard to imagine that it should ever be indifferent as a means to our main end, but must either be a very great help or hinderance. But yet if there be any persons whose case may be so equally poised with accidents on both sides, that to the most judicious man it is not discernable, whether a single or married state of life, is like to conduce more to their personal Holiness or publick usefulness, or the good of others, to such persons Marriage in the individual circumstantiated act is a thing indifferent.

Answ. Whether Marriage be indifferent?

§. 4. By these conditions following you may know

Who are called to marry.

know, what persons have a Call from God to marry, and who have not his call or approbation. 1. If there be the peremptory will or command of Parents to Children that are under their power and Government, and no greater matter on the contrary to hinder it, the command of Parents signifieth the command of God: But if Parents do but perswade and not command, though their desires must not be causelesly refused, yet a smaller impediment may preponderate than in case of a peremptory command. 2. They are called to marry who have not the gift of Continence, and cannot by the use of lawful means attain it, and have no impediment which maketh it unlawful to them to marry, 1 Cor. 7. 9. But if they cannot contain, let them marry; for it is better to marry than to burn. But here the divers degrees of the urgent and the hindering causes must be compared, and the weightiest must prevail. For some that have very strong lusts may yet have stronger impediments: And though they cannot keep that chastity in their Thoughts as they desire, yet in such a case they must abstain: And there is no man but may keep his body in chastity if he will do his part: Yea and Thoughts themselves may be commonly and for the most part kept pure, and wanton imaginations quickly checkt, if men be Godly, and will do what they can. But on the other side there are some that have a more tamable measure of Concupiscence, and yet have no considerable hinderance whose duty it may be to Marry as the most certain and successful means against that small degree, as long as there is nothing to forbid it. 3. Another cause that warranteth Marriage is, when upon a wise casting up of all accounts, it is apparently most probable that in a married state, one may be most serviceable to God and the publick good: That there will be in it greater helps and fewer hinderances to the great ends of our lives; the glorifying of God, and the saving of our selves and others. And whereas it must be expected that every condition should be more helpful to us in one respect, and hinder us more in another respect; and that in one we have most helps for a contemplative life, and in another we are better furnished for an Active serviceable life, the great skill therefore in the discerning of our duties lieth in the prudent pondering and comparing of the commodities and discommodities, without the seduction of fantasie, lust or passion, and in a true discerning which side it is that hath the greatest weight.

Unmarried men are the best friends, the best Masters, the best Servants; but not always the best Subjects: For they are light to run away, and therefore ventrous, &c. Lord Bacon Essay 8.

Observations.

§. 5. Here it must be carefully observed, 1. That the two first Reasons for Marriage (Concupiscence and the will of Parents) or any such like have their strength but in subordination to the third (the final cause, or interest of God and our salvation) And that this last Reason (from the end) is of it self sufficient without any of the other, but none of the other are sufficient without this. If it be clear that in a married state you have better advantages for the service of God, and doing good to others, and saving your own souls, than you can have in a single state of life, then it is undoubtedly your duty to marry: For our obligation to seek our ultimate end is the most constant indispensable obligation: Though Parents command it not, though you have no corporal necessity, yet it is a duty if it certainly make most for your ultimate end. 2. But yet observe also, that no pretence of your ultimate end it self will warrant you to marry, when any other accident hath first made it a thing unlawful, while that accident continueth. For we must not do evil that good may come by it. Our salvation is not furthered by sin: And though we saw a probability that we might do more good to others, if we did but commit such a sin to accomplish it, yet it is not to be done. For our lives and mercies being all in the hand of God, and the successes and acceptance of all our endeavours depending wholly upon him, it can never be a rational way to attain them, by wilful offending him by our sin! It is a likely means to publick good for able and good men to be Magistrates or Ministers: And yet he that would lie, or be perjured, or commit any known sin that he may be a Magistrate, or that he may Preach the Gospel, might better expect a curse on himself and his endeavours, than Gods acceptance, or his blessing and success: So he that would sin to change his state for the better, would find that he changed it for the worse: Or if it do good to others, he may expect no good but ruine to himself (if Repentance prevent it not). 3. Observe also that if the question be only which state of life it is (married or single) which best conduceth to this ultimate end, then any one of the subordinate Reasons will prove that we have a call, if there be not greater Reasons on the contrary side. As in case you have no corporal necessity, the will of Parents alone may oblige you; if there be no greater thing against it: Or if Parents oblige you not, yet corporal necessity alone may do it: Or if neither of these invite you, yet a clear probability of the attaining of such an estate or opportunity, as may make you more fit to relieve many others, or be serviceable to the Church, or the blessing of Children who may be devoted to God, may warrant your Marriage, if no greater reasons lie against it: For when the Scales are equal any one of these may turn them.

§. 6. By this also you may perceive who they be that have no call to marry, and to whom it is a sin? As, 1. No man hath a call to marry, who, laying all the commodities and discommodities together, may clearly discern that a married state is like to be a greater hinderance of his salvation, or to his serving or honouring God in the world, and so to disadvantage him as to his ultimate end.

Who may not marry

Quest. But what if Parents do command it? or will set against me if I disobey? Quest.

Answ. Parents have no authority to command you any thing against God or your salvation or your ultimate end: Therefore here you owe them no formal obedience: But yet the will of Parents with all the consequents, must be put into the Scales with all other considerations, and if they make the discommodities of a single life to become the greater, as to your end, then they may bring you under a duty or obligation to marry: Not necessitate præcepti, as obedience to their command; but necessitate medii as a means to your ultimate end, and in obedience to that general command of God, which requireth you to seek first your ultimate end, even the Kingdom of God and his Righteousness, Mat. 6. 33. Answ.

Quest. But what if I have a corporal necessity, and yet I can foresee that marriage will greatly disadvantage me as to the service of God and my salvation? Quest.

Answ. First, You must understand that no corporal necessity is absolute: For there is no man so lustful but may possibly bridle his lust by other lawful means: By dyet, labour, sober company, diverting business, solitude, watching the thoughts and senses, or at least by the Physicians help; so that the necessity is but secundum quid, or an urgency rather than simple necessity. And then, 2. This measure of necessity must be it self laid in the ballance with the other accidents: And if this necessity will turn the Scales by making a single life more disadvantagious to your ultimate end, your lust being a greater impediment to you, than all the inconveniences of marriage will be, then the case is resolved, It is better to marry than to burn. But if the hinderances in a married state are like to be greater, than the hinderances of your concupiscence, then you must set your self to the curbing and curing of that concupiscence; and in the use of Gods means expect his blessing. Answ.

§. 7. 2. Children are not (ordinarily) called of God to marry, when their Parents do absolutely wills. Parents

Commands

Commands cannot make it a duty, when we are sure it would hinder the interest of God our ultimate end; yet Parents Prohibitions may make it a sin, when there is a clear probability that it would most conduce to our ultimate end, were it not prohibited. Because, 1. Affirmatives bind not semper & ad semper as Negatives or prohibitions do. 2. Because the sin of disobedience to Parents will cross the tendency of it unto good, and do more against our ultimate end, than all the advantages of marriage can do for it. A duty is then to us no duty, when it cannot be performed without a chosen wilful sin. In many cases we are bound to forbear what a Governour forbiddeth, when we are not bound to Do the contrary if he command it. It is easier to make a duty to be no duty, than to make a sin to be no sin: One bad ingredient may turn a duty into a sin, when one good ingredient will not turn a sin into a duty or into no sin.

Quest. §. 8. Quest. But may not a Governours prohibition be over weighed by some great degrees of incommodity? It is better to marry than to burn: 1. What if Parents forbid Children to marry absolutely until death, and so deprive them of the lawful remedy against lust? 2. And if they do not so, yet if they forbid it them when it is to them most seasonable and necessary, it seemeth little better. 3. Or if they forbid them to marry where their affections are so engaged, as that they cannot be taken off without their mutual ruin? may not Children marry in such cases of necessity as these, without and against the will of their Parents?

Answ. Answ. I cannot deny but some cases may be imagined or fall out, in which it is lawful to do what a Governour forbiddeth, and to marry against the will of Parents: For they have their Power to edification, and not unto destruction: As if a Son be qualified with eminent gifts for the work of the Ministry, in a time and place that needeth much help; if a malignant Parent in hatred of that sacred Office, should never so preremptorily forbid him; yet may the Son devote himself to the blessed work of saving souls: even as a Son may not forbear to relieve the poor (with that which is his own) though his Parents should forbid him; nor forbear to put himself into a capacity to relieve them for the future, nor forbear his own necessary food and raiment tho' he be forbidden. As Daniel would not forbear praying openly in his house when he was forbidden by the King and Law. When any inseparable accident doth make a thing of it self indifferent become a duty, a Governours prohibition will not discharge us from that duty, unless the accident be smaller than the accident of the Rulers prohibition, and then it may be over weighed by it: But to determine what Accidents are Greater or Less is a difficult task.

§. 9. And as to the particular Questions; to the first I answer, If Parents forbid their Children to marry while they live, it is convenient and safe to obey them until death, if no greater obligation to the contrary forbid it: But it is necessary to obey them during the time that the Children live under the Government of their Parents; as in their Houses, in their younger years: (except in some few extraordinary cases) But when Parents are dead (though they leave commands in their Wills) or when age or former marriage hath removed Children from under their Government, a smaller matter will serve to justifie their disobedience here, than when the Children in minority are less fit to Govern themselves. For tho' we owe Parents a limited obedience still, yet at full age the Child is more at his own dispose than he was before. Nature hath given us a hint of her intention in the instinct of bruits, who are all taught to protect and lead and provide for their young ones, while the young are insufficient for themselves: But when they are grown to sufficiency, they drive them away or neglect them. If a wise Son that hath a Wife and many Children, and great affairs to manage in the world, should be bound to as absolute obedience to his aged Parents, as he was in his childhood, it would ruine their affairs and Parents government would pull down that in their old age, which they built up in their middle age.

§. 10. And to the second Question I answer, that 1. Children that pretend to unconquerable Lust or Love, must do all they can to subdue such inordinate affections, and bring their lusts to stoop to reason and their Parents wills. And if they do their best, there is either none, or not one of many hundreds, but may maintain their chastity together with their obedience. 2. And if any say, I have done my best, and yet am under a necessity of marriage; and am I not then bound to marry though my Parents forbid me? I answer it is not to be believed: Either you have not done your best, or else you are not under a necessity: And your urgency being your own fault, (seeing you should subdue it) God still obligeth you both to subdue your Vice, and to obey your Parents. 3. But if there should be any one that hath such an (incredible) necessity of marriage, he is to procure some others to sollicite his Parents for their consent, and if he cannot obtain it, some say, it is his duty to marry without it: I should rather say that it is minus malum, the lesser evil: and that having cast himself into some necessity of sinning, it is still his duty to avoid both, and to choose neither; but it is the smaller sin to choose to disobey his Parents, rather than to live in the flames of lust and the filth of unchastity. And some Divines say, that in such a case a Son should appeal to the Magistrate, as a superiour authority above the Father. But others think, 1. That this leaveth it as difficult to resolve what he shall do, if the Magistrate also consent not: And, 2. That it doth but resolve one difficulty by a greater: it being very doubtful whether in Domestick cases, the authority of the Parent or the Magistrate be the greater.

§. 11. 3. The same Answer serveth as to the third Question, when Parents forbid you to marry the persons that you are most fond of. For such fondness (whether you call it Lust or Love) as will not stoop to reason and your Parents wills, is inordinate and sinful: And therefore the thing that God bindeth you to, is by his appointed means to subdue it, and to obey: But if you cannot, the accidents and probable consequents must tell you which is the lesser evil.

§. 12. Quest. But what if the Child have promised marriage, and the Parents be against it? Answ. If the Child was under the Parents Government, and short of years of discretion also, the promise is void for want of capacity: And if the child was at age, yet the promise was a sinful promise, as to the promising act, and also as to the thing promised during the Parents dissent: If the actus promittendi only had been sinful (the promise making) the promise might nevertheless oblige (unless it were null as well as sinful) But the materia promissa being sinful (the matter promised) to marry while Parents do dissent, such a child is bound to forbear the fulfilling of that promise till the Parents do consent or die. And yet he is bound from marrying any other (unless he be disobliged by the person that he hath made the promise to), because he knoweth not but his Parents may consent hereafter: And when ever they consent or die, the promise then is obligatory, and must be performed. Quest.

§. 13. The 3. Chap. of Num. enableth Parents to disoblige a Daughter that is in their house, from a Vow made to God, so be it they disallow it at the first hearing. Hence there are two doubts arise: 1. Whether this power extend not to the disobliging ing of a promiſe or contract of Matrimony? 2. Whether it extend not to a Son as well as a Daughter. And moſt Expoſitors are for the affirmative of both caſes. But I have ſhewed you before that it is upon uncertain grounds: 1. It is uncertain whether God, who would thus give up his own right in caſe of Vowing, will alſo give away the right of others without their conſent in caſe of Promiſes or Contracts. And, 2. It is uncertain whether this be not an indulgence only of the weaker ſex, ſeeing many words in the Text ſeem plainly to intimate ſo much. And it is dangerous upon our own preſumptions to ſtretch Gods Laws to every thing we imagine there is the ſame reaſon for: Seeing our imaginations may ſo eaſily be deceived: And God could have expreſt ſuch particulars if he would: And therefore (when there is not clear ground for our inferences in the Text) it is but to ſay Thus and thus God ſhould have ſaid, when we cannot ſay, Thus he hath ſaid: We muſt not make Laws under pretence of expounding them: Whatſoever God commandeth thee, take heed that thou do it: Thou ſhalt add nothing thereto, nor take ought therefrom, Deut. 12. 32.

Queſt. §. 14. Queſt. If the Queſtion therefore be not of the ſinfulneſs, but the nullity of ſuch Promiſes of children, becauſe of the diſſent of Parents, for my part I am not able to prove any ſuch nullity. It is ſaid, that They are not ſui juris, their own, and therefore their promiſes are null: But if they have attained to years, and uſe of diſcretion, they are naturally ſo far ſui juris as to be capable of diſpoſing even of their ſouls, and therefore of their fidelity: They can oblige themſelves to God or man: Though they are not ſo far ſui juris as to be ungoverned: For ſo no child, no Subject, no Man is ſui juris; ſeeing all are under the Government of God: And yet if a man promiſe to do a thing ſinful, it is not a nullity, but a ſin: Not no promiſe but a ſinful promiſe. A nullity is when the Actus promittendi is Reputative nullus vel non actus: And when no Promiſe is made, then none can be broken.

Queſt. §. 15. Queſt. But if the Queſtion be only how far ſuch Promiſes muſt be kept? I anſwer by ſumming up what I have ſaid: 1. If the child had not the uſe of reaſon, the want of Natural capacity, proveth the Promiſe null: Here ignorantis non eſt conſenſus. 2. If he was at age and uſe of Reaſon, then 1. If the Promiſing act only was ſinful (as before I ſaid of Vows,) the Promiſe muſt be both repented of, and kept. It muſt be repented of becauſe it was a ſin: It muſt be kept becauſe it was a real Promiſe, and the matter lawful. 2. If the Promiſing act was not only a ſin but a nullity (by any other reaſon,) then it is no obligation. 3. If not only the Promiſing act be ſin, but alſo the matter Promiſed (as is marrying without Parents conſent,) then it muſt be repented of, and not performed till it become lawful: Becauſe an oath or promiſe cannot bind a man to violate the Laws of God.

Queſt. §. 16. Queſt. But what if the parties be actually Married without the Parents conſent? Muſt they live together, or be ſeparated? Anſw. 1. If Marriage be conſummated per carnalem concubitum, by the carnal knowledge of each other, I ſee no reaſon to imagine that Parents can diſſolve it, or prohibit their cohabitation: For the Marriage (for ought I ever ſaw) is not proved a nullity, but only a ſin, and their concubitus is not fornication: And Parents cannot forbid Husband and Wife to live together: And in Marriage they do (really though ſinfully) forſake Father and Mother and cleave to each other, and ſo are now from under their Government (though not diſobliged from all obedience) 2. But if Marriage be only by verbal conjunction, Divines are diſagreed what is to be done: Some think that it is no perfect Marriage ante concubitum, and alſo that their conjunction hath but the nature of a promiſe (to be faithful to each other as Husband and Wife): And therefore the Matter promiſed is unlawful till Parents conſent, and ſo not to be done. But I rather think (as moſt do) that it hath all that is eſſential to Marriage ante concubitum; and that this Marriage is more than a Promiſe of fidelity de futuro, even an actual delivery of themſelves to one another de præſenti alſo: And that the thing promiſed in Marriage is lawful: For though it be a ſin to marry without Parents conſent, yet when that is paſt, it is lawful for married perſons to come together though Parents conſent not: And therefore that ſuch Marriage is valid and to be continued though it was ſinfully made.

§. 17. 3. A third ſort that are not called of God to marry, are they that have Abſolutely vowed not to marry: Such may not marry, unleſs Providence diſoblige them, by making it become an indiſpenſible duty: And I can remember but two ways by which this may be done. 1. In caſe there be any of ſo ſtrong Luſt, as no other lawful means but marriage can ſuffice to maintain their chaſtity: To ſuch marriage is as great a duty, as to eat or drink, or cover ones nakedneſs, or to hinder another from uncleanneſs or lying or ſtealing or the like. And if you ſhould make a Vow that you will never eat or drink, or that you will go naked, or that you will never hinder any one from uncleanneſs, lying or ſtealing, it is unlawful to fulfil this vow. But all the doubt is, whether there be any ſuch perſons that cannot overcome, or reſtrain their luſt by any other lawful means? I ſuppoſe it is poſſible there may be ſuch: But I believe it is not one of an hundred: If they will but practiſe the Directions before given, Tom. 1. Chap. 8. Part. 5. Tit. 1. & 2. I ſuppoſe their luſt may be reſtrained: And if that prevail not, the help of a Phyſician may: And if that prevail not, ſome think the help of a Surgeon may be lawful, to keep a Vow, in caſe it be not an apparent hazard of life. For Chriſt ſeemeth to allow of it, in mentioning it without reproof, Mat. 19. 12. If that text be to be underſtood of caſtration: But moſt expoſitors think it is meant only of a confirmed reſolution of chaſtity: And ordinarily other means may make this needleſs: And if it be either needleſs or perilous it is unlawful without doubt. Of Vows of Chaſtity.

§ 18. 2. The ſecond way by which God may diſpenſe with a Vow of chaſtity is, by making the marriage of a perſon become of apparent neceſſity to the publick ſafety. And I am able to diſcern but one inſtance that will reach the caſe: And that is, if a King have Vowed chaſtity, and in caſe he marry not, his next heir being a profeſſed enemy of Chriſtianity, the Religion, ſafety and happineſs of the whole Nation is apparently in danger to be overthrown. I think the caſe of ſuch a King is like the caſe of a Father that had vowed never to provide food or rayment for his children: Or as if Ahab had vowed that no Well ſhould be digged in the Land; and when the drought cometh, it is become neceſſary to the ſaving of the peoples lives: Or as if the Ship-maſter ſhould vow that the ſhip ſhall not be pumpt; which when it leaketh doth become neceſſary to ſave their lives. In theſe caſes God diſobligeth you from your Vow by a mutation of the matter: And a Paſtor may diſpenſe with it Declaratively: But for the Pope or any mortal man to pretend to more, is impiety and deceit.

§. 19. Queſt. May the aged marry that are frigid, impotent, and uncapable of procreation? Anſw. Yes, God hath not forbidden them: And there are other lawful ends of marriage, as mutual help and comfort, &c. which may make it lawful. Queſt. Wives are young mens miſtreſſes, companions for the middle age, and old mens nurſes: So that a man may have a quarrel to marry when he will. Lord Bacon Eſſay.

§. 20. Direct. 2. To reſtrain your inordinate forwardneſs to marriage, keep the ordinary inconveniencies of it in memory: Ruſh not into a ſtate of life, the inconveniencies of which you never thought on. If you have a call to it, the knowledge of the difficulties and duties will be neceſſary to your preparation, and faithful undergoing them: If you have no call, this knowledge is neceſſary to keep you off. I ſhall firſt name the inconveniences common to all, and then ſome that are proper to the Miniſters of the Goſpel, which have greater reaſon to avoid a married life than other men have.

§. 21. 1. Marriage ordinarily plungeth men into exceſs of worldly cares: It multiplyeth their buſineſs, and uſually their wants. There are many things to mind and do: There are many to provide for: And many perſons you will have to do with; who have all of them a ſelfiſh diſpoſition and intereſt, and will judge of you but according as you fit their ends. And among many perſons and buſineſſes, ſome things will frequently fall croſs: You muſt look for many rubs and diſappointments. And your natures are not ſo ſtrong, content and patient, as to bear all theſe without moleſtation.

§. 22. 2. Your wants in a married ſtate are hardlier ſupplied, than in a ſingle life. You will want ſo many things which before you never wanted, and have ſo many to provide for and content; that all will ſeem little enough, if you had never ſo much. Then you will be often at your wits end, taking thought for the future, what you ſhould eat, and what you ſhould drink, and werewith ſhall you and yours be clothed;

§. 23. 3. Your wants in a married ſtate are far hardlier born than in a ſingle ſtate. It is far eaſier to bear perſonal wants our ſelves, than to ſee the wants of Wife and Children: Affection will make their ſufferings pinch you: And ingenuity will make it a trouble to your mind, to need the help of Servants, and to want that which is fit for Servants to expect. But eſpecially the diſcontent and impatience of your Family will more diſcontent you than all their wants. You cannot help your Wife, and Children; and Servants to contented minds: O what a heart cutting tryal is it, to hear them repining, murmuring and complaining? To hear them call for that which you have not for them; and grieve at their condition, and exclaim of you, or of the providence of God, becauſe they have it not? And think not that Riches will free you from theſe diſcontents: For as the Rich are but few, ſo they that have much have much to do with it: A great foot muſt have a great ſhoo: When poor men want ſome ſmall ſupplies, Rich men may want great ſums, or larger proviſions, which the poor can eaſily be without. And their condition lifting them up to greater pride, doth torment them with greater diſcontents. How few in all the world that have Families, are content with their Eſtates?

§. 24. 4. Hereupon a married life containeth far more Temptations to worldlineſs or Covetouſneſs, than a ſingle ſtate doth. For when you think you need more, you will deſire more: And when you find all too little to ſatisfie thoſe that you provide for, you will meaſure your Eſtate by their deſires, and be apt to think that you have never enough. Birds and Beaſts that have young ones to provide for, are moſt hungry and rapacious. You have ſo many now to ſcrape for, that you will think you are ſtill in want: It is not only till Death that you muſt now lay up; but you muſt provide for Children that ſurvive you. And while you take them to be as your ſelves, you have two Generations now to make proviſions for: And moſt men are as Covetous for their poſterity, as if it were for themſelves.

§. 25. 5. And hereupon you are hindered from works of Charity to others: Wife and Children are the devouring gulf that ſwalloweth all. If you had but your ſelves to provide for, a little would ſerve: And you could deny your own deſires of unneceſſary things; and ſo might have plentiful proviſion for good works: But by that time Wife and Children are provided for, and all their importunate deſires ſatisfied, there is nothing conſiderable left for pious or charitable uſes: Lamentable experience proclaimeth this.

§. 26. 6. And hereby it appeareth how much a married ſtate doth ordinarily hinder men from honouring their profeſſion. It is their vows of ſingle life that hath occaſioned the Papiſts to do ſo many works of publick charity, as is boaſted of for the honour of their Sect: For when they have no Children to bequeath it to, and cannot keep it themſelves, it is eaſie to them to leave it to ſuch uſes as will pacifie their Conſciences moſt, and advance their names. And if it ſhould prove as good a work and as acceptable to God, to educate your own Children piouſly for his ſervice, as to relieve the Children of the poor, yet it is not ſo much regarded in the world, nor bringeth ſo much honour to Religion. One hundred pound given to the poor, ſhall more advance the Reputation of your liberality and virtue than a Thouſand pound given to your own Children, tho' it be with as pious an end, to train them up for the ſervice of the Church. And tho' this is inconſiderable, as your own honour is concerned in it, yet it is conſiderable, as the honour of Religion, and the good of Souls is concerned in it.

§. 27. 7. And it is no ſmall patience which the natural imbecillity of the Female ſex requireth you to prepare. Except it be very few that are patient and man-like, Women are commonly of potent Fantaſies, and tender, paſſionate, impatient ſpirits, eaſily caſt into anger, or jealouſie, or diſcontent: And of weak underſtandings, and therefore unable to reform themſelves. They are betwixt a man and a Child: Some few have more of the man, and many have more of the Child; but moſt are but in a middle ſtate. Weakneſs naturally inclineth perſons to be froward and hard to pleaſe; as we ſee in children, old people, and ſick perſons: They are like a ſore diſtempered body: You can ſcarce touch them but you hurt them. With too many you can ſcarce tell how to ſpeak or look but you diſpleaſe them. If you ſhould be very well verſt in the art of pleaſing, and ſet your ſelves to it with all your care, as if you made it your very buſineſs and had little elſe to do, yet it would put you hard to it, to pleaſe ſome weak impatient perſons, if not quite ſurpaſs your ability and skill. And the more you love them the more grievous it will be, to ſee them ſtill in diſcontents, aweary of their condition, and to hear the clamorous expreſſions of their diſquiet minds. Nay the very multitude of words that very many are addicted to, doth make ſome mens lives a continual burden to them. Mark what the Scripture ſaith, Prov. 21. 9. It is better to dwell in a corner of the houſe top, than with a brawling woman in a wide houſe, Ver. 19. It is better to dwell in the wilderneſs, than with a contentious and an angry woman. So 25. Ver. 24. And Prov. 27. 15. A continual dropping in a very rainy day, and a contentious woman are alike. Eccleſ. 7. 28. One man among a thouſand have I found: But a woman among all thoſe have I not found.

§. 28. 8. And there is ſuch a meeting of faults and imperfections on both ſides, that maketh it much the harder to bear the infirmities of others aright. If one party only were froward and impatient, the ſtedfaſtneſs of the other might make it the more tolerable: But we are all ſick in ſome meaſure of the ſame diſeaſe: And when weakneſs meeteth with weakneſs, and pride with pride, and paſſion with paſſion, it exaſperateth the diſeaſe and doubleth the ſuffering. And our corruption is ſuch, that tho' our intent be to help one another in our duties, yet we are apter far to ſtir up one anothers diſtempers.

§. 29. 9. The buſineſs, care and trouble of a married life, is a great temptation to call down our thoughts from God, and to divert them from the one thing neceſſary, Luke 10. 42. and to diſtract the mind, and make it undiſpoſed to holy duty and to ſerve God with a divided heart, as if we ſerved him not. How hard is it to pray, or meditate with any ſerious fervency, when you come out of a crowd of cares and buſineſs? Here what Saint Paul ſaith, 1 Cor. 7. 7, 8. For I would that all men were as I my ſelf——I ſay to the unmarried and the widows, It is good for them if they abide even as I, 26, 27, 28. I ſuppoſe therefore that this is good for the preſent diſtreſs, that it is good for a man ſo to be:——ſuch ſhall have trouble in the fleſh. 32, 33. But I would have you be without carefulneſs: He that is unmarried careth for the things of the Lord, how he may pleaſe the Lord: But he that he is married careth for the things of the world how he may pleaſe his wife; 34. 35. The unmarried woman careth for the things of the Lord, that ſhe may be holy in body and in Spirit: But ſhe that is married careth for the things of the world, how ſhe may pleaſe her Husband. And this I ſpeak for your own profit, not that I may caſt a ſnare upon you, but for that which is comely, and that ye may attend upon the Lord without diſtraction. 37. 38. He that ſtandeth ſtedfaſt in his heart, having no neceſſity, but hath power over his own will, and hath ſo decreed in his heart that he will keep his Virgin, doth well. So then he that marrieth doth well, but he that marrieth not doth better. And mark Chriſt's own words, Mat. 19. 11. His Diſciples ſay unto him, if the caſe of a man be ſo with his wife, it is not good to marry. But he ſaid unto them, All men cannot receive this ſaying, ſave they to whom it is given——He that is is able to receive it, let him receive it.

§. 30. 10. The buſineſs of a married ſtate doth commonly devour almoſt all your time, ſo that little is left for holy contemplations, or ſerious thoughts of the life to come: All Gods ſervice is contracted and thruſt into a corner, and done as it were on the by: The world will ſcarce allow you time to meditate, or pray, or read the Scripture: You think your ſelves (as Martha) under a great neceſſity of diſpatching your buſineſs, than of ſitting at Chriſt's feet to hear his word. O that ſingle perſons knew (for the moſt part) the preciouſneſs of their leiſure, and how free they are to attend the ſervice of God, and learn his Word, in compariſon of the married!

§. 31. 11. There is ſo great a diverſity of temperaments and degrees of underſtanding, that there are ſcarce any two perſons in the world, but there is ſome unſuitableneſs between them. Like ſtones that have ſome unevenneſs, that maketh them lie crooked in the building; ſome croſneſs there will be of opinion, or diſpoſition, or intereſt, or will, by nature, or by cuſtom and education; which will ſtir up frequent diſcontents.

§. 32. 12. There is a great deal of duty which Husband and Wife do owe to one another; As to inſtruct, admoniſh, pray, watch over one another, and to be continual helpers to each other in order to their everlaſting happineſs; and patiently to bear with the infirmities of each other: And to the weak and backward heart of man, the addition of ſo much duty doth add to their wearineſs how good ſoever the work be in it ſelf; And men ſhould feel their ſtrength, before they undertake more work.

§. 33. 13. And the more they Love each other, the more they participate in each others griefs; And one or other will be frequently under ſome ſort of ſuffering: If one be ſick, or lame, or pained, or defamed, or wronged, or diſquieted in mind, or by temptation fall into any wounding ſin, the other bear eth part of the diſtreſs. Therefore before you undertake to bear all the burdens of another, and ſuffer in all anothers hurts, it concerneth you to obſerve your ſtrength, how much more you have than your own burdens do require.

§. 34. 14. And if you ſhould marry one that proveth ungodly, how exceeding great would the affliction be? If you loved them, your Souls would be in continual danger by them: They would be the powerfuleſt inſtruments in the world to pervert your judgments, to deaden your hearts, to take you off from a holy life, to kill your prayers, to corrupt your lives, and to damn your Souls: And if you ſhould have the grace to ſcape the ſnare, and ſave your ſelves, it would be by ſo much the greater difficulty and ſuffering, as the temptation is the greater: And what a heart-breaking would it be to converſe ſo nearly with a child of the Devil, that is like to lie for ever in Hell? The daily thoughts of it would be a daily death to you.

§. 35. 15. Women eſpecially muſt expect ſo much ſuffering in a married life, that if God had not put into them a natural inclination to it, and ſo ſtrong a love to their children, as maketh them patient under the moſt annoying troubles, the world would ere this have been at an end, through their refuſal of ſo calamitous a life. Their ſickneſs in breeding, their pain in bringing forth, with the danger of their lives, the tedious trouble night and day which they have with their children in their nurſing and their childhood; beſides their ſubjection to their Husbands, and continual care of family affairs; being forced to conſume their lives in a multitude of low and troubleſome buſineſſes. All this and much more would have utterly deterred that Sex from marriage, if Nature it ſelf had not enclined them to it.

§. 36. 16. And O what abundance of duty is incumbent upon both the Parents towards every Child for the ſaving of their Souls? What unceſſant labour is neceſſary in Teaching them the Doctrine of Salvation? Which made God twice over charge them to teach his word diligently (or ſharpen them) unto their Children, and to talk of them when they ſit in their Houſes, and when they walk by the way, and when they lie down, and when they riſe up. Deut. 6. 6, 7. & 11. 19. What abundance of obſtinate rooted corruptions are in the hearts of Children which Parents muſt by all poſſible diligence root up? O how great and hard a work is it, to ſpeak to them of their ſins and Saviour, of their God, their Souls, and the life to come, with that reverence, gravity, ſeriouſneſs, and unwearied conſtancy as the weight of the matter doth require? And to ſuit all their actions and carriage to the ſame ends? Little do moſt that have Children know, what abundance of care and labour God will require of them, for the ſanctifying and ſaving of their Childrens Souls. Conſider your fitneſs for ſo great a work before you undertake it.

Art thou diſcontented with thy childleſs ſtate? Remember that of all the Roman Kings, not one of them left the Crown to his Son. Plutarch. de tranq. anim.

§. 37. 17. It is abundance of affliction that is ordinarily to be expected in the miſcarriages of Children, when you have done your beſt, much more if you neglect your duty, as even godly Parents too often do. After all your pains, and care, and labour, you muſt look that the fooliſhneſs of ſome, and the obſtinacy of others, and the unthankfulneſs of thoſe that you have loved beſt, ſhould even pierce your hearts. You muſt look that many vices ſhould ſpring up and trouble you; and be the more grievous by how much your Children are the more dear: And O what a grief it is to breed up a Child to be a ſervant of the Devil, and an enemy of God and godlineſs, and a perſecutor of the Church of God? And to think of his lying in Hell for ever? And alas how great is the number of ſuch?

§. 38. 18. And it is not a little care and trouble, that servants will put you to: so difficult is it to get those that are good, much more to make them good; so great is your duty in teaching them, and minding them of the matters of their salvation; so frequent will be the displeasures about your work and worldly business; and every one of those displeasures will hinder them for receiving your instructions; that most Families are houses of Correction or Affliction.

§. 39. 19. And these marriage crosses are not for a year, but during life: They deprive you of all hope of relief while you live together: There is no room for Repentance, nor casting about for a way to escape them. Death only must be your relief. And therefore such a change of your condition should be seriously fore-thought on, and all the troubles be foreseen and pondered.

§. 40. 20. And if Love make you dear to one another, your parting at death will be the more grievous: And when you first come together, you know that such a parting you must have: Thro' all the course of your lives you may foresee it: One of you must see the body of your Beloved, turned into a cold and ghastly clod: You must follow it weeping to the grave and leave it there in dust and darkness: There it must lie rotting as a loathsome lump, whose sight or smell you cannot endure; till you shortly follow it, and lie down your self in the same condition. All these are the ordinary concomitants and consequents of Marriage; easily and quickly spoken, but long and hard to be endured! No fictions, but realities, and less than most have reason to expect. And should such a life be rashly ventured on in a pang of lust? Or such a burden be undertaken without fore thought?

Of Ministers Marriage.

§. 41. But especially the Ministers of the Gospel should think what they do, and think again, before they enter upon a married life. Not that it is simply unlawful for them, or that they are to be tied from it by a law, as they are in the Kingdom of Rome, for carnal ends and with odious effects: But so great a hinderance ordinarily is this troublesome state of life to the Sacred Ministration which they undertake, that a very clear call should be expected for their satisfaction. That I be not tedious, consider well but of these four things. 1. How well will a life of so much care and business agree to you, that have time little enough for the greater work which you have undertaken? Do you know what you have to do in publick and private? in reading, meditating, praying, preaching, instructing personally, and from house to house? And do you know of how great importance it is? Even for the saving of mens Souls? And have you time to spare for so much worldly cares and business? Are you not charged, 1 Tim. 4. 15. Meditate on these things: Give thy self wholly to them. 2 Tim. 2. 4. No man that warreth, entangleth himself with the affairs of this life, that he may please him that hath chosen him to be a Souldier. Is not this plain? Souldiers use not to look to Farms and Servants. If you are Faithful Ministers, I dare confidently say, you will find all your time so little for your proper work, that many a time you will groan and say, O how short and swift is time! and O how great and slow is my work and duty! 2. Consider how well a life of so great diversions, avocations and distractions, doth suit with a Mind devoted to God, that should be always free and ready for his service. Your Studies are on such great and mysterious subjects, that they require the whole mind, and all too little. To resolve the many difficulties that are before you, to prepare those suitable convincing words, which may pierce and perswade the hearers hearts to get within the bosome of an Hypocrite: to follow on the word till it attain its effect, and to deal with poor Souls according to their great necessity, and handle God's word according to its Holiness and Majesty, these are things that require a whole man, and are not employments for a divided or distracted mind: The talking of Women, and the crying of Children, and the cares and business of the world are ill preparations or attendants on these Studies. 3. Consider well whether a life of so great disturbance be agreeable to one whose Affections should be taken up for God: and whose work must be all done, not formally and affectedly with the lips alone, but seriously with all the heart? If your Heart and warm Affections be at any time left behind, the life and power, the beauty and glory of your work is lost. How dead will your studies and praying, and preaching, and conference be? And can you keep those Affections warm and vigorous for God, and take up with Heaven and Heavenly things, which are disturbed with the cares and crosses of the world, and taken up with carnal matters? 4. And consider also how well that indigent life will agree to one that by Charity and good works should second his Doctrine, and win mens Souls to the love of Holiness: If you feed not the Bodies of the Poor, they will less relish the food of the Soul: Nay, if you abound not above others in good works, the blind malicious world will see nothing that is good in you; but will say, You have good words, but where are your good works? What abundance have I known hardened against the Gospel and Religion, by a common fame, that these Preachers are as covetous, and worldly, and uncharitable as any others: And it must be something extraordinary that must confute such fame. And what abundance of success have I seen of the labours of those Ministers, who give all they have in works of Charity? And tho' a Rich and Resolved man may do some good in a married state, yet commonly it is next to nothing, as to the ends now mentioned: Wife, and Children, and Family-necessities devour all, if you have never so much. And some provision must be made for them, when you are dead: And the maintainance of the Ministry is not so great as to suffice well for all this, much less for any eminent works of Charity besides! Never reckon upon the doing of much good to the Poor, if you have Wives and Children of your own! Such instances are Rarities and wonders. All will be too little for your selves. Whereas if all that were given to the Poor which goeth to the maintainance of your Families, you little know how much it would reconcile the minds of the ungodly, and further the success of your Ministerial work.

A single life doth well with Churchmen: For Charity will hardly water the ground, where it must fill a Pool. Lord Bacon Essay 8 The greatest works and foundations have been from childless men, who have sought to express the image of their minds, that have none of their Body: So the care of posterity, hath been most in them that had no posterity.

Lord Bacon Essay 7. He that hath a Wife and Children hath given hostages to Fortune: For they are impediments to great Enterprises. The best works and of greatest merit, for the publick, have proceeded from unmarried and Childless men. Id. ibid. Essay 8.

Non sum ad rem rusticam aptus animo fit. Ciceron. Epist. ad Familiar.

§. 42. Direct. 3. If God call you to a married life, expect all these troubles, or most of them; and make particular preparation for each Temptation, Cross and Duty which you must expect. Think not that you are entring into a state of meer delight: Lest it prove but a fools Paradise to you. See that you be furnished with Marriage-strength and patience, for the duties and sufferings of a married state, before you venture on it. Especially, 1. Be well provided against Temptations to a Worldly mind and life: For here you are like to be most violently and dangerously assaulted. 2. See that you be well provided with Conjugal affections: For they are necessary both to the Duties and Sufferings of a married life: And you should not enter upon the state without the necessary preparations. 3. See that you be well provided with Marriage-prudence and understanding, that you may be able to instruct and edifie your Families, and may live with them as men of knowledge, 1 Pet. 3. 7. and may manage all your business with discretion, discretion, Psal. 112. 15. 4. See that you be provided with Resolvedness and Constancy, that you vex not your self and Relations by too late Repentings; and come not off with a Had I wist, or non putaram. Levity and mutability is no fit preparative for a state that only death can change. Let the Love and Resolutions which brought you into that state, continue with you to the last. 5. See that you be provided with a diligence answerable to the greatness of your undertaken Duties. A slothful mind is unfit for one that entereth himself voluntarily upon so much business; as a cowardly mind is unfit for him that listeth himself a Souldier for the Wars. 6. See that you are well provided with Marriage patience; to bear with the Infirmities of others, and undergo the daily crosses of your life, which your business, and necessities, and your own Infirmities will unavoidably infer. To Marry without all this preparation, is as foolish as to go to Sea without the necessary preparations for your Voyage, or to go to War without Armor or Ammunition, or to go to work without Tools or Strength, or to go to buy Meat in the Market when you have no Money.

§. 43. Direct. 4. Take special care that fansie and passion over-rule not Reason and Friends advice in the choice of your condition, or of the person. I know you must have Love to those that you match with: But that Love must be Rational, and such as you can justifie in the severest tryal, by the evidences of worth and fitness in the person whom you love. To say you Love, but you know not why, is more beseeming Children or mad folks, than those that are soberly entring upon a change of life of so great importance to them. A blind love which maketh you think a person excellent and amiable, who in the eyes of the wisest that are impartial, is nothing so, or maketh you overvalue the person whom you fansie, and be fond of one as some admirable creature, that in the eyes of others is next to contemptible, this is but the Index and evidence of your folly. And tho' you please your selves in it, and honour it with the name of Love, there is none that is acquainted with it, that will give it any better name than LUST or FANCY. And the marriage that is made by Lust and Fancy, will never tend to solid Content or true Felicity: But either it will feed till death on the fewel that kindled it, and then go out in everlasting shame: or else more ordinarily it proveth but a blaze, and turneth into loathing and weariness of each other. And because this Passion of Lust (called Love) is such a besotting blinding thing, (like the longing of a woman with child) it is the duty of all that feel any touch of it to kindle upon their hearts, to call it presently to the trial, and to quench it effectually, and till that be done (if they have any relicts of wit or reason) to suspect their own apprehensions, and much more to trust the judgment and advice of others.

How to cure lustful Love.

§. 44. The means to quench this Lust called Love, I have largely opened before. I shall now only remember you of these few. 1. Keep asunder, and at a sufficient distance from the person that you dote upon. The nearness of the Fire and Fewel causeth the combustion. Fancy and Lust are enflamed by the Senses. Keep out of sight, and in time the Feaver may abate. 2. Overvalue not vanity; Think not highly of a Silken Coat, or of the great Names of Ancestors, or of Money, or Lands, or of a painted or a spotted face, nor of that natural comeliness called beauty: Judge not of things as Children, but as Men: Play not the fools in magnifying trifles, and overlooking inward real worth. Would you fall in Love with a Flower or Picture at this rate? Bethink you what work the Pox, or any other withering sickness will make with that silly beauty which you so admire; think what a spectacle Death will make it: And how many thousands once more beautiful, are turned now to common Earth. And how many thousand souls are now in Hell, that by a beautiful body were drowned in lust, and tempted to neglect themselves? and how few in the world you can name that were ever much the better for it? what a childish thing it is to dote on a Book of Tales and lies, because it hath a beautiful gilded cover? and to undervalue the writings of the wise, because they have a plain and homely outside! 3. Rule your thoughts, and let them not run masterless as fansie shall command them. If Reason cannot call off your thoughts from following a lustful desire and imagination, no wonder if one that rideth on such an unbridled Colt be cast into the dirt. 4. Live not idly, but let the business of your callings take up your time, and employ your thoughts. An idle fleshly mind is the carkass where the Vermin of Lust doth crawl, and the nest where the Devil hatcheth both this and many other pernicious sins. 5. Lastly and chiefly, forget not the concernments of your souls: Remember how near you are to Eternity, and what work you have to do for your salvation: Forget not the presence of God, nor the approach of death: Look oft by faith into Heaven and Hell, and keep Conscience tender; and then I warrant you, you will find something else to mind than Lust; and greater matters than a silly carkass to take up your thoughts, and you will feel that Heavenly Love within you, which will extinguish earthly carnal Love.

§. 45. Direct. 5. Be not too hasty in your choice or resolution, but deliberate well, and throughly know the Person on whom so much of the comfort or sorrow of your life will necessarily depend. Where Repentance hath no place, there is the greater care to be used to prevent it. Reason requireth you to be well acquainted with those that you trust but with an important secret, much more with all your honour or Estates: and most of all, with one whom you must trust with so much of the comfort of your lives, and your advantages for a better life. No care and caution can be too great in a matter of so great importance. Dir. 5.

§. 46. Direct. 6. Let no carnal Motives perswade you to join your self to an ungodly person; but let the holy fear of God be preferred in your choice before all worldly excellency whatsoever. Marry not a Swine for a Golden trough: nor an ugly soul for a comely body. Consider, 1. You will else give cause of great suspicion that you are your selves ungodly: For they that know truly the misery of an unrenewed soul, and the excellency of the Image of God, can never be indifferent whether they be joined to the Godly or the Ungodly; To prefer things temporal, before things spiritual habitually, and in the predominant acts of heart and life, is the certain Character of a graceless soul! And he that in so near a case doth deliberately prefer Riches or Comliness in another, before the Image and Fear of God, doth give a very dangerous sign, of such a graceless Heart and Will. If you set more by Beauty or Riches than by Godliness, you have the surest mark that you are ungodly. If you do not set more by them, how come you deliberately to prefer them? How could you do a thing that detecteth your ungodliness, and condemneth you more clearly? And do you not shew that you either believe not the Word of God, or else that you love him not, and regard not his interest? Otherwise you would take his friends as your friends, and his enemies as your enemies. Tell me, would you marry an Enemy of your own, before any change and Reconciliation? I am confident you would not. And can you so easily marry an enemy of God? If you know not that all the ungodly and unsanctified are his Enemies, you know not, or believe not the word of God: which telleth you that the carnal mind is enmity against God: For it is not subject Dir. 6.

yet to the Love of God, nor indeed can be. So then they that are in the flesh cannot please God, Rom. 8. 7, 8. 2. If you fear God your selves, your chief end in marriage will be to have one that will be a helper to your Soul, and further you in the way to Heaven. But if you marry with a person that is ungodly, either you have no such end, or else you may easily know you have no wiselier chosen the means, than if you had chosen water to kindle the fire, or a Bed of Snow to keep you warm. Will an ignorant or ungodly person assist you in Prayer and holy watchfulness, and stir you up to the Love of God, and a Heavenly mind? And can you so willingly lose all the spiritual benefit, which you should principally desire and intend? 3. Nay, instead of a Helper you will have a continual hinderer: When you should go to Prayer, you will have one to pull you back, or to fill your minds with diversions or disquietments! when you should keep close to God in holy Meditations, you will have one to cast in worldly thoughts, or trouble your minds with vanity or vexation. When you should discourse of God and Heavenly things, you will have one to stifle such discourse, and fill your ears with idle impertinent or worldly talk. And one such a hinderance so near you, in your bosome, will be worse than a thousand further off. As an ungodly heart which is next of all to us, is our greatest hinderance, so an ungodly Husband or Wife, which is next to that, is worse to us than many ungodly Neighbours. And if you think that you can well enough overcome such hinderances, and your heart is so good, that no such clogs can keep it down, you do but shew that you have a proud unhumbled heart, that is prepared for a fall. If you know your selves, and the badness of your hearts, you will know that you have no need of hinderances in any Holy work, and that all the helps in the world are little enough, and too little to keep your Souls in the Love of God. 4. And such an ungodly Companion will be to you a continual Temptation to sin. Instead of stirring you up to good, you will have one to stir you up to Evil, to Passion, or Discontent, or Covetousness, or Pride, or Revenge, or Sensuality: And can you not sin enough without such a Tempter? 5. And what a continual grief will it be to you, if you are believers, to have a child of the Devil in your Bosome? And to think how far you must be separated at death? And in what Torments those must lie for ever, that are so dear unto you now? 6. Yea, such Companions will be uncapable of the principal part of your Love. You may love them as Husbands or Wives, but you cannot love them as Saints and Members of Christ. And how great a want this will be in your Love, those know that know what this holy Love is.

Quest. §. 47. Quest. But how can I tell who are Godly, when there is so much Hypocrisie in the World? Answ. At least you may know who is ungodly if it be palpably discovered. I take not a barren knowledge for ungodliness, nor a nimble tongue for Godliness: Judge of them by their Love: Such as a mans Love is, such is the Man: If they Love the word, and servants and worship of God, and Love a Holy life, and hate the contrary, you may close with such, tho' their knowledge be small, and their parts be weak: But if they have no Love to these, but had rather live a common, careless, carnal life, you may well avoid them as ungodly.

Quest. §. 48. Quest. But if ungodly persons may marry, why may not I marry with one that is ungodly? Answ. Tho' Dogs and Swine may joyn in Generating, it followeth not, Men or Women may joyn with them. Pardon the Comparison, (while Christ calleth the wicked Dogs and Swine, Mat. 7. 6.) it doth but shew the baseness of your consequence. Unbelievers may marry, and yet we may not marry with Unbelievers: 2 Cor. 6. 14, 15, 16. Be ye not unequally yoaked together with unbelievers: For what fellowship hath Righteousness with Unrighteousness? and what Communion hath Light with Darkness? and what Concord hath Christ with Belial? Or what part hath he that believeth with an Infidel? And what agreement hath the Temple of God with Idols? For ye are the Temple of the living God——wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, &c.

Quest. §. 49. Quest. But I make no doubt but they may be converted: God can call them when he will: If there be but Love, they will easily be won to be of the mind as those they Love are? Answ. 1. Then it seems because you Love an ungodly person, you will be easily turned to be ungodly. If so, you are not much better already. If Love will not draw you to their mind to be ungodly, why should you think Love will draw them to your mind to be Godly? Are you stronger in Grace than they are in Sin? 2. If you know well what Grace is, and what a sinful unrenewed Soul is, you would not think it so easie a matter to convert a Soul. Why are there so few Converted, if it be so easie a thing? You cannot make your selves better by adding higher degrees to the Grace you have: Much less can you make another better, by giving them the Grace which they have not. 3. It's true that God is able to Convert them when he will: And it's true that for ought I know it may be done. But what of that? Will you in so weighty a case take up with a meer possibility? God can make a Beggar Rich, and for ought you know to the contrary, he will do it: And yet you will not therefore marry a Beggar? Nor will you marry a Leper, because God can heal him? Why then should you marry an ungodly person, because God can Convert him? See it done first, if you love your peace and safety.

Quest. §. 50. Quest. But what if my Parents command me to marry an ungodly person? Answ. God having forbidden it, no Parent hath authority to command you to do so great a mischief to your self, no more than to cut your own Throats, or to dismember your bodies.

Quest. §. 51. Quest. But what if I have a necessity of Marrying, and can get none but an ungodly person? Answ. If that be really your case, that your necessity be real, and you can get no other, I think it is lawful.

Quest. §. 52. Quest. But is it not better have a good natured person that is ungodly, than an ill natured person that is Religious, (as many such are)? And may not a bad man be a good Husband? Answ. 1. A bad man may be a good Taylor, or Shoomaker, or Carpenter, or Seaman, because there is no moral Virtue necessary to the well-doing of their work. But a bad man cannot be simply a good Magistrate, or Minister, or Husband, or Parent, because there is much more moral Virtue necessary to their Duties. 2. A bad nature unmortified and untamed is inconsistent with true Godliness: Such persons may talk and profess what they please; but if any man among you seem to be Religious and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this mans Religion is vain, Jam. 1. 26. 3. I did not say that Godliness alone is all that you must look after: Tho' this be the first, yet more is necessary——

Quest. §. 53. Direct. 7. Next to the fear of God, make choice of a nature, or temperament that is not too much unsuitable to you. A crosness of Dispositions will be a continual vexation: And you will have a Domestick War instead of Love. Especially make sure of these following qualities. 1. That there be a Loving, and not a selfish nature, that hath no regard to another but for their own end. 2. That there be a Nature competently quiet and patient, and not intolerably froward, and unpleasable. 3. That there be a competency of wit: For no one can live lovingly and comfortably with a fool. 4. That there be a competent humility: For there is no quietness to be expected with the proud. 5. That there be a power to be silent, as well as to speak: For a babling tongue is a continual vexation.

Dir. 8. §. 54. Direct. 8. Next to Grace and Nature, have a due and moderate respect to Person, Education and Estate. 1. So far have respect to the Person, as that there be no unhealthfulness to make your condition over-burdensome; nor no such deformity as may hinder your affections. 2. And so far have respect to Parentage and Education as that there be no great unsuitableness of mind, nor no prejudicate opinions in Religion, which may make you too unequal. Differing opinions in Religion are much more tolerable in persons more distant, than in so near Relations. And those that are bred too high in Idleness and Luxury, must have a thro' work of Grace to make them fit for a low condition, and cure the Pride and sensuality which are taken for the honourable badges of their Gentility; And it is scarce considerable how Rich such are: For their Pride and Luxury will make even with all, and be still in greater want, than honest, contented, temperate poverty.

Dir. 9. §. 55. Direct. 9. If God call you to Marriage take notice of the Helps and Comforts of that condition, as well as of the hinderances and troubles; that you may chearfully serve God in it, in the expectation of his blessing. Tho' mans corruption have filled that and every state of life with snares and troubles, yet from the beginning it was not so; God appointed it for mutual help, and as such it may be used. As a married life hath its Temptations and Afflictions, so it hath its peculiar benefits, which you are thankfully to accept and acknowledge unto God. 1. It is a mercy in order to the propagating of a people on Earth to love and honour their Creator, and to serve God in the world and enjoy him for ever. It is no small mercy to be the Parents of a Godly Seed; and this is the end of the institution of Marriage, Mal. 2. 15. And this Parents may expect, if they be not wanting on their part; however sometimes their Children prove ungodly. 2. It is a mercy to have a faithful friend, that loveth you entirely, and is as true to you as your self, to whom you may open your mind and communicate your Affairs, and who would be ready to strengthen you, and divide the cares of your affairs and family with you, and help you to bear your Burdens, and comfort you in your Sorrows, and be the daily companion of your lives, and partaker of your Joys and Sorrows. 3. And it is a mercy to have so near a friend to be a helper to your Soul; to joyn with you in Prayer and other holy exercises; to watch over you and tell you of your Sins and dangers, and to stir up in you the Grace of God, and remember you of the life to come, and chearfully accompany you in the ways of Holiness. Prov. 19. 14. A Prudent Wife is from the Lord. Thus it is said, Prov. 18. 22. Whoso findeth a Wife findeth a good thing, and obtaineth favour of the Lord. See Prov. 31. 10, 11, 12, &c.

See Eccles. 4. 10, 11, 12.

Dir. 10. §. 56. Direct. 10. Let your Marriage Covenant be made understandingly, deliberately, heartily, in the fear of God, with a fixed Resolution faithfully to perform it. Understand well all the duties of your Relation before you enter into it: And run not upon it as Boys to a Play, but with the sense of your duty, as those that engage themselves to a great deal of work of great importance towards God and towards each other. Address your selves therefore before hand to God for Counsel, and earnestly beg his guidance, and his blessing, and run not without him nor before him. Reckon upon the worst, and foresee all Temptations which would diminish your Affections, or make you unfaithful to each other: And see that you be fortified against them all.

§. 57. Direct. 11. Be sure that God be the ultimate end of your Marriage, and that you principally choose that state of life that in it you may be most serviceable to him; and that you heartily devote your selves, and your Families unto God; that so it may be to you a sanctified condition. It is nothing but making God our Guide and End that can sanctifie our state of life. They that unfeignedly follow God's Counsel, and aim at his Glory, and do it to please him, will find God owning and blessing their Relation. But they that do it principally to please the flesh, to satisfie lust, and to increase their Estates, and to have Children surviving them to receive the fruits of their Pride and Covetousness, can expect to reap no better than they sow; and to have the Flesh, the World, and the Devil the masters of their Family, according to their own desire and choice. Dir. 11.

§. 58. Direct. 12. At your first conjunction (and through the rest of your lives) remember the day of your separation. And think not that you are setling your selves in a state of Rest or Felicity or continuance, but only assuming a Companion in your Travels: Whether you live in a married or an unmarried life, remember that you are hasting to the everlasting life, where there is neither marrying nor giving in marriage. You are going as fast to another world in one state of life as in the other. You are but to help each other in your way, that your journey may be the easier to you, and that you may happily meet again in the Heavenly Hierusalem. When worldlings marry, they take it for a setling themselves in the World; And as Regenerate persons begin the world anew, by beginning to lay up a Treasure in Heaven; So worldlings call their Marriage, their beginning the world, because then as engaged Servants to the world, they set themselves to seek it with greater diligence than ever before: They do but in marriage begin (as seekers) that life of foolery, which when he had found what he sought, that Rich man ended, Luk. 12. 19, 20. with a This I will do: I will pull down my Barns, and build greater, and there will I bestow all my fruits and my goods: And I will say to my Soul, Soul thou hast much goods laid up for many years, take thine ease, eat drink and be merry; But God said unto him, Thou fool this night shall thy Soul be required of thee: Then whose shall those things be, which thou hast provided? If you would not die such fools, do not marry and live such worldlings. Dir. 12. 1 Cor. 7. 22, 30.

Tit. 2. Cases of Marriage.

Quest. 1. WHat should one follow as a certain Rule, about the prohibited degrees of Consanguinity or Affinity? Seeing 1. The Law of Moses is not in force to us. 2. And if it were, it is very dark, Whether it may by parity of reason be extended to more degrees than are named in the Text? 3. And seeing the Law of nature is so hardly legible in this Case. Quest. 1. The case of Polygamy is so fully and plainly resolved by Christ, a that I take it not to be necessary to decide it, especially while the Law of the Land doth make it death.

Answ. 1. It is certain that the prohibited degrees are not so flatedly and universally unlawful, as that such marriage may not be made lawful by any necessity. For Adams Sons did lawfully marry their own Sisters.

2. But now the World is peopled, such necessities as will warrant such marriages must needs be very rare, and such as we are never like to meet with.

3. The Law of Nature is it which prohibiteth the degrees that are now unlawful; And tho' this Law be dark as to some degrees, it is not so as to others.

4. The Law of God to the Jews, Lev. 18. Doth not prohibit those degrees there named, because of any reason proper to the Jews, but as an Exposition of of the Law of nature, and ſo on reaſon is common to all.

5. Therefore, though the Jewiſh Law ceaſe (yea never bound other Nations) formally as that political national Law; yet as it was God's Expoſition of his own Law of Nature, it is of uſe, and conſequential obligation to all men, even to this day; For if God once had told but one man, [This is the ſenſe of the Law of Nature] it remaineth true, and all muſt believe it; and then the Law of nature it ſelf, ſo expounded, will ſtill oblige.

6. The world is ſo wide for choice, and a neceſſity of doubtful marriage is ſo rare, and the trouble ſo great, that prudence telleth every one that it is their ſin, without flat neceſſity, to marry in a doubtful degree; And therefore it is thus ſafeſt, to avoid all degrees that ſeem to be equal to thoſe named Lev. 18. and to have the ſame reaſon, though they be not named.

7. But becauſe it is not certain that indeed the unnamed caſes have the ſame reaſon, (while God doth not acquaint us with all the reaſons of his Law) therefore when the thing is done, we muſt not cenſure others too deeply, nor trouble our ſelves too much about thoſe unnamed doubtful caſes. We muſt avoid them before hand, becauſe elſe we ſhall caſt our ſelves into doubts and troubles unneceſſarily; But when it is paſt, the caſe muſt be conſidered of as I ſhall after open.

Queſt. 2. Queſt. 2. What if the Law of the Land forbid more or fewer degrees than Lev. 18. doth?

Anſw. If it forbid fewer, the reſt are nevertheleſs to be avoided as forbidden by God. If it forbid more, the forbidden ones muſt be avoided in obedience to our Rulers.

Queſt. 3. Queſt. 3. Is the marriage of Couſin-Germans, that is, of Brothers Children, or Siſters Children, or Brothers and Siſters Children, unlawful.

Anſw. I think not; 1. Becauſe not forbidden by God. 2. Becauſe none of that ſame rank are forbidden; that is, none that on both ſides are two degrees from the Root. I refer the Reader for my Reaſons to a Latin Treatiſe of Charles Butler on this ſubject. for in thoſe I reſt. As all the Children of Noah's Sons did marry their Couſin Germans, (for they could not marry in any remoter degree,) ſo have others ſince without reproof, and none are forbidden. 3. But it is ſafeſt to do otherwiſe, becauſe there is choice enough beſide, and becauſe many Divines being of the contrary opinion, may make it matter of ſcruple and trouble afterwards, to thoſe that venture upon it without need.

Queſt. 4. Queſt. 4. What would you have thoſe do that have married Couſin-Germans, and now doubt whether it be lawful ſo to do?

Anſw. I would have them caſt away ſuch doubts, or at leaſt conclude that it is now their duty to live peaceable in the ſtate in which they are; and a great ſin for them to be ſeparated on ſuch ſcruples. The reaſon is, becauſe, if it be not certain, that the degree is lawful, at leaſt no man can be ſure that it is unlawful: And for Husband and Wife to break their Covenants and part, without a neceſſary cauſe is a great ſin: And that which no man can prove to be a ſin, is no neceſſary or lawful cauſe of a divorce. Marriage duties are certainly commanded to the married; but the marriage of Couſin Germanes is not certainly forbidden. Therefore if it were a ſin to marry ſo, to them that doubted, or if they are ſince faln into doubt whether it was not a ſin; yet may they be ſure that the continuance of it is a duty, and that all that they have to do is to repent of doing a doubtful thing, but not to part, nor to forbear their Covenanted duties. No nor to indulge or ſuffer thoſe troubleſome ſcruples, which would hinder the chearful diſcharge of their duties, and the comfortable ſerving of God in their Relations.

Queſt. 5. What ſhould thoſe do that are married in thoſe degrees which are not forbidden by name in Lev. 18. and yet are of the ſame diſtance from the Root with thoſe that are named, and ſeem to have the ſame reaſon of unlawfulneſs. Queſt. 5.

Anſw. If there be clearly a Parity of Degree and alſo of the Reaſon of the prohibition, then no doubt but they muſt part as inceſtuous, and not continue in a forbidden ſtate. But becauſe Divines are diſagreed whether there be in all inſtances a Parity of the Reaſon of the prohibition, where there is an equal diſtance as to degrees; and ſo in thoſe caſes ſome think it a duty to be ſeparated, and others think it enough to repent of their conjunction, and not to be ſeparated becauſe the caſe is doubtful (as the controverſie ſheweth), I ſhall not venture to caſt in my judgment in a caſe where ſo many and ſuch men are diſagreed; But ſhall only adviſe all to prevent ſuch troubleſome doubts before hand, and not by raſhneſs to run themſelves into perplexities, when there is no neceſſity; unleſs they will call their carnal ends or ſinful paſſions, a neceſſity.

Queſt. 6. But if a man do marry in a degree expreſly there forbidden, is it in all caſes a ſin to continue in that ſtate? If neceſſity made ſuch marriage a Duty to Adams Children, why may not neceſſity make the continuance lawful to others? As ſuppoſe the King or Parents command it? Suppoſe the Woman will die or be diſtracted with grief elſe? Suppoſe one hath made a Vow to marry no other, and yet cannot live ſingle, &c. Here I ſhall ſuppoſe (that if a luſtful perſon marry a Kinſwoman that he may have change, as foreknowing that he muſt be divorced, puniſhment, and not continuance in the ſin muſt be his ſentence: And if one that hath married a Kinſwoman be glad to be divorced, becauſe he hateth her or loveth change, puniſhment muſt rebuke him, but he muſt not continue in Inceſt.) Queſt. 6.

Anſw. 1. Natural neceſſity juſtified Adams Children, and ſuch would now juſtifie you. Yea the Benediction increaſed and multiply did not only allow, but oblige them then to marry, to repleniſh the earth (when elſe mankind would ſoon have ceaſed;) But ſo it doth not us now when the earth is repleniſhed. Yet I deny not, but if a man and his ſiſter were caſt alone upon a foreign Wilderneſs, where they juſtly deſpaired of any other Company, if God ſhould bid them there [increaſe and multiply] it would warrant them to marry. But elſe there is no neceſſity of it and, therefore no lawfulneſs. For 2. A vitious neceſſity juſtifieth not the ſin. If the man or woman that ſhould abſtain, will be mad or dead with paſſion, rather than obey God, and deny and mortifie their luſt, it is not one ſin that will juſtifie them in another. The thing that is neceſſary, is to conform their wills to the Law of God, and if they will not, and then ſay, They cannot; they muſt bear what they get by it. 3. And it is no neceſſity that is impoſed by that command of King or Parents, which is againſt the Law of God. 4. No nor by a Vow neither: For a Vow to break Gods Law is not an obligation to be kept, but to be repented of; nor is the neceſſity remedileſs which ſuch a one bringeth on himſelf, by Vowing never to marry any other; ſeeing chaſtity may be kept.

Queſt. 7. Is it lawful for one to marry, that hath Vowed chaſtity during life and not to marry, and afterward findeth a neceſſity of marrying, for the avoiding of Luſt and Fornication? Queſt. 7.

Anſw. I know that many great Divines have eaſily abſolved thoſe that under Popery vowed Chaſtity. The principal part of the ſolution of the queſtion you muſt fetch from the ſolution of the caſe of Vows, Tom. 3. Chap. 5. Tit. 2. At the preſent this ſhall ſuffice to be added to it: 1. Such Vows of Chaſtity that are Abſolute, without any exceptions

By this you may ſee how to reſolve the caſes about Vows and Covenants which are the grand Controverſies of this time among us.

of after alterations or difficulties that may ariſe, are ſinfully made, or are unlawful quoad actum jurandi.

2. If Parents or others impoſe ſuch Oaths and Vows on their Children or Subjects, or induce them to it, it is ſinfully done of them, and the actus imperantium is alſo unlawful.

3. Yet as long as the materia jurata the matter vowed remaineth Lawful, the vow doth bind, and it is perfidiouſneſs to break it. For the ſinfulneſs of the Impoſers act proveth no more, but that ſuch a command did not oblige you to Vow. And a Vow made arbitrarily without any command, doth nevertheleſs bind. And the ſinfulneſs of the Making of the Vow, doth only call for Repentance; (as if you made it cauſleſly, raſhly, upon ill motives, and to ill ends, or in ill circumſtances, &c.) But yet that Vow, which you Repent that ever you made, muſt be nevertheleſs kept, if the thing Vowed be a Lawful thing, and the act of Vowing be not made a nullity (tho' it was a ſin.) And when it is a nullity, I have ſhewed in the fore-cited place.

4. A Vow of Celebate or Chaſtity during life, which hath this condition or exception expreſſed or implied in the true intent of the Votary [Unleſs any thing fall out which ſhall make it a ſin to me not to marry] may in ſome caſes be a lawful Vow: As to one that foreſeeth great inconveniences in marriage, and would by firm Reſolution fortifie himſelf againſt Temptations and mutability.

5. If there were no ſuch excepting thought in the perſon Vowing, yet when the thing becometh unlawful, the Vow is not to be kept; Though it oblige us under guilt for ſinful making it, yet God commandeth us not to keep it, becauſe we vowed that which he forbad us not only to Vow but to Do.

6. Either the Papiſts ſuppoſe ſuch exceptions to be always implied by their Votaries, or at leaſt that they are contained in the Law of God, or elſe ſure they durſt never pretend that the Pope hath power to diſpenſe with ſuch Vows; (as they have oft done for Princes, Men and Women, that they might be taken from a Monaſtery to a Crown) For if they ſuppoſe, that the perſons before the diſpenſation are under the obligation of their Vow, and bound by God to keep it, then it would be too groſs and odious Blaſphemy for the Pope to claim a power of diſobliging them, and diſſolving Gods commands; and not only Antichriſtianity, but Antitheiſtical, or a ſetting himſelf above God Almighty, under pretence of his own Commiſſion. But if they only pretend to diſſolve ſuch Vows Judicially or Deciſively, by Judging when the perſon is no longer obliged to keep them by Gods Law, then they ſuppoſe, that the obligation of Gods Law is ceaſed, before they Judicially declare it to be ceaſed. (And if that were all that the Pope undertook, he had no power to do it out of his own Pariſh, nor more than any lawful Biſhop hath in his proper charge.)

7. The matter of a Vow of Celibate or Chaſtity is then unlawful, when it cannot be kept without greater ſin than that life of Chaſtity eſcapeth, and which would be eſcaped if it were forſaken, Or without the Omiſſion of greater duty, and Omiſſion of greater good, than that life of chaſtity containeth or attaineth. For the further opening of this let it be noted that,

8. It is not every degree of ſin which marriage would cure, that will warrant the breach of a Vow of Chaſtity. As if I had ſome more luſtful thoughts or inſtigations and irrations in a ſingle life than I ſhould have if I married; The reaſon is, Becauſe, 1. No man liveth without ſome ſin, and it is ſuppoſed that there are greater ſins of another kind, which by a life of chaſtity I avoid. And the breach of the Vow it ſelf is a greater matter than a luſtful thought.

9. So it is not every degree of Good which by marriage I may attain or do, that will warrant it againſt a Vow of Chaſtity. Becauſe I may do and get a Greater Good by chaſtity, and becauſe the evil of perjury is not to be done, that good may be done by it; till I can prove that it is not only good in it ſelf, but a Duty hic & nunc to me.

10. A man ſhould rather break his Vow of Celibate, than once commit Fornication, if there were a neceſſity that he muſt do the one. Becauſe Fornication is a ſin which no Vow will warrant any man to commit.

11. A man ſhould rather break his Vow of Celibate, than live in ſuch conſtant or ordinary luſt, as unfitteth him for Prayer, and a holy life, and keepeth him in ordinary danger of Fornication, if there were a neceſſity that he muſt do the one. The reaſon is alſo becauſe now the Matter Vowed is become unlawful, and no Vow can warrant a man to live in ſo great ſin, (unleſs there were ſome greater ſin on the other ſide which could not be avoided in a married life, which is hardly to be ſuppoſed, however Popiſh Prieſts think diſobedience to the Pope, and the incommodity and diſgrace of a married life, &c. to be a greater ſin than Fornication it ſelf.)

12. If a Prince Vow Chaſtity, when it is like to endanger the Kingdom for want of a ſafe and ſure ſucceſſion, he is bound to break that Vow; Becauſe he may not lawfully give away the Peoples right, nor do that which is injurious to ſo many.

13. Whether the Command of a Parent or Prince may diſſolve the obligation of a Vow of Celibate, I have anſwered already. I now ſay but this, 1. When Parents or Princes may juſtly command it, we may juſtly obey them. But this is not one of thoſe accidental evils, which may be lawfully done, tho' unlawfully commanded. 2. It is Parents that God hath committed more of this care and power to, about Childrens marriage, than to Princes. 3. Parents nor Princes may not lawfully command the breach of ſuch a Vow, (not nullified at firſt,) except in ſuch caſes as diſoblige us, whether they do it or not; ſo that the reſolving of the main caſe doth ſuffice for all.

14. He that by lawful means can overcome his luſt, to the meaſure before mentioned, is under no neceſſity of violating his Vow of ſingle life.

15. I think that it is not one of twenty that have bodies ſo unavoidably prone to luſt, but that by due means it might be ſo far (tho' not totally) overcome, without Marriage, Fornication, wilful ſelf-pollution, or violent vexatious luſtful thoughts. That is, 1. If they imploy themſelves conſtantly and diligently in a lawful Calling, and be not guilty of ſuch idleneſs, as leaveth room in their minds and imaginations for vain and filthy thoughts. If they follow ſuch a Calling as ſhall lay a neceſſity upon them to keep their Thoughts cloſe employed about it. 2. If they uſe ſuch abſtinence and courſneſs in their Diet, as is meet to tame inordinate Luſts, without deſtroying Health: And not only avoid fulneſs and Gulofity and vain Sports and Pleaſures, but alſo uſe convenient faſting, and tame the Body by neceſſary auſterities. 3. If they ſufficiently avoid all tempting Company and ſights, and keep at a meet diſtance from them. 4. If they ſet ſuch a reſtraint upon their Thoughts as they may do. 5. If they uſe ſuch a quality of Diet and Phyſick as is apteſt for the altering of thoſe Bodily diſtempers, which are the cauſe. 6. And laſtly, If they are earneſt in Prayer to God; and live in mortifying meditations, eſpecially in a conſtant familiarity with a Crucified Chriſt, and with the grave, and with the Heavenly Society. He that breaketh his Vow to ſave himſelf the labour and ſuffering of theſe ungrateful means, I take to be perfidious, though perhaps he ſinfully made that Vow. And no greater number are excuſable from continence after ſuch a Vow, than theſe that have Bodies so extraordinary lustful, as no such other means can tame, (and those forementioned that have extraordinary accidents to make a single life unlawful.)

16. It must not be forgotten here, that if men trust to marriage it self alone as the cure of their lust, without other means, such violent lusts as nothing else will cure may possibly be much uncured afterward. For Adulterers are as violent in their lusts as the unmarried and oft-times find it as hard to restrain them. And therefore the married as well as others have need to be careful to overcome their lust. And the rather because it is in them a double sin.

17. But yet when all other means do fail, marriage is Gods appointed means, to quench those flames from which mens Vows cannot in cases of true necessity disoblige them.

CHAP. II.

DIRECTIONS for the right choice of SERVANTS and MASTERS.

PART I.

Directions for the right choice of Servants.

SErvants being integral parts of the Family, who contribute much to the Holiness or unholiness of it, and to the Happiness or Misery of it, it much concerneth Masters to be careful in their choice. And the harder it is to find such as are indeed desirable, the more careful and diligent in it should you be.

Dir. 1. §. 1. Direct. 1. To bid you choose such, as are fittest for your service, is a direction which nature and interest will give you, without any perswasions of mine. And indeed it is not meer Honesty or Piety that will make a good Servant, nor do you work. Three things are necessary to make a Servant fit for you: 1. Strength, 2. Skill, 3. Willingness: And no two of these will serve without the third. Strength and Skill without Willingness will do nothing: Skill and Willingness without Strength can do nothing. Strength and Willingness without Skill will do as bad, or worse than nothing. No less than all will make you a good Servant. Therefore choose one, 1. That is healthful, 2. That hath been us'd to such work as you must employ him in; and, 3. One that is not of a flesh-pleasing, or lazy, sluggish disposition. For to exact labour from one that is sickly, will seem cruelty: And to expect labour from one that is unskilful and unexercised, will seem folly: And heavy, fleshly, slothful persons, will do all with so much unwillingness, and pain, and weariness, that they will think all too much, and their service will be a continual toil and displeasure to them, and they will think you wrong them, or deal hardly with them, if you will not allow them in their fleshliness and idleness. Yea tho' they should have grace, a flegmatick, sluggish, heavy Body, will never be fit for diligent service; no more than a tir'd Horse for Travel.

Dir. 2. §. 2. Direct 2. If it be possible, choose such as have the Fear of God, or at least such as are tractable and willing to be taught, and not such as are ungodly, sensual and Prophane. For, 1. God hateth all the workers of iniquity: Psal 5. 5. And it tendeth not to the Honour or Safety of your Family, to have in it such as are Enemies to God, and hated by him. You cannot expect an equal Blessing on their Labours, as you may on the service of those that fear him: The Wicked may bring a Curse on the Families where they are (if you wilfully entertain them): When a Joseph may be a Blessing even to the House of an unbeliever. A wicked man will be renewing those Crimes, which will be the shame of your Family, and a grief to your hearts, if you have any love to God your selves; when a Godly Servant will pray for a Blessing from God upon his Labours, and is himself under a Promise, that whatever he doth shall prosper, Ps. 1. 3. 2. Ungodly Servants for the most part will be meer Eye-Servants: They will do little more than they find necessary to escape reproof and blame: Some few of them indeed out of Love to their Masters, or out of a desire of Praise, or to make their places the better to themselves, will be diligent and trusty: But ordinarily they are deceitful, and study more to seem good Servants, than to be such, and to hide their Faults, than to avoid them: For they make no great matter of Conscience of it; nor do they regard the eye of God: Whereas a truly Godly Servant will do all your Service in obedience to God, as if God himself had bid him do it, and as one that is always in the presence of that Master, whose favour he preferreth before all the World: He is more careful to please God, who commandeth him to be faithful, than to please you by seeming better than he is: He is moved more to his duty by the reward which God hath promised him, than by the wages which he expecteth from you: He hath a tender purified Conscience which will hold him to his duty as well when you know it not, as when you stand by. 3. Ordinarily ungodly Servants will be false, if they have but opportunity to enrich themselves by deceiving you: Especially those that are intrusted in laying out Money in buying and selling. As long as I name no particular Persons, I think it no untrustiness, but my duty, to warn Masters whom they trust, by my experience from the confessions of those that have been guilty. Many Servants whom God hath converted to his Love and Fear, have told me how constantly they deceived their Masters in buying and selling before their Conversion; even of so great Sums of Money, that some of them were not able to restore it (when I made them know it was their duty so far as they were able). And some of them had so much unquietness of Conscience till it was restored, that I have been fain to give them Money to restore, when I have convinced them of it: So that I know by such confessions, that such deceit and robbing of their Masters is a very ordinary thing among ungodly Servants that have opportunity, that yet pass for very trusty Servants, and are never discovered. 4. Also an ungodly Servant will be a tempter to the rest, and will be drawing them to sin: Especially to secret wantonness, and uncivil carriage, if not to actual Fornication: And to revellings, and merriments, and fleshly courses: By swearing and taking God's name in vain, and cursing and Lying, they will teach your Children and other Servants to do the like; and so be an infectious pestilence in your Families. 5. And they will hinder any good which you would do on others: If there be any in your Family under convictions, and in a hopeful way to a better condition, they will quench all, and discourage them and hinder their Conversion: Partly by their contradicting cavils, and partly by their scorns, and partly by their diverting idle talk, and partly by their ill examples and alluring them to accompany them in their sin. Whereas on the contrary, a Godly Servant will be drawing the rest of your Family to Godliness, and hindring them from sin, and perswading them to be faithful in their duty both to God and you.

Dir. 3. § 3. Direct. 3. Yet measure not the Godliness of a Servant by his bare knowledge or words, but by his LOVE and CONSCIENCE. A great deal of self-conceited talkativeness about Religion may stand with an unsanctified heart and life: And much weakness in knowledge and utterance, may stand with sincerity. But you may safely judge those to be truly Godly, 1. Who LOVE Godliness, and Love the word and Servants of God; and hate all wicked-wickedneſs. 2. And thoſe that make Conſcience to do their duty, and to avoid known ſin both openly and in ſecret.

Dir. 4. §. 4. Direct. 4. If neceſſity conſtrain you to take thoſe that are unfit and bad, remember that there is the greater duty incumbent on you, to carry your ſelf towards them in a diligent convincing manner, ſo as tendeth moſt to make them better. Take them not as you buy a Horſe or an Ox, with a purpoſe only to uſe them for your work: But remember they have immortal Souls which you take charge of.

PART II.

Directions for the right choice of Maſters.

SEeing the Happineſs of a Servant, the ſafety of his Soul, and the comfort of his life, depend very much upon the Family and Place which he liveth in, it much concerneth every prudent Servant to be very careful in what Place or Family he take up his abode, and to make the wiſeſt choice he can.

Dir. 1. §. 1. Direct. 1. Above all be ſure that you chooſe not for meer fleſhly Eaſe and Senſuality, and take not that for the beſt place for you, where you may have moſt of your own carnal will and Pleaſure. I know that fleſhly Graceleſs Servants, will hear this Direction with as ill a will, as a Dog when he is forbidden his meat or carrion. I know I ſpeak againſt their very Nature, and therefore againſt their very Hearts, and therefore they will think I ſpeak againſt their intereſt and good: And therefore I may perſwade them to this courſe a hundred times, before they will believe me, or obey my Counſel: All ungodly fleſhly Servants, do make theſe the only ſigns of a good place, or deſirable ſervice for them: 1. If they may do what work they will, and avoid that which they diſlike: If they may do that which is eaſie, and not that which is hard: And that which is an honour to them, and not that which ſeemeth inferiour and baſe: 2. If they may work when they will, and give over when they will. 3. If they may riſe when they will, and go to bed when they will. 4. If they may eat and drink what they will, and fare well to the pleaſing of their appetites. 5. If they may ſpeak when they will, and what they have a mind to ſpeak. 6. If they may have leave when they will to Sport, and Play, and be wanton and vain, and waſt their time, which they call being merry. 7. If they may wear the beſt Apparel, and go fine. 8. If their Maſters will be liberal to them, to maintain all this, and will give them what they would have. 9. If their Maſters and fellow-ſervants carry it reſpectfully to them, and praiſe them, and make ſome body of them, and do not diſhonour them, nor give them any diſpleaſing words. 10. And if they are not troubled with the precepts of Godlineſs, nor ſet to learn the Scripture, or Catechized, nor called to account about the ſtate of their Souls, or the ground of their hopes for the life to come, nor troubled with much praying, or repeating Sermons, or Religious exerciſe or diſcourſe, or any thing that tendeth to their Salvation: Nor be reſtrained from any ſin, which they have a mind to; nor reproved for it when they have done it. Theſe are an ungodly carnal perſons conditions, or ſigns of a good ſervice. Which is, in a word, to have their own wills and fleſhly deſires, and not to be croſſed by their Maſters wills, or the will of God: Which in effect is, to have the greateſt helps to do the Devils will, and to be damned.

Dir. 2. §. 2. Direct. 2. See that it be your firſt and principal care, to live in ſuch a place where you have the greateſt helps and ſmalleſt hinderances to the pleaſing of God, and the ſaving of your Souls: And in ſuch a place where you ſhall have no Liberty to ſin, nor have your fleſhly will fulfilled, but ſhall be beſt inſtructed to know and do the will of God, and under him the will of your Superiours. It is the mark of thoſe that God forſaketh, to be given up to their own wills, or to their own hearts luſt, to walk in their own Counſels, Pſal. 81. 12. To live after the fleſh, is the certain way to endleſs miſery. Rom. 8. 8, 13. To be moſt ſubject to the will of God, with the greateſt mortification and denyal of our own wills, is the mark of the moſt obedient holy Soul. Seeing then that Holineſs and ſelf-denial; the Loving of God, and the mortifying of the fleſh, are the Life of Grace, and the Health and Rectitude of the Soul, and the only way (under Chriſt) to our Salvation; you have great reaſon to think that place the beſt for you, in which you have moſt helps for Holineſs and ſelf-denial: And not only to bear patiently the ſtrictneſs of your Superiors, and the labour which they put you upon for your Souls, but alſo to deſire and ſeek after ſuch helps, as the greateſt mercies upon Earth. Firſt ſeek the Kingdom of God and his Righteouſneſs: Labour not (firſt) for the Food that periſheth, but for that which endureth to everlaſting life: Mat. 6. 33. John. 6. 27. Take care firſt that your Souls be provided for, and take that for the beſt ſervice which helpeth you moſt in the ſervice of God to your Salvation.

Dir. 3. §. 3. Direct. 3. If it be poſſible, live where there is a faithful powerful convincing Miniſter, whoſe publick teaching, and private counſel you may make uſe of for your ſouls. Live not, if you can avoid it, under an ignorant, dead, unprofitable teacher, that will never afford you any conſiderable help to lift up your hearts to a heavenly converſation: But ſeeing you muſt ſpend the ſix days in your labour, live where you have the beſt helps, to ſpend the Lords day, for the quickning and comfort of your Souls; that in the ſtrength of that holy food, you may chearfully perform your ſanctified labours, on the week days following. Be not like thoſe bruitiſh perſons, that live as if there were no life but this; and therefore take care to get a place, where their bodies may be well fed and cloathed, and may have eaſe, and pleaſure, and preferment for the world; but care not much what Teacher there is, to be their Guide to Heaven; nor whether ever they be ſeriouſly foretold of the world to come, or not.

Dir. 4. §. 4. Direct. 4. Live, if you can obtain ſo great a mercy, with ſuperiors that fear God, and will have a care of your ſouls, as well as of your bodies, and will require you to do Gods ſervice as well as their own: and not with worldly ungodly Maſters, that will uſe you as they do their beaſts, to do their work, and never take care to further your Salvation. For, 1. The curſe of God is in the Families of the ungodly, and who would willingly live in a houſe that God hath curſed, any more than in an houſe that is haunted with evil Spirits? But God himſelf doth dwell with the Godly, and by many promiſes hath aſſured them of his love and bleſſing: The curſe of the Lord is in the houſe of the wicked: but he bleſſeth the habitation of the juſt. Prov. 3. 33. The wicked are overthrown and are not, but the houſe of the Righteous ſhall ſtand. Prov. 12. 7. The houſe of the wicked ſhall be overthrown, but the Tabernacle of the upright ſhall flouriſh. Prov. 14. 11. So Prov. 15. 25. The righteous man wiſely conſidereth the houſe of the wicked: God overthroweth the wicked for their wickedneſs. Prov. 21. 12. Go not into a falling houſe. 2. A Maſter that feareth God, will help to ſave you from ſin and hell, and help your Souls to life eternal: He may do more for you, than if he made you Kings and Rulers of the earth. He will hinder you from ſin: he will teach you to know God, and to prepare for your ſalvation. Whereas ungodly Maſters will rather diſcourage you, and by mocks or threatnings, ſeek to drive you from a holy life, and uſe their wit, and work, and authority to hinder your Salvation: or at beſt will take little care of your ſouls but think if they provide you food and wages, they have done their parts. 3. A Maſter that feareth God will do you no wrong, but will love you as a Chriſtian, and his fellow ſervant of Chriſt, while he commandeth and employeth you as his own Servant, which cannot be expected from ignorant, ungodly, worldly men.

Dir. 5. §. 5. Direct. 5. Yet chooſe ſuch a ſervice as you are fit to undergo, with the leaſt hindrance of the ſervice of God, and of your Souls: Neither a life of idleneſs, nor of exceſs of buſineſs ſhould be choſen, if you have your choice. For when the mind is overwhelmed with the cares of your ſervice, and your bodies tired with exceſſive labour, you will have little time, or heart, or power, to mind the matters of your Souls with any ſerioufneſs. Yea, the Lords-day will be ſpent with little comfort, when the toil of the week-days hath left the Body fit for nothing but to ſleep. A Service which alloweth you no time at all to pray, or read the Scripture, or mind your everlaſting ſtate, is a life more fit for beaſts than men.

Dir. 6. §. 6. Direct. 6. If you can attain it, live where your fellow Servants fear God, as well as the Maſter of the Family. For Fellow Servants uſually converſe with one another more frequently and familiarly than their Maſters do with any of them. And therefore if a Maſter give you the moſt Heavenly inſtructions, the idle frothy talk of fellow-ſervants may blot out all from your memories and hearts. And their deriſion of a holy life, or their bad examples, may do more hurt, than the precepts of the Governours can do good: Whereas when a Maſters counſels are ſeconded by a good diſcourſe and practice of fellow-ſervants, it is a great encouragement to good, and keepeth the heart in a continual warmth and reſolution.

Dir. 7. §. 7. Direct. 7. If you want any one of theſe Accommodations, be the more diligent in ſuch an Improvement of the reſt, as may make up your want. If you have a good Teacher, and a bad Maſter, improve the Helps of your Teacher the more diligently. If you have a bad Maſter and good Fellow-Servants, or a Good Maſter and Bad Fellow-Servants, thank God for that which you have, and make the beſt of it.

Dir. 8. §. 8. Direct. 8. If you would be accommodated your ſelves with the beſt Maſters and uſage, labour to be the beſt Servants; And then it's two to one but you may have your choice. Good ſervants are ſo ſcarce, and ſo much valued, that the beſt places would ſtrive for you, if you will ſtrive to be ſuch. Excel others in labour, and diligence, and truſtineſs, and obedience, and gentleneſs, and patience, and then you may have almoſt what places you deſire. But if you will your ſelves be idle, and ſlothful, and deceitful, and falſe, and diſobedient, and unmannerly, and ſelf willed, and contentious, and impatient, and yet think that you muſt be reſpected, and uſed as good and faithful Servants. It is but a fooliſh Expectation. For what Obligation is there upon others, in point of Juſtice, to give you that which you deſerve not? Indeed if any be bound to keep you in meer Charity, then you may plead Charity with them and not deſert: But if they take you but as ſervants, they owe you nothing but what your work and virtues ſhall deſerve.

CHAP. III.

A DISPUTATION:

Or, Arguments to prove the Neceſſity of Family-Worſhip and Holineſs; or Directions againſt the Cavils of the Prophane, and ſome Sectaries, who deny it to be a thing required by God.

Whether the Solemn Worſhip of God, in and by FAMILIES as ſuch, be of no Divine Appointment? Aff.

THat excellent ſpeech of Mirandula is oft in mind, Veritatem Philoſophia quærit, Theologia invenit, Religio poſſidet: I do therefore with greater alacrity and delight diſpute theſe points that are directly Religious, that is, immediately practical, than thoſe that are only remotely ſuch: And though I am loth we ſhould ſee among us any wider Diviſion inter Philoſophum Theologum & Religioſum than between the Phantaſie, the Intellect and the Will, which never are found disjunct in any act; or rather than between the habits of practical natural knowledge, and the habits of practical ſupernatural knowledge, and the practical Reſolutions, Affections and Indeavours, into which both the former are devolved; yet may we ſafely and profitably diſtinguiſh, where it would be mortal to divide: If, diſputing in our preſent caſe, do but tend to, and end in, a Religious performance, we ſhall then be able to ſay, we diſputed not in vain; when by experience of the delight and profit of Gods work, we perceive that we do not Worſhip him in vain: Otherwiſe to evince by a diſpute, that God ſhould be worſhipped; and not to worſhip him when we have done, is but to draw forth our learning, and ſharpen our wits to plead for our condemnation: As if the Accuſer wanted our help, or the Judge of all the World did want Evidence or Arguments againſt us, unleſs he had it from our own mouth: Concerning the Senſe of the Terms, I ſhall ſay ſomewhat, both as to the Subject, and the predicate, that we contend not in the dark; and yet but little, leſt I trouble my ſelf and you with needleſs Labours.

I. By [the worſhip of God] we mean not only, nor principally, obedience as ſuch: Or Service in common things, called Δουλεία: But we mean a Religious performance of ſome ſacred actions, with an intention of Honouring God as God; and that more directly than in common works of obedience: This being commonly called Λατρεία (is by Auſtin) and ſince him by all the Orthodox, appropriated to God alone, and indeed to give it to any other is contradictory to its definition.

This Worſhip is of two ſorts, whereof the firſt is by an excellency called Worſhip, viz. When the honouring of God is ſo directly the end and whole buſineſs of the work, that our own advantage falls in but impliedly, and in evident Subordination; Such are the bleſſed works of Praiſe and Thanksgiving, which we here begin and ſhall in Heaven perpetuate. Yet ſee a more admirable Myſtery of true Religion; We indeed receive more largely from God, and enjoy more fully our own Felicity in him, in theſe acts of worſhip, that give all to God, than in the other wherein we more directly ſeek for ſomewhat from him. And thoſe are the ſecond ſort of Worſhip-actions, viz. When the ſubſtance or matter of the work is a ſeeking, or receiving ſomewhat from God, or delivering ſomething Religiouſly in his name, and ſo is more directly for our ſelves; tho' yet it is God that ſhould be our ultimate end in this too. You may perceive I make this of three ſorts. Whereof the firſt conſiſteth in our Religious addreſſes to God for ſomething that we want; And is called Prayer. The

2. con-

2. conſiſteth in our Religious addreſſes to God to receive ſomewhat from him; viz. 1. Inſtructions, Precepts, promiſes, threatnings, from his mouth, Meſſengers, &c. 2. The Sacramental ſigns of his grace in Baptiſm and the Lords Supper. The 3. is, when the Officers of Chriſt do in his name ſolemnly deliver either his Laws or Sacraments. His Laws either in general by ordinary Preaching, or by a more particular application in Acts of Diſcipline.

2. The Word [Solemn] ſignifies ſometimes any thing uſual, and ſo ſome derive it, Solenne eſt quod fieri ſolet. Sometimes that which is done but on one ſet day in the year; and ſo ſome make ſolenne to be quaſi ſolum ſemel in anno. But vulgarly it is taken, and ſo we take it here, for both celebre & uſitatum, that is, a thing that is not accidentally and ſeldom, but ſtatedly and ordinarily to be done, and that with ſuch Gravity and Honourable ſeriouſneſs as beſeems a buſineſs of ſuch weight.

3. By [family] we mean, not a tribe or ſtock of kindred dwelling in many houſes as the word is taken oft in Scripture, but I mean a houſhold.

Domus & familia, a Houſhold and family, are indeed in Oeconomicks ſomewhat different notions, but one thing. Domus is to familia as civitas to reſpublica, the former is made the ſubject of the latter, the latter the finis internus of the former. And ſo Domus eſt ſocietas naturæ conſentanea, e perſonis domeſticis, vitæ in dies omnes commode ſuſtentandæ cauſa, collecta. Familia eſt ordo domus per Regimen Patris-familias in perſonas ſibi ſubjectas.

Where note, that to a compleat Family muſt go four Integral parts, Pater familias, Mater familias, Filius, Servus. A Father, Mother, Son and Servant: But to the eſſence of a Family it ſufficeth if there be but the pars imperans, & pars ſubdita, one head or Governour, either Father, Mother, Maſter, or Miſtreſs; and one or more Governed under this head.

Note therefore that the Governour is an eſſential part of the family, and ſo are ſome of the governed (viz. that ſuch there be) but not each member. If therefore twenty Children, or Servants ſhall worſhip God without the Father, or Maſter of the family either preſent himſelf, or in ſome Repreſentative, it is not a family worſhip in ſtrict ſenſe. But if the head of the Family, in himſelf (or Delegate or Repreſentative) be preſent, with any of his children or ſervants, though all the reſt be abſent, it is yet a family duty; tho' the Family be incompleat and maimed, (and ſo is the duty therefore, if culpably ſo performed.)

4. When I ſay [in and by] a Family, I mean not that each muſt do the ſame parts of the work, but that one (either the head or ſome one deputed by him, and repreſenting him) be the mouth, and the reſt performing their parts by receiving inſtructions, or mentally concurring in the Prayers and praiſe by him put up. Laſtly, by [Divine appointment] I mean any ſignification of Gods will, that it is mens duty to perform this: Whether a ſignification by natural means or ſupernatural, directly or by conſequence, ſo we may be ſure it is Gods will. The ſum of the Queſtion then is, Whether any Sacred Actions Religiouſly and ordinarily to be performed to Gods honour by the head of the family, with the reſt, be by Gods appointment made our duty? My thoughts of this Queſtion I ſhall reduce to theſe heads, and propound in this order. 1. I ſhall ſpeak of family worſhip in general. 2. Of the ſorts of that worſhip in ſpecial. 3. Of the time.

I. Concerning the firſt I lay down my thoughts, in theſe Propoſitions following for Limitation and Caution, and then prove the main Concluſion.

Prop. 1. Prop. 1. It is not all ſorts of Gods worſhip which he hath appointed to be performed by families as ſuch; There being ſome proper to more publick Aſſemblies.

2. More particularly the Adminiſtration of the Sacraments of Baptiſm and the Lord Supper, are proper to the Miniſterial or Organized Churches, and not common to families: for as they are both of them committed only to Miniſters of the Goſpel, and have been only uſed by them for many hundred years in the Church: (except that ſome permitted others to baptize in caſe of neceſſity.) So the Lords Supper was appointed for a Simbole and means of a more publick communion than that of Families. And tho' ſome conjecture the contrary from its firſt inſtitution, and think that as there is a Family prayer and Church prayer, family teaching and Church teaching: So there ſhould be family Sacraments, and Church Sacraments, yet it is a miſtake. For though Chriſt adminiſtred it to his family, yet it was not as a Family, but as a Church. For that which is but one Family may poſſibly be a Church alſo. This Expoſition we have from the Doctrine and Practice of the Apoſtles, and conſtant Cuſtom of all the Churches which have never thought the Lords Supper to be a Family Duty, but proper to larger Aſſemblies, and adminiſtrable only by ordained Miniſters: Nor will the reaſons drawn from circumciſion, and the paſſeover prove the contrary: both becauſe particular Churches were not then inſtituted as now; and therefore Families had the more to do: and becauſe there were ſome Duties proper to Families in the very Inſtitution of thoſe Sacraments. And becauſe God gave them a power in thoſe, which he hath not given to Maſters of Families now in our Sacraments.

3. Many thouſands do by their own vitiouſneſs and negligence diſable themſelves: ſo that they cannot perform what God hath made their duty; yet it remains their duty ſtill: Some diſability may excuſe them in part, but not in whole.

I ſhall now prove, that the Solemn Worſhip of God in and by families as ſuch, is of Divine Appointment.

Argument. 1. If Families are Societies of Gods Inſtitution furniſhed with ſpecial advantages and opportunities for Gods ſolemn worſhip, having no prohibition ſo to uſe them: then the ſolemn Worſhip of God in and by families as ſuch is of Divine appointment: But the Antecedent is true; Therefore ſo is the Conſequent.

For the parts of the Antecedent, 1. That families are Societies of Gods Inſtitution needeth no proof.

2. That they are furniſhed with ſpecial advantages and opportunities may appear by an enumeration of particulars. 1. There is the advantage of Authority in the Ruler of the family, whereby he may command all that are under him in Gods Worſhip, yea, and may inflict penalties on Children and Servants that refuſe; yea, may caſt ſome out of the family if they be obſtinate. 2. He hath the advantage of a ſingular Intereſt in Wife and Children by which he may bring them to it willingly, that ſo they may perform a right Evangelical Worſhip. 3. He hath the advantage of a ſingular dependance of all upon him for daily proviſions; and of his Children for their portions for livelihood in the world, whereby he may yet further prevail with them for obedience: He having a power to reward, as well as to puniſh and command. 4. They have the opportunity of cohabitation, and ſo are ſtill at hand, and more together, and ſo in readineſs for ſuch imployments. 5. Being neareſt in Relation, they are ſtronglier obliged to further each others ſalvation, and help each other in ſerving God. 6. They have hereby an Advantage againſt all Prejudices and Jealouſies, which ſtrangeneſs and diſtances may raiſe and cherish among thoſe that live at a greater diſtance, and ſo may cloſe cloſe more heartily in Gods Worſhip. And their nearneſs of Relation and natural affections do ſingularly advantage them for a more affectionate conjunction, and ſo for a more forcible and acceptable Worſhip of God, when they are in it as of one heart and ſoul. 7. If any miſunderſtanding or other impediment ariſe, they being ſtill at hand, have opportunity to remove them, and to ſatisfie each other, and if any diſtempers of underſtanding, heart or life be in the family, the Ruler, by familiarity and daily converſe, is enabled more particularly to fit his reproofs and exhortations, confeſſions and petitions accordingly, which even Miniſters in the Congregations cannot ſo well do. So that I have made it evident in this enumeration, that families have advantages, yea, ſpecial and moſt excellent advantages, and opportunities for the ſolemn Worſhip of God.

3. The laſt part of the Antecedent was, that they have no prohibition to uſe theſe advantages and opportunities to Gods ſolemn Worſhip. I add this, leſt any ſhould ſay, though they have ſuch advantages, yet God may reſtrain them for the avoiding ſome greater Inconveniencies another way; as he hath reſtrained Women from ſpeaking in the aſſemblies. But 1. God hath neither reſtrained them in the Law of Nature, nor in the written Law; Therefore not at all. He that can ſhew it in either, let him do it. 2. I never yet read or heard any knowing Chriſtian once affirm that God hath forbidden families ſolemnly to worſhip him, and therefore I think it needleſs to prove a Negative, when no Man is known to hold the Affirmative. Indeed for ſome kinds of worſhip, as preaching and expounding Scripture, ſome have prohibited them; but not reading, catechizing, all inſtructing, praying, praiſes, ſinging Pſalms, much leſs all ſolemn Worſhip wholly. So much for the Antecedent.

I now come to prove the Conſequence. 1. The foreſaid advantages and opportunities are Talents given by God, which they that receive, are obliged faithfully to improve for God; Therefore families having ſuch advantages and opportunities for Gods ſolemn Worſhip, are bound to improve them faithfully for God, in the ſolemn Worſhipping of him. For the Antecedent, 1. It is unqueſtionable that theſe are Talents, that is, improvable Mercies given by God. For as none dare deny them to be Mercies: So none dare (I hope) ſay that God is not the giver of them. And then 2. That ſuch Talents muſt be improved faithfully for God, from whom they are received; is plain, 1. From Mat. 25. throughout, eſpecially from verſ. 14. to verſ. 31. And Luke 20. 10. he requireth the Fruits of his Vineyard, and Matth. 10. 42. if he intruſt us with a Cup of cold water, he expecteth it for a Prophet, when he calleth for it. And if he intruſt us with outward riches, he expecteth that we give to him that asketh, Mat. 5. 42. Luke 6. 30, 38. and 11. 41. & 12. 33. His Stewards muſt give an account of their Stewardſhips, Luke 16. 2. Luke 12. 48. Chriſt telleth us of all our Talents in general, that, Unto whomſoever much is given, of him ſhall be much required: and to whom men have committed much, of him will they ask the more. And of our words in particular Chriſt tells us, Matth. 12. 36. that of every idle word men ſhall give an account at the day of judgment. Much more for denying to uſe both our tongues and hearts in Gods worſhip when he gives us ſuch opportunities. It is required in Stewards, that a man be found faithful, 1 Cor. 4. 2. As every man hath received the gift, even ſo miniſter the ſame one to another, as good Stewards of the manifold grace of God. If any man ſpeak, let him ſpeak as the Oracles of God, &c. 1 Pet. 4. 10, 11. Many more of the like Scriptures prove the Antecedent of the Enthymeme, and the Conſequent needs no proof.

Argument 2. The ſolemn Worſhip of God in and by families as ſuch, is required by the very Law of Nature, Therefore it is of Divine Inſtitution. The Conſequence can be denied by no man that renounceth not Reaſon and Nature it ſelf; denying the Law of Nature to be Gods Law, which is indeed partly preſuppoſed in the Law ſupernatural, and partly rehearſed in it, but never ſubverted by it. Poſitives are more mutable than Naturals are.

The Antecedent is thus manifeſted. 1. Natural reaſon (or the Law of Nature) requireth that all men do faithfully improve all the Talents that God hath entruſted them with, to his honour: Therefore Natural reaſon (or the Law of Nature) doth require, that God be ſolemnly Worſhipped in families; he having given them ſuch advantages as aforeſaid thereunto. 2. The Law of Nature requireth, that all ſocieties that have God for their Founder or Inſtitutor, ſhould to their utmoſt capacities, be devoted to him that founded and inſtituted them; but that God is the Founder and Inſtitutor of families, is known by the light of Nature it ſelf: Therefore the Law of Nature requireth, that families be to the utmoſt of their capacities devoted to God; and conſequently that they ſolemnly worſhip him, they being capable of ſo doing. I need not prove the Major, becauſe I ſpeak only to men that are poſſeſt of the Law of Nature mentioned in it: And therefore they know it themſelves to be true. Yet let me ſo far ſtay on the illuſtration, as to tell you the grounds of it. And 1. God is the Alpha and Omega, the firſt and the laſt, the principal efficient and ultimate end of all: and therefore of Families. And therefore they ſhould be for him, as well as they are from him: For of him, and through him, and to him are all things. This Argument I draw from Nature, which can have no beginning but God, nor any end but God. The 2. I draw from the Divine intention, in the Fabrication and Ordination of all things. God made all things for himſelf, and can have no ultimate end below himſelf. The 3. I draw from his Jus Dominii, his right of Propriety which he hath over all things, and ſo over Families as ſuch: they are all abſolutely his own alone. And that which is ſolely or abſolutely a mans own, ſhould be for his uſe and imployed to his honour and ends: much more that which is Gods, ſeeing man is not capable of ſuch a plenary propriety of any thing in the world, as God hath in all things. 4. I argue a Jure Imperii, from Gods Right of Government. If he have a full right of Government of families as families then families as families, muſt honour and worſhip him according to their utmoſt capacities: But he hath a full Right of abſolute Government over families as families, Therefore, The Conſequence of the Major is grounded on theſe two things: 1. That God himſelf is the end of his own Government: this is proper to his Regiment. All Human Government is ſaid by Politicians to be terminated ultimately in the publick good of the ſociety. But Gods Pleaſure and Glory is the end of his Government; and is as it were the Publick or Univerſal good. 2. In that Nature teacheth us, that Supream Honour is due to all that are Supream Governours; therefore they are to have the moſt honourable Titles, of Majeſty, Highneſs, Excellency, &c. and actions anſwerable to thoſe Titles, Mal. 1. 6. If I be a Father, where is mine honour? if I be a Maſter, where is my fear? Fear is oft put for all Gods Worſhip. If then there be no Family whereof God is not the Father or Founder, and the Maſter or Owner and Governour, then there is none but ſhould honour and fear him, or worſhip him, and that not only as ſingle men, but as families: Becauſe he is not only the Father and Maſter, the Lord and Ruler of them as men, but alſo as Families. Honour is as due to the the Rector, as Protection to the Subjects, and in our case much more. God is not a meer Titular but Real Governour. All powers on earth are derived from him, and are indeed his power. All lawful Governours are his Officers, and hold their places under him, and act by him. As God therefore is the proper Soveraign of every Commonwealth, and the Head of the Church: So is he the Head of every family. Therefore as every Commonwealth should perform such worship or Honour to their earthly Soveraign, as is due to Man: so each Society should according to their Capacities perform Divine Worship and Honour to God; And if any object, That by this Rule Commonwealths, as such, must meet together to worship God, which is impossible. I answer, They must worship him according to their Natural Capacities; and so must Families according to theirs. The same General Precept obligeth to a divers manner of duty according to the divers capacities of the Subject. Commonwealths must in their Representatives at least engage themselves to God as Commonwealths, and worship him in the most convenient way that they are capable of. Families may meet together for prayer, though a Nation cannot. As an association of Churches called a Provincial or National Church, is obliged to worship God as well as particular Congregations, yet not in once place: because it is impossible: Nature limiteth and maketh the difference.

And that the Obligation of Families to Honour and worship God, may yet appear more evidently, Consider that Gods Right of Propriety, and Rule is twofold; yet each Title plenary alone. 1. He is our Owner and Ruler upon his Title of Creation. 2. So he is by his Right of Redemption. By both these he is not only Lord and Ruler of persons, but families; all societies being his. And the Regiment of persons being chiefly exercised over them in societies. All power in Heaven and Earth is given unto Christ. Matth. 18. 18. and all judgment committed unto him, Joh. 5. 22. and all things delivered into his hands, Joh. 13. 3. and therefore to him shall every knee bow, both of things in Heaven and things in earth and things under the Earth (either with a bowing of Worship, or of forced acknowledgment) and every tongue shall confess that Jesus Christ is Lord to the glory of God the Father, Phil. 2. 10. Bowing to and confessing Christ voluntarily to Gods Glory, is true Worship: all must do this according to their several capacities: And therefore families according to theirs.

A third Consideration which I thought to have added but for Illustration, may well stand as an argument it self; and its this.

Argument. 3. If besides all the forementioned opportunities and obligations, Families do live in the presence of God, and ought by faith to apprehend that presence, then is it Gods Will that families as such should solemnly Worship him. But the former is true, therefore the latter.

The Consequence of the Major, which alone requires proof, I prove by an Argument a fortiori, from the honour due to all earthly Governours. Though when a King, a Father, a Master are absent, such actual honour, to be presented to them, is not Due because they are not capable of receiving it (further than Mediante aliqua persona, vel re, which beareth some representation of the Superiour, or Relation to him) yet when they stand by, it is a contemptuous subject, a disobedient Child, that will not perform actual honour, or humane Worship to them. Now God is ever present not only with each person as such, but also with every family as such. As he is said to walk among the golden Candlesticks in his Churches, so doth he in the Families of all by his common presence, and of his Servants by his gracious presence. This they easily find by his directing them, and blessing the affairs of their families. If any say, [We see not God, else we would duly Worship him in our Families.] Answ. Faith seeth him who to sense is invisible. If one of you had a Son that were blind and could not see his own Father, would you think him therefore excusable, if he would not honour his Father, when he knew him to be present? We know God to be present, though flesh be blind and cannot see him.

Argument. 4. If Christian Families (besides all the forementioned Advantages and Obligations) are also Societies sanctified to God, then is it Gods Will that families, as such, should solemnly worship him; But Christian Families are Societies sanctified to God; Therefore,

The Reason of the Consequence is, because things sanctified must in the most eminent sort, that they are capable, be used for God. To sanctify a person or thing, is to set it apart, and separate it from a common or unclean use, and to devote it to God, to be employed in his service. To alienate this from God; or not to use it for God, when it is dedicated to him, or sanctified by his own Election and separation of it from common use, is Sacriledge. God hath a double Right (of Creation and Redemption) to all persons. But a treble Right to the sanctified. Ananias his fearful Judgment was a sad example of Gods wrath, on those that withhold from him what was devoted to him. If Christian families as such, be sanctified to God, they must as such worship him in their best capacity.

That Christian Families are sanctified to God, I prove thus; 1. A Society of holy Persons must needs be a holy Society. But a family of Christians is a society of holy persons; Therefore, 2. We find in Scripture not only single persons, but the societies of such sanctified to God, Deut. 7. 6. Thou art an holy people unto the Lord thy God, he hath chosen thee to be a special people to himself above all people that are upon the face of the Earth. So Deut. 14. 20, 21. So the Body of that Commonwealth did all jointly enter into Covenant with God, and God to them, Deut. 29. & 30. & 26. 17, 18, 19. Thou hast vouched the Lord this day to be thy God, and to walk in his ways; And the Lord hath vouched thee this day to be his peculiar people, that thou maist be an holy people to the Lord. So 28. 9. Dan. 8. 24. & 12. 7. Josh. (24.) devoteth himself and his house to the Lord; I and my house will serve the Lord. And Abraham by Circumcision (the Covenant or seal of the Covenant of God) consecrated his whole household to God; and so were all Families after him to do (as to the Males in whom the whole was consecrated.) And whether besides the typifying intent, there were not somewhat more in the sanctifying of all the first born to God, who if they lived, were to be the heads of the Families, may be questioned.

The Passover was a family duty, by which they were yet further sanctified to God. Yea, it is especially to be observed how in the New Testament the Holy Ghost doth imitate the language of the old, and speak of Gods people, as of holy societies, as the Jews were. As in many Prophesies it was foretold that Nations and Kingdoms should serve him (of which I have spoken more in my Book of Baptism;) and among those who should mourn over him whom they have pierced in Gospel times, when the Spirit of grace and supplication is poured forth, are the family of the house of David apart, and their wives apart, the family of the house of Nathan apart, and their Wives apart? Every family, even all the families that remained apart, and their Wives apart, Zech. 11. 12, 13, 14. So Christ sendeth his Disciples to baptize Nations, having discipled them; and the Kingdoms of the World shall become the Kingdoms of the Lord and his Christ. And as Exod.

19. 5, 6. saith of the Jews, Ye shall be a peculiar treasure to me above all people; and ye shall be unto me a Kingdom of Priests, and a Holy Nation; so doth Peter say of all Christians, 1 Pet. 2.5,6,7,9. Ye also as living stones are built up a spiritual House, a Holy Priesthood, to offer up spiritual Sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ, V. 9. But ye are a chosen Generation, a Royal Priesthood, an Holy Nation, a peculiar People, that you should shew forth the Praises of him that hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light. Mark how fully this Text doth prove all that we are about. It speaks of Christians Collectively, as in Societies and in Societies of all the most eminent sorts; [A Generation;] which seems especially to refer to Tribes and Families, [A Priesthood, Nation, People;] which comprehendeth all the Orders in the Nation oft times. And in all these respects they are holy, and peculiar, and chosen, to shew, that Gods people are sanctified in these Relations and Societies. And then mark the End of this sanctification, V. 5. to offer up spiritual Sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ. V. 9. to shew forth the praises of him that hath called you, &c.

Yea, it seems that there was a special dedication of families to God. And therefore we read so frequently of Households converted and baptized; Though none at age were baptized, but such as seemed Believers; yet when they professed Faith, they were altogether initiated as A Household. And it seems, the Masters Interest and Duty were taken to be so great for the Conversion of the rest, that as he was not to content himself with his own Conversion, but to labour presently even before his Baptism, that his household should joyn with him, that so the whole family at once might be devoted to God: so God did bless this his own Order and Ordinance to that end: And where he imposed Duty on Masters, he usually gave success, so that commonly the whole Family was Converted and Baptized with the Ruler of the family. So Acts 18. 8. Crispus believed on the Lord with all his House, and they were baptized. And Acts 16. 32. Paul promiseth the Goaler, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved and thy house; and he and all his were Baptized straightway: for he believed in God with all his house, Verse 33, 34. And Lydia is described a Worshipper of God, Acts 16. 14. & ver. 15. She was Baptized and her household. And the Angel told Cornelius, that Peter should tell him words whereby he and all his household should be saved, Acts 11. 14. who were Baptized accordingly. And 1 Cor. 1. 16. Paul Baptized the Household of Stephanus. And Christ told Zacheus, Salvation was come that day unto his house, and he and all his household believed. So that Noble-man, John 4. 53. Therefore when Christ sent forth his Disciples, he saith, If the house be worthy, let your peace come upon it, but if it be not worthy, let your peace return to you: So that as it is apparently the Duty of every Christian Soveraign, to do what he is able to make all his people Gods people; and so to dedicate them to God as a Holy Nation, in a National Covenant, as the Israelites were: So is it the unquestionable Duty of every Christian Ruler of a family, to improve his interest, power, and parts to the uttermost, to bring all his Family to be the people of Christ in the Baptismal Covenant, and so to dedicate all his family to Christ. Yet farther I prove this, in that believers themselves being all sanctified to God, it must needs follow, that all their Lawful Relations, and especially all commanded states of Relation are also sanctified to God; for when themselves are dedicated to God, it is absolutely without reserve, to serve him with all that they have, and in every Relation and Capacity that he shall set them. It were a madness to think, that a Christian totally devoted unto God when he is a private Man, if he were after made a Souldier, a Minister, a Magistrate, a King, were not bound by his Dedication, now to serve God as a Souldier, a Minister, a Magistrate, a King. So he that is devoted to God in a single state, is bound to serve him as a Husband, a Father, a Master, when he comes into that state; We do devote all that we have to God, when we devote our selves to him.

Moreover the Scripture tells us, that to the pure all things are pure. Tit. 1. 15, 16. And all things are sanctified to them by the word and prayer, 1 Tim. 4. 5. which is in that they are made the Goods, and Enjoyments, Actions and Relations of a sanctified people who are themselves devoted or sanctified to God: So that all sanctification referreth ultimately and principally to God: Quod sanctum Deo sanctum est; though it may be said subordinately to be sanctified to us. Seeing then it is past all doubt, that every Christian is a man sanctified and devoted to God, and that when ever any Man is so devoted to God, he is devoted to serve him to the utmost capacity, in every State, Relation, or Condition that he is in, and with all the Faculties he possesseth, it followeth, that those Relations are sanctified to God, and in them he ought to worship him and honour him.

Yet further we find in Scripture, that the particular family relations are expressly sanctified; The family compleat consisteth of three pairs of Relations: Husband and Wife, Parents and Children, Masters and Servants. Husbands must love their Wives with an Holy love in the Lord, even as the Lord loved the Church, who gave himself for it, to sanctifie and cleanse it by the washing of Water by the Word, that he might present it to himself a glorious Church, Ephesians 5. 25, 26, 27. Wives must submit themselves to their Husbands as unto the Lord; and be subject to them, as the Church is to Christ, Ephes. 5. 22, 23, 24. Children must obey their Parents in the Lord, Ephes. 6. 1. Parents must bring up their Children in the Nurture and Admonition of the Lord, Ephes. 6. 4. Servants must be obedient unto their Masters as unto Christ, and as the Servants of Christ, doing the Will of God from their hearts with good will, doing service as to the Lord, and not to Man; knowing that what good thing any man doth, the same shall he receive of the Lord, whether he be bond or free; and Masters must do the same to them, knowing that their Master is in Heaven, Ephes. 6.5, 6,7,8,9. So that it is evident that every distinct family-Relation is dedicated or holy to God, and to be used to the utmost for God. I shall have occasion to make further use anon of these Texts for the particular sorts of Worship, though I now make use of them as for Worship in General.

Argument, 5. The several sorts of solemn Worship in and by Christian Families, are found, appointed, used, and commanded in the Scripture, therefore it may well be concluded of Worship in the general: seeing the Genus is in each Species. But this Argument brings me to the second part of my undertaking: viz. to prove the point as to some special kinds of Worship; which I the more hasten to, because in so doing, I prove the general also,

II. Concerning Gods Worship in Special, I shall speak but to two or three of the chief parts of it, which belong to Families.

And 1. Of Teaching, under which I comprise,

1. Teaching the letter of the Scripture, 1. By reading it: 2. By teaching others to read it.

3. Causing them to learn it by memory, which is a kind of Catechising.

2. Teaching the Sense of it.

3. Applying what is so taught by familiar Reproofs, Admonitions and Exhortations.

Pro-

Propoſ. 2. It is the Will of God that the Rulers of Families ſhould teach thoſe that are under them the Doctrine of Salvation: i. e. The Doctrine of God concerning Salvation, and the terms on which it is to be had, and the means to be uſed for attaining it. and all the Duties requiſite on our parts in order thereunto.

Before I come to the proof, take theſe Cautions: 1. Where I ſay Men muſt thus teach, I imply they muſt be able to teach, and not teach before they are able: And if they be not able it is their own ſin, God having vouchſafed them Means for enablement. 2. Men muſt meaſure their teaching according to their abilities, and not pretend to more than they have, nor attempt that which they cannot perform, thereby incurring the guilt of proud ſelf-conceitedneſs, prophanation, or other abuſe of holy things. For example, men that are able judiciouſly to do it, muſt not preſume to interpret the Original, or to give the ſenſe of dark Propheſies,and other obſcure Texts of Scripture, nor to determine Controverſies beyond their reach. 3. Yet may ſuch conveniently ſtudy what more Learned able Men ſay to ſuch caſes; and tell their Families, this is the judgment of Fathers,or Councils, or ſuch and ſuch Learned Divines. 4. But ordinarily it is the ſafeſt, humbleſt, wiſeſt,and moſt orderly way for the Maſter of the Family to let Controverſies and obſcure Scriptures alone, and to teach the plain few neceſſary Doctrines commonly contained in Catechiſms, and to direct in matters of neceſſary practice. 5. Family teaching muſt ſtand in a ſubordination to Miniſterial teaching,as Families are ſubordinate to Churches: And therefore 1. Family teaching muſt give place to Miniſterial teaching,and never be ſet againſt it; you muſt not be hearing the Maſter of a Family when you ſhould be in a Church, hearing the Paſtor;and if the Paſtor ſend for Servants, or Children, to be Catechized in any fit place or at any fit time, the Maſter is not then to be doing it himſelf, or to hinder them, but they muſt go firſt to the Paſtor to be taught; alſo if a Paſtor come into a Family, the Maſter is to give place, and the Family to hear him firſt. 2. And therefore when any hard Text, or Controverſies fall in, the Maſter ſhould conſult with the Paſtor for their expoſition, unleſs it fall out that the Maſter of the Family be better learned in the Scripture than the Paſtor is, which is rare, and rarer ſhould be, ſeeing unworthy Miniſters ſhould be remov'd, and private men that are worthy ſhould be made Miniſters. And the Paſtors ſhould be the ableſt men in the Congregation. Now to the proof, (remembring ſtill that whatſoever proves it the Rulers Duty to teach,muſt needs prove it the Families Duty to learn, and to hearken to his teaching that they may learn.)

Arg. 1. From Deut. 11. 18, 19, 20, 21. Therefore ſhall you lay up theſe my words in your hearts,and in your Soul,and bind them for a ſign upon your hand,that they may be as Frontlets between your Eyes,and you ſhall teach them your Children, ſpeaking of them when thou ſitteſt in thy Houſe, and when thou walkeſt by the way, and when thou lieſt down,and when thou riſeſt up,and thou ſhalt write them upon the door poſts of thy houſe, and upon your Gates, that your days may be multiplied, and the days of your Children; The like words are in Deut 6.6,7,8. where it is ſaid, And thou ſhalt teach them diligently unto thy Children. So Deut. 4.9. Teach them thy Sons and thy Sons Sons.

Here there is one part of Family Duty, viz. Teaching Children the Laws of God, as plainly commanded, as words can expreſs it.

Arg. 2. From theſe Texts which commend this. Gen. 18. 18, 19. All the Nations of the Earth ſhall be bleſſed in him, for I know him that he will command his Children and his houſhold after him: And they ſhall keep the way of the Lord; and it was not only a command at his death what they ſhould do when he was dead, For, 1. It cannot be imagined that ſo holy a man ſhould neglect a Duty all his life time, and perform it but at death and be commended for that. 2. He might then have great cauſe to queſtion the efficacy. 3. As God commandeth a diligent inculcating precepts on Children: So no doubt it's a practice anſwerable to ſuch precepts, that is here commended. And it is not bare teaching, but commanding that is here mentioned, to ſhew that it muſt be an improvement of Authority, as well as of knowledge and elocution.

So 2 Tim. 3. 15. Of a Child Timothy knew the Scripture by the teaching of his Parents, as appeareth, 2 Tim. 1. 5.

Arg. 3. *Eph.*6.4. Bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord; παιδεία tranſlated nurture ſignifieth both Inſtruction and Correction, ſhewing that Parents muſt uſe both Doctrine and Authority or force, with their Children for the Matters of the Lord; and νουθεσία tranſlated admonition, ſignifieth ſuch Inſtruction as putteth Doctrine into the mind,and chargeth it on them,and fully ſtoreth their minds therewith: And it alſo ſignifieth chiding, and ſometimes correction. And it's to be noted that Children muſt be brought up in this: The word ἐκτρέφετε ſignifieth carefully to nouriſh, importeth that as you feed them with milk and bodily food, ſo you muſt as carefully and conſtantly feed and nouriſh them with the nurture and admonition of the Lord. It is called the nurture and admonition [of the Lord] becauſe the Lord commandeth it, and becauſe it is the Doctrine concerning the Lord, and the Doctrine of his teaching,and the Doctrine that leadeth to him.

Arg. 4. Prov. 22. 6. Train up a Child in the way where he ſhould go, and when he is old he will not depart from it.

Arg. 5. From all thoſe places that charge Children to hearken to the inſtructions of their Parents, Prov. 1. 8. My Son hear the inſtruction of thy Father, and forſake not the Law of thy Mother. Prov. 6. 20. is the like; and 3. 22. with many the like; Yea the Son that is ſtubborn and rebellious againſt the Inſtruction and Correction of a Father or Mother in Gluttony, Drunkenneſs, &c. was to be brought forth to the Magiſtrate,and ſton'd to death, Deut. 21. 18, 19, 20. Now all the Scriptures that require Children to hear their Parents, do imply that the Parents muſt teach their Children; for there is no hearing and learning without teaching.

But leſt you ſay that Parents and Children are not the whole Family, (tho' they may be, and in Abrahams caſe before mentioned, the whole houſhold is mentioned) the next ſhall ſpeak to other relations.

Arg. 6. 1 Pet. 3. 7. Likewiſe ye Husbands dwell with them (your Wives) according to knowledge;and Eph. 5. 25, 26. Love your Wives as Chriſt loved the Church and gave himſelf for it, that he might ſanctifie and cleanſe it. And this plainly implies that this knowledge muſt be us'd for the Inſtruction and Sanctification of the Wife, 1 Cor. 14. 34, 35. Women muſt keep ſilence in the Church, for it is not permitted unto them to ſpeak,but they are to be under obedience, as alſo ſaith the Law, If they will learn any thing, let them ask their Husbands at home. Which ſhews that at home their Husbands muſt teach them.

Arg. 7. Col. 3. 22, 23, 24, 25. Eph. 6. 5, 6, 7, 8. Servants muſt be obedient unto their Maſters as unto Chriſt, and ſerve them as ſerving the Lord Chriſt, and therefore Miniſters muſt command in Chriſt.

Arg. 8. A fortiori, fellow Chriſtians muſt exhort one another daily while it is called to day, leſt any be hardened by the deceitfulneſs of ſin, much more muſt the Rulers of Families do ſo to Wives, Children and Servants, 1 Pet. 4. 11 If any ſpeak it muſt be as the Oracles of God, much more to our own Families, Col. 3. 16. Let the Word of God dwell in you richly in all wiſdom, teaching and admonishing one another, and much more muſt a man do this to Wife, Children and Servants, than to thoſe more remote.

Arg. 9. Those that are to be chosen Deacons or Bishops must be such as Rule their own Children and their own household well, 1 Tim. 3. 4, 12. Now mark, 1. That this is one of those Christian virtues which they were to have before they were made Officers, therefore other Christians must have and perform it as well as they. 2. It is a Religious Holy Governing, such as a Minister is to exercise over his flock that is here mentioned, which is in the things of God and Salvation, or else the comparison or argument would not suit, v. 5. For if a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he rule the Church of God? But of this more before. I would say more on this point, but I think it is so clear in scripture as to make it needless; I pass therefore to the next.

Prop. 3. Prop. 3. Family Discipline is part of God's solemn Worship or Service appointed in his Word; This is not called Worship in so near a sense as some of the rest, but more remotely; yet so it may well be called, in that 1. It is an authoritative act done by Comission from God; 2. Upon such as disobey him, and as such. 3. And to his Glory, yea and it should be done with as great Solemnity and Reverence, as other parts of Worship.

The Acts of this Discipline are first denying the ungodly entrance into the Family, 2. Correcting; 3. Or calling out those that are in. I shall be but brief on these.

1. The first you have 2 Joh. 10. If there come any to you and bring not this Doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed; for he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds.

2. The Duty of correcting either by corporal sensible punishment or by withdrawing some benefit, is so commonly required in Scripture, especially towards Children, that I will not stand on it lest I speak in vain what you all know already: And how Eli suffered for neglecting it you know.

3. The Discipline of casting the wicked out of the Family, (Servants I mean who are separable members) you may find Psal. 101. 2, 3, 7, 8. I will walk within my house with a perfect heart, I will set no wicked thing before mine eyes. He that worketh deceit shall not dwell within my house, he that telleth lies shall not tarry in my sight.

Prop. 4. Prop. 4. Solemn Prayer and Praises of God in and by Christian Families is of Divine appointment.

1. For proof of this, I must desire you to look back to all the Arguments which proved the dueness of Worship in general, for they will yet more especially prove this sort of Worship, seeing Prayer and Praise are most immediately and eminently called Gods Worship of any, (Under Praises I comprehend Psalms of Praise, and under Prayer, Psalms of Prayer;) Yet let us add some more.

Arg. 1. It is Gods will that Christians who have fit occasions and opportunities for Prayer and Praises should improve them, but Christian Families have fit occasions and opportunities for Prayer and Praise, therefore it is Gods will they should improve them.

The major is evident in many Scripture Precepts, Tim. 2. 8. I will therefore that men pray every where lifting up holy hands without wrath and doubting, 1 Thes. 5. 17, 18. Pray without ceasing: In every thing give thanks, for this is the will of God concerning you, Col. 4. 2. Continue in Prayer, and watch in the same with thanksgiving, Col. 3. 16, 17. Teaching and Admonishing one another in Psalms and Hymns and spiritual Songs, singing with grace in your hearts unto the Lord, and whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus; giving thanks unto God and the Father by him: Rom. 12. 12. Continuing instant in Prayer; Eph. 6. 18. Praying always with all Prayer and Supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and Supplication for all Saints; And for me that utterance may be given me; Many the like Texts might be named, every one of which afford an Argument for Famil praises most effectual.

1. If men must pray every where (that is convenient) then sure in their Families. But &c. Erg. 2. If men must pray without ceasing, then sure in their Families. 3. If men must in every thing give thanks, then sure in Family-mercies, and then according to the nature of them, together. 4. If men must continue in prayer and watch in it, (for fit advantages and against Impediments,) and in thanksgiving, then doubtless they must not omit the singular advantages which are administred in Families. 5. If we must continue instant in prayer and supplication, &c. then doubtless in Family prayer, in our Families; unless that be no place and no prayer. Ooj. But this binds us no more to prayer in our Families than any where else. Answ. Yes it binds us to take all fit opportunities; and we have more fit opportunities in our own Families than in other mens, or than in occasional meetings or than in any ordinary societies, except the Church.

And here let me tell you, that it is ignorance to call for particular express Scripture, to require Praying in Families, as if we thought the General commands did not comprehend this particular, and were not sufficient. God doth in much wisdom leave out of his Written Law, the express determination of some of those circumstantials, or the application of general precepts to some of those Subjects to which common reason and the light of Nature sufficeth to determine and apply them. The Scripture giveth us the general [Pray alway with all manner of Prayer in all places] that is, Omit no fit advantages and opportunities for prayer; What if God had said no more than this about Prayer in Scripture? It seems some men would have said God hath not required us to pray at all, (when he requireth us to pray always,) because he tells us not when and where and how oft and with whom and in what words, &c. And so they would have concluded God no where bids us pray in secret, nor pray in Families, nor pray in Assemblies, nor pray with the Godly, nor with the wicked, nor pray every day, nor once a week: Nor with a Book, nor without a Book, and therefore not at all: As if the general [Pray on all fit occasions] were nothing.

But these men must know that nature also and reason is Gods light, and providence oft determineth of such Subjects and Adjuncts: And the general Law, and these together, do put all out of doubt. What if God telleth you [He that provideth not for his own, especially those of his household hath denied the faith, and is worse than an Infidel.] and do not tell you either who are your Families, and who not, nor what provision you shall make for them, what Food, what cloaths, or how oft they must feed, &c. Will you say God hath not bid you feed or cloth this Child, or that Servant? It is enough that God chargeth you to provide for your Families, in the Scripture; and that in nature he tell you which are your Families, and what Provision to make for them and how oft, and in what quantity, &c. And so if God bid you Pray in all places, and at all times, on all occasions (that are fit for Prayer,) and experience and common reason tell you that Families afford most fit times, place and occasions for Prayer, is not this enough that there are such Seasons and opportunities and occasions for Family-prayer? I refer you to the particular discoveries of them in the beginning where I proved the Dueness of Worship in general to be there performed. And I refer you also to common reason it self, not fearing the contradiction of any man whose impiety hath not made him unreasonable, and prevailed against the common light of Nature. This first general Argument were enough if men were not so averse to their duty that they cannot know, because they will not: But let us therefore add some more.

Arg.

Arg. 2. If there be many bleſſings which the Family needeth, and which they do actually receive from God, then it is the will of God that the Family pray for theſe bleſſings when they need them, and give thanks for them when they have received them: But there are many bleſſings which the Family (as conjunct) needeth and receiveth of God: Therefore the Family conjunct, and not only particular members ſecretly, ſhould pray for them and give thanks for them.

The Antecedent is paſt queſtion; 1. The continuance of the Family as ſuch in Being, 2. In Well being. 3. And ſo the preſervation and Direction of the eſſential members. 4. And the proſpering of all Family affairs are evident Inſtances: And to deſcend to more particulars would be needleſs tediouſneſs. The conſequence is proved from many Scriptures, which require thoſe that want mercies to ask them, and thoſe that have received them, to be thankful for them. Obj. So they may do ſingly. Anſw. It is not only as ſingle perſons but as a ſociety that they receive the mercy, therefore not only as ſingle perſons, but as a ſociety ſhould they pray and give thanks: Therefore ſhould they do it in that manner, as may be moſt fit for a ſociety to do it in, and that is, together conjunctly, that it may be indeed a Family Sacrifice, and that each part may ſee that the reſt join with them: And eſpecially that the Ruler may be ſatisfied in this, to whom the overſight of the reſt is committed: To ſee that they all join in Prayer, which in ſecret he cannot ſee, it being not fit that ſecret prayer ſhould have Spectators or Witneſs; that is, ſhould not be ſecret. But this I intended to make another Argument by it ſelf; which becauſe we are faln on it, I will add next.

Arg. 3. If God hath given charge to the Ruler of the Family to ſee that the reſt do Worſhip him in that Family, then ought the Ruler to cauſe them ſolemnly or openly to join in that Worſhip: But God hath given charge to the Ruler of the Family, to ſee that the reſt do worſhip him in that Family: Therefore, &c.

The reaſon of the Conſequence is, becauſe otherwiſe he can with no convenience ſee that they do it. For, 1. It is not fit that he ſhould ſtand by while they pray ſecretly. 2. Nor are they able vocally to do it, in moſt Families, but have need of a leader; it being not a thing to be expected of every Woman and Child and Servant, (that had wanted good Education,) that they ſhould be able to pray without a Guide, ſo as is fit for others to hear. 3. It would take up almoſt all the time of the Ruler of many Families, to go to them one after another, and ſtand by them while they pray till all have done. What man in his wits can think this to be ſo fit a courſe, as for the Family to join together, the Ruler being the mouth?

The Antecedent I prove thus, 1. The fourth Commandment requireth the Ruler of the Family not only to ſee that himſelf ſanctifie the Sabbath day, but alſo that his Son and Daughter, and Man Servant and Maid Servant, his Cattle (that is ſo far as they are capable) yea and the Stranger that is within his gates ſhould do it. 2. It was committed to Abrahams charge to ſee that all in his Family were Circumciſed: So was it afterward to every Ruler of a Family; inſomuch as the Angel threatned Moſes, when his Son was uncircumciſed. 3. The Ruler of the Family was to ſee that the Paſſoever was kept by every one in his Family, Exod. 12. 2, 3. &c. And ſo the Feaſt of Weeks, Deut. 26. 11, 12. All that is ſaid before tendeth to prove this, and much more might be ſaid, if I thought it would be denied.

Arg. 4. If God prefer, and would have us prefer, the Prayers and Praiſes of many conjunct, before the Prayers and Praiſes of thoſe Perſons dividedly, then it is his will that the particular Perſons of Chriſtian Families ſhould prefer conjunct Prayer and Praiſes before diſjunct: But the Antecedent is true, Therefore ſo is the conſequent. Or thus take it for the ſame Argument or another. If it be the Duty of Neighbours, when they have occaſion and opportunity, rather to join together, in Praiſes of common concernment, than to do it dividedly, then much more is this the Duty of Families: But it is the Duty of Neighbours. Therefore.

In the former Argument the reaſon of the conſequence is, becauſe that way is to be taken that God is beſt pleaſed with. The reaſon of the conſequence in the latter is, becauſe Family members are more nearly related than Neighbours, and have much more advantage and opportunity for conjunction and more ordinary reaſons to urge them to it, from the conjunction of their intereſts and affairs.

There is nothing needs proof but the Antecedent, which I ſhall put paſt all doubt by theſe Arguments, 1 Col. 3. 16. [Teaching and admoniſhing one another in Pſalms and Hymns and ſpiritual Songs, ſinging with grace in your hearts unto the Lord.] Here is one Duty of Praiſe required to be done together and not apart only. I ſhall yet make further uſe of this Text anon. 2 Acts 12. 12. Many were gathered together praying in Maries houſe, when Peter came to the door; This was not an Aſſembly of the whole Church but a ſmall part: They judged it better to pray together than alone. 3. Acts 20. 36. Paul prayed together with all the Elders of the Church of Epheſus, when he had them with him; and did not chooſe rather to let them pray each man alone. 4. James 5. 15, 16. James commands the ſick to ſend for the Elders of the Church, and let them pray over him, and the prayer of the faithful ſhall ſave the ſick, &c. He doth not bid ſend to them to pray for you; but he would have them join together in doing it. 5. Church prayers are preferred before private on this ground, and we commanded not to forſake the Aſſembling of our ſelves together, Heb. 10. 25. 6. Striving together in prayer is deſired Rom. 15. 30. 7. Matth. 18. 20. For where two or three are gathered together in my Name, there am I in the midſt of them. 8. Therefore Chriſt came among the Diſciples when they were gathered together, after his Reſurrection. And ſent down the Holy Ghoſt when they were gathered together, Act. 2. And they continued with one accord in prayer and Supplication, Acts 1. 14, 24, & 2. 42. And when they had prayed, the place was ſhaken where they had Aſſembled together, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghoſt, &c. Acts 4. 31. 9. Is not this implied in Chriſts directing his Diſciples to pray in the plural number [Our Father, &c. Give us this day, &c.] 10. The very neceſſity of the perſons proves it, in that few Societies are ſuch but that moſt are unable to expreſs their own wants ſo largely as to affect their hearts, ſo much as when others do it that are better ſtored with affection and expreſſion. And this is one of Gods ways for Communion and Communication of grace; that thoſe that have much may help to warm and kindle thoſe that have leſs. Experience telleth us the benefit of this. As all the Body is not an Eye or Hand, ſo not a Tongue, and therefore the tongue of the Church, and of the Family muſt ſpeak for the whole body: Not but that each one ought to pray in ſecret too: But 1. There the heart without the tongue may better ſerve turn. 2. They ſtill ought to prefer conjunct prayer. And 11. The communion of Saints is an Article of our Creed, which binds us to acknowledge it fit to do much of Gods work as we can in communion with the Saints, not going beyond our Callings, nor into confuſion.

Argument. 5. It is a Duty to receive all the mercies that God offereth us: But for a Family to have acceſs to God in joint Prayers and Praiſes, is a mercy that God offereth them; Therefore it is their duty to accept it. The major is clear nature and Scripture [Because I have offered and ye refused] is Gods great aggravation of the sin of the rebellious: [How oft would I have gathered you together, and ye would not? All the day long have I stretched out my hand, &c.] To refuse an offered kindness is contempt and ingratitude. The minor is undeniable by any Christian, that ever knew what family prayers and praises were. Who dare say that it is no mercy to have such a joint access to God? Who feels not conjunction somewhat help his own affections, who makes conscience of watching his heart?

Argument 6. Part of the Duties of Families are such that they apparently loose their chiefest life and excellency if they be not performed joyntly: Therefore they are so to be performed.

I mean, singing of Psalms which I before proved an ordinary Duty of Conjunct Christians, Therefore of families. The Melody and Harmony is lost by our separation, and consequently the alacrity and quickning which our affections should get by it. And if part of Gods praises must be performed together, it is easie to see that the rest must be so too. (Not to speak of teaching which cannot be done alone.)

Argument 7. Family prayer and praises are a Duty owned by the teaching and sanctifying work of the Spirit: Therefore they are of God.

I would not argue backward from the Spirits teaching to the words commanding, but on these two suppositions, 1. That the Experiment is very general, and undeniable. 2. That many Texts of Scripture are brought already for family prayer; and that this argument is but to second them and prove them truly interpreted. The Spirit and the Word do always agree: If therefore I can prove that the Spirit of God doth commonly work mens hearts to a Love and Savour of these Duties, doubtless they are of God. Sanctification is a Transcript of the precepts of the word on the heart, written out by the Spirit of God. So much for the Consequence.

The Antecedent consisteth of two parts, 1. That the Sanctified have in them inclinations to these Duties. 2. That these inclinations are from the Spirit of God. The first needs no proof being a matter of experience. I appeal to the heart of every sound and stable Christian, whether he feel not a Conviction of this Duty and an inclination to the performance of it. I never met with one such to my knowledge that was otherwise minded. Object. Many in our times are quite against family prayer, who are good Christians. Answ. I know none of them. I confess I once thought some very good Christians that now are against them, but now they appear otherwise, not only by this but by other things. I know none that cast off these Duties, but they took up vile sins in their stead, and cast off other Duties as well as these: Let others observe and judge as they find. 2. The power of delusion may for a time make a Christian forbear as unlawful, that which his very new nature is inclined too. As some think it unlawful to pray in our Assemblies, and some to join in Sacraments: And yet they have a spirit within them that inclineth their hearts to it still, and therefore they love it, and with it were lawful, even when they forbear it upon a conceit that it is unlawful. And so it's possible for a time some may do by family Duties: But as I expect that these ere long recover, so for my part I take all the rest to be graceless: Prejudice and error as a Temptation may prohibit the exercise of a Duty, when yet the spirit of God doth work in the heart an inclination to that Duty in sanctifying it. 2. And that these inclinations are indeed from the spirit is evident. 1. In that they come in with all other grace: 2. And by the same means. 3. And are preserved by the same means, standing or falling, increasing or decreasing with the rest. 4. And are to the same end. 5. And are so generally in all the Saints. 6. And so resisted by flesh and blood. 7. And so agreeable to the Word, that a Christian sins against his new nature, when he neglects Family Duties. And God doth by his spirit create a desire after them, and an estimation of them in every gracious soul.

Argument 8. Family prayer and praises is a Duty, ordinarily crowned with admirable Divine and special blessings: Therefore it is of God: The consequence is evident. For though common outward prosperity may be given to the wicked, who have their portion in this life, yet so is not prosperity of soul.

For the Antecedent I willingly appeal to the experience of all the holy families in the world. Who ever used these Duties seriously, and found not the benefits? What Families be they, in which Grace and Heavenly mindedness prospereth, but those that use these Duties? Compare in all your Towns, Cities and Villages, the families that read Scriptures, pray and praise God, with those that do not, and see the difference: Which of them abound more with impiety, with Oaths, and Cursings, and railings, and Drunkenness, and Whoredoms, and Worldliness, &c. And which abound most with Faith and Patience, and Temperance, and Charity, and Repentance, and Hope, &c. The Controversie is not hard to decide. Look to the Nobility and Gentry of England; See you no difference between those that have been bred in praying Families and the rest? I mean taking them, (as we say) one with another proportionably. Look to the Ministers of England: Is it praying Families or prayerless Families that have done most to the well furnishing of the Universities.

Argument 9. All Churches ought solemnly to pray to God and praise him. A Christian Family is a Church. Therefore,

The major is past doubt, the minor I prove from the Nature of a Church in general, which is a society of Christians combined for the better worshipping and serving of God. I say not that a Family formally as a family, is a Church: But every family of Christians ought moreover, by such a combination to be a Church. Yea as Christians they are so combined, seeing Christianity tieth them to serve God conjunctly together in their Relations. 2. Scripture expresseth it, 1 Cor. 16. 19. Aquila and Priscilla salute you much in the Lord, with the Church that is in their house. He saith not which meeteth in their house, but which is in it. So Philemon 2. And to the Church in thy house, Rom. 16. 5. Likewise greet the Church that is in their house. Col. 4. 15. Salute the Brethren that are at Laodicea and Nymphas, and the Church which is in his house: Tho' some learned Men take these to be meant of part of the Churches, assembling in these houses, yet Beza, Grotius, and many others acknowledge it to be meant of a family or domestick Church, according to that of Tertullian [ubi tres licet laici ibi Ecclesia] yet I say not that such a Family Church, is of the same species with a particular organized Church of many Families. But it could not (so much as Analogically) be called a Church if they might not and must not pray together, and praise God together; for these therefore it fully concludeth.

Argument 10. If Rulers must teach their families the word of God, then must they pray with them, but they must teach them: Therefore. The Antecedent is fully proved by expres Scripture already: See also Psal. 78. 4, 5, 6. —— Ministers must teach from house to house: therefore Rulers themselves must do it. Acts 5. 42. & 20. 20.

The Consequence is proved good; 1. The Apostles prayed when they Preached or Instructed Christians in private Assemblies, Acts 20. 36. and other places.

places. 2. We have special need of Gods assistance in reading the Scriptures to know his mind in them, and to make them profitable to us: therefore we must seek it. 3. The Reverence due to so holy a business requireth it. 4. We are commanded in all things to make our requests known to God with Prayers, Supplications and thanksgiving, and that with all manner of prayer, in all places, without ceasing: therefore specially on such occasions as the reading of Scriptures and instructing others: And I think that few Men that are convinced of the Duty of reading Scripture and solemn instructing their families, will question the Duty of praying for Gods blessing on it, when they set upon the work. Yea a Christians own Conscience will provoke him reverently to begin all with God in the imploring of his acceptance, and aid, and blessing.

Argument 11. If Rulers of Families are bound to teach their Families to Pray, then are they bound to Pray with them: But they are bound to teach them to Pray. Therefore,

In the foregoing Argument I speak of teaching in general: Here I speak of teaching to pray in special: The Antecedent of the major I prove thus. 1. They are bound to bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, Eph. 6. 44. Therefore to teach them to Pray and Praise God: For the Nurture and Admonition of the Lord containeth that. 2. They are bound to teach them the fear of the Lord, and train them up in the way that they should go, and that is doubtless in the way of Prayer and Praising God.

The Consequence appeareth here to be sound, in that men cannot be well and effectually taught to Pray, without Praying with them, or in their hearing: Therefore they that must teach them to pray, must Pray with them. It is like musick, which you cannot well teach any man, without playing or singing to him; seeing teaching must be by practising; And in most practical Doctrines it is so in some degree.

If any question this, I appeal to Experience. I never knew any man that was well taught by man to pray without practising it before them. They that ever knew any such, may have the more colour to object; but I did not; Or if they did, yet so rare a thing is not to be made the ordinary way of our endeavours, no more than we should forbear teaching men the most curious Artifices by ocular demonstration, because some Wits have learnt them by few words, or of their own Invention; they are cruel to Children and Servants that teach them not to pray by practice and example.

Argument 12. From 1 Tim. 4. 3, 4, 5. — Meats which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving — for it is sanctified by the Word of God and Prayer.

Here mark, that all our meat is to be received with thanksgiving; not only with a disposition of thankfulness; 2. That this is twice repeated here together expressly, yea, thrice in sense; 3. That God created them so to be received. 4. That it is made a Condition of the goodness, that is, the blessing of the Creature to our use; 5. That the Creature is said to be sanctified by Gods word and prayer; and so to be unsanctified to us before; 6. That the same thing which is called thanksgiving in the two former verses, is called Prayer in the last; Else the consequence of the Apostle could not hold, when he thus argues, Its good if it be received with thanksgiving, because it is sanctified by Prayer.

Hence I will draw these two Arguments: 1. If families must with thanksgiving receive their meat as from God, then is the thanksgiving of families a duty of Gods appointment: But the former is true, therefore so is the latter. The Antecedent is plain: All must receive their Meat with thanksgiving: Therefore families must. They eat together: therefore they must give thanks together: And that Prayer is included in thanksgiving in this Text, I manifested before.

2. It is the Duty of families to use means that all Gods Creatures may be sanctified to them: Prayer is the means to be used that all Gods Creatures may be sanctified to them: Therefore it is the Duty of families to use Prayer.

Argument 13. From 1 Pet 3. 7. Likewise ye Husbands dwell with them according to knowledge, giving honour to the Wife as to the weaker Vessel, and as being Heirs together of the grace of life, that your prayers be not hindred. That Prayer which is especially hindred by ignorant and unkind converse, it is that is especially meant here in this Text. But it is conjunct Prayer that is especially so hindred. Therefore, &c. I know that secret personal prayer, is also hindred by the same causes; but not so directly and notably as conjunct prayer is. With what hearts can Husband and Wife join together as one soul in prayer to God, when they abuse and exasperate each other, and come hot from chidings and dissentions? This seemeth the true meaning of the Text: And so the conjunct prayer of Husband and Wife being proved a duty (who sometime constitute a family,) the same reasons will include the rest of the Family also.

Arg. 14. From Col. 3. 16, 17. to Col. 4. 4. Let the word of God dwell in you richly in all wisdom, teaching and admonishing one another in Psalms and Hymns, and spiritual Songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord: and whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus; giving thanks to God and the Father by him. Wives submit your selves, &c. 4. 2. Continue in prayer, and watch in the same with thanksgiving.

Hence I may fetch many arguments for family-prayers. 1. It appeareth to be family-prayers principally that the Apostle here speaketh of. For it is families that he speaks to: For in verse 16, 17. he speaketh of prayer and thanksgiving; and in the next words he speaketh to each family-relation, Wives, Husbands, Children, Parents, Servants, Masters. And in the next words, continuing his speech to the same persons, he bids them, [Continue in prayer, and watch in the same, &c.] 2. If neighbours are bound to speak together in Psalms and Hymns and Spiritual Songs, with grace in their hearts to the Lord, and to continue in prayer and thanksgiving; then families much more, who are nearlier related, and have more necessities and opportunities: as is said before. 3. If whatever we do in word or deed, we must do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks; then Families must needs join in giving thanks. For they have much daily business in word and deed to be done together and asunder.

Argument 15. From Dan. 6. 10. When Daniel knew that the Writing was signed, he went into his house, and his window being open in his Chamber towards Jerusalem, he kneeled upon his knees three times a day, and prayed, and gave thanks before his God, as he did afore time: Then these men assembled, and found Daniel praying and making supplication before his God. Here note, 1. The Nature of the Duty. 2. The necessity of it. 1. If it had not been open family-prayer which Daniel here performed, how could they have known what he said? It is not probable that he would speak so lowd in secret; nor is it like they would have found him at it. So great a Prince would have had some Servants in his outward rooms to have stayed them before they had come so near. 2. And the Necessity of this prayer is such, that Daniel would not omit it for a few days to save his life.

Argument 16. From Josh. 24. 15. But as for me and my house we will serve the Lord. Here note,

1. That

1. That it is a Household that is here engaged: For if any would prove that it extendeth further, to all Joshua's Tribe, or inferior kindred, yet his Household would be most eminently included. 2. That it is the same thing which Joshua promiseth for his House, which he would have all Israel do for theirs: for he maketh himself an example to move them to it.

If Households must serve the Lord, then households must pray to him and praise him: But households must serve him: Therefore, &c. The Consequence is proved, in that Prayer and Praise are so necessary parts of Gods service, that no family or person can be said in general to be devoted to serve God, that are not devoted to them; Calling upon God, is oft put in Scripture, for all Gods worship, as being a most eminent part: and Atheists are described to be such as call not upon the Lord, Psal. 14, &c.

Argument 17. The story of Cornelius Acts 10. proveth that he performed family Worship: For observe, 1. That vers. 2. he is said to be [A devout man, and one that feared God with all his house, which gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God alway:] And ver. 30. he saith [at the ninth hour I prayed in my house.] And ver. 24. [he called together his kindred and near friends.] So verse 11. 14. [Thou and all thy house shall be saved.] So that in ver. 2. Fearing God, comprehendeth Prayer, and is usually put for all Gods Worship: therefore when he is said to Fear God with all his house, it is included that he worshipped God with all his house: And that he used to do it conjunctly with them is implied, in his gathering together his Kindred and Friends when Peter came, not mentioning the calling together his household, as being usual and supposed. And when it is said that he prayed ἐν τῷ οἴκῳ, in his house, it may signifie his household, as in Scripture the word is often taken. However the circumstances shew that he did it.

Argument 18. From 1 Tim. 3. 4, 5, 12. One that ruleth well his own house, having his Children in subjection, with all gravity: For if a Man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the Church of God: Let the Deacons be the Husbands of one Wife: Ruling their Children and their own houses well. Here mark, that it is such a ruling of their houses, as is of the same nature as the Ruling of the Church, mutatis mutandis, and that is, a training them up in the Worship of God, and guiding them therein: for the Apostle maketh the defect of the one, to be a sure discovery of their unfitness for the other. Now to Rule the Church, is to teach and guide them as their mouth in prayer and praises unto God, as well as to oversee their lives: therefore it is such a Ruling of their houses as is prerequisite to prove them fit.

They that must so Rule well their own houses, as may partly prove them not unfit to rule the Church, must rule them by holy instructions, and guiding them as their mouth in the Worship of God. But those mentioned 1 Tim. 3. must so rule their houses: Therefore, &c.

The Pastors Ruling of the Church doth most consist in going before them, and guiding them in Gods worship, therefore so doth the Ruling of their own houses, which is made a trying qualification of their fitness hereunto. Though yet it reach not so high, nor to so many things, and the Conclusion be not Affirmative [He that Ruleth his own house well, is fit to Rule the Church of God] but Negative [He that Ruleth not his own house well, is not fit to Rule the Church of God;] But that is, because 1. This is a lower degree of Ruling, which will not prove him fit for a higher: 2. And it is but one qualification of many that are requisite. Yet it is apparent that some degrees of aptitude is proved hence; and that from a similitude of the things: When Paul compareth Ruling the House to Ruling the Church, he cannot be thought to take them to be wholly heterogeneous. He would never have said, He that cannot Rule an Army, or Regiment, or a City, how shall he rule the Church of God? I conclude therefore that this Text doth shew that it is the duty of Masters of Families, to Rule well their own families in the right Worshipping of God, mutatis mutandis, as Ministers must rule the Church.

Argument 19. If Families have special necessity of family-prayer conjunctly, which cannot be supplied otherwise; then it is Gods Will that Family-prayer should be in use: But families have such necessities; Therefore, &c. The Consequent needs no proof; The Antecedent is proved by instance. Families have Family necessities, which are larger than to be confined to a Closet, and yet more private than to be brought still into the Assemblies of the Church. 1. There are many worldly Occasions about their Callings and Relations, which its fit for them to mention among themselves, but unfit to mention before all the Congregation. 2. There are many distempers in the hearts and lives of the members of the Families, and many Miscarriages, and Disagreements which must be taken up at home, and which Prayer must do much to cure, and yet are not fit to be brought to the Ears of the Church-assemblies. 3. And if it were fit to mention them all in publick, yet the number of such cases would be so great, as would overwhelm the Minister, and confound the publick Worship; nay, one half of them in most Churches could not be mentioned. 4. And such cases are of ordinary occurrence, and therefore would ordinarily have all these inconveniences.

And yet there are many such cases that are not fit to be confined to our secret prayers each one by himself; because, 1. They often so sin together, as maketh it fit that they confess and lament it together: 2. And some mercies which they receive together, its fit they seek, and give thanks for together: 3. And many works which they do together, its fit they seek a blessing on together: 4. And the presence of one another in Confession, Petition, and Thanksgiving doth tend to the increase of their fervour, and warming of their hearts, and engaging them the more to duty, and against sin; and is needful on the grounds laid down before. Nay, it is a kind of Family-schism, in such cases to separate from one another, and to pray in secret only; as it is Church schism to separate from the Church-assemblies, and to pray in Families only. Nature and Grace delight in Unity, and abhor Division. And the Light of Nature and Grace engageth us, to do as much of the work of God in Unity, and Concord, and Communion as we can.

Argument 20. If before the giving of the Law to Moses, God was worshipped in Families by his own appointment, and this appointment be not yet reverst, then God is to be worshipped in Families still: But the Antecedent is certain: Therefore so is the consequent.

I think no Man denieth the first part of the Antecedent; that before the Flood in the Families of the Righteous, and after till the establishment of a Priesthood, God was worshipped in Families or Households: It is a greater doubt whether then he had any other publick Worship. When there were few or no Church-assembles that were larger than Families, no doubt God was ordinarily worshipped in Families. Every Ruler of a Family then was as a Priest to his own Family. Cain and Abel offered their own Sacrifices; so did Noah, Abraham and Jacob.

If it be objected, that all this ceased, when the Office of the Priest was instituted, and so deny the latter part of my Antecedent, I reply, 1. Though some make make a doubt of it, whether the Office of Prieſthood was inſtituted before Aaron's time, I think there is no great doubt to be made of it; ſeeing we find a Prieſthood then among other Nations, who had it either by the light of Nature, or by Tradition from the Church; And Melchizedecs Prieſthood (who was a Type of Chriſt) is expreſly mentioned. So that though Family-worſhip was then the moſt uſual, yet ſome more publick worſhip there was. 2. After the inſtitution of Aaron's Prieſthood Family worſhip continued, as I have proved before; yea, the two Sacraments of Circumciſion and the Paſſeover, were celebrated in Families by the Maſter of the Houſe; Therefore Prayer was certainly continued in Families. 3. If that part of worſhip that was afterward performed in Synagogues and publick Aſſemblies was appropriated to them, that no whit proveth, that the part which agreed to Families as ſuch, was transferred to thoſe Aſſemblies. Nay, it is a certain proof that part was left to Families ſtill, becauſe we find that the publick Aſſemblies never undertook it. We find among them no prayer but Church-prayer; and not that which was fitted to Families as ſuch at all. Nor is there a word of Scripture that ſpeaketh of Gods reverſing of his command or order for Family-prayer, or other proper Family worſhip. Therefore it is proved to continue obligatory ſtill.

Had I not been too long already, I ſhould have urged to this end the example of Job in Sacrificing daily for his Sons; and of Eſther's keeping a Faſt with her Maids, Heſt. 4. 16. And Jer. 10. 25. Pour out thy fury on the Heathen that know thee not, and on the Families that call not on thy name. Its true that by [Families] here is meant Tribes of people; and by calling on his Name, is meant their worſhipping the true God. But yet this is ſpoken of all Tribes without exception, great and ſmall; And Tribes in the beginning (as Abrahams, Iſaacs, Jacobs, &c.) were confined to Families; And the argument holdeth from parity of reaſon, to a proper Family; And that calling on Gods Name, is put for his worſhip, doth more confirm us, becauſe it proveth it to be the moſt eminent part of worſhip, or elſe the whole would not be ſignified by it; At leaſt no reaſon can imagine it excluded. So much for the proof of the fourth Propoſition.

Objections Anſwered.

Object. 1. HAd it been a duty under the Goſpel to pray in Families, we ſhould certainly have found it more expreſly required in the Scripture.

Anſw. 1. I have already ſhewed you, that it is plainly required in the Scripture; But men muſt not teach God how to ſpeak; nor oblige him to make all plain to blind perverted minds. 2. Thoſe things which were plainly revealed in the Old Teſtament, and the Church then held without any contradiction, even from the perſecutors of Chriſt themſelves, might well be paſt over in the Goſpel, and taken as ſuppoſed acknowledged things. 3. The General Precepts (to pray alway, with all prayer, in all places, &c.) being expreſſed in the Goſpel, and the Light of Nature making particular Application of them to Families, what need there any more? 4. This reaſon is apparent why Scripture ſpeaketh of it no more expreſly: Before Chriſt's time the worſhip of God was leſs ſpiritual, and more ceremonial than afterward it was: And therefore you find ofter mention of Circumciſion and Sacrificing, than of Prayer: And yet Prayer was ſtill ſuppoſed to concur. And after Chriſt's time on earth, moſt Chriſtian Families were diſturbed by perſecution, and Chriſtians ſold up all and lived in Community: And alſo the Scripture Hiſtory was to deſcribe to us the ſtate of the Churches, rather than of particular Families.

Object. 2. Chriſt himſelf did not uſe to pray with his Family: as appeareth by the Diſciples asking him to teach them to pray, and by the ſilence of the Scripture in this point: Therefore it is no duty to us.

Anſw. 1. Scripture ſilence is no proof that Chriſt did not uſe it. All things are not written which he did. 2. His Teaching them the Lords Prayer, and their deſire of a common Rule of Prayer, might conſiſt with his uſual praying with them: At leaſt with his uſing to pray with them after that, though at firſt he did not uſe it. 3. But it is the Conſequence that I principally deny. 1. Becauſe Chriſt did afterwards call his ſervants to many duties, which he put them not on at firſt; as Sacraments, Diſcipline, Preaching, frequenter Praying, &c. eſpecially after the coming down of the Holy Ghoſt: As they underſtood not many Articles of the faith till then, ſo no wonder if they underſtood not many Duties till then: For Chriſt would have them thus ſuddenly inſtructed and fullier ſanctified by a Miracle, that their Miniſtry might be more credible, their Miſſion being evidently Divine, and they being paſt the ſuſpicion of forgery and deceit. 2. And though it is evident, that Chriſt did uſe to bleſs the Meat, and ſing Hymns to God with his Diſciples, Luke 22. 17, 18. Mat. 14. 22, 23, 26. Matth. 26. 27, 28, 30. and therefore it is very probable, prayed with them often, as John 17. Yet it could not be expected, that he ſhould ordinarily be their mouth in ſuch prayers as they daily needed. His caſe and ours are exceedingly different. His Diſciples muſt daily confeſs their ſins, and be humbled for them, and ask forgiveneſs: but Chriſt had none of this to do. They muſt pray for mortifying grace, and help againſt ſin; but he had no ſin to mortify or pray againſt. They muſt pray for the Spirit, and the increaſe of their imperfect graces; but Chriſt had fulneſs and perfection: They muſt pray for many means to theſe ends, and for help in uſing them, and a bleſſing on them, which he had no uſe for. They muſt give thanks for Pardon and Converſion, &c. which Chriſt had no occaſion to give thanks for. So that having a High-prieſt ſo much ſeparate from ſinners, they had one that prayed for them; but not one fit to join with them as their mouth to God, in ordinary Family-prayers, ſuch as they needed; as Maſters muſt do with their Families.

Obj. 3. God doth not require either vain or abominable prayers: But Family-prayers are ordinarily vain and abominable: Therefore &c. The minor is proved thus. The Prayers of the wicked are abominable: moſt Families are wicked, or have wicked Perſons: Therefore, &c.

Anſw. 1. This is confeſſedly nothing againſt the Prayers of Godly Families. 2. The Prayers of a Godly maſter are not abominable nor vain, becauſe of the preſence of others that are ungodly. Elſe Chriſt's Prayers and Bleſſings before-mentioned ſhould have been vain or abominable, becauſe Judas was there, who was a Thief and Hypocrite. And the Apoſtles and all Miniſters Prayers ſhould be ſo in all ſuch Churches, as that of Corinth, Galatia, Epheſus are deſcribed to have been. 3. I refer you to my Method for Peace of Conſcience, how far the prayers of the wicked are, or are not abominable. The prayers of the wicked as wicked are abominable; but not as they expreſs their return to God, and repenting of their wickedneſs. It is not the abominable Prayer that God commandeth, but the faithful penitent prayer. You miſtake it, as if the wicked man were not the perſon commanded to pray; whereas you ſhould rather ſay, It is not the abominable prayer that is commanded him. He is commanded to pray ſuch prayers as are not abominable; Even as Simon Magus, Act. 8. to Repent and Pray; and to ſeek the Lord while he may be found, and call upon him while he is near, and to forſake his way, &c.

&c. Iſa. 55. 6, 7. Let the wicked pray thus, and his prayer will not be abominable. The command of praying implieth the command of Repenting and departing from his wickedneſs; For what is it to pray for Grace, but to expreſs to God their deſires of Grace? (It is not to tell God a lie, by ſaying they deſire that which they hate.) Therefore when we exhort them to pray, we exhort them to ſuch Deſires.

Object. 4. Obj. 4. Many Maſters of Families cannot pray in their Families without a Book, and that's unlawful.

Anſw. 1. If their diſability be Natural as in Ideots, they are not fit to rule Families, if it be Moral and culpable, they are bound to uſe the means to Overcome it; And in the mean time to uſe a Book or form, rather than not to pray in their Families at all.

Of the Frequency and Seaſons of Family-Worſhip.

THE laſt part of my work is to ſpeak of the fit Times of Family-Worſhip. 1. Whether it ſhould be every day? 2. Whether twice a day? 3. Whether Morning and Evening? Anſw. 1. Ordinarily it ſhould be every day and twice a day: And the Morning and Evening are ordinarily the fitteſt Seaſons. 2. But extraordinarily ſome greater Duty may intervene, which may for that time diſoblige us. And the occaſions of ſome Families may make that Hour fit to one, which is unfit to another. For brevity I will join all together in the proof.

Arg. 1. We are bound to take all fit occaſions and opportunities to worſhip God. Families have daily (Morning and Evening) ſuch occaſions and opportunities; Therefore they are bound to take them.

Both Major and Minor are proved before. Experience proveth that Family-ſins are daily committed, and Family-mercies daily received, and Family-neceſſities daily do occur. And Reaſon tells us, 1. That it is ſeaſonable every Morning to give God Thanks for the Reſt of the Night paſt. 2. And to beg direction, protection and Proviſions and Bleſſing for the following Day. 3. And that then our Minds are freeſt from Wearineſs and worldly Care. And ſo Reaſon telleth us that the Evening is a fit Seaſon to give God Thanks for the Mercies of the Day, and to confeſs the Sins of the Day, and ask forgiveneſs, and to Pray for Reſt and Protection in the Night. As Nature and Reaſon tells us how oft a Man ſhould Eat and Drink, and how long he ſhould Sleep, and what cloathing he ſhould Wear; and Scripture need not tell you the particulars: So if Scripture command you Prayer in General, God may by Providence tell you when and how oft you muſt pray.

Arg. 2. The Lords Prayer directeth us daily to put up ſuch Prayers as belong to Families; Therefore, &c. Give us this day our daily bread. It runs all in the plural Number. And the Reaſon of it will oblige Families as well as individual Perſons.

Arg. 3. From 1 Theſ. 5. 17. Pray without ceaſing; in all things give Thanks. Col. 4. 1, 2. Maſters give to your Servants that which is juſt and equal, knowing that ye alſo have a Maſter in Heaven. Continue in Prayer, and watch in the ſame with Thanksgiving. Col. 3. 17. Whatſoever ye do in Word or Deed, do all in the Name of the Lord Jeſus; giving Thanks to God and the Father by him. Phil. 4. 6. Be careful for nothing, but in every thing by Prayer and Supplication with Thanksgiving, let your Requeſts be made known to God. It's eaſie for a Man that is willing to ſee, that leſs than twice a Day, doth not anſwer the Command of Praying without ceaſing, continually, in every thing, whatſoever ye do, &c. The Phraſes ſeeming to go much higher.

Arg. 4. Daniel Prayed in his Houſe thrice a Day: Therefore leſs than twice under the Goſpel is to us unreaſonable.

Arg. 5. 1 Tim. 4. 5. She that is a Widow indeed and deſolate, truſteth in God, and Continueth in Supplications, and Prayer Night and Day. Night and Day can be no leſs than Morning and Evening. And if you ſay, This is not Family Prayer, I anſwer, 1. It is all kind of Prayer belonging to her. 2. And if it commend the leſs, much more the greater.

Arg. 6. From Luke 6. 14. & 2. 37. & 18. 17. Acts 26. 7, 1. Theſ. 3. 10. 2 Tim. 1. 3. Rev. 7. 15. Neh. 1. 6. Pſal. 88. 1. Joſh. 1. 8. Pſal. 1. 2. Which ſhew that Night and Day Chriſt himſelf Pray'd, and his Servants Prayed and Meditated and Read the Scripture.

Arg. 7. Deut. 6. 7. & 11. 19. It is expreſly commanded that Parents Teach their Children the Word of God, when they lie down, and when they riſe up; and the parity of Reaſon, and conjunction of the Word and Prayer will prove, that they ſhould alſo pray with them lying down and riſing up.

Arg. 8. For brevity ſake I offer you together, Pſal. 119. 164. David praiſed God ſeven times a Day; & 145. 2. Every Day will I bleſs thee. Pſal. 5. 3. My voice ſhalt thou hear in the Morning, O Lord; in the Morning will I direct my Prayer to thee and will look up. 59. 16. I will ſing aloud of thy mercy in the Morning 88. 13. In the Morning ſhall my Prayer prevent thee. 92. 12. It is good to give thanks unto the Lord, and to ſing Praiſes to thy Name, O moſt high: To ſhew forth thy loving kindneſs in the Morning and thy Faithfulneſs every Night. 119. 147, 148. I prevented the dawning of the Morning and Cryed, I hoped in thy Word: Mine Eyes prevent the Night watches, that I might Meditate on thy Word. 130. 6. My Soul waiteth for the Lord more than they that watch for the Morning, I ſay more than they that watch for the Morning. The Prieſts were to offer Sacrifices and thanks to God every morning: 1 Chron. 23. 30. Exod. 30. 7. & 36. 3. Lev. 6. 12. 2 Chron. 13. 11. Ezek. 46. 13, 14, 15. Amos 4. 4. And Chriſtians are a Holy Prieſthood, to Offer up Sacrifices to God, acceptable thro' Jeſus Chriſt, 1 Pet. 2. 5, 9. Expreſly ſaith David, Pſal. 55. 17. Evening and Morning and at Noon, will I Pray and Cry aloud, and he ſhall hear my voice. So Morning and Evening were Sacrifices and burnt Offerings offered to the Lord; and there is at leaſt equal Reaſon that Goſpel Worſhip ſhould be as frequent: 1 Chron. 16. 40. 2 Chron. 2. 4. & 13. 11. & 31. 3. Ezra 3. 3. 2 Kings 16. 15. 1 Kings 18. 29, 36. Ezra 9. 5. And no doubt but they Prayed with the Sacrifices. Which David intimateth in comparing them, Pſal. 141. 2. Let my Prayer be ſet before forth thee as Incenſe, and the lifting up of my Hands as the Evening Sacrifice. And God calleth for Prayer and Praiſe as better than Sacrifice, Pſal. 50. 14, 15, 23.

All theſe I heap together for diſpatch, which fully ſhew, how frequently Gods Servants have been wont to Worſhip him, and how often God expecteth it. And you will all confeſs that it is Reaſon that in Goſpel times of greater Light and Holineſs, we ſhould not come behind them in the times of the Law: Eſpecially when Chriſt himſelf doth pray all Night, that had ſo little need in compariſon of us. And you may obſerve that theſe Scriptures ſpeak of Prayer in General, and limit it not to ſecreſie: And therefore they extend to all Prayer, according to opportunity. No Reaſon can limit all theſe examples to the moſt ſecret, and leaſt noble ſort of prayer. If but two or three are gathered together in his Name, Chriſt is eſpecially among them.

If you ſay, that by this Rule we muſt as frequently pray in the Church aſſemblies; I anſwer, The Church cannot ordinarily ſo oft aſſemble: But when it can be without a great inconvenience, I doubt not but it would be a good work, for many to meet the Miniſter daily for Prayer, as in ſome Rich and populous Cities they may do.

I have been more tedious on this subject than a holy hungry Christian possibly may think necessary who needeth not so many arguments to perswade him to feast his Soul with God, and to delight himself in the frequent exercises of Faith and Love; And if I have said less than the other sort of Readers shall think necessary, let them know that if they will open their Eyes, and recover their appetites and feel their Sins, and observe their daily Wants and Dangers, and get but a heart that loveth God, these Reasons then will seem sufficient to convince them of so sweet and profitable and necessary a work: And if they observe the difference between Praying and Prayerless Families, and care for their Souls and Communion with God, much fewer Words than these may serve their turn. It is a dead and graceless, carnal Heart, that must be Cured before these Men will be well satisfied; a better Appetite would help their Reason. If God should Say in general to all Men, You shall eat as oft as will do you good; the sick stomach would Say, once a day, and that but a little, is enough, and as much as God requireth; when another would say, thrice a day is little enough. A good and healthful Heart is a great help, in the expounding of Gods Word, especially of his General Commandments. That which men love not, but are aweary of, they will not easily believe to be their duty. The new nature, and holy Love and desires and experience of a sound believer, do so far make all these Reasonings needless to him, that I must confess I have written them principally to convince the carnal Hypocrite, and to stop the mouths of wrangling Enemies.

CHAP. IV.

General Directions for the Holy Government of FAMILIES.

§. 1. THE Principal thing requisite to the right governing of Families is the Fitness of the Governors and the Governed thereto, which is spoken of before in the Directions for the Constitution. But if persons unfit for their Relations, have joyned themselves together in a Family, their first duty is to Repent of their former Sin and Rashness, and presently to turn to God, and Seek after that fitness which is necessary to the right discharge of the duties of their several places; and in the Governors of Families, these three things are of greatest necessity hereunto. 1. Authority. 2. Skill. 3. Holiness and readiness of Will.

How to keep up Authority.

§. 2. I. Gen. Dir. Let Governors maintain their Authority in their Families. For if once that be lost and you are dispised by those that you should rule, your word will be of no effect with them; you do but ride without a Bridle; your power of Governing is gone, when your Authority is lost. And here you must first understand the Nature, Use, and Extent of your Authority; For as your Relations are different to your Wife, your Children and your Servants, so also is your Authority. Your Authority over your Wife, is but such as is necessary to the order of your Family, the safe and prudent management of your affairs, and your comfortable cohabitation. The power of love and complicated interest must do more than Magisterial commands. Your Authority over your Children is much greater; but yet only such as conjunct with Love, is needful to their good education and felicity. Your Authority over your Servants is to be measur'd by your contract with them (in these Countrys where there are no slaves) in order to your Service, and the honour of God. In othnr matters, or to other ends you have no Authority over them. For the maintaining of this your Authority observe these following Subdirections.

§. 3. Direct. 1. Let your Family understand that your Authority is of God, who is the God of Order, and that in obedience to him they are obliged to obey you. There is no power but of God: And there is none that the intelligent Creature can so much reverence as that which is of God. All bonds are easily broken and cast away (by the Soul at least, if not by the body,) which are not perceived to be Divine. An inlightned Conscience will say to ambitious usurpers, God I know, and his Son Jesus I know, but who are ye? Dir. 1.

§. 4. Direct. 2. The more of God appeareth upon you, in your knowledge and holiness and unblamableness of life, the greater will your Authority be in the Eyes of all your Inferiors that fear God. Sin will make you contemptible and vile; And Holiness, being the Image of God, will make you Honourable. In the eyes of the faithful a vile person is contemned; but they honour them that fear the Lord: Psal. 15. 4. Righteousness exalteth a Nation (and a person) but sin is a reproach to any people. Prov. 14. 34. Those that honour God he will honour, and those that despise him shall be lightly esteemed. 1 Sam. 2. 30. They that give up themselves to vile affections and conversations, (Rom. 1. 26.) will seem vile when they have made themselves so: Eli's Sons made themselves vile by their sin, 1 Sam. 3. 13. I know men should discern and honour a person placed in Authority by God, tho' they are morally and naturally vile: But this is so hard that it is seldom well done, and God is so severe against proud offenders, that he usually punisheth them by making them vile in the eyes of others; at least when they are dead and men dare freely speak of them, their names will rot, Prov. 10. 7. The instances of the greatest Emperors in the World, both Persian, Roman and Turkish do tell us, that if (by whoredom, drunkenness, gluttony, pride, and especially persecution) they will make themselves vile, God will permit them by uncovering their nakedness, to become the shame and scorn of men; and shall a wicked Master of a Family think to maintain his authority over others, while he rebelleth against the authority of God? Dir. 2.

§. 5. Direct. 3. Shew not your natural weakness by passions, or imprudent words or deeds. For if they think contemptuously of your persons a little thing will draw them further, to despise your words. There is naturally in man so high an esteem of Reason, that men are hardly perswaded that they should rebel against Reason to be governed (for orders sake) by folly. They are very apt to think that righteest Reason should bear rule. And therefore any silly weak expressions, or any inordinate passions, or any imprudent actions, are very apt to make you contemptible in your Inferiours eyes. Dir. 3.

§. 6. Direct. 4. Lose not your Authority by a neglect of using it. If you suffer Children and Servants but a little while to have the head, and to have, and say and do what they will, your Government will be but a name or image. A moderate course between a Lordly rigour, and a soft subjection, or neglect of exercising the power of your place, will best preserve you from your inferiors contempt. Dir. 4.

§. 7. Direct. 5. Lose not your Authority by too much familiarity. If you make your Children and Servants your play-fellows, or equals, and talk to them, and suffer them to talk to you as your companions, they will quickly grow upon you, and hold their custom; and tho' another may govern them, they will scarce ever endure to be governed by you, but will scorn to be subject, where they have once been as equal. Dir. 5.

Of skill in Governing.

§. 8. II. Gen. Dir. Labour for Prudence and Skilfulness in Governing. He that undertaketh to be a Master of a Family, undertaketh to be their Governor, And it is no small sin or folly to undertake such a place, as you are utterly unfit for, when it is a matter of so great importance. You could discern this in a case that's not your own; as if a man undertake to be a Schoolmaster that cannot read or write; or to be a Physician, who knoweth neither diseases nor their remedies; or to be a Pilot that cannot tell how to do a Pilots work; and why cannot you much more discern it in your own case?

1. §. 9. Direct. 1. To get the skill of holy Governing, it is needful that you be well studied in the word of God: Therefore God commandeth Kings themselves that they read in the Law all the Days of their lives. Deut. 17. 18, 19. and that it depart not out of their mouths, but that they meditate in it Day and Night. Josh. 1. 8. And all Parents must be able to teach it their Children, and talk of it both at home and abroad, lying down and rising up; Deut. 6. 6, 7. & 11. 18, 19. All Government of men is but subservient to the Government of God, to promote obedience to his Laws: And it is necessary that we understand the Laws which all Laws and precepts must give place to and subserve.

Dir. 2. §. 10. Direct. 2. Understand well the different tempers of your inferiours, and deal with them as they are, and as they can bear; and not with all alike: Some are more intelligent and some more dull: Some are of tender, and some of hardned impudent dispositions; some will be best wrought upon by love and gentleness; and some have need of sharpness and severity: Prudence must fit your dealings to their dispositions.

Dir. 3. §. 11. Direct. 3. You must put much difference between their different faults and accordingly suit your reprehensions: Those must be most severely rebuked that have most wilfulness, and those that are faulty in matters of greatest weight. Some faults are so much thro' meer disability and unavoidable frailty of the flesh, that there is but little of the will appearing in them: These must be more gently handled, as deserving more compassion than reproof. Some are habituate vices, and the whole nature is more desperately depraved in others: These must have more than a particular correction: They must be held to such a course of life, as may be most effectual to destroy and change those habits. And some that are upright at the heart, and in the main and most momentous things, are guilty but of some actual faults; and of these, some more seldom, and some more frequent; And if you do not prudently diversifie your rebukes according to their faults, you will but harden them, and miss of your ends: For there is a Family-justice that must not be overthrown, unless you will overthrow your Families: As there is a more publick justice necessary to the publick good.

Dir. 4. §. 12. Direct. 4. Be a good Husband to your Wife, and a good Father to your Children, and a good Master to your Servants, and let Love have Dominion in all your Government, that your inferiours may easily find, that it is their interest to obey you. For interest and self-love are the natural rulers of the World: And it is the most effectual way to procure obedience or any good, to make men perceive, that it is for their own good, and to engage self-love for you; that they may see that the benefit is like to be their own. If you do them no good, but are lowt and uncourteous, and close-handed to them, few will be ruled by you.

Dir. 5. §. 13. Direct. 5. If you would be skilful in Governing others, learn first exactly to Command your selves. Can you ever expect to have others more at your will and government than your selves? Is he fit to rule his Family in the fear of God and a holy life, who is unholy and feareth not God himself? Or is he fit to keep them from passion or drunkenness, or cursing, or oaths, or any way of sensuality, that cannot keep himself from it? Will not inferiors despise such reproofs which are by your selves contradicted in your lives? You know this true of Wicked Preachers: And is it not as true of other Governours.

§. 14. III. Gen. Direct. You must be Holy Persons, if you would be holy Governours of your Families. Mens actions follow the bent of their Dispositions. They will do as they are. An Enemy of God will not govern a Family for God: Nor an Enemy of Holiness (nor a stranger to it) set up a holy order in his House, and in a holy manner manage his affairs. I know it is cheaper and easier to the flesh to call others to mortification and holiness of life, than to bring our selves to it; But yet when it is not a bare Command or wish that is necessary; but a course of holy and industrious Government, unholy persons (though some of them may go far) have not the Ends and Principles which such a work requireth.

Dir. 1. §. 15. Direct. 1. To this end, be sure that your own Souls be entirely subjected unto God, and that you more accurately obey his Laws, than you expect any inferior should obey your Commands. If you dare disobey God, why should they fear disobeying you? Can you more severely revenge disobedience; or more bountifully reward obedience, than God can do? Are you Greater and Better than God himself is?

Dir. 2. §. 16. Direct. 2. Be sure that you lay up your treasure in Heaven, and make the enjoyment of God in Glory to be the ultimate commanding end both of the affairs and government of your Family, and all things else with which you are entrusted. Devote your selves and all to God, and do all for him: Do all as passengers to another world, whose business on Earth is but to provide for Heaven, and promote their everlasting interest. If thus you are separated unto God, you are sanctified: And then you will separate all that you have to his use and service, and this, with his acceptance, will sanctifie all.

Dir. 3. §. 17. Direct. 3. Maintain Gods authority in your Family more carefully than your own. Your own is but for his. More sharply rebuke or correct them that wrong and dishonour God, than those that wrong and dishonour your selves. Remember Eli's sad example: Make not a small matter of any of the sins, especially the great Sins, of your Children or Servants. It is an odious thing to slight Gods cause, and put up all with [It is not well done,] when you are fiercely passionate for the loss of some small commodity of your own. Gods honour must be greatest in your Family: And his Service must have the preheminence of yours; and Sin against him, must be the most intolerable offence.

Dir. 4. §. 18. Direct. 4. Let Spiritual Love to your Family be predominant, and let your care be greatest for the saving of their Souls, and your compassion greatest in their Spiritual Miseries. Be first careful to provide them a portion in Heaven, and to save them from whatsoever would deprive them of it: And never prefer the transitory pelf of Earth, before their everlasting Riches: Never be so cumbered about many things, as to forget that one thing is necessary; but choose for your selves and them the better part.

Dir. 5. §. 19. Direct. 5. Let your Family neither be kept in Idleness and flesh-pleasing, nor yet overwhelmed with such a multitude of business, as shall take up and distract their Minds, diverting and unfitting them for holy things. Where God layeth on you a necessity of excessive labours, it must patiently and chearfully be undergone: But when you draw them unnecessarily on your selves for the love of Riches, you do but become the Tempters and Tormentors of your selves and others, forgetting the terrible examples of them, that have this way fallen off from Christ, and pierced themselves through with many Sorrows. Luke 12. 41.

§. 20.

Dir. 6. §. 20. Direct. 6. As much as is possible, settle a constant order of all your businesses that every ordinary work may know its time, and confusion may not shut out Godliness. It is a great assistance in every calling to do all in a set and constant order: It maketh it easie: It removeth impediments; and promoteth success: Distraction in your business causeth a distraction of your minds in holy duty. Some Callings I know can hardly be cast into any order or method; but others may, if prudence and diligence be us'd. Gods service will thus be better done, and your work will be better done, to the ease of your Servants, and quiet of your own minds: Foresight and skilfulness would save you abundance of labour and vexation.

CHAP. V.

Special Motives to Perswade Men to the holy Governing of their FAMILIES.

IF it were but well understood what Benefits come by the holy Governing of Families, and what mischiefs come by its neglect, there would few that walk the Streets among us, appear so odious as those careless ungodly Governors that know not or mind not a duty of such exceeding weight. While we lye all as overwhelmed with the calamitous fruits of this neglect, I think meet to try, if with some, the cause may be removed; by awakening sluggish Souls, to do their undertaken work.

Motive 1. §. 1. Motive 1. Consider that the holy Government of Families, is a considerable part of Gods own Government of the world, and the contrary is a great part of the Devils Government. It hath pleas'd God to settle as a natural, so a Political order in the world and to honour his Creatures to be the instruments of his own operations: And tho' he could have produced all effects without any inferiour causes, and could have governed the world by himself alone without any instruments (he being not as Kings, constrained to make use of Deputies and Officers, because of their own natural confinement and insufficiency) yet is he pleased to make inferiour causes partakers in such excellent effects, and taketh delight in the frame and order of causes, by which his will among his Creatures is accomplished. So that as the several Justices in the Countries do govern as Officers of the King, so every Magistrate and Master of a Family, doth govern as an Officer of God: And if his government by his Officers be put down or neglected, it is a contempt of God himself, or rebellion against him: What is all the practical Atheism and Rebellion and ungodliness of the world, but a rejecting of the Government of God? It is not against the Being of God in it self considered, that his Enemies rise up with malignant rebellious opposition; But it is against God as the Holy and Righteous Governor of the world, and especially of themselves. And as in an Army, if the Corporals Sergeants and Lieutenants do all neglect their Offices, the Government of the General or Colonels is defeated and of little force; so if the Rulers of Families and other Officers of God will corrupt or neglect their part of Government, they do their worst to corrupt or cast out Gods Government from the Earth. And if God shall not govern in your Families, who shall? The Devil is always the Governor where Gods Government is refused; The world and the flesh are the instruments of his Government; Worldliness and Fleshly living are his service: Undoubtedly he is the Ruler of the Family where these prevail, and where Faith and Godliness do not take place. And what can you expect from such a Master?

Motive 2. §. 2. Motive. 2. Consider also that an ungoverned ungodly Family is a powerful means to the damnation of all the members of it; It is the common Boat or Ship that hurrieth Souls to Hell, that is bound for the devouring gulf; He that is in the Devils Coach or Boat is like to go with the rest, as the Driver or the Boatman pleaseth. But a well-governed Family is an excellent help to the saving of all the Souls that are in it. As in an ungodly Family there are continual temptations to ungodliness, to Swearing and Lying, and Railing, and wantonness, and contempt of God; so in a Godly Family there are continual provocations to a holy life, to faith, and love, and obedience, and heavenly mindedness; Temptations to sin are fewer there, than in the Devils Shops and Work-houses of sin; The Authority of the Governors, the conversation of the rest, the examples of all, are great inducements to a holy life. As in a well ordered Army of valiant men, every Coward is so linked in by order, that he can't choose but fight and stand to it with the rest, and in a confused rowt the valiantest man is born down by the disorder, and must perish with the rest; even so in a well ordered holy Family, a wicked man can scarce tell how to live wickedly, but seemeth to be almost a Saint, while he is continually among Saints, and heareth no words that are profane or filthy, and is kept in to the constant exercises of Religion, by the Authority and company of those he liveth with. O how easie and clean is the way to Heaven, in such a gracious well-ordered Family, in comparison of what it is to them that dwell in the distracted Families of profane and sensual worldlings? As there is greater probability of the salvation of Souls in England where the Gospel is Preached and Professed, than in Heathen or Mahometan Countrys; so there is a greater probability of their salvation that live in the houses and company of the Godly, than of the Ungodly. In one the advantages of instruction, command, example and credit, are all on Gods side; and in the other they are on the Devils side.

Motive 3. §. 3. Motive 3. A holy well-governed Family tendeth not only to the safety of the members, but also to the ease and pleasure of their lives: To live where Gods Law is the principal Rule, and where you may be daily taught the mysteries of his Knigdom, and have the Scriptures opened to you, and be led as by the hand in the paths of life; where the praises of God are daily celebrated, and his name is called upon, and where all do speak the heavenly language, and where God, and Christ, and Heaven are both their daily work and recreation; where it is the greatest honour to be most Holy and Heavenly, and the greatest contention is, who shall be most humble, and godly, and obedient to God and their Superiors, and where there is no reviling scorns at Godliness, nor no profane and scurrilous talk; what a sweet and happy life is this? Is it not likest to Heaven of any thing upon earth? But to live where worldliness, and prophaneness, and wantonness, and sensuality bear all the sway, and where God is unknown, and holiness and all religious Exercises are matter of contempt and scorn, and where he that will not swear and live prophanely doth make himself the hatred and derision of the rest, and where men are known but by their shape, and speaking-faculty to be men, nay where men take not themselves for men but for Bruits, and live as if they had no rational Souls, nor any expectations of another life, nor any higher employments or delights, than the transitory concernments of the flesh, what a sordid, lothsome, filthy, miserable life is this? made up by a mixture of BEASTLY and DEVILISH. To live where there is no communion with God, where the marks of Death and Damnation are written, as it were, upon the doors, in the face of their impious worldly lives, and where no man understandeth the holy Language; and where there is not the least foretast of the Heavenly everlasting joys; what's this but to live as the Serpents feed, to feed on on dust, and to be excommunicated from the face and favour of God, and to be chained up in the Prison of concupiscence and malignity, among his Enemies, till the judgment come that is making haste, and will render to all men according to their works.

Motive 4. §. 4. Motive 4. A holy and well-governed Family, doth tend to make a Holy Posterity, and so to propagate the fear of God from Generation to Generation. It is more comfortable to have no Children, than to beget and breed up Children for the Devil. Their natural corruption is advantage enough to Satan, to engage them to himself, and use them for his service: But when Parents shall also take the Devils part, and teach their Children by Precepts or Example, how to serve him, and shall estrange them from God and a holy life, and fill their minds with false conceits and prejudice against the means of their salvation, as if they had sold their Children to the Devil; no wonder then if they have a black Posterity that are trained up to be heirs of Hell. He that will train up Children for God, must begin betimes, before sensitive objects take too deep possession of their hearts, and custome increase the pravity of their nature. Original sin is like the arched Indian Fig-tree, whose branches turning downwards and taking root, do all become as Trees themselves: The acts which proceed from this habitual viciousness, do turn again into vitious habits: And thus sinful nature doth by its fruits increase it self: And when other things consume themselves by breeding, all that sin breedeth is added to its self, and its breeding is its feeding, and every act doth confirm the habit. And therefore no means in all the world, doth more effectually tend to the happiness of Souls, than wise and holy education. This dealeth with sin before it hath taken the deepest root, and boweth nature while it's but a twig; It preventeth the increase of natural pravity, and keepeth out those deceits, corrupt opinions, and carnal fantasies and lusts which else would be serviceable to sin and Satan, ever after. It delivereth up the heart to Christ betime, or at least doth bring him a Disciple to his School to learn the way to life eternal; and to spend those years in acquainting himself with the ways of God, which others spend in growing worse, and in learning that which must be again unlearned, and in fortifying Satans garrison in their hearts, and defending it against Christ and his saving Grace. But of this more anon.

Motive 5. §. 5. Motive 5. A holy well-governed Family is the preparative to a holy and well-governed Church. If Masters of Families did their parts, and sent such polished materials to the Churches, as they ought to do, the work of life of the Pastors of the Church would be unspeakably more easie and delightful; It would do one good to Preach to such an auditory, and to Catechize them, and instruct them, and examine them, and watch over them, who are prepared by a wise and holy education, and understand and love the doctrine which they hear. To lay such polished stones in the building is an easie and delightful work; How teachable and tractable will such be? And how prosperously will the labours of their Pastors be laid out upon them? And how comely and beautiful the Churches be, which are composed of such persons? And how pure and comfortable will their communion be? But if the Churches be sties of unclean beasts; if they are made up of ignorant and ungodly persons, that savour nothing but the things of the flesh, and use to worship they know not what, we may thank ill-governed Families for all this. It is long of them that Ministers Preach as to Idiots or Barbarians that cannot understand them; and that they must be always feeding their Auditors with milk, and teaching them the principles and Catechizing them in the Church, which should have been done at home: Yea, it is long of them that there are so many Wolves and Swine among the Sheep of Christ, and that holy things are administred to the Enemies of holiness, and the godly live in communion with the haters of God and Godliness; and that the Christian Religion is dishonoured before the heathen world, by the worse-than-heathenish lives of the Professors; and the Pollutions of the Churches do hinder the conversion of the unbelieving world; whilst they that can judge of our Religion no way but by the people that profess it, do judge of it by the lives of them that are in heart the enemies of it: When the haters of Christianity and Godliness are the Christians by whose Conversations the Infidel world must judge of Christianity, you may easily conjecture what judgment they are like to make. Thus Pastors are discouraged, the Churches defiled, Religion disgraced, and Infidels hardened through the impious disorder and negligence of Families! What Universities were we like to have, if all the Grammar-Schools should neglect their duties, and send up their Scholars untaught as they received them? and if all Tutors must teach their pupils first to spell and read? Even such Churches we are like to have, when every Pastor must first do the work, which all the Masters of Families should have done, and the part of many score, or hundreds, or thousands, must be performed by one.

Motive 6. §. 6. Motive 6. Well-governed Families tend to make a happy State and Common-wealth; A good education is the first and greatest work to make good Magistrates and good Subjects, because it tends to make good men. Though a good man may be a bad Magistrate, yet a bad man cannot be a very good Magistrate: The ignorance, or worldliness, or sensuality, or enmity to godliness, which grew up with them in their youth, will shew it self in all the places and relations that ever they shall come into. When an ungodly Family hath once confirmed them in wickedness, they will do wickedly in every state of life; when a perfidious Parent hath betrayed his Children into the power and service of the Devil, they will serve him in all relations and conditions; This is the School from whence come all the injustice, and cruelties, and persecutions, and impieties of Magistrates, and all the murmurings and rebellions of Subjects: This is the soil and seminary where the seed of the Devil is first sown, and where he nurseth up the plants of Covetousness, and Pride, and Ambition, and Revenge, Malignity and Sensuality, till he transplant them for his service into several Offices in Church and State, and into all places of inferiority, where they may disperse their venome, and resist all that is good, and contend for the interest of the flesh and Hell, against the interest of the Spirit and of Christ. But O what a blessing to the world would they be, that shall come prepared by a holy education to place in of Government and Subjection! And how happy is that Land that is Ruled by such Superiours, and consisteth of such prepared Subjects, as have first learnt to be Subject to God, and to their Parents?

Motive 7. §. 7. Motive 7. If the Governours of Families did faithfully perform their duties, it would be a great supply as to any defects in the Pastors part, and a singular means to propagate and preserve Religion in times of publick negligence or persecution. Therefore Christian Families are called Churches, because they consist of holy persons, that worship God, and learn, and love, and obey his word. If you lived among the Enemies of Religion, that forbad Christs Ministers to preach his Gospel, and forbad Gods Servants to meet in Church-assemblies for his Worship; the support of Religion, and the comfort and edification of Believers, would then lie lie almoſt all upon the right performance of family-duties. There Maſters might teach the ſame truth to their houſholds, which Miniſters are forbid to preach in the Aſſemblies; There you might pray together as fervently and ſpiritually as you can; There you may keep up as holy converſe and communion, and as ſtrict a diſcipline as you pleaſe; There you may celebrate the praiſes of your bleſſed Creator, Redeemer and Sanctifier, and obſerve the Lords Day in as exact and ſpiritual a manner as you are able. You may there provoke one another to Love and to good works, and rebuke every ſin, and mind each other to prepare for death, and live together as Paſſengers to eternal life. Thus holy Families may keep up Religion, and keep up the Life and Comfort of believers, and ſupply the want of publick preaching, in thoſe Countreys where perſecutors prohibit and reſtrain it: or where unable or unfaithful Paſtors do neglect it.

Motive 8. §. 8. Motive 8. The Duties of your Families are ſuch as you may perform with greateſt peace, and leaſt Exception or Oppoſition from others. When you go further, and would be inſtructing others, they will think you go beyond your Call, and many will be ſuſpitious that you take too much upon you; And if you do but gently admoniſh a rout of ſuch as the Sodomites, perhaps they will ſay, This one fellow came in to ſojourn, and he will needs be a judge, Gen. 19. 9. But your own houſe is your Caſtle; Your family is your charge: you may teach them as oft and as diligently as you will: If the ungodly rabble ſcorn you for it, yet no ſober perſon will condemn you, nor trouble you for it, (if you teach them no evil:) All men muſt confeſs that Nature and Scripture oblige you to it as your unqueſtionable work. And therefor you may do it (among ſober people) with approbation and quietneſs.

Motive 9. §. 9. Motive 9. Well governed Families are honourable and exemplary unto others. Even the worldly and ungodly uſe to bear a certain reverence to them: For Holineſs and Order have ſome Witneſs that commendeth them, in the conſciences of many that never practiſed them. A worldly, ungodly, diſordered family, is a Den of Snakes, a place of hiſſing, railing, folly and confuſion: It is like a Wilderneſs, overgrown with Bryars and Weeds: But a holy Family is a Garden of God; It is beautified with his Graces, and ordered by his Government, and fruitful by the ſhowers of his heavenly bleſſing; And as the very ſluggard, that will not be at the coſt and pains to make a Garden of his thorny Wilderneſs, may yet confeſs that a garden is more beautiful, and fruitful, and delightful, and if wiſhing would do it, his Wilderneſs ſhould be ſuch: even ſo the ungodly that will not be at the coſt and pains, to order their ſouls and families in holineſs, may yet ſee a beauty in thoſe that are ſo ordered, and wiſh for the happineſs of ſuch, if they could have it without the labour and coſt of ſelf-denial. And no doubt, the beauty of ſuch holy and well-governed families, hath convinced many, and drawn them to a great approbation of Religion, and occaſioned them at laſt to imitate them.

Motive 10. §. 10. Motive 10. Laſtly, Conſider, That holy well governed Families are bleſt with the ſpecial preſence and favour of God. They are his Churches where he is worſhipped; His houſes where he dwelleth: He is ingaged both by Love and Promiſe to bleſs, protect and proſper them, Pſal. 1. 3. & 128. It is ſafe to ſail in that Ship which is bound for Heaven, and where Chriſt is the Pilot. But when you reject his Government, you refuſe his company, and contemn his Favour, and forfeit his bleſſing by deſpiſing his preſence, his intereſt, and his commands.

§. 11. So that it is an evident truth, that moſt of the miſchiefs that now infeſt or ſeize upon mankind throughout the earth, conſiſt in, or are cauſed by the diſorders and ill-governedneſs of families. Theſe are the Schools and Shops of Satan, from whence proceed the beaſtly ignorance, luſt and ſenſuality, the deviliſh pride, malignity and cruelty againſt the holy ways of God, which have ſo unmann'd the progeny of Adam; Theſe are the Neſts in which the Serpent doth hatch the Eggs of Covetouſneſs, Envy, Strife, Revenge, of Tyranny, Diſobedience, Wars and Bloodſhed, and all the Leproſie of ſin that hath ſo odiouſly contaminated humane nature, and all the miſeries by which they make the World calamitous. Do you wonder that there can be perſons and Nations ſo blind and barbarous as we read of the Turks, Tartarians, Indians, and moſt of the inhabitants of the earth? A wicked education is the cauſe of all, which finding nature depraved, doth ſublimate and increaſe the venome which ſhould by education have been cured; And from the wickedneſs of families doth National wickedneſs ariſe. Do you wonder that ſo much ignorance, and voluntary deceit, and obſtinacy in errors, contrary to all mens common ſenſes, can be found among profeſſed Chriſtians, as Great and Small, High and Low through all the Papal Kingdoms do diſcover? Though the Pride, and Covetouſneſs, and Wickedneſs of a worldly carnal Clergy, is a very great cauſe, yet the ſinful negligence of Parents and Maſters in their families, is as great, if not much greater than that. Do you wonder that even in the Reformed Churches, there can be ſo many unreformed ſinners, of beaſtly lives, that hate the ſerious practice of the Religion which themſelves profeſs? It is ill education in ungodly families that is the cauſe of all this. O therefore how great and neceſſary a work is it, to caſt Salt into theſe corrupted fountains? Cleanſe and cure theſe vitiated Families, and you may cure almoſt all the calamities of the earth. To tell what the Emperors and Princes of the earth might do, if they were wiſe and good, to the remedy of this common Miſery, is the idle talk of thoſe negligent perſons, who condemn themſelves in condemning others; Even thoſe Rulers and Princes that are the Pillars and Patrons of Heatheniſm, Mahometaniſm, Popery and Ungodlineſs in the world, did themſelves receive that venome from their Parents, in their birth and education, which incline th them to all this miſchief. Family-Reformation is the eaſieſt and the moſt likely way to a common Reformation: At leaſt to ſend many ſouls to Heaven, and train up multitudes for God, if it reach not to National-Reformation.

CHAP. VI.

More ſpecial Motives for a Holy and Careful Education of CHILDREN.

BEcauſe the chief part of Family-Care and Government conſiſteth in the right Education of Children, I ſhall adjoyn here ſome more ſpecial Motives to quicken conſiderate Parents to this duty; and tho' moſt that I have to ſay for it be already ſaid in my Saints Reſt, Part 3. Chap. 14. Sect. 11. &c. and therefore ſhall be here omitted, yet ſomething ſhall be inſerted, leſt the want here ſhould appear too great.

Motive 1. §. 1. Motive 1. Conſider how deeply Nature it ſelf doth engage you, to the greateſt care and diligence for the holy education of your children. They are, as it were, parts of your ſelves, and thoſe that Nature teacheth you to Love and provide for, and take moſt care for, next your ſelves: And will you be regardleſs of their chief Concernments? and neglective of their ſouls? Will you no other way ſhew your love to your Children, than every Beaſt, or Bird will to their their young, to cheriſh them till they can go abroad and ſhift for themſelves, for corporal ſuſtenance? It is not Dogs or Beaſts that you bring into the world, but Children that have immortal ſouls; And therefore it is a care and education ſuitable to their natures which you owe them. Even ſuch as conduceth moſt effectually to the happineſs of their ſouls. Nature teacheth them ſome natural things without you, as it doth the Bird to fly. But it hath committed it to your truſt and care to teach them the greateſt and moſt neceſſary things; If you ſhould think that you have nothing to do but to feed them, and leave all the reſt to Nature, then they would not learn to ſpeak: And if Nature it ſelf would condemn you, if you teach them not to ſpeak, it will much more condemn you, if you teach them not to underſtand both what they ought to ſpeak and do. They have an everlaſting inheritance of happineſs to attain: and it is that which you muſt bring them up for. They have an endleſs miſery to eſcape: and it is that which you muſt diligently teach them. If you teach them not to eſcape the flames of Hell, what thanks do they owe you for teaching them to ſpeak and go? If you teach them not the way to Heaven and how they may make ſure of their ſalvation, what thanks do they owe you for teaching them how to get their livings a little while in a miſerable world? If you teach them not to know God, and how to ſerve him, and be ſaved, you teach them nothing, or worſe than nothing. It is in your hands to do them the greateſt kindneſs or cruelty in all the world; help them to know God and to be ſaved, and you do more for them, than if you helped them to be Lords or Princes: If you neglect their ſouls, and breed them in ignorance, worldlineſs, ungodlineſs and ſin, you betray them to the Devil, the enemy of ſouls; even as truly as if you ſold them to him; You ſell them to be ſlaves to Satan; you betray them to him that will deceive them and abuſe them in this life, and torment them in the next. If you ſaw but a burning Furnace, much more the flames of Hell, would you not think that Man or woman more fit to be called a Devil than a Parent, that could find in their hearts to caſt their Child into it, or to put him into the hands of one that would do it? what Monſters then of inhumanity are you, that read in Scripture which is the way to Hell, and who they be that God will deliver up to Satan, to be tormented by him; and yet will bring up your children in that very way, and will not take pains to ſave them from it? What a ſtir do you make to provide them food and raiment, and a competent maintenance in the world when you are dead? And how little pains take you to prepare their ſouls for the heavenly inheritance? If you ſeriouſly believe that there are ſuch Joys or Torments, for your Children (and your ſelves) as ſoon as death removeth you hence, is it poſſible that you ſhould take this for the leaſt of their concernments, and make it the leaſt and laſt of your cares, to aſſure them of an endleſs happineſs? If you Love them, ſhew it in thoſe things, on which their everlaſting Welfare doth depend. Do not ſay you Love them, and yet lead them unto Hell. If you love them not, yet be not ſo unmerciful to them as to damn them; It is not your ſaying God forbid, and we hope better, that will make it better, or be any excuſe to you; What can you do more to damn them, if you ſtudied to do it as maliciouſly as the Devil himſelf? You cannot poſſibly do more, than to bring them up in ignorance, carelesneſs, worldlineſs, ſenſuality and ungodlineſs; The Devil can do nothing elſe to damn either them or you, but by tempting to Sin, and drawing you from Godlineſs. There is no other way to Hell. No man is damned for any thing but this. And yet will you bring them up in ſuch a life, and ſay, [God forbid, we do not deſire to damn them?] But it is no wonder; when you do by your Children but as you do by your ſelves; Who can look that a man ſhould be reaſonable for his Child, that is ſo unreaſonable for himſelf? Or that thoſe Parents ſhould have any mercy on their Childrens Souls, that have no mercy on their own? You deſire not to damn your ſelves, but yet you do it, if you live ungodly lives: And ſo you will do by your Children if you train them up in ignorance of God, and in the ſervice of the fleſh and world. You do like one that ſhould ſet fire on his houſe, and ſay, [God forbid, I intend not to burn it:] Or like one that caſteth his Child into the Sea, and ſaith, he intendeth not to drown him; or traineth him up in robbing and thievery, and ſaith, he intendeth not to have him hanged; But if you intend to make a Thief of him, it is all one in effect, as if you intended his hanging; for the Law determineth it, and the Judge will intend it. So if you intend to train up your Children in ungodlineſs, as if they had no God, nor Souls to mind, you may as well ſay, you intend to have them damned. And were not an Enemy, yea, is not the Devil more excuſable, for dealing thus cruelly by your Children, than you that are their Parents, that are bound by Nature to love them, and prevent their miſery? It is odious in Miniſters that take the charge of Souls, to betray them by their negligence, and be guilty of their everlaſting miſery; but in Parents it is more unnatural, and therefore more unexcuſable.

§. 2. Motive 2. Conſider that God is the Lord and owner of your Children, both by the title of Creation and Redemption: Therefore in juſtice you muſt reſign them to him, and educate them for him. Otherwiſe you rob God of his own Creatures, and rob Chriſt of thoſe for whom he died, and this to give them to the Devil, the Enemy of God and them. It was not the world, the fleſh, or the Devil that created them, or redeemed them, but God; And it is not poſſible for any Right to be built upon a fuller Title, than to make them of nothing, and redeem them from a ſtate far worſe than nothing. And after all this, ſhall the very Parents of ſuch Children ſteal them from their abſolute Lord and Father, and ſell them to ſlavery and torment? Motive 2

§ 3. Motive 3. Remember that in their Baptiſm you did dedicate them to God; you entred them into a ſolemn Vow and Covenant, to be wholly his, and to live to him. Therein they renounced the Fleſh, the world and the Devil; Therein you promiſed to bring them up virtuouſly to lead a godly and Chriſtian life, that they might obediently keep Gods holy Will and Commandments, and walk in the ſame all the Days of their lives. And after all this, will you break ſo ſolemn a Promiſe, and cauſe them to break ſuch a Vow and Covenant, by bringing them up in ignorance and ungodlineſs? Did you underſtand and conſider what you then did? How ſolemnly you your ſelves engaged them in a Vow to God, to live a mortified and a holy life? And will you ſo ſolemnly do that in an hour, which all their life after with you, you will endeavour to deſtroy? Motive 3

§. 4. Motive 4. Conſider how great power the education of Children hath upon all their following lives; Except Nature and Grace, there is nothing that uſually doth prevail ſo much with them. Indeed the obſtinacy of Natural Vitiouſneſs doth often fruſtrate a good education; but if any means be like to do good, it is this; But ill education is more conſtantly ſucceſsful, to make them evil. This cheriſheth thoſe Seeds of wickedneſs which ſpring up when they come to age; This maketh ſo many to be proud, and idle, and Fleſh Pleaſers, and licentious, and luſtful, and covetous, and all that is naught. And he hath a hard task that cometh after to root out theſe Vices, which an ungodly Education hath ſo deeply radicated. Ungodly Parents do ſerve the Devil ſo effectually in the firſt impreſſi- Motive 4 ons,

ons on their Childrens minds, that it is more than Magiſtrates and Miniſters and all reforming means can afterwards do to recover them from that ſin to God. Whereas if you would firſt engage their hearts to God by a religious education, Piety would then have all thoſe advantages, that ſin hath now. Prov. 22. 6. Train up a Child in the way he ſhould go, and when he is old he will not depart from it. The Language which you teach them to ſpeak when they are Children, they will uſe all their life after, if they live with thoſe that uſe it. And ſo the Opinions which they firſt receive, and the cuſtoms which they are uſed to at firſt, are very hardly changed afterward. I doubt not to affirm, that a Godly Education is Gods firſt and ordinary appointed means, for the begetting of actual faith, and other graces in the Children of believers: Many may have ſeminal grace before: but they cannot ſooner have actual faith, repentance, love, or any Grace, than they have reaſon it ſelf in act and exerciſe. And the Preaching of the Word by publick Miniſters is not the firſt ordinary means of grace to any but thoſe that were graceleſs till they come to hear ſuch Preaching: that is, to thoſe on whom the firſt appointed means hath been neglected, or proved in vain: that is, It is but the ſecond means, to do that which was not done by the firſt. The proof is undeniable: Becauſe God appointeth Parents diligently to teach their Children the Doctrine of his holy Word, before they come to the publick Miniſtry: Parents teaching is the firſt teaching: And Parents teaching is for this end, as well as publick teaching, even to beget faith and love, and holineſs: And God appointeth no means to be uſed by us, on which we may not expect his bleſſing. Therefore it is apparent, that the ordinary appointed means for the firſt actual Grace, is Parents godly inſtruction and education of their Children. And publick preaching is appointed for the Converſion of thoſe only that have miſt the bleſſing of the firſt appointed means. Therefore if you deny your Children religious Education, you deny them the firſt appointed means of their actual faith and ſanctification; and then the ſecond cometh upon diſadvantage.

Motive 5. §. 5. Motive 5. Conſider alſo how many and great are your Advantages above all others for your Childrens good. As 1. Nothing doth take ſo much with any one, as that which is known to come from Love: The greater Love is diſcerned in your inſtruction, the greater ſucceſs may you expect. Now your Children are more confident of their Parents Love, than of any others: Whether Miniſters and Strangers ſpeak to them in Love, they cannot tell: But of their Parents Love they make no doubt. 2. And their Love to you is as great a preparative to your ſucceſs. We all hearken to them that we dearly Love, with greater attention and willingneſs than to others. They Love not the Miniſter as they do their Parents. 3. You have them in hand betime, before they have received any falſe opinions, or bad impreſſions: before they have any ſin but that which was born with them: You are to make the firſt impreſſions upon them: You have them while they are moſt teachable, and flexible, and tender, and make leaſt reſiſtance againſt inſtruction: They riſe not up at firſt againſt your teaching with ſelf-conceitedneſs and proud objections. But when they come to the Miniſter, they are as Paper that is written on or printed before; unapt to receive another impreſſion: They have much to be untaught, before they can be taught: And come with proud and ſtiff reſiſtance, to ſtrive againſt inſtruction, rather than readily to receive it. 4. Your children do wholly depend on you for their preſent maintenance, and much for their future livelihood and portions: And therefore they know that it is their intereſt to obey and pleaſe you; And as intereſt is the common biaſs of the world, ſo is it with your children; You may eaſilier rule them that have this handle to hold them by, than any other can do that have not this advantage. They know they ſerve you not for nought. 5. Your authority over your children is moſt unqueſtionable. They will diſpute the authority of Miniſters, yea, and of Magiſtrates, and ask them who gave them the power to teach them, and to command them? But the Parents authority is beyond all diſpute. They will not call you Tyrants or Uſurpers, nor bid you prove the validity of your Ordination, or the uninterruptedneſs of your Succeſſion. Therefore Father and Mother as the firſt Natural Power, are mentioned rather than Kings or Queens in the fifth Commandment. 6. You have the power of the Rod to force them, Prov. 22. 15. Fooliſhneſs is bound in the heart of a Child, but the rod of Correction ſhall drive it far from him. And your Correction will be better underſtood to come from Love, than that of the Magiſtrate or any other. 7. You have beſt opportunity to know both the diſeaſes and temperature of your Children: which is a great advantage for the chooſing and applying of the beſt Remedy. 8. You have opportunity of watching over them, and diſcerning all their faults in time: But if a Miniſter ſpeak to them, he can know no more what fault to reprehend, than others tell him, or the party will confeſs. You may alſo diſcern what ſucceſs your former exhortations had, and whether they amend or ſtill go on in ſin, and whether you ſhould proceed to more ſevere Remedies. 9. You have opportunity of ſpeaking to them in the moſt familiar manner; which is better underſtood than the ſet ſpeech of a Miniſter in the Pulpit, which few of them mark or underſtand. You can quicken their attention by Queſtions which put them upon anſwering you, and ſo awaken them to a ſerious regard of what you ſay. 10. You are ſo frequently with them, that you can repeat your inſtructions, and drive them home, that what is not done at one time, may be done at another: Whereas other Men can ſeldom ſpeak to them, and what is ſo ſeldom ſpoken is eaſily neglected or forgotten. 11. You have power to place them under the beſt means, and to remove many Impediments out of their way which uſually fruſtrate other Mens Endeavours. 12. Your example is near them and continually in their ſight, which is a continual and powerful Sermon. By all theſe advantages God hath enabled you above all others, to be Inſtruments of your Childrens good, and the firſt and greateſt promoters of their ſalvation.

§. 6. Motive 6. Conſider how great a Comfort it would be to you, to have your Children ſuch as you may confidently hope are the Children of God, being brought to know him, and love, and ſerve him, through your own endeavours in a pious Education of them. 1. You may love your Children upon an higher account than as they are yours; even as they are Gods, adorned with his Image, and quickned with a Divine Cœleſtial life; And this is to love them with a higher kind of Love, than mere Natural affection is. It would rejoice you to ſee your Children advanced to be Lords or Princes: But O how much greater cauſe of joy is it, to ſee them made the members of Chriſt, and quickned by his Spirit, and ſealed up for life eternal? 2. When once your Children are made the Children of God, by the Regeneration of the Spirit, you may be much more free from care and trouble for them than before. Now you may boldly truſt them on the care of their heavenly Father, who is able to do more for them than you are able to deſire: He loveth them better than you can love them: He is bound by promiſe to protect them, and provide for them, and to ſee that all things work together for Motive 6.

their good. He that cloatheth the Lillies of the fields, and ſuffereth not the young Lions or Ravens to be unprovided for, will provide convenient food for his own Children, (though he will have you alſo do your duty for them, as they are your Children.) While they are the Children of Satan, and the Servants of Sin, you have cauſe to fear, not only leſt they be expoſed to Miſeries in this World, but much more leſt they be ſnatched away in their ſin to Hell: Your Children while they are ungodly or worſe than among Wolves and Tygers. But when once they are renewed by the Spirit of Chriſt, they are the charge of all the bleſſed Trinity, and under God, the Charge of Angels: Living or dying they are ſafe: For the eternal God is their portion and defence. 3. It may be a continual comfort to you to think what a deal of drudgery and calamity your Child is freed from: To think how many Oaths he would have ſworn: and how many lies and curſes he would have uttered, and how beaſtly and fleſhly a life he would have lived, how much wrong he would have done to God and men, and how much he would have pleaſed the Devil, and what torments in Hell he muſt have endured as the reward of all; and then to think how mercifully God hath prevented all this; and what ſervice he may do God in the world, and finally live with Chriſt in Glory: What a joy is this to a conſidering believing Parent, that taketh the mercies of his Children as his own? 4. Religion will teach your Children to be more dutiful to your ſelves, than Nature can teach them. It will teach them to Love you, even when you have no more to give them, as well as if you had the wealth of all the world: It will teach them to honour you, though you are poor and contemptible in the eyes of others. It will teach them to obey you, and if you fall into want, to relieve you according to their power: It will fit them to comfort you in the time of your ſickneſs and diſtreſs: when ungodly Children will be as thorns in your feet, or eyes, and cut your hearts, and prove a greater grief than any enemies to you. A gracious Child will bear with your weakneſſes, when a Cham will not cover his Fathers nakedneſs: A gracious Child can pray for you, and pray with you, and be a bleſſing to your houſe; when an ungodly Child is fitter to curſe, and prove a curſe to thoſe he lives with. 5. And is it not an exceeding joy to think of the everlaſting happineſs of your Child? and that you may live together in Heaven for ever? When the foreſeen miſery of a graceleſs Child, may grieve you when ever you look him in the face. 6. Laſtly, it will be a great addition to your joy, to think that God bleſſed your diligent inſtructions, and made you the inſtrument of all that good that is done upon your Children, and of all that good that is done by them, and of all the happineſs they have for ever. To think that this was conveyed to them by your means, will give you a larger ſhare in the delights of it.

§. 7. Motive 7. Remember that your Childrens Original ſin and miſery is by you; and therefore in juſtice you that have undone them, are bound to do your beſt to ſave them. If you had but conveyed a leproſie or ſome hereditary Diſeaſe to their Bodies, would you not have done your beſt to cure them? O that you could do them but as much good as you do them hurt! It is more than Adams ſin that runneth down into the natures of your Children, yea, and that bringeth judgments on them: And even Adams ſin cometh not to them but by you.

§. 8. Motive 8. Laſtly, Conſider what exceeding great need they have of the utmoſt help you can afford them. It is not a corporal diſeaſe, an eaſie enemy, a tolerable miſery, that we call unto you for their help: But it is againſt Sin, and Satan, and Hell fire. It is againſt a body of ſin: not one, but many; not ſmall, but pernicious, having ſeized upon the heart: deep rooted ſins, that are not eaſily pluckt up. All the teaching, and diligence, and watchfulneſs that you can uſe, is little enough, and may prove too little. They are obſtinate Vices that have poſſeſſed them: They are not quickly nor eaſily caſt out; and the Remnants and Roots are apt to be ſtill ſpringing up again, when you thought they had been quite deſtroyed: O then what wiſdom and diligence is requiſite to ſo great and neceſſary a work!

§. 9. And now let me ſeriouſly ſpeak to the hearts of thoſe careleſs and ungodly Parents, that neglect the holy education of their Children: yea, and to thoſe Profeſſors of Godlineſs, that ſlubber over ſo great a work with a few cuſtomary formal duties and words, that are next to a total omiſſion of it. O be not ſo unmerciful to the ſouls that you have helpt to bring into the World! Think not ſo baſely of them, as if they were not worth your labour. Make not your Children ſo like your Beaſts, as to make no proviſion but only for their fleſh. Remember ſtill that it is not Beaſts but men, that you have begotten and brought forth: Educate them then and uſe them as Men for the Love and Obedience of their Maker: O pity and help the Souls that you have defiled and undone! Have mercy on the ſouls that muſt periſh in Hell, if they be not ſaved in this day of ſalvation! O help them that have ſo many enemies to aſſault them! Help them that have ſo many temptations to paſs through; and ſo many Difficulties to overcome: and ſo ſevere a Judgment to undergo! Help them that are ſo weak, and ſo eaſily deceived and overthrown! Help them ſpeedily while your Advantages continue! before ſin have hardned them, and Grace have forſaken them, and Satan place a ſtronger Garriſon in their hearts. Help them while they are tractable; before they are grown up to deſpiſe your help: before you and they are ſeparated aſunder, and your Opportunities be at an end. You think not your pains from year to year, too much to make proviſion for their Bodies: O be not cruel to their ſouls! Sell them not to Satan, and that for nought! Betray them not by your ungodly negligence to Hell. Or if any of them will periſh, let it not be by you, that are ſo much bound to do them good: The undoing of your Childrens ſouls is a work much fitter for Satan, than for their Parents. Remember how comfortable a thing it is, to work with Chriſt for the ſaving of ſouls. You think the Calling of Miniſters honourable and happy; and ſo it is, becauſe they ſerve Chriſt in ſo high a work: But if you will not neglect it, you may do for your Children, more than any Miniſter can do. This is your Preaching place: Here God calleth you to exerciſe your parts, even in the holy inſtruction of your Families: Your charge is ſmall in compariſon of the Miniſters, he hath many hundred ſouls to watch over, that are ſcattered all abroad the Pariſh: And will you think it much to inſtruct and watch over thoſe few of your own that are under your roof? You can ſpeak odiouſly of unfaithful Soul-betraying Miniſters; and do you not conſider how odious a Soul-betraying Parent is? If God intruſt you but with Earthly Talents, take heed how you uſe them, for you muſt be accountable for your truſt: And when he hath intruſted you with ſouls, even your childrens ſouls, will you betray them? If any Rulers ſhould but forbid you the inſtructing and well-governing of your Families, and reſtrain you by a Law, as they would have reſtrained Daniel from praying in his houſe, (Dan. 6.) then you would think them Monſters of impiety and inhumanity; and you would cry out of a Satanical Perſecution, that would make Men Traytors to their Childrens Souls, and drive away all Religion from the Earth. And yet how eaſily can you neglect ſuch duties, when none forbid them you; and never accuſe your ſelves of any ſuch horrid impiety or inhumanity? What Hypocriſie, and blind partiality is this? Like a lazy Miniſter that would cry out of Perſecution, if he were ſilenced by others, and yet will not be provoked to be laborious, but ordinarily by his ſlothfulneſs ſilence himſelf, and make no ſuch matter of it: Would it be ſo heinous a ſin in another to reſtrain you? And is it not as heinous for you, that are ſo much obliged to it, voluntarily to reſtrain your ſelves? O then deny not this neceſſary diligence to your neceſſitous Children, as you love their Souls, as you love the happineſs of the Church or Common-wealth, as you love the honour and intereſt of Chriſt, and as you love your preſent and everlaſting Peace. Do not ſee your Children the ſlaves of Satan here, and the fire-brands of Hell for ever, if any diligence of yours may contribute to prevent it. Do not give Conſcience ſuch matter of accuſation againſt you, as to ſay, All this was long of thee! If thou hadſt inſtructed them diligently, and watched over them, and corrected them; and done thy part, its like they had never come to this. You Till your Fields; you Weed your Gardens: What pains take you about your Grounds and Cattle? And will you not take more for your Childrens Souls? Alas, what Creatures will they be if you leave them to themſelves? How ignorant, careleſs, rude and beaſtly? O what a lamentable caſe have ungodly Parents brought the World into? Ignorance and ſelfiſhneſs, beaſtly ſenſuality, and deviliſh malignity have covered the face of the Earth as a Deluge, and driven away Wiſdom, and Self-denyal and Piety, and Charity, and Juſtice, and Temperance almoſt out of the World, confining them to the breaſts of a few obſcure humble Souls, that love Virtue for Virtues ſake, and look for their reward from God alone, and expect that by abſtaining from iniquity, they make themſelves a prey to Wolves, Iſa. 59. 15. Wicked Education hath unmanned the World, and ſubdued it to Satan, and made it almoſt like to Hell. O do not join with the Sons of Belial in this unnatural horrid wickedneſs!

CHAP. VII.

The mutual DUTIES of HUSBANDS and WIVES, towards each other.

§. 1. IT is the pernicious ſubverſion of all Societies, and ſo of the World, that ſelfiſh ungodly perſons enter into all Relations, with a deſire to ſerve themſelves there, and fiſh out all that gratifieth their fleſh, but without any ſenſe of the Duty of their Relation. They bethink them what Honour, or Profit, or Pleaſure their Relation will afford them, but not what God and Man require or expect from them. All their thought is, What they ſhall have, but not What they ſhall be, and do. They are very ſenſible what others ſhould be, and do to them; but not what they ſhould be, and do to others. Thus it is with Magiſtrates, and with People, with too many Paſtors and their Flocks, with Husbands and Wives, with Parents and Children, with Maſters and Servants, and all other Relations. Where as our firſt care ſhould be to know and perform the Duties of our Relations, and pleaſe God in them, and then look for his bleſſing by way of incouraging reward. Study and do your parts, and God will certainly do his.

Gen. 2. 18. Prov. 18. 22.

Dir. 1. §. 2. Direct. 1. The firſt Duty of Husbands is to Love their Wives (and Wives their Husbands) with a true intire Conjugal Love. Eph. 5. 25, 28, 29, 33. Husbands Love your Wives, even as Chriſt alſo loved the Church, and gave himſelf for it.—So ought Men to love their Wives as their own bodies; he that loveth his Wife, loveth himſelf. For no Man ever yet hated his own fleſh; but nouriſheth and cheriſheth it, even as the Lord the Church.—Let every one of you in particular ſo love his Wife, even as himſelf.—It is a Relation of Love that you have entred. God hath made it your Duty for your mutual help and comfort: That you may be as willing and ready to ſuccour one another, as the hand is to help the eye or other fellow member, and that your converſe may be ſweet, and your burdens eaſie, and your lives may be comfortable. If Love be removed but for an hour between Husband and Wife, they are ſo long as a Bone out of joint; there is no eaſe, no order, no work well done, till they are reſtored and ſet in joynt again. Therefore be ſure that Conjugal Love be conſtantly maintained.

Gen. 2. Eph. 5. 25, 28, 29, 33.

§. 3. The Sub-directions for maintaining Conjugal Love are ſuch as theſe. Direct. 1. Chuſe one at firſt that is truly amiable, eſpecially in the virtues of the mind. 2. Marry not till you are ſure that you can Love intirely. Be not drawn for ſordid ends, to joyn with one that you have but ordinary affections for. 3. Be not too haſty, but know before hand, all the imperfections, which may tempt you afterwards to loathing. But if theſe duties have been ſinfully neglected, yet 4. Remember that Juſtice commandeth you to Love one that hath, as it were, forſaken all the World for you, and is contented to be the companion of your labours and ſufferings, and be an equal ſharer in all conditions with you, and that muſt be your companion until death. It is worſe than barbarous inhumanity to intice ſuch a one into a Bond of Love, and Society with you, and then to ſay, You cannot Love her. This was by perfidiouſneſs to draw her into a ſnare to her undoing. What comfort can ſhe have in her converſe with you, and care, and labour, and neceſſary ſufferings, if you deny her Conjugal Love? Eſpecially, if ſhe deny not Love to you, the inhumanity is the greater. 5. Remember that Women are ordinarily affectionate, paſſionate Creatures, and as they love much themſelves, ſo they expect much love from you. And when you joyned your ſelf to ſuch a Nature, you obliged your ſelf to anſwerable duty: And if Love cauſe not Love, it is ungrateful and unjuſt contempt. 6. Remember that you are under Gods command; and to deny Conjugal Love to your Wives, is to deny a duty which God hath urgently impoſed on you. Obedience therefore ſhould command your Love. 7. Remember that you are relatively, as it were, one fleſh; you have drawn her to forſake Father and Mother, to cleave to you; you are conjoyned for procreation of ſuch Children as muſt bear the image and nature of you both; your poſſeſſions and intereſts are in a manner the ſame. And therefore ſuch nearneſs ſhould command affection; they that are as your ſelves, ſhould be moſt eaſily loved as your ſelves. 8. Take more notice of the good, that is in your Wives, than of the evil. Let not the obſervation of their faults make you forget or overlook their virtues. Love is kindled by the ſight of Love or Goodneſs. 9. Make not infirmities to ſeem odious faults, but excuſe them as far as lawfully you may, by conſidering the frailty of the Sex, and of their tempers, and conſidering alſo your own infirmities, and how much your Wives muſt bear with you. 10. Stir up that moſt in them into exerciſe which is beſt, and ſtir not up that which is evil; and then the good will moſt appear, and the evil will be as buried, and you will eaſilier maintain your love. There is ſome uncleanneſs in the beſt on Earth; and if you will be daily ſtirring in the filth, no wonder if you have the annoyance; and for that you may thank your ſelves: Draw out the fragrancy of that which is good and delectable in them, and do not by your own imprudence or peevishness stir up the worst, and then you shall find that even your faulty Wives will appear more amiable to you. 11. Overcome them with Love; and then whatever they are in themselves, they will be Loving to you, and consequently Lovely. Love will cause Love, as fire kindleth fire. A good Husband is the best means to make a good and loving Wife. Make them not froward by your froward carriage, and then say, We cannot love them. 12. Give them examples of amiableness in your selves; set them the pattern of a prudent, lowly, loving, meek, self-denying, patient, harmless, holy, heavenly life. Try this a while, and see whether it will not shame them from their faults, and make them walk more amiably themselves.

Sub-directions to maintain Conjugal Love.

Dir. 2. §. 4. Direct. 2. Another Duty of Husbands and Wives is, Cohabitation and (where age prohibiteth not) a sober and modest conjunction for procreation. Avoiding lasciviousness, unseasonableness, and whatever tendeth to corrupt the mind, and make it vain and filthy, and hinder it from holy imployment. And therefore Lust must not be cherished in the married; but the mind be brought to a moderate chaste and sober frame; and the Remedy must not be turned into an increase of the disease, but used to extinguish it. For if the Mind be left to the power of Lust, and only Marriage trusted to for the cure, with many it will be found an insufficient cure; and lust will rage still as it did before, and will be so much the more desperate and your case the more miserable, as your sin prevaileth against the remedy. Yet marriage being appointed for a remedy against Lust, for the avoiding all unlawful congress, the Apostle hath plainly described your duty, 1 Cor. 7.2,3,4,5. [It is good for a man not to touch a woman: Nevertheless to avoid fornication, let every man have his own wife, and let every woman have her own husband. Let the husband render unto the wife due benevolence; and likewise also the wife unto the husband. The wife hath not power of her own body, but the husband; and likewise also the Husband hath not power of his own body, but the wife. Defraud you not one the other, except it be with consent for a time, that ye may give your selves to fasting and prayer, and come together again, that Satan tempt you not for your incontinency.] Therefore those persons live contrary to the nature of their relation, who live a great part of their lives asunder, as many do for worldly respects; when they have several houses, possessions or trades, and the husband must live at one, and the wife at another, for their commodity sake; and only come together once in a week, or in many weeks; when this is done without great necessity, it is a constant violation of their duties. And so it is for men to go trade or live beyond Sea, or in another Land, and leave their Wives behind them; yea, though they have their wives consent; it is an unlawful course, except in a case of meer necessity, or publick service, or when they are able on good grounds to say, that the Benefits are like to be greater to soul and body than the loss; and that they are confirmed against the danger of incontinence. The Offices which Husband and Wife are bound to perform for one another are such as, for the most part, suppose their Cohabitation, like the Offices of the Members of the Body for each other, which they cannot perform, if they be dismembred and divided.

Dir. 3. Matth. 5. 31, 32. & 19. 9. Joh. 8.4,5. Of Adultery. Heb. 13.4. Pro. 22.14. Hos. 4. 2,3 Prov. 2. 17. §. 5. Direct. 3. Abhor not only Adultery it self, but all that tendeth to unchastness and the violation of your Marriage-Covenant. Adultery is so contrary to the Conjugal Bond and State of life, that though de facto it do not actually dissolve the Bond, and nullifie the Marriage; yet it so far disobligeth the wronged innocent party, that de jure it is to such a sufficient ground to warrant a Divorce. And God required, that it be punished by death, Levit. 20.10. When lust is the chiefest cause of marriage, and when married persons live not in the fear of God, but pamper the flesh, and live licentiously, no wonder if Marriage prove an insufficient Remedy against such cherished lust. Such carnal beastly persons are still casting fuel on the fire; by wanton unbridled thoughts and speeches, by gluttony, drinking, sports, and idleness, by vain inticing company, and not avoiding, occasions, opportunities, and temptations, they burn as much when they are married as they did before. And the Devil that bloweth up this fire in their flesh, doth conduct and accommodate them in the satisfying of their lusts; so that their brutish concupiscence is like a fire burning in the Sea; Water it self will not quench it. One Woman will not satisfy their beastiality; and perhaps they loath their own Wives, and run after others, though their own (in the eye of any impartial man) be the more comely and amiable, and their Whores be never so deformed, or in pudent filthy lumps of dirt. So that one would think that they had no other reason to love and follow such unlovely things, but only because that God forbiddeth it; as if the Devil did it to shew his power over them, that he can make them do that, as in despight of God, which else they would abhor themselves. When once their sensuality and forsaking of God, hath provoked God to forsake them, and give them up to the rage of that sensuality, an unclean spirit sometimes takes possession of them, and wholly inclineth them to wallow in uncleanness: They can scarce look a comely person in the face, that is of the other Sex, but unclean thoughts are rising in their hearts; they think of filthiness when they are alone; they dream of filthiness in the night; they talk of filthiness with others: The tongues of the dogs that licked Lazarus his sores, were not used in such a filthy imployment as theirs are. They are as fed Horses in the morning; every one neigheth after his neighbors wife, Jer. 5. 8. They declare their sin as Sodom, and hide it not, Isa. 3.9. And usually when they are given over to this filthy sin, it utterly debaucheth their Consciences, and maketh them like blocks or beasts, insensible of their Misery and the Wrath of God, and given over to all other Villanies, and even to hate and persecute Godliness, if not Civility it self. Some few Adulterers I have known, that sin so much against their Consciences, that they live in continual despair; tormented in the Sense of their own unhappiness, and yet sinning still, as if the Devil would make them a Derision: And yet these are the better sort, because there is some testimony for a better life, remaining in their minds; but others of them being past feeling, have given themselves over to lasciviousness, to work all uncleanness with greediness, Eph. 4. 19. They have eyes full of Adultery that cannot cease from sin—. As natural bruit Beasts that are made to be taken and destroyed, 2 Pet. 2.10,11,12. Take heed therefore of the causes of this odious sin, and of all appearance of it; suffer not your eye or thought to go after a stranger, nor to begin a Breach in your Covenant and Conjugal fidelity.

Dir. 4. §. 6. Direct. 4. Husband and Wife must take delight in the Love, and company, and converse of each other. There is nothing that mans heart is so inordinately set upon as delight; and yet the lawful delight allowed them by God, they can turn into loathing and disdain. The delight which would intangle you in sin, and turn you from your duty and from God, is it that is forbidden you: But this is a delight that is helpful to you in your duty, and would keep you from sin. When Husband and Wife take pleasure in each other, it uniteth them in duty, it helpeth them with ease to do their work, and bear their burdens; and is not the least part of the comfort of the married state. Prov. 5.18,19. Rejoyce with the wife of thy youth, as the loving Hind and pleasant

Roe,

Roe, let her breſts ſatisfie thee at all times, and be thou ravyſhed always with her love. Therefore a Wife is called, The deſire of the eyes, Ezek. 24. 16. Avoid therefore all things that may repreſent you unpleaſant or unlovely to each other; and uſe all lawful means to cheriſh complacency and delight: Not by fooliſh ridiculous or proud attire, or immodeſt actions; but by cleanneſs and decency and kind deportment. Naſtineſs, and uncleanneſs, and unſeemly carriage, and fooliſh ſpeech, and whatever is loathſome in body or mind, muſt be ſhunned as Temptations which would hinder you from that love and pleaſure and content, which Husband and Wife ſhould have in one another. And yet it is a fooliſh fleſhly perſon, that will continue Love no longer than it is cheriſhed with all this care. If there be any deformity of the body, or any thing unſeemly in behaviour, or if God ſhould viſit them with any loathſom ſores or ſickneſs, they muſt for all that love each other, yea, and take pleaſure in their converſe. It is not a true friend that leaveth you in adverſity; nor is it true Conjugal Affection which is blaſted by a loathſome ſickneſs. The Love of Mothers to their Children will make them take pleaſure in them, notwithſtanding their ſickneſs or uncleanneſs; and ſo ſhould their Love do between a Husband and his Wife. He that conſidereth that his own fleſh is liable to the ſame diſeaſes, and like ere long to be as loathſome, will do as he would be done by, and not turn away in time of her affliction, from her that is become his fleſh. Much leſs excuſable is the crime of them that when they have nothing extraordinary to diſtaſte or diſaffect them, are weary of the company of one another, and had rather be in their Neighbours houſes, than in their own, and find more pleaſure in the company of a Stranger, than of one another.

Dir. 5. §. 7. Direct. 5. It is a great duty of Husbands and Wives to live in quietneſs and peace, and avoid all occaſions of wrath and diſcord. Becauſe this is a duty of ſo great importance, I ſhall firſt open to you the great neceſſity of it, and then give you more particular Directions to perform it.

Againſt Diſſention. §. 8. I. It is a duty which your Union or near Relation doth ſpecially require. Will you fall out with your ſelves? Cannot you agree with your own fleſh? 2. Your diſcord will be your pain, and the vexation of your lives. Like a Bile, or Wound, or Fracture in your own Bodies, which will pain you till it is cured; you will hardly keep Peace in your minds, when Peace is broken ſo near you in your Family. As you would take heed of hurting your ſelves, and as you would haſten the cure when you are hurt; ſo ſhould you take heed of any breach of Peace, and quickly ſeek to heal it when it is broken. 3. Diſſention tends to cool your Love; oft falling out doth tend to leave a habit of diſtaſte and averſneſs on the mind. Wounding is ſeparating; and to be tied together by any outward Bonds, when your hearts are ſeparated, is but to be tormented; and to have the inſides of adverſaries, while you have Conjugal outſides. As the difference between my houſe and my priſon is, that I willingly and with delight dwell in the one, but am unwillingly confined to the other, ſuch will be the difference between a quiet and an unquiet life, in your married ſtate: It turneth your dwelling and delight into a priſon; where you are chained to thoſe calamities, which in a free condition you might over-run. 4. Diſſention between the Husband and the Wife, do diſorder all their Family affairs; they are like Oxen unequally yoak'd, that can rid no work for ſtriving with one another. Nothing is well done, becauſe of the variance of thoſe that ſhould do it, or overſee it. 5. It exceedingly unfitteth you for the Worſhip of God; you are not fit to pray together, nor to confer together of Heavenly things, nor to be helpers to each others Souls: I need not tell you this; you feel it by experience. Wrath and bitterneſs will not allow you ſo much exerciſe of Love and holy compoſedneſs of mind, as every one of theſe Duties do Require. 6. Diſſention diſableth you to govern your families aright. Your Children and Servants will take example by you; or think they are at liberty to do what they liſt, when they find you taken up with ſuch work between your ſelves: And they will think you unfit to reprove them for their Faults, when they ſee you guilty of ſuch Faults and folly of your own; nay you will become the ſhame and ſecret deriſion of your Family, and bring your ſelves into contempt. 7. Your Diſſentions will expoſe you to the malice of Satan, and give him advantage for manifold temptations. A Houſe divided cannot ſtand; an Army divided is eaſily Conquered, and made a prey to the Enemy. You cannot foreſee what abundance of ſin you put your ſelves in danger of. By all this you may ſee what Diſſentions between Husband and Wife do tend to, and how they ſhould be avoided.

II. For the avoiding of them obſerve theſe Subdirections. 1. Keep up your Conjugal Love in a conſtant heat and vigour. Love will ſuppreſs wrath: You cannot have a bitter mind upon ſmall provocation, againſt thoſe that you dearly love; much leſs can you proceed to reviling words or to averſneſs and eſtrangedneſs or any abuſe of one another. Or if a breach and wound be unhappily made, the balſamick quality of Love will heal it. But when Love once cooleth, ſmall matters exaſperate and breed diſtaſtes. Directions againſt Diſſention.

2. Both Husband and Wife muſt mortifie their Pride and Paſſion, which are the cauſes of Impatiency; and muſt pray and labour for a humble, meek and quiet ſpirit. For it is the diſeaſed temper of the heart, that cauſeth Diſſentions, more than the occaſions or matter of offence do. A proud heart is troubled and provoked by every word or carriage that ſeemeth to tend to their undervaluing: A peeviſh froward mind is like a ſore and ulcerated member, that will be hurt if it be touched. He that muſt live near ſuch a ſore diſeaſed impatient mind, muſt live even as the nurſe doth with the Child, that maketh it her buſineſs to rock it, and lull, and Sing it quiet when it Cryeth; for to be angry with it, will do no good: And if you have married one of ſuch a ſick or childiſh temper, you muſt reſolve to bear and uſe them accordingly. But no Chriſtian ſhould bear with ſuch a vexatious malady in themſelves; nor be patient with ſuch impatiency of mind. Once get the victory over your ſelves, and get the cure of your own impatience, and you will eaſily keep peace with one another.

3. Remember ſtill that you are both diſeaſed Perſons, full of infirmities; and therefore expect the fruit of thoſe infirmities in each other; and make not a ſtrange matter of it, as if you had never known of it before. If you had married one that is lame, would you be angry with her for halting? Or if you married one that hath a putrified Ulcer, would you fall out with her becauſe it ſtinketh? Did you not know before hand, that you married a perſon of ſuch weakneſſes, as would yield you ſome matter of daily trial and offence? If you could not bear this, you ſhould not have married her; if you Reſolved that you could bear it then, you are obliged to bear it now. Reſolve therefore to bear with one another; as remembring that you took one another as ſinful, frail, imperfect Perſons, and not as Angels, or as blameleſs and imperfect.

4. Remember ſtill that you are one fleſh; and therefore be no more offended with the Words or failings of each other, than you would be if they were your own. Fall out no more with your Wife for her faults, than you do with your ſelf for your own faults; and than you would do, if hers had been your own. This will allow you ſuch an anger and diſpleaſure againſt a Fault, as tendeth to Heal it; but not ſuch as tend but to fetter and vex the diſeaſed part. This will turn anger into compaſſion and ſpeedy tender diligence for the cure.

5. Agree together before hand, that when one is in the diſeaſed angry fit, the other ſhall ſilently and gently hear, till it be paſt and you are come to your ſelves again: Be not angry both at once; when the fire is kindled, quench it with gentle words and carriage; and do not caſt on Oyl or Fuel, by anſwering provokingly and ſharply, or by multiplying Words, and by anſwering Wrath with wrath. But remember that now the work that you are called to, is to mollifie and not to exaſperate, to help and not to hurt, to cure another rather than to right your ſelf: As if another fall and hurt him, your buſineſs is to help him up, and not to tread upon him.

6. Look before you, and remember that you muſt live together until death, and muſt be the companions of each others fortunes, and the comforts of each others lives, and then you will ſee how abſurd it is for you to diſagree and vex each other. Anger is the principle of revenge, and falling out doth tend to ſeparation. Therefore thoſe that muſt not revenge, ſhould not give way to anger; and thoſe that know they muſt not part, ſhould not fall out.

7. As far as you are able, avoid all occaſions of wrath and falling out, about the matters of your Families: Some by their ſlothfulneſs bring themſelves into want; and then being unable to bear it, they contract a diſcontented peeviſh habit, and in their impatiency they wrangle and diſquiet one another: Some plunge themſelves into a multitude of buſineſs, and have to do with ſo many things and perſons, that one or other is ſtill offending them, and then they are impatient with one another: Some have neither skill nor diligence to manage their buſineſſes aright; and ſo things fall croſs and go out of order, and then their Impatiency turneth it ſelf againſt each other. Avoid theſe occaſions, if you would avoid the ſin; and ſee that you be not unfurniſhed of Patience, to bear that which cannot be avoided.

8. If you cannot quickly quench your paſſion, yet at leaſt reſtrain your tongues; ſpeak not reproachful or provoking words: talking it out hotly doth blow the fire, and increaſe the flame; be but ſilent, and you will the ſooner return to your ſerenity and peace. Foul words tend to more diſpleaſure. As Socrates ſaid when his Wife firſt railed at him, and next threw a Veſſel of foul water upon him [I thought when I heard the thunder, there would come rain:] So you may portend worſe following, when foul unſeemly words begin. If you cannot eaſily allay your wrath, you may hold your tongues, if you are truly willing.

9. Let the ſober party condeſcend to ſpeak fair and to intreat the other, (unleſs it be with a perſon ſo inſolent as will be the worſe.) Uſually a few ſober grave Admonitions, will prove as water to the boiling pot. Say to your angry Wife or Husband, [You know this ſhould not be betwixt us; Love muſt allay it, and it muſt be repented of. God doth not approve it; and we ſhall not approve it when this heat is over. This frame of mind is contrary to a praying Frame, and this Language contrary to a praying language; we muſt pray together anon; let us do nothing contrary to prayer now: Sweet water and bitter come not from one Spring, &c.] Some calm and condeſcending words of Reaſon, may ſtop the torrent, and revive the Reaſon which paſſion had overcome.

10. Confeſs your fault to one another, when paſſion hath prevailed againſt you; and ask forgiveneſs of each other, and join in prayer to God for pardon; and this will lay a greater ingagement on you, the next time to forbear: You will ſure be aſhamed to do that which you have ſo confeſſed and asked forgiveneſs for, of God and man. If you will but practice theſe ten Directions, your Conjugal and Family Peace may be preſerved.

§. 10. Direct. 6. A principal duty between husband and wife, is, With ſpecial care, and skill, and diligence, to help each other in the knowledge, and worſhip, and obedience of God, in order to their ſalvation. Becauſe this is a duty in which you are the greateſt helps and bleſſings to each other, if you perform it. I ſhall 1. Endeavour to quicken you to make Conſcience of it, and then 2. Direct you how to do it. Dir. 6.

§. 11. I. Conſider, 1. How little it can ſtand with Rational Love, to neglect the ſouls of one another? I ſuppoſe you believe that you have immortal ſouls, and an endleſs life of joy or miſery to live; and then you cannot chuſe but know that your great concernment and buſineſs is, to make ſure proviſion for thoſe ſouls, and for the endleſs life. Therefore if your Love do not help one another in this which is your main concernment, it is little worth, and of little uſe. Every thing in this World is valuable as it is uſeful. A uſeleſs or unprofitable Love, is a worthleſs Love. It is a trifling, or a childiſh, or a beaſtly Love, which helpeth you but in trifling, childiſh, or beaſtly things. Do you love your Wife, and yet will leave her in the power of Satan, or will not help to ſave her ſoul? What! Love her, and yet let her go to Hell? and rather let her be damned than you will be at the pains to endeavour her Salvation? If ſhe were but in bodily pain or miſery and you refuſed to do your part to ſuccour her, ſhe would take it but for cold unprofitable love, though you were never ſo kind to her in complements and trifles. The Devil himſelf maketh ſhew of ſuch a love as that; he can vouchſafe men pleaſures, and wealth, and honour, ſo he may but ſee the perdition of their ſouls. And if your love to your wife or husband, doth tend to no greater matters than the pleaſures of this life, while the ſoul is left to periſh in ſin, bethink your ſelves ſeriouſly how little more kindneſs you ſhew them than the Devil doth. O can you ſee the danger of one that you love ſo dearly, and do no more to ſave them from it? Can you think of the damnation of ſo dear a friend, and not do all that you are able to prevent it? Would you be ſeparated from them in the world that you are going to? would you not live with them in Heaven for ever? Never ſay you love them, if you will not labour for their ſalvation. If ever they come to Hell, or if ever you ſee them there, both they and you will then confeſs, that you behave not your ſelves like ſuch as loved them. It doth not deſerve the name of Love, which can leave a ſoul to endleſs miſery.

§. 12. What then ſhall we ſay of them, that do not only deny their help, but are hinderers of the holineſs and ſalvation of each other! And yet (the Lord have mercy on the poor miſerable World!) How common a thing is this among us? If the wife be ignorant and ungodly, ſhe will do her worſt to make or keep her Husband ſuch as ſhe is her ſelf: And if God put any holy inclinations into his heart, ſhe will not be to it as water to the fire, to quench it or to keep it under. And if he will not be as ſinful and miſerable as her ſelf, he ſhall have little quietneſs or reſt. And if God open the eyes of the wife of a bad Man, and ſhew her the amiableneſs and neceſſity of a holy life, and ſhe do but reſolve to obey the Lord, and ſave her Soul, what an enemy and tyrant will her husband prove to her (if God reſtrain him not?) ſo that the Devil himſelf doth ſcarce do more againſt the ſaving of their ſouls, than ungodly Husbands and Wives do againſt each other. 1 King. 11. 4. Acts 5. 2. Eve is Adams tempter. Job. 2. 9.

§. 13. 2. Conſider alſo that you live not up to the Ends of Marriage, nor of Humanity, if you are not Helpers to each others ſouls. To help each each other only for your Bellies, is to live together but like Beasts. You are appointed to live together as heirs of the grace of life, 1 Pet. 3. 7. And Husbands must love their Wives as Christ loved his Church, who gave himself for it that he might sanctifie it and cleanse it, that he might present it to himself a glorious Church, without spot or wrinkle, holy and without blemish, Ephes. 5. 25, 26, 27. That which is the end of your very life and being, must be the end of your Relations, and your daily converse.

§. 14. 3. Consider also, if you neglect each others Souls, what enemies you are to one another, and how you prepare for your everlasting sorrows: When you should be preparing for your joyful meeting in Heaven, you are laying up for your selves everlasting horrour. What a dreadful meeting and greeting will you have at the Bar of Christ, or in the flames of Hell, when you shall find there how perversly you have done? Is it not better to be praising God together in Glory, than to be raging against each other in the horrour of your Consciences, and flying in the Faces of one another with such Accusations as these. [O cruel Husband! O merciless deceitful Wife! It was long of you that I came to this miserable woful End! I might have lived with Christ and his Saints in Joy, and now I am tormented in these flames in desperation! You were commanded by God to have given me warning, and told me of my sin and misery, and never to let me rest in it, but to have instructed and intreated me, till I had come home by Christ, that I might not have come to this place of torment: But you never so much as speak to me of God, and my salvation, unless it were lightly in jest, or in your common talk! If the House had been on fire, you would have been more earnest to have quenched it, than you were to save my Soul from Hell! You never told me seriously of the misery of a natural unrenewed state! Nor of the great necessity of regeneration and a holy life! Nor never talked to me of Heaven and Hell, as matters of such consequence should have been mentioned; but morning and night, your talk was nothing but about the World, and the things of the World: Your idle talk, and jeasting, and froward, and carnal, and unprofitable discourse, was it that filled up all the time; and we had not one sober word of our salvation. You never seriously foretold me of this Day: You never prayed with me, nor read the Scripture and good Books to me. You took no pains to help me to knowledge; nor to humble my hardned heart for my sins, nor to save me from them, nor to draw me to the Love of God and Holiness, by Faith in Christ: You did not go before me, with the good example of a holy and heavenly conversation: But with the evil example of an ungodly, fleshly, worldly life. You neither cared for your own soul, nor mine; nor I for yours or mine own. And now we are justly condemned together, that would not live in Holiness together! O foolish miserable Souls, that by your ungodliness and negligence in this life, will prepare each other for such a life of endless woe and horror!

1 Thes. 5. 11. Heb. 12. 15. Col. 2. 19. Eph. 4. 16. 1 Cor. 7. 5. Gen. 35. 2, 4. Levit. 19. 17. Num. 16. 27, 32.

O therefore resolve without delay, to live together as Heirs of Heaven, and to be helpers to each others souls. To which end I will give you these following Sub-directions, which if you will faithfully practise, may make you to be special Blessings to each other.

Directions to help each other to salvation.

§. 15. Direct. 1. If you would help to save each others Souls, you must each of you be sure, that you have a care of your own; and retain a deep and lively apprehension of those great and everlasting matters, of which you are to speak to others. It cannot be reasonably expected, that he should have a due compassion to anothers soul, that hath none to his own; and that he should be at the pains that is needful to help another to salvation, that setteth so little by his own, as to sell it for the base and momentary ease and pleasure of the flesh. Nor is it to be expected that a man should speak with any suitable weight and seriousness, about those matters whose weight his heart did never feel, and about which he was never serious himself. First see that you feel throughly, that which you would speak profitably; and that you be what you perswade another to be; and that all your counsel may be perceived to arise from the bottom of your hearts, and that you speak of things which by experience you are well acquainted with.

18.

§. 16. Direct. 2. Take those Opportunities which your ordinary nearness and familiarity affordeth you, to be speaking seriously to each other about the matters of God, and your salvation. When you lie down and rise together, let not your worldly business have all your talk; but let God and your souls have the first and the last, and at least the freest and sweetest of your speech, if not the most: When you have said so much of your common business as the nature and dispatch of it requireth, lay it by, and talk together of the state and duty of your souls towards God, and of your hopes of Heaven, as those that take these for their greatest business. And speak not lightly, or unreverently, or in a rude and wrangling manner, but with gravity and sobriety, as those that are advising together about the greatest matter that ever they had to do in the world.

Sub-direct. 2.

§. 17. Direct. 3. When either Husband or Wife is speaking seriously about holy things, let the other be careful to cherish, and not to extinguish and put an end to the discourse. There are two ways to cherish such discourse; The first is, by taking your turn and bearing a due proportion in the discourse with wisdom and gravity; But all cannot do this; some are but learners, and those must take the second way, which is to ask for resolution in matters of which they doubt, or are uninstructed; and to draw on more by pertinent Questions. The two ways by which such discourse is silenced are these: The first is by the constant silence of the hearer; when a man talketh as to a post, that giveth him no answer, nor putteth any pertinent question, he will be wearied out at last, and will give over: The second is, by a cross, contradicting, cavilling, wrangling against what is spoken, or by interruptions and diversions; when you come in presently with some worldly or Impertinent talk, and wind about from sober conference, to something that is unedifying: And some that will not seem meerly prophane, and vain, and worldly, will destroy all holy fruitful conference, even by a kind of religious talk; presently carrying you away from Heart-searching and Heavenly discourse, to some Controversie, or doctrinal, or formal, or historical matter, that is sufficiently distant from the Heart and Heaven. Take heed of these Courses, if you would help each other.

Sub-direct. 3.

§. 18. Direct. 4. Watch over the hearts and lives of one another, and labour to discern the state of one anothers souls, and the strength or weakness of each others sins and graces, and the failings of each others lives, that so you may be able to apply to one another the most suitable help. What you are unacquainted with, you cannot be very helpful in; you cannot cure unknown diseases; you cannot give wise and safe advice, about the state of one anothers souls, if you are mistaken in them. God hath placed you neerest to each other, that you might have so much interest in each other as to quicken you to a loving care and so much acquaintance with each other, as to keep you from mis-understanding, and so from neglecting or deceiving one another: And you

you ſhould be always provided of thoſe fit Remedies, that are moſt needful and ſuitable to each others caſe. If that Preacher be like to be dull and unſucceſsful, that is all upon meer Doctrine, and little or nothing in cloſe and lively application, you may conceive that it will be ſo alſo with your familiar conference.

Sub-direct. 5. §. 19. Direct. 5. See that you neither flatter one another through fond and fooliſh love, nor exaſperate one another by a paſſionate or contemptuous kind of reprehenſion. Some perſons are ſo blinded with fond affection, that they can ſcarce ſee in Husband, Wife or Children any aggravated ſin or miſery; but they think all is well that they do, or not ſo ill, as in another they would perceive it: But this is the ſame courſe that ſelf-loving ſinners take with their own ſouls, to their deluſion and perdition. This flattering of your ſelves or others, is but the Devils Charm to keep you from effectual repentance and ſalvation: and the eaſe of ſuch Anodynes and Narcoticks doth endure but a little while. On the other ſide, ſome cannot ſpeak to one another of their faults, without ſuch bitterneſs of paſſion, or contempt, as tendeth to make the Stomach of the receiver to loath the Medicine, and ſo to refuſe it, or to caſt it up. If common reproofs to ſtrangers muſt all be offered in Love, much more between the neareſt relations.

Sub-direct. 6. §. 20. Direct. 6. Be ſure that you keep up true Conjugal Love to one another, and that you grow not to diſaffect the perſons of each other. For if you do, you will deſpiſe each others Counſels and Reproofs. They that ſlight, or loath, or are weary of each other, will diſdain reproofs, and ſcorn advice from one another; When entire affection greatly diſpoſeth to the right entertainment of Inſtruction.

Sub-direct. 7. §. 21. Direct. 7. Diſcourage not each other from inſtruction or reproof by taking it ill, or by churliſh reflections, or by obſtinate unreformedneſs. When you will not learn, or will not amend, you diſcourage your Inſtructer and reprover. Men will be apt to give over, when they are requited with ingratitude, and ſnappiſh retortions, or when they perceive that their labour is all in vain. And as it is the heavieſt judgment of God that befalleth any upon earth, when he withdraweth his advice and help, and leaveth ſinners wholly to themſelves; ſo it is the ſaddeſt condition in your relations, when the ignorant and ſinning party is forſaken by the other, and left to their own opinions and ways; Tho' indeed it ſhould not be ſo, becauſe while there is life there is hope.

Sub-direct. 8. §. 22. Direct. 8. So far as you are able to inſtruct or quicken one another, call in for better helps: Engage each other in the reading of the moſt convincing quickning Books, and in attendance on the moſt powerful Miniſtry, and in profitable converſe with the holieſt perſons. Not ſo as to neglect your duty to one another ever the more, but that all helps concurring may be the more effectual. When they find you ſpeak to them, but the ſame things which Miniſters and other Chriſtians ſpeak, it will be the more eaſily received.

Sub-direct. 9. §. 23. Direct. 9. Conceal not the ſtate of your ſouls, nor hide not your faults from one another. You are as one fleſh, and ſhould have one heart; And as it is moſt dangerous for a man to be unknown to himſelf, ſo it is very hurtful to Husband or Wife, to be unknown to one another, in thoſe caſes wherein they have need of help. It is fooliſh tenderneſs of your ſelves, when you conceal your diſeaſe from your Phyſician, or your helpful friend; And who ſhould be ſo tender of you, and helpful to you, as you ſhould be to one another? Indeed in ſome few caſes, where the opening of a fault or ſecret will but tend to quench affection, and not to get aſſiſtance from another, it is wiſdom to conceal it: But that is not the ordinary caſe. The opening your hearts to each other is neceſſary to your mutual help.

Sub-dir. 10. §. 24. Direct. 10. Avoid as much as may be contrariety of opinions in Religion: For if once you be of different judgments in matters which you take to be of great concernment, you will be tempted to diſaffect, contemn or undervalue one another; and ſo to deſpiſe the help which you might receive; And if you fall into ſeveral Sects, and follow ſeveral Teachers, you will hardly avoid that contention and confuſion, which will prove a great advantage to the Devil, and a great impediment to your ſpiritual good.

Sub-dir. 11. §. 25. Direct. 11. If difference in judgment in matters of Religion do fall out between you, be ſure that it be managed with Holineſs, Humility, Love, and Peace, and not with Carnality, Pride, Uncharitableneſs or Contention. 1. To manage your differences Holily, is to take God for the Judge, and to refer the matter to his Word, and to aim at his Glory, and the pleaſing of his Will, and to uſe his Means for the Concord of your judgments; which is, to ſearch the Scripture, and conſult with the faithful able Paſtors of the Church, and ſoberly and patiently to debate the caſe, and pray together for the illumination of the Spirit. On the contrary your Differences are carnally managed, when carnal reaſons breed or feed them; and when you run after this or that Sect or Party, through admiration of the perſons, and value not the perſons for the ſake of Truth, but meaſure Truth by the opinion and eſtimate of the perſons; and when you end your differences by ſelfiſh carnal principles and reſpects: And hence it comes to paſs, that if the Husband be a Papiſt or otherwiſe erroneous, its two to one that the Wife becometh of his erroneous Religion, not becauſe of any cogent evidence, but becauſe he is of the ſtronger parts, and hath conſtant opportunity to perſwade, and becauſe Love prepareth and inclineth her to be of his opinion: And thus Man inſtead of God, is the Maſter of the faith of many. 2. Your differences are managed in Humility, when you have a juſt and modeſt ſuſpicion of your own underſtandings, and debate and practiſe your differences with meekneſs and ſubmiſſion; and do not proudly overvalue all your own apprehenſions, and deſpiſe anothers Reaſons as if they were not worthy of your conſideration. 3. Your differences muſt be ſo far managed in Love, not that meer Love ſhould make you turn to anothers opinion be it true or falſe, but that you muſt be very deſirous to be of the ſame mind, and if you cannot, muſt take it for a ſore affliction, and muſt bear with the tolerable Miſtakes of one another, as you bear with your own infirmities; that they cool not Love, nor alienate not your hearts from one another, but only provoke you to a tender healing compaſſionate Care, and endeavour to do each other good. 4. And you muſt manage your differences, in quietneſs, without any paſſionate wranglings and diſſentions, that no bitter fruits may be bred by it in your Families among your ſelves. Thus all true Chriſtians muſt manage their differences in matters of Religion; but married perſons above all.

Sub-dir. 12. §. 26. Direct. 12. Be not either blindly indulgent to each others faults, nor yet too cenſorious of each others ſtate, leſt Satan thereby get advantage to alienate your affections from one another. To make nothing of the faults of thoſe whom you Love, is to Love them fooliſhly to their hurt; and to ſhew that it is not for their vertues that you love them. And to make too great a matter of one anothers faults, is but to help the Tempter to quench your love, and turn your hearts from one another. Thus many good women that have Husbands that are guilty of too much coldneſs in Religion, or worldly-mindedneſs, or falling into ill company, and miſpending their their time, are firſt apt to overlook all poſſibility of any ſeed of grace that may be in them, and then looking on them as ungodly perſons, to abate too much their Love and duty to them. There is great Wiſdom and Watchfulneſs requiſite in this caſe, to keep you from being carried into either of the extreams.

Subdir. 13. §. 27. Direct. 13. If you are married to one that is indeed an Infidel, or an ungodly perſon, yet keep up all the Conjugal Love which is due for the relation ſake. Though you cannot love them as true Chriſtians, yet love them as Husband or Wife. Even Heathens are bound to Love thoſe that are thus related to them: The Apoſtle hath determined the caſe, 1 Cor. 7. that Chriſtians muſt perform their Duties to Husbands or Wives that are Unbelievers: The faults of another diſcharge you not from your duty. As Satan hath deceived ſome by ſeparating principles about Church communion, to deny almoſt all Gods Ordinances to many, to whom they are due; ſo doth he thus deceive ſome perſons in family-relations, and draw them from the duties which they owe for one anothers good.

Subdir. 14. §. 28. Direct. 14. Joyn together in frequent and fervent Prayer: Prayer doth force the mind into ſome compoſedneſs and ſobriety, and affecteth the heart with the preſence and Majeſty of God. Pray alſo for each other when you are in ſecret; that God may do that work which you moſt deſire upon each others hearts.

Subdir. 15. §. 29. Direct. 15. Laſtly, Help each other by an exemplary life. Be that your ſelves which you deſire your Husband or Wife ſhould be: Excel in meekneſs, and humility, and charity, and dutifulneſs, and diligence, and ſelf-denial, and patience, as far as you do excel in profeſſion of Religion. St. Peter ſaith, that even thoſe that will not be won by the Word, may be won without it by the Converſation of their Wives, 1 Pet. 3. 1. That is, the excellency of Religion may ſo far appear to them, by the fruits of it in their Wives Converſations, as may firſt incline them to think well and honourably of it, and ſo to enquire into the nature and reaſon of it, and to hearken to their Wives; and all this without the publick Miniſtry. A life of undiſſembled holineſs, and heavenlineſs, and ſelf denial, and meekneſs, and love, and mortification, is a powerful Sermon; which if you be conſtantly preaching before thoſe that are ſtill near you, will hardly miſs of a good effect. Works are more palpably ſignificant and perſwaſive than Words alone.

Dir. 7. Rom. 13. 13, 14. Eph. 5. 29, 31. Gen. 2. 18. §. 30. Direct. 7. Another great Conjugal Duty is, to be helpful to each other for the health and comfort of their Bodies. Not to pamper each others fleſh, or cheriſh the vices of pride, or ſloth, or gluttony, or voluptuouſneſs in each other; but to further the health and chearfulneſs of the Body, to fit it for the ſervice of the ſoul and God. Such cheriſhing or pleaſing of the Fleſh, which is unlawful in each perſon to himſelf, is alſo unlawful (ordinarily) to uſe to another. But, ſuch as you may uſe for your ſelf, you may uſe alſo for your Wife or Husband. Not to live above your Eſtates, nor as Servants to your guts, to ſerve the appetites of one another by delicious fare; but to be careful of that health, without which your lives will be made unſerviceable or uncomfortable: And this muſt proceed from ſuch a love to one another as you have to your ſelves: And that both in time of Health and Sickneſs.

§. 31. 1. In Health, you muſt be careful to provide for each other (not ſo much pleaſing as) whol ſome food, and to keep each other from that which is hurtful to your health; diſſwading each other from Gluttony and Idleneſs, the two great Murderers of Mankind. If the bodies of the Poor, in hunger, and cold, and nakedneſs muſt be relieved, much more thoſe that are become as your own fleſh.

§. 32. 2. Alſo in ſickneſs, you are to be tenderly regardful of each other; and not to be ſparing of any Coſt or Pains, by which the Health of each other may be reſtored, or your ſouls confirmed, and your comforts cheriſhed. You muſt not loath the Bodies of each other in the moſt loathſome ſickneſs, nor ſhun them thro' loathing; no more than you would do your own, Prov. 17. 17. A friend loveth at all times, and a brother is born for adverſity: Much more thoſe that are ſo nearly bound for ſickneſs and health, till death ſhall ſeparate them. It is an odious ſin to be aweary of a ſick or ſuffering friend, and deſirous that God would take them, meerly that you may be eaſed of the trouble. And uſually ſuch perſons do meet with ſuch meaſure as they meaſured to others; and thoſe that they look for help and comfort from, will perhaps be as weary of them, and as glad to be rid of them.

Gen. 27. 14. Eph. 5. 29, 31. Job. 19. 17. Job 2. 9.

Dir. 8. See Prov. 31. Gen. 31. 40. Tit. 2. 5. 1 Tim. 5. 14. & 5. 8. §. 33. Direct. 8. Another Duty of Husbands and Wives, is to be helpful to each other in their worldly buſineſs, and eſtates. Not for worldly Ends, nor with a worldly mind; but in obedience to God who will have them Labour, as well as pray, for their daily bread, and hath determined that in the ſweat of their brows they ſhall eat their bread; and that ſix days they ſhall labour and do all that they have to do; and that he that will not work muſt not eat. The care of their affairs doth lie upon them both, and neither of them muſt caſt it off and live in idleneſs; (unleſs one of them be an Ideot, or ſo witleſs, as to be unfit for care, or ſo ſick or lame, as to be unfit for labour.)

Dir. 9. 1 Sam. 25. 25. Matth. 18. 16. Matth. 1. 19. 2 Sam. 11. 7. Prov. 31. 28. Eccl. 7. 3. Pro. 22. 1. 2 Sam. 6. 20. Gen. 9. 22, 25. §. 34. Direct. 9. Alſo you muſt be careful of the lawful honour and good names of one another. You muſt not divulge, but conceal the diſhonourable failings of each other: (as Abigail, except in any caſe compaſſion or juſtice require you to open them to any one for a cure, or to clear the truth.) The reputation of each other muſt be as dear to you as your own. It is a ſinful and unfaithful practice of many, both Husbands and Wives, who among their companions are opening the faults and infirmities of each other, which they are bound in tenderneſs to cover. As if they perceived not that by diſhonouring one another, they diſhonour themſelves. Love will cover a multitude of Faults, 1 Pet. 4. 8. Nay, many diſaffected peeviſh perſons will aggravate all the faults of one another behind their backs to ſtrangers; and ſometimes ſlander them, and ſpeak more than is truth. Many a man hath been put to clear his good name from the ſlanders of a jealous or a paſſionate Wife: And an open enemy is not capable of doing one ſo much wrong as ſhe that is in his boſome, becauſe ſhe will eaſily be believed, as being ſuppoſed to know him better than any other.

Dir. 10. 1 Tim. 2. 4, 12. Gen. 18. 19. & 35. 2, &c. Joſ. 24. 14. Pſal. 101. §. 35. Direct. 10. It is alſo a great part of the duty of Husbands and Wives, to be helpful to one another in the Education of their Children, and in the Government of the Inferiors of the Family. Some Men caſt all the care of the Children while they are young upon their Wives; And many women by their paſſion and indiſcretion do make themſelves unfit to help their Husbands in the Government either of their Children or Servants: but this is one of the greateſt parts of their employment. As to the Mans part, to govern his houſe well, it is a duty unqueſtionable. And it is not to be denied of the Wife. 1 Tim. 5. 14. [I will that the younger Women marry, bear Children, guide the houſe.] Bathſheba taught Solomon, Prov. 31. 1. Abigail took better care of Nabal's houſe than he did himſelf. They that have a joint intereſt, and are one fleſh, muſt have a joint part in government; although their power be not equal, and one may better overſee ſome buſineſs, and the the other, other buſineſs; yet in their places they muſt divide the care, and help each other: And not as it is with many wicked perſons, who are the moſt unruly part of the Family themſelves, and the chiefeſt cauſe that it is ungoverned and ungodly or one party hindreth the other from keeping order, or doing any good.

Dir. 11. §. 36. Direct. 11. Another part of their Duty is, to help each other in works of Charity and Hoſpitality. While they have opportunity to do good to all, but eſpecially to them of the houſhold of faith; and to ſow to the Spirit, that of the Spirit they may reap everlaſting life: Yea, to ſow plentifully that they may reap plentifully, Gal. 6. that if they are able their houſes may afford relief and entertainment for the needy; eſpecially for Chriſts Servants for their Maſters ſake; who hath promiſed, that [He that receiveth a Prophet in the name of a Prophet ſhall receive a Prophets reward: and he that receiveth a righteous man in the name of a righteous man, ſhall receive a righteous mans reward: and whoſoever ſhall give to drink unto one of theſe little ones, a cup of cold water, in the name of a Diſciple, verily I ſay unto you, he ſhall in no wiſe loſe his reward, Mat. 10. 41, 42.] The woman of Shunem loſt nothing by the entertainment of Eliſha, when ſhe ſaid to her Husband, Behold, now I perceive that this is an holy man of God which paſſeth by us continually: Let us make him a little Chamber I pray thee on the wall, and let us ſet for him there a Bed, and a Table, and a Stool, and a Candleſtick: and it ſhall be when he cometh to us, that he ſhall turn in thither: 2 Kings 4. 10. But now how common is it for the people to think all too little for themſelves; and if one of them be addicted to works of charity, the other is covetous and is always hindring them.

Heb. 13. 2. Gen. 18. 6, &c. Rom. 12. 13. 2 Cor. 9. 6. Luke 16. 9. 1 Tim. 3. 2. Tit. 1. 8. Prov. 19. 17. Mat. 25. 35. to 41. Acts 20. 35.

Dir. 12. §. 37. Direct. 12. Laſtly, It is a great part of the duty of Husbands and Wives, to be helpers and comforters of each other in order to a ſafe and happy death. 1. In the time of Health, you muſt often and ſeriouſly remember each other of the time when death will make the ſeparation; and live together in your daily converſe, as thoſe that are ſtill expecting the parting hour. Help to awaken each others Souls, to make ready all thoſe graces which then will prove neceſſary, and to live in a conſtant preparation for your change. Reprove all that in one another, which will be unſavoury and ungrateful to your review at death. If you ſee each other dull and ſlow in your preparations, or to live in vanity, worldlineſs or ſloth, as if you had forgotten that you muſt ſhortly dye, ſtir up one another to do all that without delay which the approach of ſuch a day requireth. 2. And when Death is at hand, O then what abundance of tenderneſs and ſeriouſneſs, and skill, and diligence, is needful for one, that hath the laſt office of love to perform, to the departing Soul of ſo near a friend? O then what need will there be of your moſt wiſe, and faithful and diligent help? When nature faileth, and the pains of fleſh divert the mind, and temptations are ſtrongeſt while the body is weakeſt; when a languiſhing body, and a doubting, fearful, troubled mind, do call for your compaſſion and help, O then what skill and holy ſeriouſneſs will be neceſſary! O what a calamity is it to have a carnal unſanctified Husband or Wife, which will neither help you to prepare for death, nor can ſpeak a ſerious word of counſel or comfort to you at a dying hour: That can do nothing but ſtand by and weep over you; but have not a ſenſible word to ſay, about the life that you are going to, nor about the duty of a departing Soul, nor againſt the temptations and fears which then may be ready to overwhelm you. They that are utterly unprepared and unfit to dye themſelves, can do little to prepare or help another. But they that live together as the heirs of Heaven, and converſe on Earth as fellow travellers to the Land of Promiſe, may help and encourage the Souls of one another and joyfully part at death, as expecting quickly to meet again in life eternal.

§. 38. Were it not leſt I be over tedious, I ſhould next ſpeak of the Manner how Husbands and Wives muſt perform their duties to each other: As 1. That it ſhould be all done in ſuch entire Love, as maketh the caſe of one another to you as your own. 2. That therefore all muſt be done in Patience and mutual forbearance. 3. And in familiarity, and not with ſtrangeneſs, diſtance, ſowerneſs, nor affected complement. 4. And in ſecreſie; where I ſhould have ſhewed you in what caſes ſecreſie may be broken, and in what not. 5. And in confidence of each other fidelity, and not in ſuſpicion, jealouſie, and diſtruſt. 6. And in prudence to manage things aright, and to foreſee and avoid impediments and inconveniences. 7. And in holineſs that God may be the firſt and laſt, and all in all. 8. And in conſtancy that you ceaſe not your duties for one another until death. But neceſſary abbreviation alloweth me to ſay no more of theſe.

CHAP. VIII.

The ſpecial Duties of HUSBANDS to their WIVES.

§. 1. HE that will expect Duty or Comfort from his Wife, muſt be faithful in doing the Duty of a Husband. The failing of your ſelves in your own Duty, may cauſe the failing of another to you, or at leaſt will ſome other way as much afflict you, and will be bitterer to you in the end, than if an hundred failed of their Duty to you. A good Husband will either make a good Wife, or eaſily and profitably endure a bad one. I ſhall therefore give you Directions for your own part of Duty, as that which your happineſs is moſt concerned in.

Dir. 1. §. 2. Direct. 1. The Husband muſt undertake the principal part of the Government of the whole Family even of the Wife her ſelf: And therefore 1. He muſt labour to be fit and able for that Government which he undertaketh: This ability conſiſteth 1. In holineſs and ſpiritual wiſdom, that he may be acquainted with the End to which he is to conduct them, and the Rule by which he is to guide them; and the principal works which they are to do. An ungodly irreligious man is both a ſtranger and an Enemy to the chiefeſt part of Family-government. 2. His ability conſiſteth in a due acquaintance with the works of his Calling, and the labours in which his Servants are to be employed. For he that is utterly unacquainted with their buſineſs, will be very unfit to govern them in it; unleſs he commit that part of their government to his Wife or a Steward that is acquainted with it. 3. And he muſt be acquainted both with the common temper and infirmities of mankind, that he may know how much is to be born with, and alſo with the particular temper, and faults, and virtues of thoſe whom he is to govern. 4. And he muſt have Prudence to direct himſelf in all his carriage to them; and Juſtice to deal with every one as they deſerve; and Love to do them all the good he can, for Soul and Body. II. And being thus able, he muſt make it his daily work, and eſpecially be ſure that he govern himſelf well, that his example may be part of his government of others.

Dir. 2. §. 3. Direct. 2. The Husband muſt ſo unite Authority and Love, that neither of them may be omitted or concealed, but both be exerciſed and maintained: Love muſt not be exerciſed ſo imprudently as to deſtroy the exerciſe of Authority: And Authority muſt not be exerciſed over a Wife ſo Magiſterially and imperiouſly, as to deſtroy the exerciſe of Love. As you;

your Love must be a Governing Love, so your Commands must all be Loving Commands. Lose not your Authority; for that will but disable you from doing the Office of a Husband to your Wife, or of a Master to your Servants. Yet must it be maintained by no means inconsistent with Conjugal Love; and therefore not by fierceness or cruelty, by threatnings or stripes, (unless by distraction or loss of reason, they cease to be uncapable of the carriage otherwise due to a Wife.) There are many cases of equality in which Authority is not to be exercised; but there is no case of inequality or unworthiness so great, in which Conjugal Love is not to be exercised: And therefore nothing must exclude it.

Dir. 3. §. 4. Direct. 3. It is the duty of Husbands to preserve the Authority of their Wives, over the Children and Servants of the Family. For they are joynt-governors with them over all the Inferiors. And the infirmities of Women are apt many times to expose them to contempt: So that Servants and Children will be apt to slight them, and disobey them, if the Husband interpose not to preserve their honour and authority. Yet this must be done with such Cautions as these: 1. Justifie not any errour, vice or weakness of your Wives. They may be concealed and excused as far as may be, but never owned or defended. 2. Urge not obedience to any unlawful Command of theirs. No one hath Authority to contradict the Law of God, or disoblige any from his Government. You will but diminish your own authority with persons of any understanding, if you justifie any thing that is against Gods Authority. But if the thing commanded be lawful tho' it may have some inconveniences, you must rebuke the disobedience of Inferiors, and not suffer them to slight the Commands of your Wives, not to set their own Reason and Wills against them, and say, We will not do it. How can they help you in Government, if you suffer them to be disobeyed.

Dir. 4. §. 5. Direct. 4. Also you must preserve the Honour as well as the Authority of your Wives. If they have any dishonourable infirmities, they are not to be mentioned by Children and Servants. As in the natural Body we cover most carefully the most dishonourable parts (for our comely parts have no need) 1 Cor. 12. 23, 24. So must it be here. Children or Servants must not be suffered to carry themselves contemptuously or rudely towards them, nor to despise them, or speak unmannerly, proud or disdainful words to them. The Husband must vindicate them from all such injury and contempt.

Dir. 5. §. 6. Direct. 5. The Husband is to excel the Wife in knowledge, and be her Teacher in the matters that belong to her Salvation. He must instruct her in the Word of God, and direct her in particular Duties, and help her to subdue her own corruptions, and labour to confirm her against temptations: If she doubt of any thing that he can resolve her in, she is to ask his resolution, and he to open to her at home, the things which she understood not in the Congregation, 1 Cor. 14. 35. But if the Husband be indeed an ignorant Sot, or have made himself unable to instruct his Wife, she is not bound to ask him in vain, to teach her that which he understandeth not himself. Those Husbands that despise the Word of God, and live in wilful ignorance, do not only despise their own Souls, but their Families also; and making themselves unable for their duties, they are usually themselves despised by their inferiors; For God hath told such in his message to Eli, 1 Sam. 2. 30. Them that honour me, I will honour; and they that despise me, shall be lightly esteemed.

Dir. 6. §. 7. Direct. 6. The Husband must be the principal Teacher of the Family. He must instruct them, and examine them, and rule them about the Matters of God, as well as his own service, and see that the Lords Day and Worship be observed by all that are within his Gates. And therefore he must labour for such understanding and ability as is necessary hereunto. And if he be unable or negligent, it is his sin, and will be his shame. If the Wife be wiser and abler, and if it be cast upon her, it is his dishonour: But it neither of them do it, the sin, and shame, and suffering, will be common to them both.

§. 8. Direct. 7. The Husband is to be the mouth of the Family, in their daily conjunct Prayers unto God. Dir. 7. Therefore he must be able to pray, and also have a praying heart. He must be as it were the Priest of the household; and therefore should be the most holy, that he may be fit to stand between them and God, and to offer up their Prayers to him. If this be cast on the Wife, it will be his dishonour.

§. 9. Direct. 8. The Husband is to be the chief Provider for the Family (ordinarily.) It is supposed that he is most able for Mind and Body, and is the chief disposer of the estate. Therefore he must be specially careful, that Wife and Children want nothing that is fit for them, so far as he can procure it. Dir. 8.

Direct. 9. The Husband must be strongest in Family-patience; bearing with the weakness and passions of the Wife: Not so as to make light of any sin against God, but so as not to make a great matter of any frailty as against himself, and so as to preserve the Love and Peace which is to be as the natural temper of their Relation. Dir. 9.

Direct. 10. The manner of all these Duties must also be carefully regarded. As, 1. That they be done in Prudence, and not with folly, rashness, and inconsiderateness. 2. That all be done in Conjugal Love, and tenderness, as over one that is tender and the weaker vessel; and that he do not teach, or command, or reprove a Wife, in the same imperious manner as a Child or Servant. 3. That due familiarity be maintain'd, and that he keep not at a distance and strangeness from his Wife. 4. That Love be confident, without base suspicions and causeless jealousies. 5. That all be done in Gentleness, and not in Passion, roughness and sourness. 6. That there be no unjust and causeless concealment of Secrets, which should be common to them both. 7. That there be no foolish opening of such Secrets to her as may become her snare, and she is not able to bear or keep. 8. That none of their own matters, which should be kept secret, be made known to others. His teaching and reproving her should be, for the most part secret. 9. That he be constant, and not weary of his Love or Duty. This briefly of the Manner. Dir. 10.

CHAP. IX.

The Special Duties of Wives to Husbands.

THE Wife that expecteth comfort in a Husband, must make conscience of all her own Duty to her Husband: For though it be his Duty to be kind and faithful to her, though she prove unkind and froward, yet 1. Men are frail and apt to fail in such difficult Duties as well as Women. 2. And it is so ordered by God, that comfort and Duty shall go together, and you shall miss of comfort, if you cast off Duty.

§. 1. Direct. 1. Be specially loving to your Husbands: Your natures give you the advantage in this; and Love Feedeth Love. This is your special requital for all the troubles that your infirmities put them to. Dir. 1.

§. 2. Direct. 2. Live in a voluntary subjection and obedience to them. If their softness or yieldingness cause them to relinquish their authority; and for peace they are fain to let you have your wills; yet remember that it is God that hath appointed them to be your Heads and Governours. If they are so silly as to be unable, you should not have chosen such to rule you as are unfit: But having chosen them, you Dir. 2.

must assist them with your better understanding, in a submissive and not a ruling masterly way. A servant that hath a foolish Master, may help him without becoming Master. And do not deceive your selves by giving the bare Titles of Government to your Husbands, when yet you must needs, in all things, have your own Wills; for this is but mockery, and not obedience. To be subject and obedient, is to take the Understanding and Will of another to Govern you before (though not without) your own; and to make your understandings and Wills to follow the conduct of his that governeth you. Self-willedness is contrary to subjection and obedience.

Dir. 3. §. 3. Direct. 3. Learn of your Husbands as your appointed Teachers, and be not self-conceited and wise in your own eyes, but ask of them such Instructions as your case requireth. 1 Cor. 14. 34, 35. Let your women keep silence in the Churches, for it is not permitted to them to speak; but they are commanded to be under obedience, as also saith the Law; And if they will learn any thing let them ask their Husbands at home; (unless when the Husband is so ignorant as to be utterly unable; which is his sin and shame. For it is vain to ask that of them which they know not.)

Dir. 4. §. 4. Direct. 4. Set your selves seriously to amend all those faults which they reprove in you. Do not take it ill to be reproved; swell not against it, as if they did you harm or wrong: It is a very ill sign to hate reproof, Prov. 12. 1. & 10. 17. & 15. 10, 31, 32. & 17. 10. And what doth their Government of you signifie, if you will not amend the faults that are reproved in you, but continue impenitent and grudge at the reproof? It is a miserable folly to desire to be flattered, and soothed by any, but especially by one that is bound to be faithful to you, and whose intimacy should make you as ready to hear of your faults from him, as to be acquainted with them your selves; and especially when it concerneth the safety or benefit of your souls.

Dir. 5. §. 5. Direct. 5. Honour your Husbands according to their Superiority. Behave not your selves towards them with unreverence and contempt, in titles, speeches or any behaviour: If the worth of their persons deserve not Honour, yet their place deserveth it. Speak not of their infirmities to others behind their backs; as some twatling Gossips use to do, that know not that their Husbands dishonour is their own, and that to open it causlessly to others, is their double shame. Those that silently hear you, will tell others behind your back, how foolishly and shamefully you speak to them against your Husbands. If God have made your nearest friend an affliction to you, why should you complain to one that is farther off? (Unless it be to some special prudent friend, in case of true necessity for advise.)

Dir. 6. §. 6. Direct. 6. Live in a chearful contentedness with your condition; and take heed of an impatient murmuring spirit. It is a continual Burden to a Man to have an impatient discontented Wife. Many a poor man can easily bear his poverty himself, that yet is not able to bear his Wives impatience under it. To hear her Night and Day complaining, and speaking distrustfully, and see her live disquietedly, is far heavier than his poverty it self. If his Wife could bear it as patiently as he, it would be but light to him. Yea, in case of suffering for righteousness sake, the impatience of a Wife is a greater trial to a man than all the suffering it self; and many a man that could easily have suffered the loss of his estate, or banishment, or imprisonment for Christ, hath betrayed his Conscience, and yielded to sin, because his Wife hath grieved him with impatiency, and could not bear what he could bear. Whereas a contented chearful Wife doth help to make a man chearful and contented in every state.

Dir. 7. §. 7. Direct. 7. In a special manner strive to subdue your passions, and to speak and do all in meekness and sobriety. The rather because that the weakness of your Sex doth usually subject you more to Passions, than Men: And it is the common cause of the Husbands disquietness, and the calamity of your Relation. It is the vexation and sickness of your own minds; you find not your selves at ease within, as long as you are passionate. And then it is the grief and disquietness of your Husbands: And being provoked by you, they provoke you more; and so your disquietness increaseth, and your lives are made a weary burden to you. By all means therefore keep down passion, and keep a composed patient mind.

Dir. 8. §. 8. Direct. 8. Take heed of a proud and contentious disposition; and maintain a humble, peaceable temper. Pride will make you turbulent and unquiet with your Husbands, and contentious with your Neighbours: It will make you foolish and ridiculous, in striving for honour and precedency, and envying those that exceed you, or go before you. In a word, it is the Devils sin, and would make you a shame and a trouble to the world. But Humility is the health, the peace, and the ornament of the Soul. 1 Pet. 3. 4. A meek and quiet spirit is in the sight of God of great price. (Write those words in your Bed-chamber on the Walls where they may be daily before your eyes) Col. 3. 12. Put on as the elect of God, holy, and beloved, bowels of mercy, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, long-suffering, forbearing one another, and forgiving one another—. If this be the duty of all to one another; much more of Wives to Husbands. 1 Pet. 5. 5. Yea, all of you be subject one to another, and be cloathed with Humility; for God resisteth the proud and giveth Grace to the humble. Proud Women oft ruin their Husbands estates, and quietness, and their own Souls.

Dir. 9. §. 9. Direct. 9. Affect not a childish gaudiness of Apparel, nor a vain, or costly, or troublesome curiosity, in any thing about you. Uncleanness and nastiness is a fault, but very small in comparison of this pride and curiosity. It dishonoureth your Sex and selves to be so childish, as to overmind such toyish things. If you will needs be proud, be proud of somewhat that is of worth and proper to a Man: To be proud of Reason, or Wisdom, or Learning, or Goodness, is bad enough; but this is to be proud of something. But to be proud of fashions and fine cloaths, of spots and nakedness, of sumptuous entertainments, and neat rooms, is to be proud of your shame, and not your Virtue; and of that which you are not so much as commendable for. And the cost, the time (O precious time!) which themselves and their servants must lay out, upon their dressings, entertainments and other curiosities will be the shame and sorrow of their souls, whenever God shall open their Eyes, and make them know what Time was worth, and what greater matters they had to mind. If vain and empty persons like your selves, commend you for your bravery or curiosity, so will not any judicious sober person, whose commendation is much worth. And yet I must here with grief take notice, that when some few that in other matters seem wise and religious, are themselves a little tainted with this childish curiosity and pride, and let fall words of disparagement against those whose dress, and dwellings, and entertainments, are not so curious as their own; this proves the greatest maintainer of this sin, and the most notable service to the Devil: For then abundance will plead this for this sinful curiosity and pride, and say, I shall else be accounted base or sordid; even such and such will speak against me. Take heed, if you will needs needs be such your selves, that you prate not against others that are not as vain and curious as you: For the Nature of Man is more prone to Pride and Vanity, than to Humility, and the improvement of their Time and Cost in greater matters; and while you think that you speak but against indecency, you become the Devils Preachers, and do him more service than you consider of. You may as wisely speak against People for using to Eat or Drink too little, when there is not one of a multitude that liveth not ordinarily in excess; and so excess will get advantage by it.

Dir. 10. §. 10. Direct. 10. Be specially careful in the Government of your Tongues, and let your words be few, and well considered before you speak them. A double diligence is needful in this, because it is the most common miscarriage of your Sex: A laxative running tongue, is so great a dishonour to you, that I never knew a Woman very full of words, but she was the pity of her Friends, and the contempt of others; who behind her back will make a scorn of her, and talk of her as some crackt-brained or half-wited person; yea, though your talk be good, it will be tedious and contemptible, if it be thus poured out, and be too cheap. Prov. 10. 19. In the multitude of words there wanteth not sin, but he that refraineth his lips is wise. You must answer in judgment for your idle words, Matth. 12. 36. You will take it ill to be accounted fools, and made the derision of those that talk of you: Judge by the Scripture what occasion you give them. Eccles. 5. 3, 7. A Dream cometh by the multitude of business, and a Fools Voice is known by multitude of words: In the multitude of Dreams, and many words, there are divers Vanities. Eccles. 10. 12, 13, 14. The Words of a wise mans mouth are gracious; but the lips of a Fool will swallow up himself. The beginnings of the words of his mouth is foolishness, and the end of his talk is mischievous madness: A Fool also is full of Words. Whereas a Woman that is cautelous and sparing of her words is commonly reverenced and supposed to be wise. So that if you had no higher design in it, but meerly to be well thought of, and honoured by men; you can scarcely take a surer way, than to let your words be few and weighty; tho' the avoiding of sin, and unquietness, should prevail with you much more.

Dir. 11. §. 11. Direct. 11. Be willing and diligent in your proper part, of the care and labour of the Family. As the primary provision of maintenance belongeth most to the Husband, so the secondary provision within doors belongeth specially to the Wife. Read over and over the thirty one Chapter of the Proverbs; especially the care of nurling your own Children, and teaching them, and watching over them when they are young; and also watching over the Family at home, when your Husbands are abroad, is your proper work.

Dir. 12. §. 12. Direct. 12. Dispose not of your Husbands Estate, without his knowledge and consent. You are not only to consider whether the work be good that you lay it out upon, but what power you have to do it. Quest. But may a Woman give nothing, nor lay out nothing in the House, without her Husbands consent? Answ. 1. If she have his general or implicite consent, it may suffice; that is, if he allow her to follow her judgment; or, if he commit such a proportion to her power, to do what she will with it. Or, if she know, that if he knew it, he would not be against it. 2. Or, if the Law, or his consent, do give her any propriety in any part of his estate, or make her a Joynt-Proprietor, she may proportionably dispose of it in a necessary case. The Husband is considerable, either as a Proprietor, or as her Governor. As a Proprietor, he only may dispose of the estate, where he is the sole Proprietor: But where consent or the Law of the Land doth make the Woman Joynt-Proprietor, she is not disabled from giving for want of a Propriety. But then no Law exempteth her from his Government; and therefore she is not to give any thing in a way of disobedience, though it be her own: Except when he forbiddeth that which is her Duty, or which he hath no power to forbid. So that in case of Joynt-propriety she may give without him, so be it she Exceed not her proportion, and also if it be in a Case of Duty, where he may not hinder her. As to save the lives of the Poor in extream necessity, Famine, or Imprisonment, or the like. 3. But if the thing be wholly her own, excepted from his propriety, and she be Sole Proprietor, then she need not ask his consent at all, any other way than as he is her Guide, to direct her to the best way of disposing of it: Which, if he forbid her instead of directing her to it, she is not thereby excusable before God, for the abusing of her trust and Talents. 4. I conceive that ad aliquid as to certain absolutely necessary uses, the very Relation maketh the Woman as a Joynt-Proprietor: As if her Husband will not allow her such Food and Raiment as is necessary to Preserve the lives and health of her self, and all her Children; she is bound to do it without or against his will, (if she can, and if it be not to a greater hurt, and the Estate be his own, and he be able) rather than let her Children contract such Diseases, as apparently will follow to the hazard of their lives. Yea, and to save the life of another that in Famine is ready to perish: For she is not as a Stranger to his Estate. But out of these cases, if a Wife shall secretly waste or give, or lay it out on bravery, or vanity, or set her wit against her Husbands; and because she thinks him too strait or penurious, therefore she will dispose of it, without his consent. This is thievery, disobedience, and injustice.

2 Sam. 25 18, 29, 30. Prov. 31. 11, 12, 13, 20, Hos. 6. 6. Mat. 9. 13. & 12. 7. 2 King. 4 9, 22.

Quest. 1. But as the Case standeth with us in England, hath the Wife a Joynt-propriety, or not? Quest. 1.

Answ. Three ways (at least) she may have a propriety. 1. By a reserve of what was her own before; which (however some question it) may in some cases be done in their agreement at marriage. 2. By the Law of the Land. 3. By the Husbands consent or donation. What the Law of the Land saith in case, I leave to the Lawyers: But it seemeth to me, that his words at Marriage [With all my worldly Goods I thee endow] do signifie his consent to make her a Joynt-Proprietor: And his consent is sufficient to the collation of a title, to that which was his own. Unless any can prove, that Law or Custom, doth otherwise expound the words, (as an empty formality,) and that at the Contract, this was or should be known to her to be the sense. And the Laws allowing the Wife the third part upon Death or Separation, doth intimate a Joynt-Propriety before.

Quest. 2. If the Husband live upon unlawful gain, as cheating, stealing, robbing by the High way, &c. is not the Wife guilty as a Joynt-Proprietor, in retaining such ill-gotten goods if she know it? And is she bound to accuse her Husband, or to restore such goods? Quest. 2.

Answ. Her duty is first to Admonish her Husband of his sin and danger, and endeavour his repentance, in the mean time disclaiming all consent, and reception of the goods. And if she cannot prevail for his Repentance, Restitution, and Reformation, she hath a double duty to perform; the one is to help them to their goods whom he hath injur'd and robbed, (by prudent and just means:) The other is to prevent his robbing of others for the time to come. But how these must be done, is the great difficulty.

1. If she foresee (or may do) that either by her Husbands displeasure, or by the cruel revenge of the injured party, the hurt of discovering the fraud or robbery, will be greater than the good, then I think that she is not bound to discover it. But by some

Qu. May a Wife give without the Husbands consent?

See Dr. Gouge on Family-Relations, who saith the most against Womens giving.

secret indirect way, to help the owner to his own; if it may be done without a greater hurt.

2. To prevent his sin and other mens future suffering by him, she seemeth to me to be bound to Reveal her Husbands sinful purposes to the Magistrate, if she can no other way prevail with him to forbear. My Reasons are, because the keeping of Gods Law, and the Law of the Land, and the publick order and good, and the preventing of our Neighbours hurt by robbery or fraud; and so the interest of honesty and right, is of greater importance than any duty to her Husband, or preservation of her own Peace, which seemeth to be against it. But then I must suppose that she liveth under a Magistrate, who will take but a just revenge. For if she know the Laws and Magistrate to be so unjust, as to punish a fault with death, which deserveth it not, she is not to tell such a Magistrate, but preserve her Neighbours safety by some other way of intimation.

If any one think that a Wife may in no case accuse a Husband, to the hazard of his life or estate, let them, 1. Remember what God obliged Parents to do against the lives of incorrigible Children, Deut. 21. 2. And that the honour of God, and the lives of our Neighbours should be preferred before the life of one offender, and their estates before his estate alone. 3. And that the Light of Reason telleth us, that a Wife is to reveal a Treason against the King, which is plotted by a Husband; and therefore also the robbing of the Kings Treasury, or deceiving him in any matter of great concernment. And therefore in due proportion, the Laws and common good, and our Neighbours welfare, are to be preserved by us, though against the nearest relation: Only all due tenderness of the life and reputation of the Husband is to be preserved, in the manner of proceedings, as far as will stand with the interest of justice, and the common good.

Quest. 3. May the Wife go hear Sermons when the Husband forbiddeth her?

Answ. There are some Sermons which must not be heard; there are some Sermons which may be heard, and must when no greater matter doth divert us; and there are some Sermons which must be heard, whoever shall forbid it. Those which must not be heard, are such as are heretical (ordinarily) and such as are superfluous, and at such times when greater duties call us another way. Those which may be heard, are either occasional Sermons, or such Lectures as are neither of Necessity to our selves, nor yet to the owning of God and his publick Worship. One that liveth where there are daily or hourly Sermons, may hear them as oft as suiteth with their condition, and their other duties: But in this case, the command of a Husband, with the inconveniences that will follow disobeying him, may make it a duty to forbear. But that we do sometimes publickly own Gods Worship, and Church Ordinances, and receive Ministerial teaching for our Edification, is of double necessity; that we deny not God, and that we betray not, or desert not our own Souls. And this is especially necessary (ordinarily) on the Lords Days, which are appointed for these necessary uses. And here the Husband hath no power to forbid the Wife, nor should she (formally) obey his prohibition. But yet as Affirmatives bind not ad semper, and no duty is a duty at every Season; so it is possible that on the Lords Day, it may extraordinarily become a duty to forbear Sermons or Sacraments, or other publick Worship. As when any greater duty calleth us away: As to quench a fire; and to save mens lives; and to save our Country from an Enemy in a time of War; and to save our own lives (if we knew the assembly would be assaulted) or to preserve our liberty for greater service. Christ sets us to learn the meaning of this Lesson [I will have Mercy and not Sacrifice.] In such a case also a mischief may be avoided, even from a Husband by the omission of a duty at that time, (when it would be no duty) for this is but a transposition of it. But this is but an act of prudent self-preservation, and not an act of formal obedience.

Quest. 4. If a Woman have a Husband so incorrigible in Vice, as that by long tryal she findeth that speaking against it, maketh him worse, and causeth him to abuse her, is she bound to continue her dissuasion, or to forbear? Quest. 4.

Answ. That is not here a duty which is not a means to do some good: And that is no means which we know before hand is like, if not certain, to do no good, or to do more harm, we must not by weariness, lazines, or censoriousnes, take a case to be desperate, which is not; nor must we so easily desist with so near a Relation, as with a Stranger or a Neighbour. But yet Christs indulgence of not exposing our selves to be torn by Dogs, and his Word trodden in the dirt by Swine, doth extend to Relations as well as others. But then you must observe that she that is justly discouraged from sharp reproofs, may yet have hope that gentle and humble perswasions may succeed. And she that is discouraged from open, or frequent, or plain reproofs; may yet have hope that secret, or more seldom, or more distant and general admonitions may not be lost. And she that is discouraged from one way of doing him good, may yet have many other ways (as to set some Minister whom he reverenceth, to speak to him; to put some suitable Book into his hand, &c.) And she that is discouraged at the present, ought not totally to despair, but may make some more attempts hereafter; either in some sickness, or time of mortality, or danger or affliction, or when possibly time and consideration may have better prepared him to hear. And in the mean time she is to Continue all Conjugal Affection and Duty, and a convincing, winning course of life; which may prove the most effectual reproof.

Quest. 5. What should a Woman do in controverted Cases of Religion, when her judgment and her Husbands differ? Quest. 5.

Answ. 1. Some make a Controversie of that which with all good Christians or sober Persons, should be past controversie; and some controversies are indeed of real, if not insuperable difficulty. 2. Some controversies are about important necessary things, and some about things of lesser moment. 3. Some are about meer Opinion, or other mens practice, and some about our own practice.

1. In all differences of judgment the Wife must exercise such self-suspicion, and modesty, and submission, as may signifie her due sense, both of the weakness of her Sex, and of her subjection to her Husband. 2. In things indifferent she must in practice obey her Husband; unless when any Superior Powers do forbid it, and that in cases where their authority is greater. 3. She may modestly give her Reasons of Dissent. 4. She must not turn it to an unpeaceable quarrel, or matter of disaffection, or pretend any differences against her Conjugal Duties. 5. In dark and difficult cases she should not be peremptory, and self-conceited, nor importunate; but if she have faith (that is, some more knowledge than he) have it to her self, in quietness and silence; and seek further information lest she err. 6. She must speak no untruth, nor commit any known sin, in obedience to her Husbands judgment. 7. When she strongly suspecteth it to be sin, she must not do it meerly in obedience to him, but seek for better satisfaction. For she is sure that he hath no power to force her to sin; and therefore hath no more assurance of his power in that point, than she hath of the lawfulness of the thing. 8. But if she prove to be in the Error she will sin on either side, till she recover. 9. If a Husband be in dangerous error, she must must wisely, but unwearidly seek his reformation, by her self or others.

Cases about Divorce and Separation.

Quest. 1. Quest. 1. IS it lawful for Husband and Wife to be long absent from each other? and how long and in what Cases?

Answ. It is lawful to be absent either in the case of prayer which Paul mentioneth, or in case of the needful affairs of their estates, so long as may be no danger to either of them as to mental or corporal incontinency, nor to any other hurt which will be greater than the benefits of their absence; nor cause them to be guilty of the neglect of any real Duty. Therefore the cases of several persons do much differ according to the different tempers of their Minds, and Bodies, and Affairs. He that hath a Wife of a chast, contented, prudent temper, may stay many months or years in some cases, when all things considered, it tendeth to more good than hurt. As Lawyers by their Callings are often necessitated to follow their Callings at Terms and Assizes. And Merchants may be some years absent in some weighty cases. But if you ask, whether the getting of Money be a sufficient cause? I answer, that it is sufficient to those whose Families must be so maintained, and their Wives are easily continent, and so the good of their gain is greater than any loss or danger that cometh by it. But when Covetousness puts them upon it needlesly, and their Wives cannot bear it, or in any case, when the hurt that is like to follow, is greater than the good, it is unlawful.

Quest. 2. Quest. 2. May Husband and Wife be separated by the bare command of Princes, if they make a Law that in certain cases they shall part: As suppose it to Ministers, Judges or Soldiers?

Answ. You must distinguish between the bare Command or Law, and the Reasons and Ends of that Command: And so between a Lawful Command and an Unlawful. In some Cases a Prince may justly command a separation for a time, or such as is like to prove for perpetuity, and in some cases he may not. If a King command a separation without sufficient cause, so that you have no Motive but his Authority, and the question is, whether formally you are bound to obedience; I answer, No: Because what God hath joined, no Man hath power to put asunder. Nor can either Prince, Pope or Prelate dispense with your Marriage Covenant: In such a case, it is as a Private ill, because God hath given them no authority for it; and therefore their Commands or Laws are Nullities: Only if a Prince say, He that will be a Judge or a Justice shall part with his Wife, it is lawful to leave the Office, and so obey the Law. But if he say to all Ministers of the Gospel, you shall forsake your Wives or your Ministry, they should do neither, because they are Divinely obliged to both, and he hath no power to forbid them, or to dispense with that obligation.

But it may fall out, that the Ends of the Command may be so great as to make it Lawful, and then it must be obeyed both formally for the authority of the Prince, and finally for the reasons of the thing. As if the safety of the Common-wealth should require, that Married persons be Soldiers, and that they go far off; yea, tho' there be no likelihood of returning to their Families, and withal they cannot take their Wives with them, without detriment or danger to their service; In this case men must obey the Magistrate, and are called by God to forsake their Wives, as if it were by death. Nor is it any violation of their Marriage Covenant, because that was intended or meant to suppose the Exception of any such Call of God, which cannot be resisted when it will make a separation.

Quest. 3. Quest. 3. May Ministers leave their Wives to go abroad to preach the Gospel?

Answ. If they can neither do Gods work as well at home, nor yet take their Wives with them, nor be excused from doing that part of service by others mens doing it, who have no such impediments, they may and must leave their Wives to do it. In this case, the interest of the Church, and of the Souls of many, must over-rule the interest of Wife and Family. Those Pastors who have fixed stations, must neither leave Flock or Family, without necessity, or a clear call from God. But in several cases a Pastor may be necessitated to go abroad; As in case of persecution at home, or of some necessity of foreign or remote parts, which cannot be otherwise supplied; Or when some door is opened for the Conversion of Infidels, Hereticks, or Idolators, and none else so fit to do that work, or none that will. In any such case, when the cause of God in any part of the world considerat is considerandis doth require his help, a Minister must leave Wife and Family, yea, and a particular flock to do it. For our obligation to all are greatest to the Catholick Church, and publick good; and the greatest good must be preferred. If a King command a Subject to be an Embassador in the remotest part of the world, and the publick good withal requireth it, if Wife and Children cannot be taken with him, they must be left behind, and he must go. So must a consecrated Minister of Christ for the service of the Church refuse all intanglements, which would more hinder his work than the contrary benefits will countervail. And this exception also was supposed in the Marriage contract, that family interests and comforts must give way to the publick interest, and to Gods disposals.

And therefore it is, that Ministers should not rashly venture upon Marriage, nor any woman that is wise venture to marry a Minister, till she is first well prepared for such accidents as may separate them, for a shorter or a longer time.

Quest. 4. May one leave a Wife to save his life, in case of personal persecution or danger? Quest. 4.

Answ. Yes, if she cannot be taken with him, for the means which are for the Helps of Life, do suppose the preservation of Life it self; If he live, he may further serve God, and possibly return to his Wife and Family; But if he die, he is removed from them all.

Quest. 5. May Husband and Wife part by mutual Consent, if they find it to be for the good of both? Quest. 5.

Answ. If you speak not of dissolving the bond of their Relations, but withdrawing as to co-habitation; I answer, 1. It is not to be done upon passions and discontents, to feed and gratifie each others vitious distempers or interest; For then both the Consent and the separation are there sins. But if really such an uncurable suitableness be between them, as that their lives must needs be miserable by their co-habitation, I know not but they may live asunder; so be it that (after all other means us'd in vain) they do it by deliberate free consent. But if one of them should by craft or cruelty constrain the other to consent, it is unlawful to the constrainer. Nor must impatience make either of them ungroundedly despair of the cure of any unsuitableness which is really curable. But many sad instances might be given, in which co-habitation may be a constant calamity to both, and distance may be their relief, and further them both in Gods service, and in their corporal concernments. Yet I say not, that this is no sin; For their unsuitableness is their sin; And God still obligeth them to lay down that sin which maketh them unsuitable; and therefore doth not allow them to live asunder, it being still their duty, to live together in Love and peace; And saying they cannot, freeth them not from the duty. But yet that moral Impotency may make such a separation as afore-said to be a Lesser sin than their unpeaceable co-habitation

Quest. 6.

Quest. 6. Quest. 6. May not the Relation it self be dissolved by mutual free consent, so that they may marry others?

Answ. As to the Relation, they will still be Related as those that did Covenant to live in conjugal society, and are still allowed it and obliged to it, if the Impediments were but removed: And it is but the exercise which is hindred. And they may not Consent to marry others: 1. Because the contracted Relation was for Life, Rom. 7. 2. and Gods Law accordingly obligeth them. Marriages pro tempore, dissoluble by consent, are not of Gods institution, but contrary to it. 2. They know not but their Impediments of co-habitation may be removed. 3. If he that marrieth an innocent divorced Woman commit adultery, by parity of reason (with advantage) it will be so here. If you say, what if either of them cannot contain? I answer, He that will not take heed before, must be patient afterwards, and not make advantage of his own folly, to the fulfilling of his lusts. If he will do what he ought to do in the use of all means, he may live chastely. And 4. The publick Interest must overrule the private, and that which would be unjust in private respects, may for publick good become a duty: It seemeth unjust here with us, that the innocent Country should repay every man his money, who between Sun and Sun is robbed on the Road; And yet because it will engage the Country to watchfulness, it is just, as for the common good: And he that consenteth to be a member of a Commonwealth, doth thereby consent to submit his own right to the common interest. So here; If all should have leave to marry others when they consent to part, it would bring utter confusion, and it would encourage wicked men, to abuse their Wives, till they forced them to consent. Therefore some must bear the trouble which their folly hath brought on themselves, rather than the common order should be confounded.

Quest. 7. Quest. 7. Doth Adultery dissolve the bond of Marriage, or not? Amesius saith, it doth. And Mr. Whateley having said so, afterward recanted it by the perswasion of other Divines.

Answ. The Difference is only about the Name and not about the Matter it self. The Reason which moved Dr. Ames is, Because the injured person is free; therefore not bound: therefore the bond is dissolved. The reason which Mr. Whatetey could not answer is, Because it is not fornication, but lawful, if they continue their conjugal familiarity after adultery: therefore that bond is not dissolved. In all which it is easie to perceive, that one of them taketh the word Vinculum or Bond in one sense, that is, [For their Covenant-obligation to continue their Relation and mutual duties.] And the other taketh it in another sense, that is, [For the Relation it self as by it they are allowed conjugal familiarity, if the injured person will continue it.] The first Vinculum or Bond is dissolved, the second is not. In the Matter we are agreed, that the injured man may put away an adulterous Wife (in a regular way) if he please; but withal that he may continue the Relation if he please. So that his continued Consent shall suffice to continue it a lawful Relation and exercise; and his Will on the contrary shall suffice to dissolve the Relation, and disoblige him. (Saving the publick order.)

Quest. 8. Quest. 8. But is not the injured party at all obliged to separate, but left free?

Answ. Considering the thing simply in it self, he is wholly free to do as he please. But for all that Accidents or Circumstances may make it one mans duty to divorce, and anothers duty to continue the Relation; according as it is like to do more good or hurt. Sometimes it may be a duty to expose the sin to publick shame, for the prevention of it in others; and also to deliver ones self from a calamity. And sometimes there may be so great repentance, and hope of better effects by forgiving, that it may be a Duty to forgive: And prudence must lay one thing with another, to discern on which side the Duty lieth.

Quest. 9. Quest. 9. Is it only the priviledge of the Man, that he may put away an adulterous Wife? or also of the Woman, to depart from an adulterous Husband? The reason of the doubt is, because Christ mentioneth the mans power only, Matth. 5. & 19.

Answ. 1. The reason why Christ speaketh only of the mans case, is, because he was occasioned only to restrain the vicious custom of mens causeless putting away their Wives; having no occasion to restrain Women from leaving their Husbands. Men having the Rule did abuse it to the Womens injury; which Christ forbiddeth. And as it is an act of power, it concerneth the man alone: But as it is an act of Liberty, it seemeth to me to be supposed, that the Woman hath the same freedom: Seeing the Covenant is violated to her wrong. And the Apostle in 1 Cor. 7. doth make the case of the Man and of the Woman to be equal in the point of infidelity and desertion. I confess that it is unsafe extending the sense of Scripture beyond the importance of the words upon pretence of a parity of reason (as many of the perjured do by Levit. 30. in case of Vows:) Lest mans deceitful wit should make a Law to it self as Divine, upon pretence of interpreting Gods Laws: But yet when the plain Text doth speak but of one case (that is, of Mens putting away their Wives,) he that will thence gather an exclusion of the Womans Liberty, doth seem by addition to be the corrupter of the Law. And where the Context plainly sheweth a Parity of Reason, and that reason is made the ground of the determination in the Text, there it is safe to expound the Law extensively accordingly. Surely the Covenant of Marriage hath its Conditions on both parts: and some of those Conditions are necessary to the very being of the Obligations, though others are but needful to the well-being of the parties in that state. And therefore though putting away be only the part of the Husband, as being the Ruler, and usually the Owner of the habitation, yet departing may be the Liberty of the Wife. And I know no reasnn to blame those Countries, whose Laws allow the Wife to Sue out a divorce, as well as the Husband.

Quest. 10. Quest. 10. May the Husband put away the Wife without the Magistrate, or the Wife depart from the Husband without a publick legal Divorce or License?

Answ. Where the Laws of the Land do take care for the prevention of injuries, and make any determination in the case (not contrary to the Law of God,) there it is a Christians duty to obey those Laws: Therefore if you live under a Law which forbiddeth any putting away or departing, without publick sentence or allowance, you may not do it privately upon your own will. For the Civil Governours are to provide against the private Injuries of any of the Subjects. And if persons might put away or depart at pleasure, it would introduce both injury and much weakness into the world. But where the Laws of Men do leave persons to their liberty in this case, they need then to look no further than to the Laws of God alone. But usually the sentence of the Civil power, is necessary only in case of appeal, or complaint of the party injured: and a separation may be made without such a publick divorce, so that each party may make use of the Magistrate to right themselves if wronged. As if the Adultery be not openly known, and the injuring party desire rather to be put away privily than publickly (as Joseph purposed to do by Mary) I see not but it is lawful so to do, in case that the Law, or the necessity of making the Offender an Example require not the contrary, nor scandal or other accidents forbid it not. See Grotius's learned Notes on Matth. 5. 31, 32. and on Matth. 19. and 1 Cor. 7. about these questions.

Que. 11. Quest. 11. Is not the case of Sodomy or Buggery a ground for warrantable divorce, as well as Adultery?

Answ. Yes, and seemeth to be included in the very word it self in the Text, Matth. 5. 31, 32. which signifieth uncleanness: or at least is fully implied in the reason of it. See Grotius ibid. also of this.

Que. 12. Quest. 12. What if both parties commit Adultery? may either of them put away the other, or depart; or rather must they forgive each other?

Answ. If they do it both at once, they do both forfeit the liberty of seeking any compensation for the injury; because the injury is equal (however some would give the advantage to the man:) But if one commit Adultery first, and the other after; Then either the last offender knew of the first, or not. If not then it seemeth all one as if it had been done at once. But if yea, then they did it either on a supposition of the dissolution of the matrimonial obligation, as being loosed from the first Adulterer, or else upon a purpose of continuing in the first relation: In the later case, it is still all one as if it had been done by them at once, and it is a forfeiture of any satisfaction: But in the former case, though the last adulterer did sin, yet being before set at liberty, it doth not renew the Matrimonial obligation: But yet, if the first offender desire the continuance of it, and the return of the first injured party; shame and conscience of their own sin, will much rebuke them, if they plead that injury for continuance of the separation.

Que. 13. Quest. 13. But what if one do purposely commit adultery, to be separated from the other?

Answ. It is in the others power and choice, whether to be divorced and depart, or not, as they find the good or evil consequents preponderate.

Que. 14. Quest. 14. Doth not Infidelity dissolve the Relation or obligation; seeing there is no communion between light and darkness, a believer and an Infidel?

Answ. It maketh it unlawful for a Believer to marry an Infidel (except in case of true necessity;) because they can have no communion in Religion. But it nullifieth not a marriage already made, nor maketh it lawful to depart or divorce: Because they may have meer conjugal Communion still. As the Apostle purposely determineth the case, in 1 Cor. 7.

Quest. 15. Doth not the Desertion of one party, disoblige the other?

Answ. 1. It must be considered what is true Desertion: 2. Whether it be a Desertion of the Relation it self for continuance, or only a temporary desertion of co-habitation, or congress. 3. What the temper and state of the deserted party is. 1. It is sometimes easie, and sometimes hard to discern which is the deserting party. If the Wife go away from the Husband unwarrantably, though she require him to follow her, and say that she doth not desert him, yet it may be taken for a desertion, because it is the man who is to rule and choose the habitation. But if the man go away, and the woman refuse to follow him, it is not he that is therefore the deserter.

Quest. But what if the man have not sufficient cause to go away, and the woman hath great and urgent reasons not to go? As suppose that the man will go away in hatred of an able Preacher, and good company, and the woman if she follow him, must leave all those helps, and go among ignorant, prophane, heretical persons, or Infidels; which is the deserter then?

Answ. If she be one that is either like to do good to the Infidels, Hereticks, or bad persons whom they must converse with, she may suppose that God calleth her to receive good by doing good: or if she be a confirmed well-setled Christian, and not very like, either by infection, or by want of helps, to be unsetled and miscarry, it seemeth to me the safest way to follow her Husband. She must loose indeed Gods publick Ordinances by following him: But it is not imputable to her, as being out of her choice; and she must loose the benefits, and neglect the duties of the Conjugal Ordinance, if she do not follow him. But if she be a person under such weaknesses, as make her Remove apparently dangerous as to her perseverance and salvation, and her Husband will by no means be prevailed with to change his mind, the case then is very difficult what is her duty, and who is the deserter? Nay, if he did but lead her into a Country where her life were like to be taken away, (as under the Spanish Inquisition,) unless her suffering were like to be as serviceable to Christ as her life. Indeed these cases are so difficult, that I will not decide them: The inconveniences, (or mischiefs rather) are great which way soever she take: But I most incline to judge as followeth: viz. It is considerable first, what Marriage obligeth her to, simply of its own nature; and what it may do next, by any superadded Contract, or by the Law or Custom of the Land, or any other accident. As to the first, it seemeth to me, that every ones obligation is so much first to God, and then to their own Souls and lives; that marriage as such, which is for Mutual help; as a Means to higher Ends, doth not oblige her to forsake all the Communion of Saints, and the Place or Country where God is lawfully worshipped, and to lose all the helps of publick Worship, and to expose her Soul both to spiritual Famine and infection, to the apparent hazard of her salvation (and perhaps bring her Children into the same misery;) nor hath God given her Husband any power to do her so much wrong, nor is the Marriage-Covenant to be interpreted to intend it. But what any humane Law or Contract, or other accident which is of greater publick consequence, may do more than Marriage of it self, is a distinct Case which must have a particular discussion.

Quest. But what if the Husband would only have her follow him, to the forsaking of her Estate, and undoing her self and Children in the World, (as in the case of Galeacius Caracciolus Marquess of Vicum;) yea, and if it were without just cause?

Answ. If it be for greater spiritual gain (as in his case) she is bound to follow him: But if it be apparently foolish, to the undoing of her and her Children without any cause, I see not that marriage simply obligeth a Woman so to follow a Fool in beggary, or out of a Calling, or to her ruine: But if it be at all a controvertible Case, whether the Cause be just or not, then the Husband being Governour must be Judge. The Laws of the Land are supposed to be just, which allow a Woman by Trustees to secure some part of her former Estate from her Husbands disposal: Much more may she before-hand secure her self and Children from being Ruined by his wilful Folly: But she can by no Contract, except her self from his true Government.

Yet still she must consider, whether she can live continently in his absence: Otherwise the greatest sufferings must be endured, to avoid incontinency.

2. Moreover, in all these cases, a temporary removal may be further followed, than a perpetual transmigration, because it hath fewer evil consequents.

And if either party renounce the Relation it self, it is a fuller desertion, and clearer discharge of the other party, than a meer removal is.

Quest. 16. What if a Man or Wife know that the other in hatred doth really intend by poyson or other murder, to take away their life? May they not depart? Que. 16.

Answ.

Anſw. They may not do it upon a groundleſs or rath ſurmiſe; nor upon a danger which by other lawful means may be avoided, (As by Vigilancy, or the Magiſtrate, or eſpecially by love and duty.) But in plain danger, which is not otherwiſe like to be avoided, I doubt not, but it may be done and ought. For it is a duty to preſerve our own lives as well as our Neighbours: And when Marriage is contracted for Mutual help, it is naturally implied, that they ſhall have no power to deprive one another of life: (However ſome barbarous Nations have given men power of the lives of their Wives.) And killing is the groſſeſt kind of Deſertion, and a greater injury and violation of the Marriage-Covenant than Adultery; and may be prevented by avoiding the Murderers preſence; if that way be neceſſary. None of the Ends of Marriage can be attained, where the hatred is ſo great.

Queſt. 17. Queſt. 17. If there be but a fixed hatred of each other, is it inconſiſtent with the Ends of Marriage? And is parting lawful in ſuch a caſe?

Anſw. The injuring party is bound to Love and not to ſeparate; and can have no liberty by his or her ſin. And to ſay, I cannot love, or my Wife or Husband is not amiable, is no ſufficient excuſe: Becauſe every perſon hath ſomewhat that is amiable. if it be but humane nature; And that ſhould have been foreſeen before your choice. And as it is no excuſe to a Drunkard to ſay, I cannot leave my drink; ſo it is none to an Adulterer or hater of another, to ſay, I cannot love them: For that is but to ſay, I am ſo wicked that my Heart or Will is againſt my Duty. But the innocent parties caſe is harder (though commonly both parties are faulty, and therefore both are Obliged to Return to Love, and not to ſeparate.) But if hatred proceed not to adultery, or murder, or intolerable injuries, you muſt remember that Marriage is not a Contract for Years, but for Life, and that it is poſſible that hatred may be cured (how unlikely ſoever it may be:) And therefore you muſt do your Duty, and wait, and pray, and ſtrive by Love and Goodneſs to recover Love, and then ſtay to ſee what God will do; For miſtakes in your choice will not warrant a ſeparation.

Queſt. 18. Queſt. 18. What if a Woman have a Husband that will not ſuffer her to read the Scriptures, nor go to Gods Worſhip publick or private, or that ſo beateth or abuſeth her; as that it cannot be expected that humane nature ſhould be in ſuch a caſe kept fit for any holy action; or if a man have a Wife that will ſcold at him when he is praying or inſtructing his Family, and make it impoſſible to him to ſerve God with freedom, or peace and comfort.

Anſw. The Woman muſt (at neceſſary Seaſons, though not when ſhe would) both read the Scriptures, and Worſhip God, and ſuffer patiently what is inflicted on her: Martyrdom may be as comfortably ſuffered from a Husband, as from a Prince. But yet if neither her own Love, and Duty, and patience, nor Friends perſwaſion, nor the Magiſtrates juſtice, can free her from ſuch inhumane cruelty, as quite diſableth her for her Duty to God and man, I See not but ſhe may depart from ſuch a Tyrant. But the man hath more means to reſtrain his Wife from beating him, or doing ſuch intolerable things; Either by the Magiſtrate, or by denying her what elſe ſhe might have, or by his own violent reſtraining her, as belongeth to a Conjugal Ruler, and as circumſtances ſhall direct a prudent man. But yet in caſe that unſuitableneſs or Sin be ſo great, that after long tryal, there is no likelihood of any other co-habitation, but what will tend to their ſpiritual hurt and calamity, it is their leſſer ſin to live aſunder by mutual conſent.

Queſt. 19. Queſt. 19. May one part from a Husband or Wife that hath the Leproſie, or that hath the French Pox by their adulterous practices; when the innocent perſons life is endangered by it.

Anſw. If it be an innocent perſons Diſeaſe, the other muſt co habit, and tenderly cheriſh and comfort the diſeaſed; yea, ſo as ſomewhat to hazard their own lives; but not ſo as apparently to caſt them away, upon a danger not like to be avoided, unleſs the others life or ſome greater good be like to be purchaſed by it.

But if it be the Pox of an Adulterer, the innocent party is at liberty by the others adultery; and the ſaving of their own lives, doth add thereto. But without Adultery, the diſeaſe alone will not excuſe them from co-habitation, though it may from Congreſs.

Queſt. 20. Who be they that may or may not marry again when they are parted? Queſt. 20.

Anſw. 1. They that are releaſed by divorce upon the others Adultery, Sodomy, &c. may marry again. 2. The caſe of all the reſt is harder. They that part by conſent, to avoid mutual hurt, may not marry again: Nor the party that departeth for ſelf-preſervation, or for the preſervation of Eſtate, or Children, or comforts, or for liberty of Worſhip, as aforeſaid: Becauſe it is but an intermiſſion of Conjugal fruition, and not a total diſſolution of the Relation: And the innocent party muſt wait to See whether there be any hope of a return. Yea, Chriſt ſeemeth to reſolve it, Matth. 5. 31, 32. That he is an Adulterer that marrieth the innocent party that is put away; becauſe the other living in adultery, their firſt contracted Relation ſeemeth to be ſtill in being. But Grotius and ſome others think, that Chriſt meaneth this only of the man that over-haſtily marrieth the innocent divorced Woman, before it be ſeen whether he will repent and reaſſume her: But how can that hold, if the Husband after Adultery free her? May it not therefore be meant, that the Woman muſt ſtay unmarried in hope of his reconciliation, till ſuch time as his adultery with his next married Wife doth diſoblige her. But then it muſt be taken as a Law for Chriſtians: For the Jew that might have many Wives, diſobligeth not one by taking another.

A ſhort deſertion muſt be endured in hope: But in caſe of a very long, or total deſertion or rejection, if the injured party ſhould have an untameable luſt, the caſe is difficult. I think there are few but by juſt means may abſtain. But if there be any that cannot (after all means) without ſuch trouble as overthroweth their peace and plainly hazardeth their continence, I dare not ſay that Marriage in that caſe is unlawful to the innocent.

Queſt. 1. Is it lawful to ſuffer or tolerate, yea, or contribute to the matter of known ſin in a Family, ordinarily, in Wife, Child or Servant: And conſequently in any other Relations. Queſt. 1.

Anſw. In this ſome lukewarm men are apt to run into the extream of Remiſneſs; and ſome unexperienced young men, that never had Families, into the extream of cenſorious rigour, as not knowing what they talk of.

1. It is not Lawful either in Family, Commonwealth, Church, or any where, to allow of ſin, nor to tolerate it, or leave it uncured, when it is truly in our power to cure it. 2. So that all the queſtion is, when it is, or is not in our power? Concerning which, I ſhall anſwer by ſome inſtances.

1. It is not in our Power to do that which we are Naturally unable to do. No Law of God bindeth us to Impoſſibilities. And Natural Impotency here is found in theſe ſeveral Caſes. 1. When we are overmatcht in ſtrength; when Wife, Children or Servants are too ſtrong for the Maſter of the houſe, ſo that he cannot Correct them, nor remove them. A King is not bound to puniſh rebellious or offending Subjects, when they are too ſtrong for him, and and he is unable; either by their Numbers or other advantages. If a Pastor censure an Offender, and all the Church be against the censure, he cannot procure it executed, but must acquiesce in having done his part, and leave their guilt upon themselves.

2. When the thing to be done is an Impossibility; at least Moral. As to hinder all the persons of a Family, Church or Kingdom from ever sinning: It is not in their own power so far to reform themselves; Much less in a Ruler so far to reform them: Even as to our selves, Perfection is but desired in this life, but not attained; Much less for others.

3. When the principal causes co-operate not with us, and we are but subservient Moral Causes; we can but perswade men to Repent, Believe, and Love God and goodness. We cannot save men without and against themselves. Their hearts are out of our reach; Therefore in all these cases we are naturally unable to hinder sin?

II. It is not in our power to do any thing which God forbiddeth us. That which is sinful is to be accounted out of our power in this sense. To cure the sin of a Wife, by such cruelty or harshness as is contrary to our Conjugal Relation and to the office of necessary Love, is out of our power, because forbidden, as contrary to our duty; and so of other.

III. Those actions are out of our power, which are acts of higher authority than we have. A Subject cannot reform by such actions as are proper to the Soveraign, nor a Lay-man by actions proper to the Pastor, for want of Authority. So a School-master cannot do that which is proper to a Patient; nor the Master of a Family that which is proper to the Magistrate (as to punish with death, &c.)

IV. We have not power to do that which a Superior power forbiddeth us (unless it be that which God indispenably commandeth us.) The Wife may not correct a Child or Servant, or turn him away, when the Husband forbiddeth it. Nor the Master of a Family so punish a Sin, as the King and Laws forbid on the account of the publick interest.

V. We have not Power to do that for the cure of sin, which is like to do more hurt than good; yea, perhaps to prove a pernicious mischief. If my correcting a Servant, would make him kill me, or set my house on fire, I may not do it. If my sharp reproof is like to do more hurt, or less good than milder dealing; If I have reason to believe that correction will make a Servant worse, I am not to use it; because we have our power to edification, and not to destruction. God hath not tied us just to speak such and such words, or to use this or that correction, but to use reproofs and corrections only in that time, measure and manner as true reason telleth us, is likest to attain their end. To do it, if it would do never so much hurt with a fiat Justitia etsi pereat Mundus, is to be Righteous overmuch.

Yea, great and heinous sins may be endured in Families sometimes, to avoid a greater hurt, and because there is no other means to cure them. For instance, A Wife may be guilty of notorious Pride, and of malignant deriding the exercises of Religion, and of railing, lying, slandering, back-biting, covetousness, swearing, cursing &c. and the Husband be necessitated to bear it; not so far as not to reprove it, but so far as not to correct her, much less cure her; Divines use to say, that it is unlawful for a man to beat his Wife: But the reason is not, that he wanteth Authority to do it; but, 1. Because he is by his relation oblig'd to a Life of Love with her; and therefore must so rule, as tendeth not to destroy Love: And 2. Because it may often do otherwise more hurt to her self and the Family, than good. It may make her furious and desperate, and make her contemptible in the Family, and diminish the reverence of inferiors both to Wife and Husband, for living so uncomely a life.

Quest. But is there any case in which a man may silently bear the sins of a Wife, or other inferior without reproof, or urging them to amend?

Answ. Yes: In case, 1. That reproof hath been tried to the utmost: 2. And it is most evident by full experience, that it is like to do a great deal more hurt than good.

The Rule given by Christ, extendeth as well to Families, as to others; not to cast Pearls before Swine, nor to give that which is holy to Dogs: Because it is more to the discomposure of a Mans own peace, to have a Wife turn again, and all to rend him, than a Stranger. As the Church may cease admonishing a Sinner after a certain time of obstinacy; when experience hath ended their present hopes of bringing the Person to Repentance, and thereupon may excommunicate him: so a Husband may be brought to the same despair with a Wife, and may be disobliged from ordinary reproof, tho' the nearness of the Relation forbid him to eject her. And in such a case where the Family and Neighbourhood knoweth the intractableness and obstinacy of the Wife, it is no scandal, nor sign of approbation or neglect of duty, for a man to be silent at her sin; because they look upon her as at present incorrigible by that means: And it is the sharpest Reproof to such a one, to be unreproved, and to be let alone in her sin; as it is Gods greatest judgment on a sinner, to leave him to himself, and say, be filthy still.

And there are some Women whose Phantasies and Passions are naturally so strong, as that it seemeth to me that in many cases they have not so much as Natural Free-will or power to restrain them: But if in all other cases they acted as in some, I should take them for meer Bruites, that had no true reason: They seem naturally necessitated to do as they do. I have known the long profession of piety, which in other respects hath seemed sincere, to consist in a Wife, with such unmastered furious passion, that she could not before Strangers forbear throwing what was in her Hand in her Husbands Face, or thrusting the burning Candle into his Face; and slandering him of the filthiest Sins; and when the passion was over, confess all to be false, and her rage to be the reason of her Speech and Actions: And the man tho' a Minister, of more than ordinary wit and strength, yet fain to endure all without returns of violence till her death. They that never knew such a case by trial, can tell how all might be cured easily; but so cannot they that are put upon the Cure.

And there are some other Women of the same uncurable strength of Imagination and Passion, who in other respects are very pious and prudent too, and too wise and conscionable to wrong their Husbands with their hands or tongues, who yet are utterly unable to forbear an injury of the highest nature to themselves; but are so utterly impatient of being crossed of their wills, that it would in all likelihood cast them into Melancholy or Madness, or some mortal sickness: And no reason signifieth any thing to abate such passions. In case of Pride, or some sinful custome, they are not able to bear reproof, and to be hindered in the sin, without apparent danger of distraction or death. I suppose these cases are but few; but what to do in such cases when they come, is the present question.

Nay, the Question is yet harder, Whether to avoid such inconvenience, one may contribute towards anothers sin, by affording them the means of committing it?

Answ. 1. No man may contribute to sin as sin, formally considered. 2. No man may contribute to anothers sin, for sinful ends, nor in a manner forbidden and sinful in himself. 3. No man may contribute to anothers sin, when he is not naturally or morally necessitated to it, but might forbear it.

But as it is consistent with the holiness of God to contribute those Natural and Providential Mercies, which he knoweth men will abuse to sin, so is it in some Cases with us his Creatures to one another. God giveth all Men their Lives and Time, their Reason and Free-will, which he knoweth they will abuse to Sin: He giveth them that Meat, and Drink, and Riches, and Health, and vigour of Senses, which are the usual means of the Sin and undoing of the World.

Object. But God is not under any Law or obligation as we are.

Answ. His own perfection is above all Law, and will not consist with a consent or acting of any thing that is contrary to holiness and perfection. But this I confess, that many things are contrary to the order and duty of the Creature, which are not contrary to the place and perfection of the Creator.

1. When man doth generate man, he knowingly contributeth to a sinful nature and life; For he knoweth that it is unavoidable, and that which is born of the flesh is flesh. And yet he sinneth not by so doing, because he is not bound to prevent sin by the forbearance of Generation.

Joh. 3. 6. Eph. 2. 2, 3.

2. When one advanceth another to the Office of Magistracy, Ministry, &c. knowing that he will sin in it, he contributeth accidentally to his sin; but so as he is not culpable for so doing.

3. A Physician hath to do with a froward and intemperate Patient, who will please his Appetite, or else if he be denied his passion, will increase his disease and kill him. In this case he may lawfully say, Let him take a little rather than kill him; though by so doing he contribute to his sin. Because it is but a not-hindering that which he cannot hinder without a greater evil. The Sin is only his that chooseth it.

And it is specially to be noted, that that which Physically is a positive act and contributing to the Matter of the sin, yet Morally is but a not-hindring the sin by such a withholding of materials as we are not obliged to withhold (which is the case also of Gods contributing to the matter of sin.) If the Physician in such a case, or the Parent of a sick and froward Child, do actually give them that which they sin in desiring, that Giving is indeed such a furthering of the sin as cannot be lawfully forborn, lest we do hurt, and therefore is morally but a not hindring it, when we cannot hinder it.

4. If a man have a Wife so proud that she will go mad, or disturb him and his Family by rage, if her Pride be not gratified by some sinful Fashions, Curiosities or Excesses, if he give her Money or Materials to do it with, to prevent her distraction, it is but like the foresaid case of the Physician or Parents of a sick Child.

In these cases I will give you a rule to walk by for your selves, and a caution how to judge of others.

1. Be sure that you leave nothing undone that you can lawfully do, for the cure and prevention of others sins; And that it be not for want of zeal against sin, thro' indifference or slothfulness, that you forbear to hinder it, but meerly thro' disability. 2. See that in comparing the evil that is like to follow the Impedition, you do not mistake, but be sure that it be indeed a greater evil which you avoid by not hindering that particular Sin. 3. See therefore that your own carnal interest weigh not with you more than there is cause; and that you account not meer fleshly suffering a greater evil than sin. 4. But yet that dishonour which may be cast upon Religion and the good of Souls which may be hindered by a bodily suffering, may come into the comparison. 5. And your own Duties to Mens Bodies (as to save mens lives or healths or peace) is to be numbred with spiritual things, and the Materials of a sin may in some cases be administred for the discharge of such a duty. If you knew a man would die if you give him not hot water, and he will be drunk if you do give it him; In this case you do but your duty, and he commits the sin: You do that which is good, and are not bound to forbear it, because he will turn it to sin, unless you see that the hurt by that sin is like to be so great (besides the sin it self) as to discharge you from the duty of doing good.

2. As to others, 1. Put them on to their duty and spare not. 2. But censure them not for the Sins of their Families, till you are acquainted with all the case. It's usual with rash and carnal censurers, to cry out of some godly Ministers or Gentlemen, that their Wives are as proud, and their Children and Servants as bad as others. But are you sure that it is in their power to remedy it? Malice and rashness judge at a distance of things which men understand not, and sin in speaking against sin.

Quest. 2. IF a Gentleman, e. g. of 500. or 1000. or 2000. or 3000. l. per Annum, could spare honestly half his yearly rents, for his Children and for charitable uses, and his Wife be so proud and prodigal that she will wast it all in house-keeping and excesses, and will rage, be unquiet or go mad, if she be hindered, what is a mans duty in such a case?

Answ. It is but an instance of the fore-mentioned case, and must thence be answered. 1. It is supposed that she is uncurable by all wise and rational means of perswasion. 2. He is wisely to compare the greatness of the evil that will come by crossing her, with the good that may come by the improvement of his Estate, and the forbearance of those excesses. If her Rage or distraction or unquietness were like by any Accident to do more hurt than his Estate may do good, he might take himself disabled from hindering the Sin; And though he give her the Money which she misspendeth, it is not sinning, but only not hindering Sin when he is unable. 3. Ordinarily some small or tolerable degree of sinful waste and excess may be tolerated to avoid such mischiefs as would follow; but not too much. And though no just measure can be assigned, at what rate a Man may lawfully purchase his own Peace, and consequently his Liberty to Serve God, or at what Rate he may save his Wife from Madness, or some mortal Mischiefs of her Discontent, yet the Case must be resolved by such Considerations; And a prudent Man, that knoweth what is like to be the consequent on both sides, may and must accordingly determine it. 4. But ordinarily the Life, Health or Preservation of so proud, luxurious, and passionate a Woman, is not worth the saving at so dear a rate, as the wasting of a considerable Estate, which might be used to Relieve a multitude of the Poor, and perhaps to save the Lives of many that are worthier to Live. And, 1. A Mans duty to Relieve the Poor and Provide for his Family is so great. 2. And the Account that all men must give of the use of their Talents is so strict, that it must be a great Reason indeed, that must Allow him to give way to very great wastfulness. And unless there be somewhat extraordinary in the case, it were better deal with such a Woman as a Bedlam, and if she will be mad, to use her as the mad are used, than for a Steward of God to suffer the Devil to be served with his Masters goods.

Lastly, I must charge the Reader to Remember, that both these cases are very rare; and it is but few Women that are so liable to so great mischiefs, which may not be prevented at cheaper rates. And therefore that the Indulgence given in these decisions, is nothing to the greater part of men, nor is to be extended to ordinary Cases. But commonly men every where sin by omission of a stricter Government vernment of their Families, and by Eli's ſinful indulgence and remiſneſs: And tho' a Wife muſt be Governed as a Wife, and a Child as a Child, yet all muſt be Governed as well as Servants. And tho' it may be truly ſaid, that a man cannot hinder that Sin, which he cannot hinder but by Sin, or by contributing to a greater hurt, yet it is to be concluded, that every man is bound to hinder Sin whenever he is able lawfully to hinder it.

And by the ſame meaſures Tolerations, or not-hindring Errors and Sins about Religion in Church and Common-wealth is to be judged of: None muſt commit them or approve them; nor forbear any duty of their own to cure them: But that is not a Duty which is deſtructive, which would be a duty when it were a means of edifying.

CHAP. X.

The DUTIES of PARENTS for their CHILDREN.

OF how great importance the wiſe and holy Education of Children is, to the ſaving of their Souls, and the comfort of their Parents, and the good of Church and State, and the Happineſs of the World, I have partly told you before; but no man is able fully to expreſs: And how great that calamity is which the World is faln into thro' the neglect of that Duty no heart can conceive; But they that think what a caſe the Heathen, Infidel, and ungodly Nations are in, and how rare true Piety is grown, and how many millions muſt lye in Hell for ever, will know ſo much of this inhumane negligence, as to abhor it.

Dir. 1. See my Treatiſe for Infant-Baptiſm.

§. 1. Direct. 1. Underſtand and lament the corrupted and miſerable ſtate of your Children, which they have deriv'd from you, and thankfully accept the offers of a Saviour for your ſelves and them, and abſolutely reſign, and dedicate them to God in Chriſt in the ſacred Covenant, and ſolemnize this Dedication and Covenant by their Baptiſm: And to this end underſtand the Command of God for entring your Children ſolemnly into Covenant with him, and the Covenant-mercies belonging to them thereupon. Rom. 5. 12, 16, 17, 18. Eph. 1, 3. Gen. 17. 4, 13, 14. Deut. 29. 10, 11, 12. Rom. 11. 17, 20. Joh. 3. 3, 5. Mat. 19. 13, 14.

You cannot ſincerely dedicate you ſelves to God, but you muſt dedicate to him all that is yours, and in your power; and therefore your Children as far as they are in your power: And as Nature hath taught you your Power and your Duty to enter them in their infancy into any Covenant with man, which is certainly for their good (and if they refuſe the conditions when they come to age, they forfeit the benefit;) ſo nature teacheth you much more to oblige them to God for their far greater good; in caſe he will admit them into Covenant with him; And that he will admit them into his Covenant, (and that you ought to enter them into it) is paſt doubt, in the evidence which the Scripture giveth us, that from Abraham's time till Chriſt it was ſo with all the Children of his people: Nay no man can prove that before Abrahams Time or ſince God had ever a Church on Earth, of which the Infants of his Servants (if they had any) were not Members dedicated in Covenant to God, till of late times that a few begin to ſcruple the lawfulneſs of this. As it is a comfort to you, if the King would beſtow upon your Infant Children, (who were tainted by their Fathers treaſon) not only a full diſcharge from the blot of the Offence, but alſo the Titles and Eſtates of Lords tho' they underſtand none of this till they come to age; ſo is it much more matter of comfort to you, on their behalf, that God in Chriſt will pardon their Original Sin, and take them as his Children, and give them title to everlaſting life; which are the Mercies of his Covenant.

§. 2. Direct. 2. As ſoon as they are capable, teach them what a Covenant they are in, and what are the Benefits, and what the Conditions, that their Souls may gladly conſent to it when they underſtand it; and you may bring them ſeriouſly to renew their Conant with God in their own perſons. But the whole order of Teaching both Children and Servants, I ſhall give you after by it ſelf; and therefore ſhall here paſs by all that, except that which is to be done more by your familiar converſe, than by more ſolemn teaching. Dir. 2.

§. 3. Direct. 3. Train them up in exact obedience to your ſelves, and break them of their own wills. To that end, ſuffer them not to carry themſelves unreverently or contemptuouſly towards you; but to keep their diſtance. For too much Familiarity breedeth contempt, and emboldneth to diſobedience. The common courſe of Parents is to pleaſe their Children ſo long, by letting them have what they crave, and what they will, till their wills are ſo uſed to be fulfilled, that they cannot endure to have them denied; and ſo can endure no Government, becauſe they endure no croſſing of their wills. To be Obedient, is to renounce their own wills and be ruled by their Parents or Governours wills: To uſe them therefore to have their own wills, is to teach them diſobedience, and harden and uſe them to a kind of impoſſibility of obeying. Tell them oft familiarity and lovingly of the excellency of obedience, and how it pleaſeth God, and what need they have of Government, and how unfit they are to govern themſelves; and how dangerous it is to Children to have their own wills: Speak often with great diſgrace of ſelf-willedneſs, and ſtubbornneſs, and tell others in their hearing what hath befallen ſelf-willed Children. Dir. 3.

§. 4. Direct 4. Make them neither too bold with you, nor too ſtrange or fearful: And govern them not as Servants, but as Children, making them perceive that you dearly love them, and that all your Commands, Reſtraints and Corrections are for their good, and not meerly becauſe you will have it ſo. They muſt be rul'd as Rational Creatures, that Love themſelves, and thoſe that Love them. If they perceive that you dearly love them, they will obey you the more willingly, and the eaſier be brought to Repent of their diſobedience, and they will as well obey you in Heart as in outward Actions, and behind your Back as before your Face: And the Love of you (which muſt be cauſed by your Love to them) muſt be one of the chiefeſt means to bring them to the Love of all that good which you commend to them; and ſo to form their wills ſincerely to the Will of God, and make them holy. For if you are too ſtrange to them and too terrible, they will fear you only, and not much love you; And then they will love no Books, no practices, that you commend to them; but like Hypocrites they will ſeek to pleaſe you to your Face, and care not what they are in ſecret and behind your backs: Nay it will tempt them to loath your Government, and all that good which you perſwade them to, and make them like birds in a Cage, that watch for an opportunity to get away and get their liberty. They will be the more in the company of Servants and idle Children, becauſe your terrour and ſtrangeneſs maketh them take no delight in yours. And Fear will make them Lyars, as oft as a Lye ſeemeth neceſſary to their eſcape. Parents that ſhew much love to their Children, may ſafely ſhew Severity when they Commit a Fault. For then they will ſee, that it is their Fault only that diſpleaſeth you, and not their Perſons; and your Love reconcileth them to you when they are corrected; when leſs correction from Parents that are alway ſtrange or angry, and ſhew no tender love to their Children, will alienate them, and do no good. Too much boldneſs of Children leadeth them them before you are aware, to contempt of Parents and all disobedience; And too much fear and strangeness depriveth them of most of the benefits of your care and government: But tender love, with severity only when they do amiss, and this at a reverend convenient distance, is the only way to do them good.

Dir. 5. §. 5 Direct. 5 Labour much to possess their hearts with the Fear of God, and a reverence of the Holy Scriptures; and then whatsoever Duty you command them, or whatsoever sin you forbid them, shew them some plain and urgent Texts of Scripture for it; and cause them to learn them and oft repeat them; that so they may find reason and Divine authority in your commands: Till their Obedience begin to be Rational and Divine, it will be but formal and hypocritical. It is Conscience that must watch them in private, when you see them not; And Conscience is Gods officer and not yours; and will say nothing to them, till it speak in the name of God. This is the way to bring the Heart it self into subjection; and also to reconcile them to all your commands, when they see that they are first the commands of God: (of which more anon.)

Dir. 6. §. 6. Direct. 6. In all your Speeches of God and of Jesus Christ, and of the Holy Scripture, or the Life to come, or of any holy duty, speak always with gravity, seriousness and reverence, as of the most great and dreadful and most sacred things: For before Children come to have any distinct understanding of particulars, it is a hopeful beginning to have their hearts possest with a general reverence and high esteem of holy matters: For that will continually awe their Consciences, and help their judgments, and settle them against prejudice and prophane contempt, and be as a seed of holiness in them. For the fear of God is the beginning of wisdom, Psal. 111. 10. Prov. 9. 10. & 1. 7. And the very manner of the Parents Speech and Carriage, expressing great reverence to the things of God, hath a very great power to leave the like Impression on a Child: Most Children of Godly Parents that ever came to good, I am perswaded, can tell you this by experience (if their Parents did their duty in this point;) that the first good that ever they felt upon their hearts, was a reverence to holy things, which the Speech and Carriage of their Parents taught them.

Dir. 7. Isa. 3. 7, 8, 9, 11 Psal. 15. 4. Psal. 101. Psal. 119. 2, 3, 4. §. 7. Direct. 7. Speak always before them with great Honour and Praise of Holy Ministers and People, and with dispraise and loathing of every sin, and of ungodly men. For this also is a thing that Children will quickly and easily receive from their Parents: Before they can understand particular doctrines, they can learn in general what kind of persons are most happy or most miserable, and they are very apt to receive such a liking or disliking from their Parents judgment, which hath a great hand in all the following good or evil of their lives. If you possess them with good and honourable thoughts of them that fear God, they will ever after be enclined to think well of them, and to dislike those that speak evil of them, and to hear such Preachers, and to wish themselves such Christians; so that in this and the foregoing point, it is that the first stirrings of grace in Children are ordinarily felt. And therefore on the other side, it is a most pernicious thing to Children, when they hear their Parents speak contemptuously or lightly of holy Things and Persons, and irreverently talk of God and Scripture, and the Life to come, or speak dispraisingly or scornfully of Godly Ministers, or people, or make a jest of the particular Duties of a religious life: These Children are like to receive that prejudice or prophane contempt into their hearts betimes, which may bolt the doors against the love of God and Holiness, and make their salvation a work of much greater difficulty, and much smaller hope. And therefore still I say, that wicked Parents are the most notable servants of the Devil in all the World, and the bloodiest Enemies to their Childrens Souls. More Souls are damned by ungodly Parents (and next them by ungodly Ministers and Magistrates) than by any instruments in the World besides. And hence it is also, that whole Nations are so generally carried away with Enmity against the ways of God: The Heathen Nations against the true God, and the Infidel Nations against Christ, and the Papist Nations against Reformation and Spiritual Worshippers: Because the Parents speak evil to the Children of all that they themselves dislike; and so possess them with the same dislike from generation to generation, Wo to them that call evil good, and good evil, that put darkness for light, and light for darkness, that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter, Isa. 5. 20.

Dir. 8. §. 8. Direct. 8. Let it be the principal part of your Care and Labour in all their education, to make Holiness appear to them the most necessary, honourable, gainful, pleasant, delightful, amiable state of life; and to keep them from apprehending it either as needless, dishonourable, hurtful or uncomfortable. Especially draw them to the Love of it, by representing it as lovely. And therefore begin with that which is easiest and most grateful to them (as the History of the Scripture, and the lives of the Martyrs, and other good Men, and some short familiar Lessons.) For though in restraining them from sin, you must go to the highest step at first, and not think to draw them from it by allowing them the least degree (for every degree disposeth to more, and none is to be allowed, and a general Reformation is the easiest as well as absolutely necessary.) Yet in putting them upon the practice of Religious Duties, you must carry them on by degrees, and put them at first upon no more than they can bear; either upon the learning of Doctrines too high and spiritual for them, or upon such duty for quality or quantity as is over-burdensome to them. For if you once turn their hearts against Religion, and make it seem a slavery and a tedious life to them, you take the course to harden them against it. And therefore all Children must not be used alike; as all stomachs must not be forced to eat alike. If you force some to take so much as to become a surfeit, they will loath that sort of meat as long as they live. I know that nature it self, as corrupt, hath already an enmity to Holiness, and I know that this enmity is not to be indulged in Children, at all; but withal I know that mis-representations of Religion, and imprudent Education is the way to increase it, and that the enmity being in the heart, it is the change of the Mind and Love that is the overcoming of it, and not any such constraint as tendeth not to reconcile the mind by Love. The whole skill of Parents for the holy education of their Children, doth consist in this, to make them conceive of Holiness as the most amiable and desirable life; which is by representing it to them in Words and Practice not only as most necessary, but also as most profitable, honourable, and delightful. Prov. 3. 17. Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace, &c.

Dir. 9. §. 9. Direct. 9. Speak often to them of the bruitish baseness, and sinfulness of flesh pleasing sensuality, and of the greater excellency of the Pleasures of the mind; which consist in wisdom, and in doing good. For your chiefest care must be to save them from flesh pleasing; which is not only in general the Sum of all iniquity whatsoever, but that which in special Children are most prone to. For their flesh and sense is as quick as others; and they want not only faith, but clear Reason to resist it: And so (besides their natural pravity) the custom of obeying sense (which which is in ſtrength) without Reaſon (which is in infancy and almoſt uſeleſs) doth much increaſe this pernicious ſin. And therefore ſtill labour to imprint in their minds an odious conceit of a fleſh-pleaſing life; ſpeak bitterly to them againſt gluttony, and drunkenneſs, and exceſs of ſport; and let them often hear or read the Parable of the Glutton and Lazarus in the Sixteenth of Luke. And let them learn without Book, Rom. 8. 1, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 13. and Rom. 13. 13, 14. and oft repeat them.

Dir. 10. §. 10. Direct. 10. To this end, and alſo for the health of their bodies, keep a ſtrict guard upon their appetites (which they are not able to guard themſelves:) Keep them as exactly as you can to the rules of Reaſon, both in the quantity and quality of their food. Yet tell them the Reaſon of your reſtraint, or elſe they will ſecretly ſtrive the more to break their bounds. Moſt Parents that ever I knew, or had any good account of in that point, are guilty of the great hurt and danger of their Childrens health and ſouls, by pleaſing and glutting them with meat and drink. If I ſhould call them Devils and Murderers to their own Children, they would think I ſpeak too harſhly; but I would not have them give ſo great occaſion for it, as by deſtroying (as far as lieth in them) the ſouls and bodies of their Children. They deſtroy their Souls by accuſtoming them to gluttony, and to be ruled by their appetites; which all the teaching in the World will hardly ever after overcome, without the ſpecial Grace of God. What is all the vice and villany in the World, but the pleaſing of the deſires of the fleſh? And when they are habituated to this, they are rooted in their ſin and miſery. And they deſtroy their Bodies, by ſuffering them to pleaſe their Appetites, with raw fruits and other hurtful things; but eſpecially by drowning and overwhelming Nature by exceſs. And all this is through that beaſtly ignorance joyned with ſelf-conceitedneſs, which maketh them alſo overthrow themſelves. They think that their appetite is the meaſure of their eating and drinking, and that if they drink but when they are thirſty (as ſome Drunkards are continually) and eat but when they are hungry, it is no exceſs: And becauſe they are not preſently ſick, or vomit it not up again, the Beaſts think it doth them no harm but good. You ſhall hear them like mad people ſay, [I warrant them, it will do them no harm to eat and drink when they have liſt, it will make them ſtrong and healthful: I ſee not that thoſe that are dieted ſo ſtrictly are any healthfuller than others.] When as all this while they are burdening Nature, and deſtroying digeſtion, and vitiating all the humors of the Body, and turning them into a dunghil of flegm and filth; which is the fewel that breedeth and feedeth almoſt all the diſeaſes that after ſeize upon them while they live; and uſually bringeth them to an untimely end, (as I have fullier opened before, Tom. 1. in the Directions againſt (Gluttony.) If therefore you love either the Souls or Bodies of your Children, uſe them to temperance from their infancy, and let not their appetites or craving wills, but your own reaſon be the chuſer and the meaſure of their diet. Uſe them to eat ſparingly, and (ſo it moderately pleaſe their Appetite, or be not ſuch as nature loatheth) let it be rather the courſer than the finer ſort of diet; ſee it meaſured to them your ſelves, and ſuffer no Servant to give them more; nor to let them eat or drink between meals and out of ſeaſon: And ſo you will help to overcome their ſenſual inclinations, and give Reaſon the maſtery of their lives; and you will under God, do as much as any one thing can do to help them to a healthful temper of Body, which will be a very great mercy to them, and fit them for their Duty, all their lives.

Dir. 11. §. 11. Direct 11. For Sports and Recreations let them be ſuch, and ſo much, as may be needful to their health and chearfulneſs; but not ſo much as may carry away their minds from better things, and draw them from their Books, or other Duties; nor ſuch as may tempt them to gaming or covetouſneſs. Children muſt have convenient ſport for the health of the body, and alacrity of the mind: Such as well exerciſeth their bodies is beſt, and not ſuch as little ſtirreth them: Cards and Dice, and ſuch idle ſports are every way moſt unfit, as tending to hurt both body and mind. Their time alſo muſt be limited them, that their play may not be their work: As ſoon as ever they have the uſe of any reaſon and ſpeech, they ſhould be taught ſome better things, and not left till they are five or ſix years of age to do nothing, but get a cuſtom of waſting all their time in play. Children are very early capable of learning ſomething which may prepare them for more.

Dir. 12. §. 12. Direct. 12. Uſe all your wiſdom and Diligence to root out the ſin of Pride. And to that end, do not (as is uſual with fooliſh Parents,) that pleaſe them with making them fine, and then by telling them how fine they are; but uſe to commend humility and plainneſs to them, and ſpeak diſgracefully of Pride and Fineneſs to breed an averſneſs to it in their minds. Cauſe them to learn ſuch Texts of Scripture as ſpeak of Gods abhorring and reſiſting the proud, and of his loving and honouring the humble: When they ſee other Children that are finely cloathed, ſpeak of it to them as their ſhame, that they may not deſire to be like them. Speak againſt boaſting, and every other way of Pride, which they are liable to. And yet give them the praiſe of all that is well; for that is but their due incouragement.

Dir. 13. §. 13. Direct. 13. Speak to them diſgracefully of the gallantry, and pomp, and riches of the World, and of the ſin of Selfiſhneſs and Covetouſneſs; and diligently watch againſt it, and all that may tempt them to it. When they ſee great houſes, and attendance and gallantry, tell them that theſe are the Devils baits, to tice poor ſinners to love this World, that they may looſe their ſouls, and the World to come. Tell them how much Heaven excelleth all this; and that the lovers of the World muſt never come thither, but the humble and meek and poor in ſpirit. Tell them of the rich Glutton in Luk. 16. that was thus cloathed in purple, and ſilk, and fared deliciouſly every day; but when he came to Hell, could not get a drop of Water to cool his Tongue, when Lazarus was in the Joys of Paradice. Do not as the wicked, that entice their Children to Worldlineſs and Covetouſneſs, by giving them Money, and letting them game and play for Money, and promiſing them to make them fine or rich, and ſpeaking highly of all that are rich and great in the World; but tell them how much happier a poor believer is; and withdraw all that may tempt their minds to covetouſneſs. Teach them how good it is to love their Brethren as themſelves, and to give them part of what they have, and praiſe them for it: and diſpraiſe them when they are greedy to keep or heap up all to themſelves. And all will be little enough to cure this pernicious ſin. Teach them ſuch Texts as Pſal. 10. 3. They bleſs the covetous whom the Lord abhorreth.

Dir. 14. § 14. Direct. 14. Narrowly watch their tongues, eſpecially againſt lying, railing, ribbald talk, and taking the Name of God in vain. And pardon them many lighter faults about common matters, ſooner than one ſuch ſin againſt God. Tell them of the odiouſneſs of all theſe ſins, and teach them ſuch Texts as moſt expreſly condemn them; and never paſs it by or make light of it, when you find them guilty.

Dir. 15. §. 15. Direct. 15. Keep them as much as may be from ill Company, eſpecially of ungodly play-fellows. It is one of the greateſt dangers for the undoing of Children in the World, eſpecially when they are

ſent

ſent to common Schools: For there is ſcarce any of thoſe Schools ſo good, but hath many rude and ungodly ill-taught Children in it; that will ſpeak prophanely, and filthily, and make their ribbald and railing Speeches a matter of boaſting; beſides fighting, andgaming, and ſcorning, and neglecting their Leſſons; and they will make a ſcorn of him that will not do as they, if not Beat and Abuſe him. And there is ſuch Tinder in nature for theſe Sparks to catch upon, that there are very few Children, but when they hear others take Gods name in vain, or ſing wanton Songs, or talk filthy Words, or call one another by reproachful Names, do quickly imitate them: And when you have watched over them at home as narrowly as you can, they are infected abroad with ſuch beaſtly vices,as they are hardly ever after cured of. Therefore let thoſe that are able, either educate their Children moſt at home, or in private and well ordered Schools; and thoſe that cannot do ſo, muſt be the more exceeding watchful over them, and charge them to aſſociate with the beſt; and Speak them of the odiouſneſs of theſe practices, and the wickedneſs of thoſe that uſe them; and Speak very diſgracefully of ſuch ungodly Children: And when all is done, it is a great Mercy of God, if they be not undone by the force of the contagion, notwithſtanding all your Antidotes Thoſe therefore that venture their Children into the rudeſt Schools and company, and after that to Rome, and other prophane or Popiſh Countrys, to learn the faſhions and cuſtoms of the World, upon pretence, that elſe they will be ignorant of the courſe of the World, and ill-bred, and not like others of their rank, may think of themſelves, and their own reaſonings as well as they pleaſe: For my part,I had rather make a Chimny-Sweeper of my Son (if I had any) than bh guilty of doing ſo much, to Sell or betray him to the Devil.

Queſt. But is it not lawful for a Man to Send his Son to Travel?

Anſw. Yes, in theſe Caſes. 1. In caſe he be a ripe confirmed Chriſtian, that is, not in danger of being perverted, but able to Reſiſt the Enemies of the Truth, and to Preach the Goſpel, or do good to others; and withal have ſufficient buſineſs to invite him. 2. Or if he go in the Company of wiſe and godly perſons, and ſuch be his Companions, and the probability of his gain be greater than the loſs and Danger. 3. Or if he go only into Religious Countrys, among more wiſe and learned Men, than he converſeth with at home, and have ſufficieut Motives for his courſe. But to ſend young, raw, unſettled perſons, among Papiſts, and prophane licentious People (tho' perhaps ſome ſober perſon be in Company with them,) and this only to ſee the Countrys and Faſhions of the World, is an action unbeſeeming any Chriſtian, that knoweth the pravity of humane nature, and the mutability of young unfurniſhed heads, and the ſubtilty of Deceivers, and the contagiouſneſs of ſin and error, and the worth of a Soul, and will not do as ſome Conjurers or Witches, even ſell a Soul to the Devil,on condition he may ſee and know the Faſhions of the World; (which alaſs, I can quickly know enough of, to grieve my heart, without travelling ſo far to ſee them.) If another Country have more of Chriſt, and be nearer Heaven, the invitation is great: but if it have more of Sin and Hell, I had rather know Hell, and the Suburbs of it too, by the Map of the Word of God, than by going thither. And if ſuch Children return not the confirm'd Children of the Devil, and prove not the calamity of their Country and Church, let them thank ſpecial Grace, and not their Parents, or themſelves. They overvalue that vanity which they call Breeding, who will hazard the Subſtance (even Heavenly Wiſdom, Holineſs, and Salvation) to go ſo far for ſo vain a ſhadow.

§. 16. Direct. 16. Teach your Children to know the pretiouſneſs of Time, and ſuffer them not to miſpend an hour. Be often ſpeaking to them how pretious a thing Time is, and how ſhort Mans life is, and how great his work, and how our endleſs life of Joy or Miſery dependeth on this little Time: Speak odiouſly to them of the Sin of thoſe that play and idle away their Time: And keep account of all their Hours, and ſuffer them not to loſe any by exceſs of ſleep, or exceſs of play, or any other way; but ingage them ſtill in ſome Employment that is worth their Time. Dir. 16.

Train up your Children in a life of diligence and labour, and uſe them not to eaſe and idleneſs when they are young. Our wandring Beggars, and too many of the Gentry utterly undo their Children by this means, eſpecially the Female Sex. They are taught no Calling, nor exerciſed in any employment, but only ſuch as is meet for nothing but Ornament and recreation (at the beſt;) and therefore ſhould have but recreation hours, which is but a ſmall proportion of their time. So that by the ſin of their Parents, they are betimes ingaged in a life of idleneſs, which afterward it is wondrous hard for them to overcome; and they are taught to live, like Swine or Vermine, that live only to live, and do ſmall good in the World by living: To riſe, and dreſs, and adorn themſelves, and take a walk, and ſo to dinner, and thence to Cards or Dice, or chat and idle talk, or ſome play, or viſit, or recreation, and ſo to Supper, and to chat again, and to Bed, is the lamentable life of too many that have great obligations to God, and greater matters to do, if they were acquainted with them. And if they do but interpoſe a few hypocritical heartleſs words of Prayer, they think they have piouſly ſpent the day: Yea, the health of many is utterly ruined, by ſuch idle fleſhly Education. So that diſuſe doth diſable them from any conſiderable motion or exerciſe, which is neceſſary to preſerve their health. It would move ones heart with pity, to ſee how the Houſes of ſome of the higher ſort are like Hoſpitals; and Education hath made, eſpecially the Females like the Lame, or Sick, or bed-rid; ſo that one part of the day that ſhould be ſpent in ſome profitable employment, is ſpent in Bed, and the reſt in doing nothing, or worſe than nothing; and moſt of their life is made miſerable by diſeaſes, ſo that if their legs be but us'd to carry them about, they are preſently out of breath, and are a burden to themſelves, and few of them live out little more than half their days. Whereas, poor Creatures, if their own Parents had not betray'd them into the ſins of Sodom,Pride, fulneſs of Bread,and abundance of idleneſs, they might have been in health, and liv'd like honeſt Chriſtian people, and their legs and arms might have ſerved them for Uſe, as well as for integrality and Ornament.

It was one of the Roman Laws of the Twelve Tables, Filius arte carens, Patris incuria, eidem vitæ neceſſaria ne præſtato. Alioqui Parentes nutrire cogitor. A Son that is taught no Trade to live by, ſhall not be bound to keep his Parents in want, but others ſhall. Ezek. 16. 49.

§. 17. Direct. 17. Let neceſſary correction be uſed with diſcretion, according to theſe following Rules. 1. Let it be not ſo ſeldom (if neceſſary) as to leave them fearleſs, and ſo make it uneffectual; and let it not be ſo frequent as to diſcourage them or breed in them a hatred of their Parents. 2. Let it be different according to the different tempers of your Children: Some are ſo tender and timerous and apt to be diſcouraged, that little or no correction may be beſt; and ſome are ſo hardened and obſtinate, that it muſt be much and ſharp correction that muſt keep them from diſſoluteneſs and contempt. 3. Let it be more for ſin againſt God (as lying, railing, filthy ſpeaking, prophaneneſs, &c.) than for faults about your worldly buſineſs. 4. Correct them not in Paſſion, but ſtay till they perceive that you are calmed; for they will think elſe, that your anger rather than your reaſon is the cauſe. 5. Always ſhew them the tenderneſs of your love, and how unwilling you are Dir. 17.

to correct them, if they could be reformed any easier way; and convince them that you do it for their good. 6. Make them read those Texts of Scripture which condemn their sin, and then those which command you to correct them. As for example, if Lying be their sin, turn them first to Prov. 12. 22. Lying lips are abomination to the Lord, but they that deal truly are his delight. And 13. 5. A righteous man hateth lying. Joh. 8. 44. Ye are of your Father the Devil, —when he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own; for he is a lier, and the father of it. Rom. 22. 15. For without are dogs —and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie. And next turn him to Prov. 13. 24. He that spareth his rod, hateth his Son, but he that loveth him, chastneth him betimes. Prov. 29. 15. The rod and reproof give wisdom, but a Child left to himself bringeth his mother to shame. Prov. 22. 15. Foolishness is bound in the heart of a Child, but the rod of Correction shall drive it far from him. Prov. 23. 13, 14. Withhold not correction from the child; for if thou beatest him with the rod, he shall not die: Thou shalt beat him with the rod, and shalt deliver his soul from Hell. Prov. 19. 18, Chasten thy Son while there is hope, and let not thy soul spare for his crying. Ask him whether he would have you by sparing him, to disobey God, and hate him, and destroy his soul. And when his reason is convinced of the reasonableness of correcting him, it will be the more successful.

Dir. 18. §. 18. Direct. 18. Let your own example teach your Children that holiness, and heavenliness, and blamelessness of tongue and life, which you desire them to learn and practice. The example of Parents is most powerful with children, both for good and evil. If they see you live in the fear of God, it will do much to perswade them that it is the most necessary and excellent course of life, and that they must do so too: And if they see you live a carnal, voluptuous and ungodly life, and hear you curse, or swear, or talk filthily, or railingly, it will greatly embolden them to imitate you. If you speak never so well to them, they will sooner believe your bad lives, than your good words.

Dir. 19. §. 19. Direct. 19. Chuse such a Calling and course of life for your Children, as tendeth most to the saving of their souls, and to their publick usefulness for Church or State. Chuse not a Calling that is most liable to temptations and hinderances to their salvation, tho' it may make them rich: But a Calling which alloweth them some leisure for the remembring the things of everlasting consequence, and fit opportunities to get good, and to do good. If you bind them Apprentices, or Servants, if it be possible, place them with men fearing God; and not with such as will harden them in their sin.

Dir. 20. §. 20. Direct. 20. When they are marrigeable, and you find it needful, look out such for them as are suitable betimes. When Parents stay too long, and do not their Duties in this, their Children often chuse for themselves to their own undoing: For they chuse not by judgment, but blind affection.

Dir. 22. §. 21. Having thus told you the Common Duties of Parents for their Children, I should next have told you what specially belongeth to each Parent; but to avoid prolixity, I shall only desire you to remember especially these two Directions. 1. That the Mother who is still present with Children when they are young, be very diligent in teaching them, and minding them of good things. When the Fathers are abroad, the Mothers have more frequent opportunities to instruct them, and be still speaking to them of that which is most necessary, and watching over them. This is the greatest service that most Women can do for God in the World: Many a Church that hath been blessed with a good Minister, may thank the pious Education of Mothers; and many a thousands Souls in Heaven may thank the holy Care and Diligence of Mothers, as the first effectual means. Good Women this way (by the good education of their Children) are ordinarily great Blessings both to Church and State. (And so some understand, 1 Tim. 2. 15. by Child-bearing, meaning bringing up Children for God; but I rather think it is by Maries bearing Christ, the promised Seed.)

2. By all means let Children be taught to read, if you are never so poor, and what ever shift you make, or else you deprive them of a singular help to their Instruction and Salvation. It is a thousand pities that a Bible should signifie no more than a Chip to a rational Creature, as to their reading it themselves: And that so many excellent Books as be in the World, should be as sealed or insignificant to them.

§. 22. But if God deny you Children, and save you all this care and labour, repine not, but be thankful, believing it is best for you. Remember what a deal of duty, and pains, and hearts grief he hath freed you from, and how few speed well, when Parents have done their best. What a life of misery, Children must here pass through, and how sad the fear of their sin and damnation would have been to you. Dir. 21.

CHAP. XI.

The Special Duties of CHILDREN towards their PARENTS.

THough Precepts to Children are not of so much force as to them of riper Age, because of their natural incapacity, and their Childish Passions and Pleasures which bear down their weak degree of Reason; yet somewhat is to be said to them, because that measure of Reason which they have is to be exercised, and by exercise to be improved: And because even those of riper years, while they have Parents, must know and do their duty to them; and because God useth to bless even Children as they perform their duties.

§. 1. Direct. 1. Be sure that you dearly love your Parents: Delight to be in their company; be not like those unnatural Children, that love the Company of their idle play-fellows, better than their Parents, and had rather be abroad about their sports, than in their Parents sight. Remember that you have your Being from them, and come out of their Loyns: Remember what Sorrow you have cost them, and what care they are at for your education and provision; and remember how tenderly they have loved you, and what grief it will be to their hearts if you miscarry, and how much your happiness will make them glad: Remember what love you ow them both by Nature and in Justice, for all their love to you, and all that they have done for you: They take your Happiness or Misery to be one of the greatest parts of the Happiness or Misery of their own lives. Deprive them not then of their Happiness, by depriving your selves of your own; Make not their lives miserable, by undoing your selves. Tho' they chide you, and restrain you, and correct you, do not therefore abate your love, to them. For this is their Duty, which God requireth of them, and they do it for your good. It is a sign of a wicked child that loveth his Parents the less, because they correct him, and will not let him have his own will. Yea, though your Parents have many faults themselves, yet you must love them as your Parents still. Dir. 1.

§. 2. Direct. 2. Honour your Parents both in your Thoughts, and Speeches, and Behaviour. Think not dishonourably or contemptuously of them in your hearts: Speak not dishonorably, rudely, unreverently, or sawcily, either to them or of them. Behave Dir. 2.

not

not your ſelves rudely and unreverently before them. Yea, though your Parents be never ſo poor in the World, or weak of underſtanding, yea, though they were ungodly, you muſt honour them notwithſtanding all this; tho' you cannot honour them as Rich, or Wiſe, or Godly, you muſt honour them as your Parents. Remember that the Fifth Commandment hath a ſpecial promiſe of Temporal bleſſing; Honour thy Father and Mother that thy days may be long in the Land, &c. And conſequently the Diſhonourers of Parents have a ſpecial Curſe even in this life: And the Juſtice of God is ordinarily ſeen in the execution of it; the diſpiſers and diſhonourers of their Parents ſeldom proſper in the World. There are five ſorts of ſinners that God uſeth to overtake ☞ with vengeance even in this life. 1. Perjured perſons and falſe witneſſes. 2. Murderers. 3. Perſecutors. 4. Sacrilegious perſons. And 5. The Abuſers and diſhonourers of their Parents. Remember the curſe on Cham Gen. 9. 22. 25. It is a fearful thing to ſee and hear how ſome ill-bred ungodly Children will talk contemptuouſly and rudely to their Parents, and wrangle and contend with them, and contradict them, and ſpeak to them as if they were their equals: (And its commonly long of the Parents themſelves that breed them to it.) And at laſt they will grow even to abuſe and vilifie them. Read Prov. 30. 17. The Eye that mocketh at his Father, and deſpiſeth to obey his Mother, the Ravens of the Valley ſhall pick it out, and the young Eagles ſhall eat it.

Dir. 3. §. 3. Direct. 3. Obey your Parents in all things (which God forbiddeth not.) Remember that as Nature hath made you unfit to govern your ſelves, ſo God in Nature hath mercifully provided Governours for you. Here I ſhall firſt tell you, what obedience is, and then tell you why you muſt be thus obedient. I. To obey your Parents is to do that which they command you, and forbear that which they forbid you, becauſe it is their will you ſhould do ſo. You muſt 1. Have in your minds a deſire to pleaſe them, and be glad when you can pleaſe them, and ſorry when you offend them; and then 2. You muſt not ſet your wit or your will againſt theirs, but readily obey their commands without unwillingneſs, murmuring, or diſputing: Though you think your own way is beſt, and your own deſires are but reaſonable, yet your own wit and will muſt be ſubjected unto theirs, or elſe how do you obey them? II. And for the Reaſons of your obedience, 1. Conſider it is the Will of God that it ſhould be ſo, and he hath made them as his Officers to govern you; and in diſobeying them, you diſobey him. Read Eph. 6. 1, 2, 3. Children obey your Parents in the Lord; for this is right: Honour thy Father and Mother, (which is the firſt Commandment with promiſe) that it may be well with thee, and thou maiſt live long on the Earth. Col. 3. 20. Children obey your parents in all things, for this is well-pleaſing in the Lord. Prov. 23. 22. Hearken to thy Father that begat thee, and deſpiſe not thy Mother when ſhe is old. Prov. 13. 1. A wiſe Son heareth his Father's inſtruction. Prov. 1. 8, 9. My Son, hear the inſtruction of thy Father, and forſake not the Law of thy Mother; for they ſhall be an ornament of grace unto thy head, and chains about thy neck. 2. Conſider alſo, that your Parents Government is neceſſary to your own good; and it is a Government of Love: As your Bodies would have periſhed, if your Parents or ſome others had not taken care for you, when you could not help your ſelves; ſo your minds would be unraught and ignorant, even like to Bruits, if you had not others to teach and govern you. Nature teacheth the Chickens to follow the Hen, and all things when they are young, to be led and guided by their Dams, or elſe what would become of them? 3. Conſider alſo, that they muſt be accountable to God for you; and if they leave you to your ſelves, it may be their deſtruction as well as yours, as the ſad example of Eli telleth you. Rebel not therefore againſt thoſe that God by Nature and Scripture hath ſet over you; tho' the Fifth Commandment require obedience to Princes, and Maſters, and Paſtors, and other Superiors, yet it nameth your Father and Mother only, becauſe they are the firſt of all your Governours, to whom by Nature you are moſt obliged.

But perhaps you will ſay, That though little Children muſt be ruled by their Parents, yet you are grown up to riper age, and are wiſe enough to rule your ſelves. I anſwer, God doth not think ſo; or elſe he would not have ſet Governours over you. And are you wiſer than he? It is but few in the World that are wiſe enough to rule themſelves; elſe God would not have ſet Princes, and Magiſtrates, and Paſtors, and Teachers over them, as he hath done. The Servants of the Family are as old as you, and yet are unfit to be Rulers of themſelves. God loveth you better than to leave you Maſterleſs, as knowing that youth is raſh and unexperienced.

Queſt. But how long are Children under the Command and Government of their Parents?

Anſw. There are ſeveral Acts and Degrees of Parents Government, according to the ſeveral ends and uſes of it. Some Acts of their Government are but to teach you to go and ſpeak, and ſome to teach you your labour and calling, and ſome to teach you good manners, and the fear of God, or the knowledge of the Scriptures, and ſome are to ſettle you in ſuch a courſe of Living, in which you ſhall need their nearer over-ſight no more. When any one of theſe ends are fully attained, and you have all that your Parents Government can help you to, then you are paſt that part of their Government. But ſtill you ow them not only love, and honour, and reverence; but obedience alſo in all things, in which they are ſtill appointed for your help and guidance: Even when you are married from them, though you have a propriety in your own eſtates, and they have not ſo ſtrict a charge of you as before; yet if they command you your duty to God or them, you are ſtill obliged to obey them.

§. 4 Direct. 4. Be contented with your Parents Dir. 4. proviſion for you, and diſpoſal of you. Do not rebelliouſly murmur againſt them, and complain of their uſage of you; much leſs take any thing againſt their wills. It is the part of a fleſhly Rebel, and not of an obedient Child, to be diſcontent and murmur becauſe they fare not better, or becauſe they are kept from ſports and play, or becauſe they have not better cloaths, or becauſe they have not money allowed them, to ſpend or uſe at their own diſcretion. Are not you under Government? and the Government of Parents, and not of Enemies? Are your luſts and pleaſures fitter to govern you, than your Parents diſcretion? Be thankful for what you have, and remember that you deſerve it not, but have it freely: It is your Pride or your fleſhly ſenſuality that maketh you thus to murmur, and not any wiſdom or vertue that is in you. Get down that Pride and fleſhly mind, and then you will not be ſo eager to have your Wills. What if your Parents did deal too hardly with you, in your food, or rayment, or expences? What harm doth it do you? Nothing but a ſelfiſh ſenſual mind would make ſo great a matter of it. Its a hundred times more dangerous to your ſouls and bodies to be bred too high, and fed too full and daintily, than to be bred too low, and fed too hardly. One tendeth to pride, and gluttony, and wantonneſs, and the overthrow of health and life; and the other tendeth to a humble, mortified, ſelf-denying life, and to the health and ſoundneſs of the body. Remember how the Earth opened, and ſwallowed all thoſe rebellious murmurers that grudged againſt Moſes and Aaron, Aaron, Numb. 16. Read it, and apply it to your caſe. And Remember the ſtory of rebellious Abſolom, and the folly of the Prodigal, Luk. 15. and deſire not to be at your own diſpoſe; nor be not eager to have the vain deſires of your hearts fulfilled. While you contentedly ſubmit to your Parents, you are in Gods way, and may expect his Bleſſing: But when you will needs be Carvers for your ſelves, you may expect the puniſhment of Rebels.

Dir. 5. §. 5. Direct. 5. Humble your ſelves and ſubmit to any Labour that your Parents ſhall appoint you to. Take heed as you love your Souls, leſt either a proud heart make you murmur and ſay, This work is too low and baſe a drudgery for me; Or leſt a lazy Mind and Body make you Say, This work is too hard and toilſome for me; Or leſt a fooliſh playful mind do make you weary of your Book or Labour, that you may be at your Sports, and ſay, this is too tedious for me: It is little or no hurt that is like to befal you by you rlabour and diligence; but it is a dangerous thing to get a habit or cuſtom of idleneſs and voluptuouſneſs in your youth.

Dir. 6. §. 6. Direct. 6. Be willing and thankful to be inſtructed by your Parents, or any of your Teachers, but eſpecially about the fear of God, and the maters of your ſalvation. Theſe are the matters that you are born and live for; theſe are the things that your Parents have firſt in charge to teach you. Without knowledge and holineſs all the riches and honours of the World, are nothing worth; and all your pleaſures will but undo you. O what a comfort is it to underſtanding Parents to ſee their Children willing to learn, and to love the Word of God, and lay it up in their hearts, and talk of it, and obey it, and prepare betime for everlaſting life? If ſuch Children die before their Parents, how joyfully may they part with 'em as into the Arms of Chriſt, who hath ſaid, That of ſuch is the Kingdom of Heaven, Mat. 19. 14. And if the Parents die firſt, how joyfully may they leave behind them a holy Seed, that is like to ſerve God in their Generation, and to follow them to Heaven, and live with them for ever. But, whether they live or die, what a heart-breaking to the Parents are ungodly Children; that love not the Word and Way of God, and love not to be taught or reſtrained from their own licentious courſes.

Read Mr. Tho Whites little Book for little Children. Mar. 9.36. & 10, 14, 16.

Dir. 7. §. 7. Direct. 7. Patiently Submit to the Correction which your Parents lay upon you. Conſider, that God hath commanded them to do it, and that to ſave your Souls from Hell; and that they hate you, if they Correct you not when there is cauſe, and that they muſt not ſpare for your crying, Prov. 13. 24. & 22. 15. & 29. 15. & 23. 13, 14. & 19. 18. It is not their delight, but for your own neceſſity. Avoid the fault, and you may eſcape the correction. How much rather had your Parents ſee you obedient, than hear you cry. It is not long of them, but of your ſelves, that you are corrected. Be angry with your ſelves, and not with them. It is a wicked Child, that inſtead of being better by Correction, will hate his Parents for it, and ſo grow worſe. Correction is a means of Gods appointment; and therefore go to God on your knees in Prayer, and intreat him to bleſs and ſanctifie it to you, that it may do you good.

Dir. 8. §. 8. Direct. 8. Chuſe not your own Company, but uſe ſuch Company as by your Parents is appointed you. Bad Company is the firſt undoing of a Child. When for the love of ſport you chuſe ſuch play-fellows, as are idle, and licentious, and diſobedient, and will teach you to curſe, and ſwear, and lye, and talk filthily, and draw you from your Book or Duty; this is the Devils High-way to Hell. Your Parents are fitteſt to chuſe your Company.

Dir. 9. §. 9. Direct. 9. Chuſe not your own Calling or Trade of life, without the choice or conſent of your Parents. You may tell them what you are moſt inclined to, but it belongeth more to them than to you to make the choice: And it's your part to bring your Wills to theirs. Unleſs your Parents Chuſe a Calling for you that is unlawful; and then you may (with humble ſubmiſſiveneſs) refuſe it. But if it be only inconvenient, you have liberty afterward to change it for a better, if you can, when you are from under their diſpoſe and government.

Dir. 10. §. 10. Direct. 10. Marry not without your Parents conſent. Nay, if it may be, let their choice determine firſt of the Perſon, and not your own: Unexperienced Youth doth Chuſe by Fancy and Paſſion, when your experienced Parents will chuſe by judgment. But if they would force you to joyn your ſelves to ſuch as are ungodly, and like to make your lives either ſinful or miſerable, you may humbly refuſe them. But you muſt remain unmarried, while by the uſe of right means you can live in chaſtity, till your Parents are in a better mind. But if indeed you have a flat neceſſity of marrying, and your Parents will conſent to none but one of a falſe Religion, or one that is utterly unfit for you; in ſuch a caſe they forfeit their authority in that point, which is given them for their edification, and not for your deſtruction; and then you ſhould adviſe, with other friends that are more wiſe and faithful: But if you ſuffer your fond affections to contradict your Parents wills, and pretend a neceſſity (that you can't change your affections) as if your folly were uncurable. This is but to enter ſinfully into that ſtate of life, which ſhould have been ſanctified to God, that he might have bleſt it to you.

Dir. 11. §. 11. Direct. 11. If your Parents be in want, it is your duty to relieve them according to your ability; yea, and wholly to maintain them, if there be need. For it is not poſſible by all that you can do, that ever you can be on even terms with them; or ever requite them for what you have received of them. It is baſe inhumanity, when Parents come to poverty, for Children to put them off with ſome ſhort allowance, and to make them live almoſt like their Servants, when you have Riches and Plenty for your ſelves. Your Parents ſhould ſtill be maintained by you as your Superiors, and not as inferiors. See that they fare as well as your ſelves; yea, tho' you got not your riches by their means, yet even for your being, you are their debtors for more than that.

Dir. 12. §. 12. Direct. 12. Imitate your Parents in all that is good, both when they are living, and when they are dead. If they were lovers of God, and of his word and ſervice, and of thoſe that fear him, let their example provoke you, and let the love that you have to them, ingage you in this imitation. A wicked Child of godly Parents is one of the moſt miſerable wretches in the world. With what horror do I look on ſuch a perſon? How near is ſuch a wretch to Hell? When Father or Mother were eminent for Godlineſs, and daily inſtructed them in the matters of their ſalvation, and prayed with them, and warned them, and prayed for them, and after all this the Children ſhall prove covetous or drunkards, or whoremongers, or prophane, and Enemies to the Servants of God, and deride or neglect the way of their Religious Parents, it would make one tremble to look ſuch wretches in the face. For tho' yet there is ſome hope of them, alaſs, it is ſo little, that they are next to deſperate; when they are hardned under the moſt excellent means, and the light hath blinded them, and their acquaintance with the ways of God hath but turned their hearts more againſt them, what means is left to do good to ſuch reſiſters of the Grace of God as theſe? The likelieſt is ſome heavy dreadful judgment. O what a woful day will it be to them, when all the prayers, and tears, and teachings, and good examples of their Religious Parents ſhall witneſs againſt them? How will they be confounded before the Lord! And how ſad a thought is it to the heart of holy diligent Parents, to think that all their Prayers and pains muſt witneſs againſt their graceleſs Children, and ſink them deeper into Hell? And yet alaſs, how many ſuch woful ſpectacles are there before our eyes? and how deeply doth the Church of God, ſuffer by the malice and wickedneſs of the Children of thoſe Parents that taught them better, and walked before them in a holy exemplary life? But if Parents be ignorant, ſuperſtitious, idolatrous, Popiſh or prophane, their Children are forward enough to imitate them. Then they can ſay, Our Fore-fathers were of this mind; and we hope they are ſaved, and we will rather imitate them, than ſuch innovating reformers as you. As they ſaid to Jeremy, (Chap. 44. 16, 17, 18.) As for the word that thou haſt ſpoken to us in the Name of the Lord, we will not hearken to thee. But we will—burn Incenſe—to the Queen of Heaven—as we have done we and our Fathers, our Kings, and our Princes, in the Cities of Judah and in the ſtreets of Jeruſalem; for then we had plenty of victuals, and were well, and ſaw no evil: But ſince we left off to burn Incenſe to the Queen of Heaven,—we have wanted all things, and have been conſumed by the Sword and Famine. Thus they walk after the imagination of their hearts, and after Baalim (the falſe worſhip) which their Fathers taught them. Jer. 9. 14. And they forget Gods name as their Fathers did forget it. Jer. 23. 27. They and their Fathers have tranſgreſſed to this day. Ezek. 2. 3. Yea, They harden their necks, and do worſe than their Fathers. Jer. 7. 26. Thus in error and ſin they can imitate their Fore-fathers, when they ſhould rather remember, 1 Pet. 1. 18, 19. That it coſt Chriſt his Blood to redeem men from their vain converſation received by tradition from their Fathers. And they ſhould penitently confeſs, as Dan. 9. 8. O Lord to us belongeth confuſion of face, to our Kings, to our Princes, and to our Fathers, becauſe we have ſinned againſt thee, v. 16. And as Pſ. 106. 6. We have ſinned with our Fathers, &c. Saith God. Jer. 16. 11, 12, 13. Behold your Fathers have forſaken me—and have not kept my Law; and ye have done worſe than your Fathers: Therefore I will caſt you out, &c. Jer. 43. 9. Have ye forgotten the wickedneſs of your Fathers, and the wickedneſs of the Kings of Judah, and your own wickedneſs? They are not humbled even unto this day, v. 21. Zech. 1. 4. Be not as your Fathers, to whom the former Prophets have cried, ſaying, turn ye now from your evil ways, but they did not hear. Mal. 3. 7. Even from the days of your Fathers ye are gone away from mine Ordinances, and have not kept them. Return unto me, and I will return unto you. Ezek. 20. 18. Walk ye not in the ſtatutes of your Fathers. So v. 27. 30, 36. Follow not your Fathers in their ſin and error, but follow them where they follow Chriſt, 1 Cor. 11. 1.

CHAP. XII.

The ſpecial Duties of CHILDREN and YOUTH towards GOD.

THough I put your duty to your Parents firſt, becauſe it is firſt learned, yet your Duty to God immediately is your greateſt and moſt neceſſary duty: Learn theſe following Precepts well.

§. 1. Direct. 1. Learn to underſtand the Covenant and Vow which in your Baptiſm you made with God the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt, your Creator, Redeemer, and Regenerator: And when you well underſtand it, renew that Covenant with God in your own perſons, and abſolutely deliver up your ſelves to God, as your Creator, Redeemer, and Sanctifier, your Owner, your Ruler, and your Father and Felicity. Baptiſm is not an idle Ceremony, but the ſolemn entring into Covenant with God, in which you receive the greateſt Mercies, and bind your ſelves to the greateſt duties. It is but the entring into that way which you muſt walk in all your lives, and a vowing that to God which you muſt be ſtill performing. And tho' your Parents had authority to promiſe for you, it is you that muſt perform it; for it was you that they obliged. If you ask by what authority they obliged you in Covenant to God, I anſwer, by the authority which God hath given them in Nature, and in Scripture; as they oblige you to be Subjects of the King, or as they enter your names into any Covenant, by leaſe or other contract which is for your benefit; and they do it for good, that you may have part in the Bleſſings of the Covenant: And if you grudge at it, and refuſe your own conſent when you come to age, you loſe the benefits. If you think they did you wrong, you may be out of Covenant when you will, if you will renounce the Kingdom of Heaven. But it is much wiſer to be thankful to God, that your Parents were the means of ſo great a Bleſſing to you, and to do that again more expreſly by your ſelves which they did for you; and openly with thankfulneſs to own the Covenant in which you are ingaged; and live in the performance and in the Comforts of it all your days.

§. 2. Direct. 2. Remember that you are entring into the way to everlaſting life, and not into a place of happineſs or continuance. Preſently therefore ſet your hearts on Heaven, and make it the deſign of all your lives, to live in Heaven with Chriſt for ever. Dir. 2. O happy you, if God betimes will throughly teach you, to know what it is that muſt make you happy; and if at your firſt ſetting out, your end be right, and your faces be Heavenward! Remember that as ſoon as you begin to live; you are haſting toward the end of your lives, even as a Candle as ſoon as it beginneth to burn, and the Hour-glaſs as ſoon as it is turned, is waſting, and haſting to its end: So as ſoon as you begin to live, your lives are in a Conſumption, and poſting towards your final hour. As a runner as ſoon as he beginneth his race, is haſting to the end of it; ſo are your lives even in your youngeſt time. It is another kind of life that you muſt live for ever, than this trifling pitiful fleſhly life. Prepare therefore ſpeedily for that which God ſent you hither to prepare for. O happy you, if you begin betime, and go on with chearful reſolution to the end! It is bleſſed wiſdom to be wiſe betime, and to know the worth of time in Childhood, before any of it be waſted and loſt upon the fooleries of the World. Then you may grow wiſe indeed, and be treaſuring up underſtanding, and growing up in ſweet acquaintance with the Lord, when others are going backwards, and daily making work, for ſad repentance, or final deſperation. Eccleſ. 21. 1. Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou ſhalt ſay (of all things here below) I have no pleaſure in them.

§. 3. Direct. 3. Remember that you have corrupted Natures to be cured, and that Chriſt is the Phyſician that muſt cure them, and the Spirit of Chriſt muſt dwell within you, and make you holy, and give you a new heart and nature, which ſhall love God and Heaven above all the honor and pleaſures of the World: Reſt not therefore till you find that you are born anew, and that the Holy Ghoſt hath made you holy, and quickned your hearts with the love of God, and of your dear Redeemer. Dir. 3. 2 Cor. 5. 17. Rom. 8. 9, 13. Joh. 3. 3, 5, 6. The old nature loveth the things of this World, and the pleaſures of this fleſh; but the new nature loveth the Lord that made you, and redeemed and renewed you, and the endleſs joys of the World to come, and that holy life which is the way thereto.

§. 4. Direct. 4. Take heed of loving the pleaſures of the fleſh, in overmuch eating, or drinking, or play. Dir. 4. Set not your hearts upon your belly or your ſport; let your meat, and ſleep, and play be moderate. Meddle not with Cards or Dice, or any bewitching or riotous ſports: Play not for Money, leſt it ſtir up covetous deſires, and tempt you to be over eager in it, and to lie, and wrangle, and fall out with others. Uſe neither food or ſports which are not for your health; a greedy appetite inticeth Children to devour raw Fruits, and to rob their Neighbours Orchards, and at once to undo Soul and Body. And an exceſſive love of play doth cauſe them to run among bad companions, and loſe their time, and deſtroyeth the love of their Books, and their Duty, and their Parents themſelves, and all that is good. You muſt eat, and ſleep, and play for health, and not for uſeleſs hurtful pleaſure. 1 Cor. 10. 31.

Dir. 5. §. 5 Direct. 5. Subdue your own Wills and Deſires to the Will of God and your Superiors, and be not eagerly ſet upon any thing, which God or your Parents do deny you. Be not like thoſe ſelf-willed fleſhly Children, that are importunate for any thing which their fanſie or appetite would have, and cry or are diſcontent if they have it not. Say not that I muſt have this or that, but be contented with any thing which is the Will of God, and your Superiors. It is the greateſt miſery and danger in the World, to have all your own wills, and to be given up to your hearts deſire. Pſal. 81. 10, 11, 12.

Dir. 6. §. 6. Direct. 6. Take heed of a cuſtom of fooliſh, filthy, railing, lying, or any other ſinful words. You think it is a ſmall matter, but God thinketh not ſo; it is not a jeaſting matter to ſin againſt the God that made you: It is fools that make a ſport with ſin, Prov. 14. 9. & 10. 23. & 26. 19. One lie, one curſe, one oath, one ribbald, or railing, or deriding word, is worſe than all the pain that ever your fleſh indured.

Dir. 7. §. 7. Direct. 7. Take heed of ſuch Company and play-fellows, as would intice and tempt you to any of theſe ſins, and chuſe ſuch company as will help you in the fear of God. And if others mock at you, care no more for it, than for the ſhaking of a leaf, or the barking of a Dog. Take heed of leud and wicked company, as ever you care for the ſaving of your Souls. If you hear them rail, or lie, or ſwear, or talk filthily, be not aſhamed to tell them, that God forbiddeth you to keep company with ſuch as they. Pſal. 119. 63. Prov. 13. 20. & 18. 7. 1 Cor. 5. 12. Eph. 5. 11.

Dir. 8. §. 8. Direct. 8. Take heed of Pride and Covetouſneſs. Deſire not to be fine, nor to get all to your ſelves; but be humble, and meek, and love one another, and be as glad that others are pleaſed as your ſelves.

Dir. 9. §. 9. Direct. 9. Love the Word of God, and all good Books which would make you wiſer and better; and read not Play-books, nor Tale books, nor Love-books, not any idle ſtories. When idle Children are at play and tooleries, let it be your pleaſure to read and learn the myſteries of your Salvation.

Dir. 10. § 10 Direct. 10. Remember that you keep holy the Lords-Day. Spend not any of it in play or idleneſs: Reverence the Miniſters of Chriſt, and mark what they teach you, and remember it is a meſſage from God about the ſaving of your ſouls. Ask your Parents when you come home, to help your underſtandings and memories in any thing which you underſtood not or forgat. Love all the holy exerciſes of the Lords day, and let them be pleaſanter to you than your meat or play.

Dir. 11. §. 11. Direct. 11. Be as careful to practice all, as to hear and read it. Remember all is but to make you holy, to love God, and obey him: Take heed of ſinning againſt your knowledge, and againſt the warnings that are given you.

Dir. 12. §. 12. Direct. 12. When you grow up, by the direction of your Parents chuſe ſuch a Trade or Calling, as alloweth you the greateſt helps for Heaven, and hath the feweſt hinderances, and in which you may be moſt ſerviceable to God before you die. If you will but practiſe theſe few Directions (which your own hearts muſt ſay, have no harm in any of them) what happy perſons will you be for ever!

CHAP. XIII.

The Duties of SERVANTS to their MASTERS.

IF Servants would have comfortable Lives, they muſt approve themſelves and their ſervice unto God, becauſe from him they muſt have their Comforts; which may be done by following theſe Directions.

§. 1. Direct. 1. Reverence the Providence of God which calleth you to a Servants Life, and murmur not at your labour, or your low Condition; but know your Mercies, and be thankful for them. Though perhaps you have more Labour than your Maſters, yet have you not leſs care than they? Moſt ſervants may have quieter lives, if it were not for their unthankful diſcontented hearts. You are not troubled with the care of providing your Landlords rent, or meat, and drink, and Wages for your Servants, nor with the Wants and Deſires of Wives and Children, nor with the Faults and naughtineſs of ſuch as you muſt uſe or truſt; nor with the loſſes and Croſſes which your Maſters are liable to. Be thankful to God, who for a little bodily Labour, doth free you from the burden of all theſe cares. Dir. 1.

§. 2. Direct. 2. Take your Condition as choſen for you by God, and take your ſelves as his ſervants, and your work as his, and do all as to the Lord, and not only for Man; and expect from God your chief reward. You will be elſe but eye-ſervants and hypocrites, if the fear of God do not aw your Conſciences: And if you were the beſt ſervants to your Maſters in the World, and did not all in obedience to God, it were but a low unprofitable ſervice: If you believe that there is an infinite diſtance between God and Man, you may conceive what a difference there is between ſerving God and man: Your wages is all your reward from man, but eternal life is Gods reward: And the very ſame work and labour which one man hath but his years wages for, another hath everlaſting life for, (tho' not of Merit, yet of the bounty of our Lord) Rom. 6. 23. Becauſe he doth it in love and obedience to that God who hath promiſed this reward. Col. 3. 22, 23, 24, 25. Servants obey in all things your Maſters according to the fleſh: not with eye-ſervice as men-pleaſers, but in ſingleneſs of heart, fearing God; And whatſoever thing ye do, do it heartily as to the Lord, and not unto men: Knowing that of the Lord ye ſhall receive the reward of the Inheritance, for ye ſerve the Lord Chriſt: But he that doth wrong, ſhall receive for the wrong which he hath done: and there is no reſpect of perſons. The like is in Epheſ. 6. 5, 6, 7, 8. So much doth God reſpect the heart, that the very ſame action hath ſuch different ſucceſſes and rewards, as it is done to different ends, and from different principles: your loweſt ſervice may be thus ſanctified and acceptable to God. Dir. 2.

§. 3. Direct. 3. Be conſcionable and faithful in performing all the labour and duty of a ſervant. Neglect not ſuch buſineſs as you are to do: nor do it not lazily, and deceitfully, and by the halves. As it is thievery or deceit for a man in the Market to ſell another the whole of his commodity, and when he hath done, to keep back and defraud him of a part; So is it no leſs for a ſervant that ſelleth his time and labour to another, to defraud him of part of that time and ſervice which you ſold him. Think not therefore that it is no ſin, to idle away an hour which is not your own, or to ſlubber over the work which you undertake to do. Slothfulneſs and unconſcionableneſs make Servants deceitful: Such care not how they do their work, if they can but Dir. 3.

make their Masters believe that it is done well: They are hypocrites in their service, that take more care to seem painful trusty Servants, than to be so; and to hide their faults and slothfulness, than to avoid them. As if it were as easie to hide them also from God, who hath resolved to punish all the wrong they do their Masters, Col. 3. 25. If they can but loyter and take their ease, and their Masters know it not, they are never troubled at it as a sin against God: Laziness and fleshly mindedness doth so blind them, that they think it is no sin to take as much ease as they can, so they carry it fair and smoothly with their Masters, and to slubber over their business any how, so that it will but serve the turn: Whereas if their Masters should keep back any of their wages, or put more work upon them than is meet, they would easily be perswaded that this were a sin. If your labour be such as would hurt your health (as by wet or cold, &c.) you may foresee it, and avoid it in your choice of places: but if it be only the Labour that you grudge at, it is a sign of a fleshly and unfaithful person; as long as it is not excessive to wrong your health, nor hurt your souls, by denying you leisure for your duty to God. The Lord himself commandeth you to be obedient in singleness of heart, as unto Christ, not as eye-servants; and whatever you do, to do it heartily, knowing that whatever good thing any man doth, the same shall he receive of the Lord, Eph. 6. 5, 6, 8. Col. 3. 23.

Dir. 4. §. 4. Direct. 4. Be more careful about your duty to your Masters, than about their duty or carriage to you. Be much more careful what to do, than what to receive; and to be good servants, than to be used as good servants. Not but you may modestly expect your due, and to be used as servants should be used; but your Duty is much more to be regarded; For if your Master wrong you, that is his sin, and none of yours: God will not be offended with you for anothers faults, but for your own; nor for being wronged, but for doing wrong: And its better suffer the greatest wrong, than offend God by committing the smallest sin.

Dir. 5. §. 5. Direct. 5. Be true and faithful in all that is committed to your trust: Dispose not of any thing that is your Masters without his consent: Though you may think it never so reasonable, or well done, yet remember that it is none of your own; If you would relieve the poor, or please a fellow-servant, or do a kindness to a neighbour, do it of your own, and not of anothers, unless you have his allowance. Be as thrifty for your Masters, as you would be for your selves. Waste no more of his goods, than you would do if it were your own. Say not as false servants do, my Master is rich enough, and it will do him no harm, and therefore we may make bold, and not be so sparing and niggardly. The question is not, What he should do, but what you should do? If you take any of your rich neighbours goods or money, to give to the poor, you may be hanged as Thieves, as well as if you stole it for your selves. To take any thing of anothers against his will, is to rob or steal: Let the value be never so small, if it be but the worth of a penny, that you steal or defraud another of, the sin is not small: Nay, it aggravateth the sin, that you will presume to break Gods Law for such a trifle, and venture your soul for so small a thing; Tho' it be taken from one that may never so well spare it, that's no excuse to you; it is none of yours. Specially let those servants think of this, that are trusted with buying and selling, or with provisions. If you defraud your Masters, because you can conceal it; believe it, God that knoweth it, will reveal it; And if you repent of it, you must make restitution of all that ever you thus robb'd them of, if you have any thing to do it with. And if you have nothing, you must with sorrow and shame confess it to them, and ask forgiveness; But if you Repent not, you must pay dearer for it in Hell, than this comes to. Object. But did not the Lord commend the unjust steward? Luke 16. 8. Answ. Yes, for his wit in providing for himself, but not for his unjustness. He only teacheth you there, that if the wicked worldlings have wit to provide for this life, much more should you have the wit to make provision for the life to come. It is faithfulness that is a Stewards duty, 1. Cor. 4. 2.

§. 6. Direct. 6. Honour your Masters, and behave your selves towards them with that respect and reverence as your place requireth. Behave not your selves rudely or contemptuously towards them, in word or deed. Be not so proud as to disdain to keep the distance and reverence which is due. You should scorn to be servants, if you scorn to behave your selves as servants. Give them not sawcy, provoking or contemptuous language; not wording it out with them in bold contending, and justifying your selves when your faults are reprehended. Mark the Apostles words, Tit. 2. 9, 10. Exhort servants to be obedient to their own Masters, and to please them well in all things, not answering again: not purloyning, but shewing all good fidelity, that they may adorn the Doctrine of God our Saviour in all things. And 1 Tim. 6. 1, 2, 3, 4. Let as many servants as are under the yoke, count their own Masters worthy of all honour (yea, tho' they were Infidels or poor) that the Name of God and his doctrine be not blasphemed. (For wicked men will say, Is this your Religion? when servants professing Religion, are disobedient, unreverent, and unfaithful). And they that have believing Masters, let them not despise them, because they are brethren, but rather do them service, because they are faithful and beloved partakers of the benefit. These things teach and exhort: if any man teach otherwise, and consent not to wholsome words —— he is proud, knowing nothing —— Dir. 6. Exod. 20. 12. Rom. 13. 7.

§. 7. Direct. 7. Go not unwillingly or murmuringly about your business, but take it as your delight. An unwilling mind doth lose Gods reward, and mans acceptance. Grudging and unwillingness maketh your work of little value, be it never so well done. Do service heartily, and with good will as to the Lord, Eph. 6. 7. Col. 3. 23. Dir. 7.

§. 8. Direct 8. Obey your Masters in all things (which God forbiddeth not, and which their place enableth them to command you;) and set not your own conceits and wills against their Commands. It is not obedience, if you will do no more of their commands, than what agreeth with your own opinions and wills. What if you think another way best, or another work best, or another time best? Are you to govern or obey? If the work be not yours but anothers, let his Will and not yours be fulfilled, and do his service in his own way. It is Gods command, Col. 3. 22. Servants obey your Masters in all things. Dir. 8. Acts 10. 7.

§. 9. Direct. 9. Reveal not any of the Secrets of your Masters, or of the Family. Talk not to others of what is said or done at home; Be not over familiar at other mens houses, where you may be tempted to talk of your Masters businesses; Many Words may have mischievous effects, which were well intended. That Servant is unfit for a wise Mans Family, that hath some familiar abroad, to whom he must tell all that he heareth or seeth at home; For his familiar hath another familiar, and so a man shall be betray'd by those of his own household, Mich. 7. 6. as Christ by Judas. Dir. 9. Prov. 25. 9. & 11. 13. & 20. 19.

§. 10. Grudge not at the meanness of the provisions of the family. If you have not that which is needful to your health, remove to another place as soon as you can, without reproaching the place where you are. But if you have your daily bread, that is, your necessary wholsome Food, how course soever, your murmuring for want of more delicious fare, is but Dir. 10. Phil. 3. 18, 19.

your shame, and sheweth that your hearts are sunk into your Bellies, and that you are fleshly minded persons.

Dir. 11. §. 11. Direct. 11. Pray daily for a blessing on your labours and on the family, both privately and with the rest. A praying Servant may prevail with God, for more than all their labour cometh to; and their labours are liker to be blessed, than the labours of a prayerless ungodly person. You are not worthy to partake of the mercies of the family, if you will not joyn in prayers for those mercies.

Dir. 12. §. 12. Direct. 12. Willingly submit to the Teaching and Government of your Masters about the right worshipping of God, and for the good of your own souls. Bless God, if you live with Religious Masters that will instruct you and Chatechize you, and pray with you, and restrain you from breaking the Lords day, and other sins, and will examine you of your profiting, and watch over your souls, and sharply rebuke you when you do that which is evil. Be glad of their instructions, and murmur not at them, as ignorant ungodly servants do. These few Directions carefully followed will make your service better to you, than Lordships and Kingdoms are to the ungodly.

CHAP. XIV.

The Duties of MASTERS towards their SERVANTS.

Rom. 8. 28. IF you would have good Servants, see that you be good Masters, and do your own duty, and then either your servants will do theirs, or else all their failings shall turn to your greater good.

Dir. 1. §. 1. Direct. 1. Remember that in Christ they are your brethren and fellow servants; and therefore rule them not tyrannically but in tenderness and love; and command them nothing that is against the Laws of God, or the good of their Souls. Use not wrath and unmanlike fury with them; nor any over-severe or unnecessary rebukes or chastisements. Find fault in season, with prudence and sobriety, when your passions are down and when it is most likely to do good. If it be too little, it will embolden them in doing ill; If it be too much, or frequent or passionate, it will make them slight it and despise it, and utterly hinder their repentance: They will be taken up in blaming you for your rashness and violence, instead of blaming themselves for the fault.

Dir. 2. §. 2. Direct. 2. Provide them work convenient for them, and such as they are fit for; not such or so much as to wrong them in their health, or hinder them from the necessary means of their salvation; nor yet so little as may cherish their idleness, or occasion them to lose their precious time. It is cruelty to lay more on your horse than he can carry; or to work your Oxen to skin and bones: Prov. 12. 10. A righteous man regardeth the life of his beast; much more of his servant. Especially put not your servants on any labour which hazardeth their health or life, without true necessity to some greater end. Pity and spare them more in their health than in their bare labour. Labour maketh the body sound, but to take deep colds, or go wet in their feet, do tend to their sickness and death. And should another mans Life be cast away for your commodity? Do as you would be done by, if you were servants your selves and in their case; and let not their labours be so great, as shall allow them no time to pray before they go about it, or as shall so tire them as to unfit them for Prayer or instruction or the Worship of the Lords day, and shall lay them like blocks, as fitter to lie to sleep or rest themselves, than to pray, or hear, or mind any thing that is good. And yet take heed that you suffer them not to be idle, as many great men use their Serving men, to the undoing of their souls and bodies. Idleness is no small sin it self, and it breedeth and cherisheth many others: Their time is lost by it; and they are made unfit for any honest employment or course of life, to help themselves or any others.

Dir. 3. §. 3. Direct. 3. Provide them such wholsome food and lodging, and such Wages as their Service doth deserve, or as you have promised them. Whether it be pleasant or unpleasant, let their food and lodging be healthful. It is so odious an oppression and injustice to defraud a servant or labourer of his wages (yea or to give him less than he deserveth) that methinks I should not need to speak much against it among Christians. Read Jam. 5. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. and I hope it will be enough.

Dir. 4. §. 4. Direct. 4. Use not your servants to be so bold and familiar with you, as may tempt them to despise you; nor yet so strange and distant, as may deprive you of opportunity of speaking to them for their spiritual good, or justly lay you open to be censured as too magisterial and proud. Both these extreams have ill effects; but the first is the commonest, and is the disquiet of many families.

Dir. 5. §. 5. Direct. 5. Remember that you have a charge of the Souls in your Family, and are as a Priest and Teacher in your own house, and therefore see that you keep them to the constant worshipping of God, especially on the Lords day, in publick and private; and that you teach them the things that concern their salvation (as is afterward Directed.) And pray for them daily, as well as for your selves.

Dir. 6. §. 6. Direct. 6. Watch over them that they offend not God: Bear not with ungodliness or gross sin in your family. Read Psal. 101. Be not like those ungodly masters, that look only that their own work be done, and bid God look after his work himself, and care not for their servants souls, because they care not for their own; and mind not whether God be served by others, because they serve him not (unless with hypocritical lip-service) themselves.

Dir. 7. §. 7. Direct. 7. Keep your servants from evil company, and from being temptations to each other, as far as you can. If you suffer them to frequent Alehouses, or riotous assemblies, or wanton or malignant company, when they are infected themselves, they will bring home the infection, and all the house may fare the worse for it; And when Judas groweth familiar with the Pharisees, he will be seduced by them to betray his Master. You cannot be accountable for your servants if you suffer them to be much abroad.

Dir. 8. §. 8. Direct. 8. Go before them as Examples of holiness and wisdom, and all those vertues and duties which you would teach them. An ignorant or a swearing, cursing, railing, ungodly Master, doth actually teach his servants to be such; and if his words teach them the contrary, he can expect but little reverence or success.

Dir. 9. §. 9. Direct. 9. Patiently bear with those tolerable frailties which their unskilfulness or bodily temperature or other infirmity make them liable to against their wills. A willing mind is an excuse for many frailties; much must be put up, when it is not from wilfulness or gross neglect: make not a greater matter of every infirmity or fault than there is cause. Look not that any should be perfect upon earth; Reckon upon it, that you must have servants of the progeny of Adam, that have corrupted natures, and bodily weaknesses; and many things that must be born with. Consider how faultily you serve your Heavenly Master, and how much he daily beareth with that which is amiss in you, and how many faults and oversights you are guilty of in your own employment, and how many you should be overtaken with if you were in their stead. Eph. 6. 9. And ye Masters, do the same things to them, forbearing threatning, knowing that your master also is in Heaven, neither ther is there reſpect of perſons with him. Col. 4. 1. Maſters give unto your Servants that which is juſt and equal, &c.

Dir. 10. §. 10. Direct. 10. See that they behave themſelves well to their Fellow-Servants: Of which I ſhall ſpeak anon.

Tit. 2. Directions to thoſe Maſters in foraign Plantations who have Negro's and other Slaves; being a ſolution of ſeveral Caſes about them.

Dir. 1. Direct. 1. UNderſtand well how far your Power over your Slaves extendeth, and what limits God hath ſet thereto.

As. 1. Sufficiently difference between Men and Bruits. Remember that they are of as good a kind as you; that is, They are reaſonable Creatures as well as you, and born to as much natural liberty. If their ſin have enſlaved them to you, yet Nature made them your equals. Remember that they have immortal Souls, and are equally capable of ſalvation with your ſelves. And therefore you have no power to do any thing which ſhall hinder their ſalvation. No pretence of your buſineſs, neceſſity, commodity or power, can warrant you to hold them ſo hard to work, as not to allow them due time and ſeaſons for that which God hath made their duty.

2. Remember that God is their abſolute Owner, and that you have none but a derived and limited Propriety in them. They can be no further yours, than you have Gods conſent, who is the Lord of them and you; and therefore Gods Intereſt in them, and by them muſt be ſerved firſt.

3. Remember that they and you are equally under the Government and Laws of God. And therefore all Gods Laws muſt be firſt obeyed by them, and you have no power to command them to omit any duty which God commandeth them, nor to commit any ſin which God forbiddeth them; nor can you without Rebellion or Impiety expect, that your work or commands ſhould be preferred before Gods.

4. Remember that God is their reconciled tender Father, and if they be as good doth Love, them as well as you: And therefore you muſt uſe the meaneſt of them no otherwiſe, than beſeemeth the beloved of God to be us'd; and no otherwiſe than may ſtand with the due ſignification of your Love to God by Loving thoſe that are his.

5. Remember that they are the Redeemed ones of Chriſt, and that he hath not ſold you his title to them; As he bought their Souls at a price unvaluable, ſo he hath not given the purchaſe of his Blood to be abſolutely at your diſpoſal. Therefore ſo uſe them, as to preſerve Chriſts right and intereſt in them.

Dir. 2. Direct. 2. Remember that you are Chriſts Truſtees, or the Guardians of their Souls; and that the greater your power is over them, the greater your charge is of them. and your duty for them. As you owe more to a Child than to a Day Labourer or a hired Servant, becauſe being more your own, he is more entruſted to your care: So alſo by the ſame reaſon, you owe more to a ſlave, becauſe he is more your own; and power and obligation go together. As Abraham was to Circumciſe all his Servants that were bought with Money, and the fourth Commandment requireth Maſters to ſee that all within their gates obſerve the Sabbath day; ſo muſt you exerciſe both your Power and Love to bring them to the Knowledge and faith of Chriſt, and to the juſt obedience of Gods commands.

Thoſe therefore that keep their Negro's and ſlaves from hearing Gods word, and from becoming Chriſtians, becauſe by the Law, they ſhall then be either made free, or they ſhall loſe part of their ſervice, do openly profeſs Rebellion againſt God, and contempt of Chriſt the Redeemer of Souls, and a contempt of the Souls of men, and indeed they declare, that their worldly profit is their treaſure and their God.

If this come to the hands of any of our Natives in Barbado's, or other Iſlands or Plantations, who are ſaid to be commonly guilty of this moſt heinous ſin, yea and to live upon it, I intreat them further to conſider as followeth, 1. How curſed a crime is it to equal Men with Beaſts? Is not this your practice? Do you not buy them and uſe them meerly to the ſame end, as you do your Horſes? to labour for your commodity! as if they were baſer than you, and made to ſerve you?

2. Do you not ſee how you reproach and condemn your ſelves, while you vilifie them as Savage and barbarous wretches. Did they ever do any thing more ſavage, than to uſe not only mens bodies as beaſts, but their Souls as if they were made for nothing, but to actuate their bodies in your worldly drudgery? Did the verieſt Cannibals ever do any thing more cruel or odious, than to ſell ſo many Souls to the Devil for a little worldly gain? Did ever the curſedeſt miſcreants on earth, do any thing more rebellious, and contrary to the will of the moſt merciful God, than to keep thoſe Souls from Chriſt, and holineſs and Heaven, for a little Money, who were made and redeemed for the ſame ends, and at the ſame pretious price as yours? Did your poor ſlaves ever commit ſuch villanies as theſe? Is not he the baſeſt wretch and the moſt barbarous ſavage, who committeth the greateſt and moſt inhumane wickedneſs? and are theirs comparable to theſe of yours?

3. Doth not the very example of ſuch cruelty, beſides your keeping them from Chriſtianity, directly tend to teach them and all others, to hate Chriſtianity, as if it taught men to be ſo much worſe than Dogs and Tygers?

4. Do you not mark how God hath followed you with Plagues? and may not Conſcience tell you that it is for your inhumanity to the Souls and Bodies of ſo many? Remember the late fire at the Bridge in Barbado's: Remember the drowning of your Governour and Ships at Sea, and the many judgements that have overtaken you; and at the preſent the terrible mortality that is among you.

5. Will not the example and warning of neighbour Countrys riſe up in judgment againſt you and condemn you? You cannot but hear how odious the Spaniſh name is made (and thereby alas the Chriſtian name alſo, among the Weſt Indians!) for their moſt inhumane Cruelties in Hiſpaniola, Jamaica, Cuba, Peru, Mexico, and other places, which is deſcribed by Joſep. a Coſta a Jeſuit of their own; And though I know that their cruelty who murdered millions, exceedeth yours, who kill not mens bodies, yet yours is of the ſame kind, in the merchandize which you make with the Devil for their Souls, whilſt you that ſhould help them with all your power, doth hinder them from the means of their ſalvation. And on the contrary, what an honour is it to thoſe of New England, that they take not ſo much as the Natives ſoyl from them, but by purchaſe? that they enſlave none of them, nor uſe them cruelly, but ſhew them mercy and are at a great deal of care, and coſt, and labour for their ſalvation? O how much difference between holy Maſter Eliot's life and yours! His, who hath laboured ſo many years to ſave them, and hath tranſlated the whole Bible into their language, with other Books; and thoſe good mens in London who are a Corporation for the furtherance of his work; and theirs that have contributed ſo largely towards it; And yours that ſell mens Souls for your commodity?

6. And

6. And what comfort are you like to have at laſt, in that money that is purchaſed at ſuch a price? Will not your money and you periſh together? will you not have worſe than Gehezi's Leproſie with it; yea worſe than Achan's death by Stoning; and as bad as Judas his hanging himſelf, unleſs repentance ſhall prevent it? Do you not remember the terrible words in Jude 11. Wo unto them, for they have gone in the way of Cain, and ran greedily after the errors of Baalim. And 2 Pet. 2. 3, 14, 15. Thro' Covetouſneſs—they make merchandize of you—An heart they have exerciſed with covetous practices; Curſed Children (or Children of a Curſe) which have forſaken the right way, and are gone aſtray, following the way of Balaam, the Son of Boſor, who loved the wages of unrighteouſneſs, but was rebuked for his iniquity; the dumb Aſs ſpeaking with mans voice forbad the madneſs of the Prophet. When you ſhall every one hear, Thou fool this night ſhall thy ſoul be required of thee, and then whoſe ſhall thoſe things be which thou haſt provided? Luk. 12. 19, 20, 21. will it not then cut deep in your perpetual torments, to remember that you got that little pelf, by betraying ſo many ſouls to Hell? What men in the World doth James ſpeak to, if not to you, Jam. 5. 1, 2, 3, 4. Go to now ye rich Men, weep and howl for your miſeries that ſhall come upon you: Your Riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth eaten: Your gold and ſilver is cankered, and the ruſt of them ſhall be a witneſs againſt you and ſhall eat your fleſh as it were fire: ye have heaped treaſure together for the laſt days. Behold the hire of the labourers which have reaped down your field, which is of you kept back by fraud, cryeth, and the crys of them which have reaped, have entred into the ears of the Lord of Sabbath. How much more the cry of betrayed Souls.

And here we may ſeaſonably anſwer theſe caſes. Queſt. 1. Is it lawful for a Chriſtian to buy and uſe a man as a ſlave? Queſt. 2. Is it lawful to uſe a Chriſtian as a ſlave? Queſt. 3. What difference muſt we make between a free ſervant and a ſlave?

To Queſt. 1. I anſwer, There is a ſlavery to which ſome men may be lawfully put, and there is a ſlavery to which none may be put; And there is a ſlavery to which only the criminal may be put, by way of penalty.

1. No man may be put to ſuch a ſlavery as under the firſt Direction is denied, that is, ſuch as ſhall injure Gods intereſt and ſervice, or the mans ſalvation. 2. No man, but as a juſt puniſhment for his crimes, may be ſo enſlaved, as to be deprived of thoſe liberties, benefits and comforts, which brotherly love obligeth every man to grant to another for his good, as far as is within our power, all things conſidered. That is, the ſame man is a Servant and a Brother, and therefore muſt at once be us'd as both. 3. Tho' poverty or neceſſity do make a man conſent to ſell himſelf to a life of leſſer miſery, to eſcape a greater, or death it ſelf; yet is it not lawful for any other ſo to take advantage by his neceſſity, as to bring him into a condition, that ſhall make him miſerable, or in which we ſhall not exerciſe ſo much love, as may tend to his ſanctification, comfort and ſalvation. Becauſe no Juſtice is beſeeming a Chriſtian or a Man, which is not conjoyned with a due meaſure of Charity.

But 1. He that deſerveth it by way of penalty may be penally uſed. 2. He that ſtole and cannot reſtore may be forced to work it out as a Servant; and in both theſe caſes more may be done againſt anothers eaſe or liberty, than by meer contract or conſent. He that may hang a flagitious offender, doth him no wrong if he put him to a ſlavery, which is leſs penal than death. 3. More alſo may be done againſt Enemies taken in a lawful War, than could be done againſt the innocent by neceſſitated conſent. 4. A certain degree of ſervitude or ſlavery is lawful by the neceſſitated conſent of the innocent. That is ſo much, 1. As wrongeth no intereſt of God. 2. Nor of mankind by breaking the Law of Nations. 3. Nor the perſon himſelf, by hindring his ſalvation, or the needful means thereof; nor thoſe comforts of life, which nature giveth to man as man. 4. Nor the Common-wealth or Society where we live.

Queſt. 2. To the ſecond Queſtion, I anſwer, 1 Queſt. 2. As men muſt be variouſly loved according to the various degrees of amiableneſs in them; ſo varions degrees of love muſt be exerciſed towards them: Therefore good and real Chriſtians muſt be us'd with more love and brotherly tenderneſs than others. 2 It is meet alſo, that Infidels have ſo much mercy ſhewed them in order to the ſaving of their Souls, as that they ſhould be invited to Chriſtianity by fit incouragements: And ſo, that they ſhould know that if they will turn Chriſtians, they ſhall have more priviledges and emoluments than the Enemies of Truth and Piety ſhall have. It is therefore well done of Princes who make Laws that Infidel-ſlaves ſhall be free-men, when they are duly Chriſtened. 3. But yet a nominal Chriſtian who by wickedneſs forfeiteth his life or freedom, may penally be made a ſlave as well as Infidels. 4. And a poor and needy Chriſtian may ſell himſelf into a harder ſtate of ſervitude than he would chuſe, or we could otherwiſe put him into. But 5. To go as Pirates and catch up poor Negro's or People of another Land, that never forfeited Life or Liberty, and to make them ſlaves, and ſell them, is one of the worſt kinds of Thievery in the World; and ſuch perſons are to be taken for the common Enemies of mankind; and they that buy them and uſe them as Beaſts, for their meer commodity, and betray, or deſtroy, or neglect their Souls, are fitter to be called incarnate Devils than Chriſtians, tho' they be no Chriſtians whom they ſo abuſe.

Queſt. 3. To the third Queſtion, I anſwer, That Queſt. 3. the ſolution of this caſe is to be gathered from what is ſaid already. A Servant and a Voluntary-ſlave were both free-men, till they ſold or hired themſelves; and a Criminal-perſon was a free man till he forfeited his life or liberty. But afterward the difference is this; that 1. A free-ſervant is my ſervant, no further than his own Covenant made him ſo; which is ſuppoſed to be, 1. To a certain kind, and meaſure of labor according to the meaning of his contract. 2. For a limited time expreſſed in the contract, whether a year or two, or three, or ſeven.

2. A Slave by meer Contract is one that, 1. Uſually ſelleth himſelf abſolutely to the will of another as to his labour, both for kind and meaſure; where yet the limitations of God and nature after (and before) named, are ſuppoſed among Chriſtians to take place. 2. He is one that ſelleth himſelf to ſuch labour, during life.

3. A Slave by juſt penalty, is liable to ſo much ſervitude as the Magiſtrate doth judge him to, which may be, 1. Not only ſuch labour, as aforeſaid, as pleaſeth his Maſter to impoſe. 2. And that for life. 3. But it may be alſo to ſtripes and ſeverities which might not lawfully be inflicted on another.

1. The Limitations of a neceſſitated-ſlavery by Contract or Conſent through poverty are theſe, 1. Such a ones Soul muſt be cared for and preſerved, tho' he ſhould conſent to the contrary. He muſt have time to learn the Word of God, and time to pray, and he muſt reſt on the Lords-day, and imploy it in Gods ſervice; he muſt be inſtructed and exhorted and kept from ſin. 2. He may not be forced to commit any ſin againſt God. 3. He may not (though he forcedly conſent) be denied ſuch comforts of this life, as are needful to his cheerful ſerving of God in Love and Thankfulneſs, according to the Peace of the Goſpel ſtate; add which are called by the name of our daily Bread. No man may deny a

ſlave any of this, that is not a criminal puniſhed ſlave.

2. And the moſt criminal ſlave may not be forced to ſin, nor denied neceſſary helps to his ſalvation. But he may penally be beaten and denied part of his daily Bread; ſo it be not done more rigorouſly than true Juſtice doth require.

Queſt. But what if men buy Negro's or other ſlaves of ſuch as we have juſt cauſe to believe did ſteal them by Piracy, or buy them of thoſe that have no power to ſell them, and not hire or buy them by their own conſent, or by the conſent of thoſe that had power to ſell them, nor take them Captives in a lawful War, what muſt they do with them afterward?

Anſw. 1. It is their heinous ſin to buy them, unleſs it be in charity to deliver them. 2. Having done it, undoubtedly they are preſently bound to deliver them: Becauſe by right the man is his own, and therefore no man elſe can have juſt title to him.

Queſt. But may I not ſell him again and make my Money of him, ſeeing I leave him but as I found him?

Anſw. No, becauſe when you have taken poſſeſſion of him, and a pretended propriety, then the injury that is done him is by you; which before was only by another. And tho' the wrong be no greater than the other did him, yet being now done by you, it is your ſin.

Queſt. But may I not return him to him that I bought him of?

Anſw. No: for that is but injuring him by delivering him to another to continue the injury. To ſay as Pilate, [I am innocent of the blood of this juſt Man] will be no proof of your innocency, yea, Gods Law bindeth you to Love, and works of Love, and therefore you ſhould do your beſt to free him. He that is bound to help to ſave a man, that is faln into the hand of thieves by the high-way, if he ſhould buy that man as a ſlave of the thieves, may not after give him up to the thieves again. But to proceed in the Directions.

Dir. 3. Direct. 3. So ſerve your own neceſſities by your ſlaves as to prefer Gods intereſt, and their ſpiritual and everlaſting happineſs. Teach them the way to Heaven, and do all for their Souls which I have before directed you to do for all your other Servants. Tho' you may make ſome difference in their labour, and diet, and cloathing, yet none as to the furthering of their ſalvation. If they be Infidels, uſe them ſo as tendeth to win them to Chriſt, and the love of Religion, by ſhewing them that Chriſtians are leſs worldly, leſs cruel and paſſionate, and more wiſe and charitable and holy and meek, than any other perſons are. Wo to them that by their cruelty and covetouſneſs do ſcandalize even ſlaves, and hinder their converſion and ſalvation.

Dir. 4. Direct. 4. By how much the hardneſs of their condition doth make their lives uncomfortable, and God hath caſt them lower than your ſelves, by ſo much the more let your charity pity them, and labour to abate their burden, and ſweeten their lives to them, as much as your condition will allow. And remember that even a ſlave may be one of thoſe neighbours that you are bound to love as your ſelves, and to do as you would be done by, if your caſe were his. Which if you do, you will need no more direction for his relief.

Dir. 5. Direct. 5. Remember that you may require no more of an innocent ſlave, than you would or might do of an ordinary ſervant, if he were at your will, and did not by contract except ſomething as to labor or uſage which elſe you would think juſt and meet to have required of him.

Dir. 6. Direct. 6. If they are Infidels, neither be too haſty in baptizing them, when they deſire it, nor too ſlow. Not ſo haſty as to put them on it, before they underſtand what the Baptiſmal Covenant is; or before you ſee any likelihood that they ſhould be ſerious in making ſuch a Covenant. Nor yet ſo ſlow as to let them alone to linger out their lives in the ſtate of thoſe without the Church. But haſten them to learn, and ſtir up their deſires, and look after them, as the ancient Churches did after their Catechumens; and when you ſee them fit by knowledge, Belief, Deſire, and Reſolution, to vow themſelves to God on the terms of the holy Covenant, then put them on to be baptized. But if you ſhould feel an abatement of your deſires of their Converſion, becauſe you ſhall loſe their ſervice, (much more if ever you had a wiſh that they might not be converted, which is plain Deviliſm,) let it be the matter of your deep humiliation and repentance.

Direct. 7. Make it your chief end in buying and uſing ſlaves, to win them to Chriſt, and ſave their Souls. Do not only endeavour it on the by, when you have firſt conſulted your own commodity; but make this more of your end, than your commodity it ſelf; and let their Salvation be far more valued by you than their ſervice: And carry your ſelves to them, as thoſe that are ſenſible that they are Redeemed with them by Chriſt from the ſlavery of Satan, and may live with them in the Liberty of the Saints in Glory. Dir. 7.

CHAP. XV.

The Duties of CHILDREN and FELLOW SERVANTS to one another.

IT is not eaſie to reſolve, Whether Good Governors, or Good Fellow-Servants, in a Family, be the greater help and benefit, to each of the Inferiors. For Servants are ſo much together, and ſo free and familiar with each other, that they have the more opportunity to be uſeful to each other, if they have but abilities and hearts. It is needful therefore, that you know your duty to one another, both for doing and getting that good which otherwiſe will be loſt.

§. 1. Direct. 1. Love one another unfeignedly as your ſelves: Avoid all contention and falling out with one another, or any thing that would weaken your love to one another; eſpecially differences about your perſonal intereſts, in point of profit, proviſion, or reputation. Take heed of the Spirit of Envy, which will make your hearts riſe againſt thoſe that are preferred before you, or that are us'd better than you. Remember the ſin and miſery of Cain, and take warning by him. Give place to others, and in honour prefer others, and ſeek not to be preferred before them, Rom. 12. 10, 16. God delighteth to exalt the humble that abaſe themſelves, and to caſt down thoſe that exalt themſelves. When the intereſt of your fleſh can make you hate or fall out with each other. What a fearful ſign is it of a fleſhly mind? Rom. 8. 6, 13. Dir. 1.

§. 2. Direct. 2. Take heed of uſing provoking words againſt each other. For theſe are the bellows to blow up that which the Apoſtle calleth the fire of Hell, Jam. 3. 6. A foul tongue ſetteth on fire the courſe of nature; and therefore it may ſet a Family on fire. Jam. 3. 5, 6. Where envying and ſtrife is, there is confuſion and every evil work. V. 15, 16. If ye be angry, refrain your tongues and ſin not, and let not the Sun go down upon your wrath, neither give place to the Devil. Eph. 4. 26, 27. Let all bitterneſs, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil ſpeaking, be put away from you, with all malice; and be ye kind one to another, tender hatred, forgiving one another, even as God for Chriſts ſake hath forgiven you. Eph. 4. 31, 32. Revilers ſhall not inherit the Kingdom of God. 1 Cor. 6. 10. Dir. 2.

§. 3. Direct. 3. Help one another with love and willingneſs in your labors; and do not grudge at one another, Dir. 3.

another, and say such a one doth less than I: But be as ready to help another, as you would be helped your selves. It is very amiable to see a Family of such Children and Servants, that all take one anothers concernments as their own; and are not selfish against each other. Psal. 133. 1. Behold how good and pleasant it is, for Brethren to dwell together in unity! &c.

Dir. 4. §. 4. Direct. 4. Take heed that you prove not tempters to draw each other to sin and misery. Either by joining together in riotousness, or wronging your Masters, or secret revelling, and then in lying to conceal it: Or lest immodest familiarity draw those of different Sexes into a snare. Abundance of sin and misery hath followed such tempting familiarity of Men and Maids that were Fellow-servants. Their nearness giveth them opportunity, and the Devil provoketh them to take their opportunity; and from immodest wanton dalliance, and unchaste words, they proceed at last to more lasciviousness, to their own undoing: Bring not the Straw to the fire, if you would not have it burn.

Dir. 5. §. 5. Direct. 5. Watch over one another for mutual preservation against the Sin and Temptations which you are most in danger of. Agree to tell each other of your faults, not proudly or passionately, but in love; and resolve to take it thankfully from each other. If any one talk foolishly and idly, or wantonly and immodestly, or tell a lie, or take Gods name in vain, or neglect their duty to God or Man, or deal unfaithfully in their trust or labour, let the other seriously tell him of his sin, and call him to repentance. And let not him that is guilty take it ill, and angrily snap at the reprover, or justifie or excuse the fault, or hit him presently in the teeth with his own; but humbly thank him, and promise amendment. O how happy might Servants be, if they would faithfully watch over one another?

Dir. 6. §. 6. Direct. 6. When you are together, and your work will allow it, let your discourse be such as tendeth to edification, and to the spiritual good of the speaker or the hearers. Some work there is that must be thought on, and talked of while it is doing, and will not allow you leisure to think or speak of other things, till it is done: But very much of the work of most Servants may be as well done, tho' they think and speak together of heavenly things; besides all other times when their work is over. O take this time to be speaking of good to one another: It is like, that some one of you hath more knowledge than the rest; let the rest be asking his counsel and instructions, and let him bend himself to do them good; or if you are equal in knowledge, yet stir up the grace that is in you, if you have any; or stir up your desires after it, if you have none. Waste not your precious time in vanity; multiply not the sin of idle words. O what a load doth lye on many a Soul that feeleth it not, in the guilt of these two sins, Loss of time, and idle words! To be guilty of the same sins over and over, every day, and make a constant practice of them, and this against your own knowledge and conscience, is a more grievous case than many think of. Whereas, if you would live together as the Heirs of Heaven, and provoke one another to the Love of God, and holy duty, and delightfully talk of the Word of God, and the life to come, what blessings might you be to one another? And your service and labour would be a sanctified and comfortable life to you all, Eph. 4. 29, 30. Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying, and may minister grace to the hearers, and grieve not the holy Spirit of God—. And 5. 3, 4. But fornication and all uncleanness or covetousness (or rather, inordinate fleshly desire.) Let it not be once named among you, as becometh Saints; neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient; but rather giving of thanks. Of this more anon.

§. 7. Direct. 7. Patiently bear with the failings of one another towards your selves, and hide those faults the opening of which will do no good: But open not sin. But conceal not those faults to which you will be accessary by concealment, or whose concealment tendeth to the wrong of your Master, or any other. For it is in your power to forgive a fault against your selves, but not against God, or another. And to know when you should reveal it, and when not, you must wisely fore-know which way is like to do more good or harm. And if yet you be in doubt, open it first to some secret friend, that is wise to advise you, whether it should be further opened or not.

§. 8. Direct. 8. If weakness, or sickness, or want afflict a Brother, or Sister, or Fellow Servant, be kind and helpful to them according to your power. Love not in word only, but in deed and truth. 1 Joh. 3. 18. Jam. 2. Dir. 8

CHAP. XVI.

Directions for holy Conference of FELLOW-SERVANTS or others.

BEcause this is a duty so frequently to be performed; and therefore the peace and edification of Christians is very much concerned in it. I shall give a few brief Directions about it.

§. 1. Direct. 1. Labour most for a full and lively heart, which hath the feeling of those things which your tongues should speak of. For 1. Such a heart will be like a Spring which is always running, and will continually feed the streams. Forced and feigned things are of short continuance; the Hypocrites affected forced speech, is exercised but among those where it may serve his pride and carnal ends: At other times, and in other company, he hath another tongue like other men. It is like a Land-flood that is quickly gone; or like the bending of a Bow, which returneth to its place, as soon as it is loosed. 2. And that which cometh from your hearts, will be serious and hearty, and likeliest to do good to others: For words do their work upon us, not only by signifying the matter which is spoken, but also by signifying the affections of the speaker. And that which will work affections, must express affection ordinarily. If it come not from the heart of the speaker, it is not so like to go to the hearts of the hearers. A hearty Preacher, and a hearty feeling discourse of holy things, do pierce heart-deep, and do that good, which better composed words that are heartless do not. Dir. 1.

§. 2. Direct. 2. Yet for all that, when your hearts are cold, and dull, and barren, do not think that your tongues must therefore neglect their duty, and be silent from all good, till your hearts be better, but force your tongues to do their duty, if they will not do them freely without constraint. For, 1. Duty is duty whether you be well disposed to it or not: If all duty should cease when men are ill disposed to it, no wicked man would be bound to any thing that is truly holy. 2. And if heart and tongue be both obliged, it is worse to omit both than one. 3. And there may be sincerity in a duty when the heart is cold and dull. 4. And beginning to do your duty as well as you can, is the way to overcome your dulness and unfitness; when you force your tongues at first to speak of that which is good, the words which you speak or hear, may help to bring you into a better frame. Many a man hath begun to pray with coldness, that hath got him heat before he had done; and many a man hath gone unwillingly to hear a Sermon, that hath come home a converted Soul. 5. And when you set your selves in the way of duty, you are in the way of promised Grace. Dir. 2.

Object. §. 3. Object. But is not this to play the Hypocrite, to let my tongue go before my heart? And ſpeak the things which my heart is not affected with?

Anſw. Anſw. If you ſpeak falſly and diſſemblingly, you play the Hypocrites: But you may force your ſelves to ſpeak of good, without any falſhood or hypocriſie. Words ſignifie, as I told you, the matter ſpoken and the ſpeakers mind. Now your ſpeaking of the things of God doth tell no more of your mind but this, that you take them to be true, and that you deſire thoſe that you ſpeak to, to regard them: And all this is ſo; and therefore there is no hypocriſie in it. Indeed, if you told the hearers, that you are deeply affected with theſe things your ſelves, when it is not ſo, this were hypocriſie. But a man may exhort another to be good, without profeſſing himſelf to be good; yea, tho' he confeſs himſelf to be bad. Therefore all the good diſcourſes of a wicked man are not hypocriſie: Much leſs the good diſcourſe of a ſincere Chriſtian, that is dull and cold in that diſcourſe. And if a duty had ſome hypocriſie in it, it is not the duty but the hypocriſie that God diſliketh, and you muſt forſake: As if there be coldneſs in a duty, it is the coldneſs, and not the duty that is to be blamed and forborn. And wholly to omit the duty, is worſe than to do it with ſome coldneſs or hypocriſie, which is not the predominant complexion of the duty.

Object. §. 4. Object. But if it be not the fruit of the Spirit, it is not acceptable to God; and that which I force my tongue to, is none of the fruits of the Spirit. Therefore I muſt ſtay till the Spirit move me.

Anſw. Anſw. 1. There are many duties done by Reaſon, and the common aſſiſtances of God, that are better than the total omiſſion of them is. Elſe no unſanctified man ſhould hear the Word, or pray, or relieve the Poor, or obey his Prince or Governors, or do any duty towards Children or Neighbours, becauſe whatſoever is not the Fruit of the ſpecial Grace of the Spirit, is ſin; and without Faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God; and all men have not Faith, Heb. 11. 6. 2 Theſ. 3. 2. 2. It is a diſtracted conceit of the Quakers and other Fanaticks, to think that Reaſon and the Spirit of God are not conjunct principles in the ſame act. Doth the Spirit work on a Man as on a Beaſt or Stone? and cauſe you to ſpeak as a Clock that ſtriketh it knoweth not what; or play on Mans Soul, as on an Inſtrument of Muſick, that hath neither knowledge of the melody, nor any pleaſure in it? No; the Spirit of God ſuppoſeth Nature, and worketh on Man as Man; by exciting your own Underſtanding and Will to do their parts. So that when, againſt all the remnant of dulneſs and backwardneſs that is in you, you can force your ſelves to do your duty, it is becauſe the Spirit of God aſſiſteth you to take that reſolution, and uſe that force. For thus the Spirit ſtriveth againſt the Fleſh, Gal. 5. 17. Rom. 7. 16, 17, 18, &c. Tho' it is confeſſed, that there is more of the Spirit, where there is no backwardneſs, or reſiſtance, or need of forcing.

Dir. 3. §. 5. Direct. 3. By all means labour to be furniſhed with underſtanding in the matters of God. For, 1. An underſtanding perſon hath a Mine of holy matter in himſelf, and never is quite void of matter for good diſcourſe: He is the good Scribe, that is inſtructed to the Kingdom of God, that bringeth out of his treaſury things new and old, Mat. 13. 52. 2. And an underſtanding perſon will ſpeak diſcreetly, and ſo will much further the ſucceſs of his diſcourſe, and not make it ridiculous, contemptuous or uneffectual thro' his indiſcretion. But yet if you are ignorant and wanting in underſtanding, do not therefore be ſilent: For tho' your ability is leaſt, your neceſſity is greateſt. Let neceſſity therefore conſtrain you to ask inſtruction, as it conſtraineth the needy to beg for what they want. But ſpare no pains to increaſe your knowledge.

§. 6. Direct. 4. If your own underſtandings and hearts do not furniſh you with matter, have recourſe to thoſe manifold helps that God vouchſafeth you. As 1. You may diſcourſe of the laſt Sermon that you heard, or ſome one lately Preach'd that nearly touched you. 2. Or of ſomething in the laſt Book you read. 3. Or of ſome Text of Scripture obvious to your thoughts. 4. Or of ſome notable (yea, or ordinary) providence which did lately occur. 5. Or of ſome examples of good or evil that are freſh before you. 6. Or of the right doing of the duty that you are about, or any ſuch like helps. Dir. 4.

§. 7. Direct. 5. Talk not of vain unprofitable controverſies, nor often of ſmall circumſtantial matters that make but little to edification. For there may be idle talking about matters of Religion, as well as about other ſmaller things. Eſpecially ſee that the quarrels of the times ingage not your thoughts and ſpeeches too far, into a courſe of unprofitableneſs or contention. Dir. 5.

§. 8. Direct. 6. Furniſh your ſelves before hand with matter for the moſt edifying diſcourſe, and never go abroad empty. And let the matter be uſually, 1. Things of weight, and not ſmall matters. 2. Things of certainty and not uncertain things. Particularly the fitteſt ſubjects for your ordinary diſcourſe are theſe. 1. God himſelf, with his Attributes, Relations, and Works. 2. The great Myſtery of Mans Redemption by Chriſt; his Perſon, Office, Sufferings, Doctrine, Example, and Work; his Reſurrection, Aſcenſion, Glory, Interceſſion, and all the Priviledges of his Saints. 3. The Covenant of Grace, the Promiſes, the Duties, the Conditions and the Threatnings. 4. The Workings of the Spirit of Chriſt upon the Soul, and every Grace of the Spirit in us; with all the ſigns, and helps, and hinderances of it. 5. The ways and wiles of Satan, and all our ſpiritual Enemies; the particular temptations which we are in danger of; what they are and how to avoid them, and what are the moſt powerful helps againſt them. 6. The corruption and deceitfulneſs of the heart; the nature and workings, effects, and ſigns of ignorance, unbelief, hypocriſie, pride, ſenſuality, worldlineſs, impiety, injuſtice, intemperance, uncharitableneſs, and every other ſin; with all the helps againſt them all. 7. The many Duties to God, and Man which we have to perform; both internal and external, and how to do them, and what are the chiefeſt hinderances and helps. (As in reading, hearing, meditating, prayer, giving Alms, &c.) And the Duties of our Relations, and ſeveral places, with the contrary ſins. 8. The vanity of the World, and deceitfulneſs of all Earthly things. 9. The powerful Reaſons uſed by Chriſt to draw us to holineſs, and the unreaſonable madneſs of all that is brought againſt it, by the Devil or by wicked men. 10. Of the ſufferings which we muſt expect and be prepared for. 11. Of death, and the preparations that will then be found neceſſary; and how to make ready for ſo great a change. 12. Of the day of judgment, and who will then be juſtified, and who condemned. 13. Of the joys of Heaven, the imployment, the company, the nature and duration. 14. Of the miſeries of the damned, and the thoughts that then will then have of their former life on Earth. 15. Of the ſtate of the Church on Earth, and what we ought to do in our places for its welfare. Is there not matter enough in all theſe great and weighty points, for your hourly meditation and conference?

§. 9. Direct. 7. Take heed of proud ſelf-conceitedneſs in your conference. Speak not with ſupercilious cenſorious confidence. Let not the weak take on them to be wiſer than they are. Be readier to ſpeak by way of Queſtion as Learners, than as Teachers of others, unleſs you are ſure that they have much more need to be taught by you than you by them. Dir. 7.

It

It is ordinary for novices in Religion to caſt all their diſcourſe into a Teaching ſtrain, or to make themſelves Preachers before they underſtand. It is a moſt loathſome and pitiful hearing (and yet too ordinary) to hear a raw ſelf-conceited, ungrounded, unexperienced Perſon, to prate magiſterially, and cenſure confidently the doctrine, or practices, or Perſons of thoſe that are much better and wiſer than themſelves. If you meet with this proud cenſorious ſpirit, rebuke it firſt, and read to them Jam. 3. And if they go on, turn away from them, and avoid them; for they know not what manner of ſpirit they are of: They ſerve not the Lord Jeſus, whatever they pretend or think themſelves, but are proud, knowing nothing, but doting about queſtions, and making diviſions in the Church of God, and ready to fall into the condemnation of the Devil, 1 Tim. 3. 6. & 6. 3, 4, 5. Rom. 16. 17. Luk. 9. 55.

Dir. 8. §. 10. Direct. 8. Let the wiſeſt in the Company, and not the weakeſt, have moſt of the diſcourſe: But yet if any one that is of an abler tongue than the reſt, do make any determinations in doubtful controverted points, take heed of haſty receiving his judgement, let his Reaſons ſeem never ſo plauſible or probable; but put down all ſuch Opinions as Doubts, and move them to your Teachers, or ſome other impartial able men, before you entertain them. Otherwiſe, he that hath moſt Wit and Tongue in the Company might carry away all the reſt, into what error or hereſie he pleaſe, and ſubvert their Faith when he ſtops their mouths.

Dir. 9. §. 11. Direct. 9. Let the matter of your ſpeech be ſuitable to your end, even to the good of your ſelves or others, which you ſeek. The ſame ſubject that is fit for one company is very unfit for others. Learned men and ignorant men, pious men, and prophane men, are not fit for the ſame kind of diſcourſe. The medicine muſt be carefully fitted to the diſeaſe.

Dir. 10. §. 12. Direct. 10. Let your ſpeech be ſeaſonable, when Prudence telleth you it is not like to do more harm than good. There is a ſeaſon for the prudent to be ſilent, and refrain even from good talk. Amos 5. 17. Pſal. 39. 1, 2. Caſt not Pearls before Swine, and give not holy things to Dogs, that you know will turn again and rend you. Mat. 7. 6. Yea, and among good people themſelves, there is a time to ſpeak, and a time to be ſilent, Eccl. 3. 7. There may poſſibly be ſuch exceſs as tendeth to the tiring of the hearers; and more may be cramed in than they can diſgeſt; and ſurfeiting may make them loath it afterwards. You muſt give none more than they can bear; and alſo the matters of your Buſineſs and Callings, muſt be talked of in their time and place.

Dir. 11. §. 13. Direct. 11. Let all your ſpeech of holy things be with the greateſt ſeriouſneſs and reverence that you are able. Let the words be never ſo good, yet levity and rudeneſs may make them to be prophane. God and holy things ſhould not be talked of in a common manner: But the gravity of your ſpeech ſhould tell the hearers, that you take them not for ſmall or common matters. If Servants and others that live near together would converſe, and ſpeak as the Oracles of God, how holy, and heavenly, and happy would ſuch Families or Societies be?

CHAP. XVII.

Directions for each particular Member of the FAMILY how to ſpend every ordinary Day of the Week.

IT ſomewhat tendeth to make a holy life more eaſie to us, when we know the ordinary courſe and method of our duties, and every thing falleth into its proper place. As it helpeth the Husbandman or Tradeſman to know the ordinary courſe of his work, that he need not go out of it, unleſs in extraordinary Caſes. Therefore I ſhall here give you ſome brief Directions for the holy ſpending of every Day.

Dir. 1. §. 1. Direct. 1. Proportion the time of your ſleep aright (if it be in your power) that you waſte not your pretious Morning Hours ſluggiſhly in your bed. Let the time of your ſleep be rationally fitted to your health and labor, and not ſenſually to your ſlothful pleaſure. About ſix hours is meet for healthful People, and ſeven hours for the leſs healthful, and eight for the more weak and aged, ordinarily. The morning hours are to moſt the preciouſeſt of all the day, for all our duties; eſpecially Servants that are ſcanted of time, muſt take it then for Prayer, if poſſible, leſt they have none at all.

Dir. 2. §. 2. Direct. 2. Let God have your firſt awaking thoughts: Lift up your hearts to him reverently and thankfully for the reſt of the night paſt, and briefly caſt your ſelves upon him for the following day; and uſe your ſelves ſo conſtantly to this, that your Conſciences may check you, when common thoughts ſhall firſt intrude. And if you have a Bed-fellow to ſpeak to, let your firſt ſpeech be agreeable to your thoughts. It will be a great help againſt the temptations that may elſe ſurpriſe you, and a holy ingagement of your hearts to God, for all the day.

Dir. 3. §. 3. Direct. 3. Reſolve, that pride and the faſhions of the times ſhall never tempt you into ſuch a garb of attire, as will make you long in dreſſing you in the morning; but wear ſuch cloathing as is ſoon put on. It is dear-bought bravery (or decency as they will needs call it) which muſt coſt every day an hours or a quarter of an hours time extraordinary: I had rather go as the wild Indians, than have thoſe morning hours to anſwer for, as too many Ladies and other Gallants have.

Dir. 4. §. 4. Direct. 4. If you are Perſons of quality you may imploy a Child or Servant to read a Chapter in the Bible, while you are dreſſing you, and eating your breakfaſt (if you eat any.) Elſe you may imploy that time on ſome fruitful meditation, or conference with thoſe about you, as far as your neceſſary occaſions do give leave. As to think or ſpeak of the mercy of a Nights reſt, and of your renewed time; and how many ſpent that Night in Hell, and how many in Priſon, and how many in a colder, harder lodging, and how many in grievous pain and ſickneſs, aweary of their Beds and of their lives; and how many in diſtracting terrors of their Minds? And how many Souls that Night were called from their Bodies, to appear before the dreadful God? And think how faſt Days and Nights roul on? And how ſpeedily your laſt Night and Day will come. And obſerve what is wanting in the readineſs of your Soul, for ſuch a time, and ſeek it preſently without delay.

Dir. 5. §. 5. Direct. 5. If more neceſſary Duties call you not away, let ſecret prayer by your ſelf alone, or with your Chamber-fellow or both, go before the common prayers of the Family; and delay it not cauſleſly, but if it may be, let it be firſt, before any other work of the day. Yet be not formal and ſuperſtitious to your hours, as if God had abſolutely tied you to ſuch a time; nor think it not your duty to pray once in ſecret, and once with your Chamber-fellow, and once with the Family every morning, when more neceſſary duties call you off. That hour is beſt for one, which is worſt for another: To moſt private Prayer is moſt ſeaſonable as ſoon as they are up and cloathed: To others ſome other Hour may be more free and fit. And thoſe Perſons that have not more neceſſary duties, may do well to pray at all the opportunities before-mentioned; but reading and meditation muſt be allowed their time alſo; and the labours of your Callings muſt be painfully followed; and Servants and poor People that are not at liberty, or that have a neceſſity of providing for their Families, may not lawfully take ſo much time for Prayer, as ſome others may; eſpecially the aged and weak that cannot follow a calling may take longer time. And Miniſters that have many Souls to look after, and publick work to do, muſt take heed of neglecting any of this, that they may be longer and oftner in private Prayer. Always remember that when two duties are at once before you, and one muſt be omitted, that you prefer that which all things conſidered, is the greateſt; and underſtand what maketh a duty greateſt. Uſually that is greateſt which tendeth to the greateſt good; yet ſometime that is greateſt at that time, which cannot be done at another time, when others may. Praying in it ſelf conſidered, is better than Ploughing, or Marketting, or Conference; and yet theſe may be greater than it in their proper ſeaſons; becauſe Prayer may be done at another time, when theſe cannot.

Dir. 6. §. 6. Direct. 6. Let family-worſhip be performed conſtantly and ſeaſonably, twice a day, at that hour which is freeſt in regard of interruptions; not delaying it without juſt cauſe. But whenever it is performed, be ſure it be reverently, ſeriouſly, and ſpiritually done. If greater duty hinder not, begin with a brief invocation of Gods name, and craving of his help and bleſſing through Chriſt; and then read ſome part of the holy Scripture in order; and either help the hearers to underſtand it and apply it, or if you are unable for that, then read ſome profitable Book to them for ſuch ends; and ſing a Pſalm (if there be enough to do it fitly,) and earneſtly pour out your Souls in Prayer. But if unavoidable occaſions will not give way to all this, do what you can, eſpecially in Prayer, and do the reſt another time; but pretend not neceſſity againſt any duty, when it is but unwillingneſs or negligence. The lively performance of Family-duties, is a principal means to keep up the power and intereſt of Godlineſs in the World; which all decays, when theſe grow dead, and ſlight and formal.

Dir. 7. §. 7. Direct. 7. Renew the actual Intention and remembrance of your ultimate end, when you ſet your ſelves to your days work, or ſet upon any notable buſineſs in the World. Let HOLINESS TO THE LORD be written upon your hearts in all that you do. Do no work which you cannot intitle God to, and truly ſay he ſet you about; and do nothing in the World for any other ultimate end, than to pleaſe and glorify and injoy him. And remember that whatever you do, muſt be done as a means to theſe, and as by one that is that way going on to Heaven. All your labour muſt be as the labour of a Traveller, which is all for his journeys end; and all your reſpect or affection to any place or thing in your way, muſt be in reſpect to your attainment of the end; as a Traveller loveth a good Way, a good Horſe, a good Inn, a dry Cloak, or good Company; but nothing muſt be loved here as your end or home: Lift up your Hearts to Heaven and ſay, If this work and way did not tend thither directly or indirectly, it were no work or way for me. Whatever you do, do all to the Glory of God, 1 Cor. 10. 31.

Dir. 8. §. 8. Direct. 8. Follow the labours of your calling painfully and diligently. From hence will follow many commodities. 1. You will ſhew that you are not ſluggiſh and ſervants to your fleſh, as thoſe that cannot deny its eaſe; and you will further the mortification of all fleſhly luſts and deſires, which are fed by eaſe and idleneſs. 2. You will keep out idle thoughts from your mind, which ſwarm in the minds of idle perſons. 3. You will ſcape the loſs of precious Time, which idle perſons are daily guilty of. 4. You will be in a courſe of obedience to God, when the ſlothful are in a conſtant ſin of omiſſion. 5. You may have the more time to ſpare for holy exerciſes, if you follow your labour cloſe when you are at it, when idle perſons can have no time for Prayer or reading, becauſe they loſe it by loitering at their work, and leave their buſineſs ſtill behind hand. 6. You may expect Gods bleſſing for the comfortable proviſion for your ſelves and families, and to have to give to them that need, when the ſlothful are in want themſelves, and caſt by their want into abundance of temptations, and have nothing to do good with. 7. And it will alſo tend to the health of your bodies, which will make them the fitter for the ſervice of your Souls. When ſlothfulneſs waſteth time, and health, and eſtate, and wit, and grace, and all.

Eph. 4. 28. Prov. 10. 4, 5. 12. 24, 27. & 13. 4. & 21. 5. & 22. 29. & 18. 9. & 21. 25. & 24. 30.

§. 9. Direct. 9. Be throughly acquainted with your Corruptions and Temptations, and watch againſt them all the day; eſpecially the moſt dangerous ſort of your Corruptions, and thoſe Temptations which your Company or Buſineſs will unavoidably lay before you. Be ſtill watching and working againſt the maſter radical ſins of Unbelief, Hypocriſy, Selfiſhneſs, Pride, Senſuality, or Fleſh-pleaſing, and the inordinate love of Earthly things. Take heed, leſt under pretence of diligence, in your Calling, you be drawn to Earthly mindedneſs, and exceſſive cares or covetous deſigns for riſing in the World. If you are to trade or deal with others, take heed of Selfiſhneſs, which deſireth to draw or ſave from others, as much as you can for your ſelves and your own advantage; take heed of all that favoureth of Injuſtice or Uncharitableneſs in all your dealings with others. If you converſe with vain-talkers; be ſtill provided againſt the temptation of vanity of talk. If you converſe with angry perſons, be ſtill fortified againſt their provocations. If you converſe with wanton perſons, or ſuch as are tempting thoſe of the other Sex, maintain that modeſty and neceſſary diſtance and cleanneſs of ſpeech which the Laws of Chaſtity require. If you have ſervants that are ſtill faulty, be ſo provided againſt the temptation, that their faults may not make you faulty, and you may do nothing that is unſeemly or unjuſt, but only that which tendeth to their Amendment. If you are poor, be ſtill provided againſt the Temptations of Poverty, that it bring not upon you an evil far greater than it ſelf; if you are Rich, be moſt diligent in fortifying your hearts againſt thoſe more dangerous temptations of Riches, which very few eſcape. If you converſe with flatterers or thoſe that much admire you, be fortified againſt ſwelling Pride: If you converſe with thoſe that deſpiſe and injure you, be fortified againſt impatient revengeful Pride. Theſe works at firſt will be very difficult, while ſin is in any ſtrength; but when you have got an habitual Apprehenſion of the poiſonous danger of every one of theſe ſins, and of the tendency of all Temptations, your hearts will readily and eaſily avoid them, without much tiring, thoughtfulneſs and care; even as a man will paſs by a Houſe infected with the Plague, or go out of the way, if he meet a Cart or any thing that would hurt him.

Dir. 9. Antequam dimittas quid exeat, quid acturus ſit, apud ſe pertractet. Rurſus cum redierit, quid egerit, recogitet. Cleobulus in Laert. p. 59.

§. 10. Direct. 10. When you are alone in your labours, improve the time in practical fruitful (not ſpeculative and barren) meditations: eſpecially in Heart-work and Heaven-work: Let your chiefeſt meditations be on the Infinite Goodneſs and perfections of God, and the life of Glory, which in the Love and praiſe of him you muſt live for ever: And next, let Chriſt and the myſteries of Grace in mans Redemption, be the matter of your Thoughts; And next that your own hearts and lives, and the reſt before expreſſed, Chap. 16. Dir. 6. §. 8. If you are able to manage meditations methodically it will be beſt; But if you cannot do that, without ſo much ſtriving as will confound you, and diſtract you, and caſt you into Melancholy, it is better let your Meditations be more ſhort and eaſy, like ejaculatory prayers;

Dir. 10.

ers; but let them usually be operative to do some good upon your hearts.

Dir. 11. §. 11. Direct. 11. If you labour in company with others, be provided with Matter, Skill, Resolution and Zeal, to improve the time in profitable conference, and to avoid diversions, as is Directed, Chap. 16.

Dir. 12. §. 12. Direct. 12. Whatever you are doing, in company or alone, let the day be spent in the inward excitation and exercise of the Graces of the Soul, as well as in external bodily duties. And to that end know, that there is no external duty, but must have some internal grace to animate it, or else it is but an image or carkass, and unacceptable to God. When you are praying and reading, there are the Graces of Faith, Desire, Love, Repentance, &c. to be exercised there: when you are alone, Meditation may help to actuate any Grace as you find most needful: when you are conferring with others, you must exercise Love to them, and Love to that truth about which you do confer, and other Graces as the subject shall require. When you are provoked or under suffering you have patience to exercise. But especially it must be your principal daily business, by the exercise of Faith to keep your hearts warm in the Love of God and your dear Redeemer, and in the hopes and delightful thoughts of Heaven. As the means are various and admit of deliberation and choice, because they are to be used but as means, and not all at once, but sometimes one, and sometimes another, when the End is still the same and past Deliberation or choice: so all those Graces which are but means must be used thus variously and with deliberation and choice; when the Love of God and of eternal life must be the constant tenour and constitution of the mind, as being the final Grace, which consisteth with the exercise of every other mediate grace. Never take up with lip-labour or bodily exercise alone, nor barren thoughts, unless your Hearts be also employed in a course of duty, and holy breathings after God, or motion towards him, or in the sincere internal part of the duty which you perform to men: JUSTICE and LOVE are Graces which you must still exercise towards all that you have to deal with in the world. LOVE is called the fulfilling of the Law, Rom. 13. 10. because the LOVE of God and man is the soul of every outward duty, and a cause that will bring forth these as its effects.

Dir. 13. §. 13. Direct. 13. Keep up a high esteem of Time; and be every day more careful that you lose none of your Time, than you are that you lose none of your Gold or Silver: And if vain recreations, dressings, feastings, idle talk, unprofitable company, or sleep, be any of them Temptations to rob you of any of your Time, accordingly heighten your watchfulness and firm resolutions against them. Be not more careful to escape Thieves and Robbers, than to escape that person or action or course of life, that would rob you of any of your Time. And for the Redeeming of Time especially see, not only that you be never idle, but also that you be doing the Greatest Good that you can do, and prefer not a less before a Greater.

Dir. 14. §. 14. Direct. 14. Eat and drink with temperance, and thankfulness: for health and not for unprofitable pleasure. For quantity most carefully avoid excess; For many exceed for one that taketh too little. Never please your appetite in meat or drink, when it tendeth to the detriment of your health. Prov. 31. 4, 6. It is not for Kings to drink Wine, nor for Princes strong drink—Give strong drink to him that is ready to perish, and wine to those that be of heavy hearts Eccles. 10. 16, 17. Wo to thee O Land when thy King is a Child, and thy Princes eat in the morning. Blessed art thou O Land, when thy King is the Son of Nobles, and thy Princes eat in due season, for strength and not for drunkenness. Then must poorer men also take heed of intemperance and excess. Let your diet incline rather to the coarser than the finer sort, and to the cheaper than the costly sort, and to sparing abstinence than to fulness. I would advise rich men especially, to write in great letters on the walls of their Dining-rooms or Parlours these two sentences: Ezek. 16. 49. BEHOLD THIS WAS THE INIQUITY OF SODOM; PRIDE, FULNESS OF BREAD and ABUNDANCE OF IDLENESS WAS IN HER, neither did she strengthen the hand of the poor, and needy. Luk. 16. 19, 25. There was a certain Rich man which was CLOATHED IN PURPLE and SILK and FARED SUMPTUOUSLY *every day—Son remember that thou in thy life time receivedst thy good things. Paul wept when he mentioned them, whose end is destruction, whose God is their belly, and whose glory is in their shame, who mind earthly things, being enemies to the Cross, Phil. 3. 18, 19. O live not after the flesh, left ye die, Rom. 8. 13. Gal. 6. 8. and 5. 21, 23, 24. * See Mr. Poole's Annotat

§. 15. Direct. 15. If any temptation prevail against you, and you fall into any sins besides common infirmities, presently lament it, and confess not only to God, but to men, when confession conduceth more to good than harm; and raise by a true and thro' repentance, immediately without delay. Spare not the flesh, and dawb not over the breach, and do not by excuses palliate the sore, but speedily rise whatever it cost: For it will certainly cost you more to go on or to remain impenitent. And for your ordinary Infirmities, make not too light of them, but confess them, and daily strive against them; and examine what strength you get against them, and do not aggravate them by impenitence and contempt. Dir. 15

§. 16. Direct. 16. Every day look to the special duties of your several Relations: Whether you are Husbands, Wives, Parents, Children, Masters, Servants, Pastors, People, Magistrates, Subjects, remember that every Relation hath its special duty, and its advantage for the doing of some good; and that God requireth your faithfulness in these, as well as in any other duty. And that in these a mans sincerity or hypocrisie is usually more tried, than in any other parts of our lives. Dir. 16.

§. 17. Direct. 17. In the Evening return to the worshipping of God, in the family and in secret as was directed for the morning. And do all with seriousness as in the sight of God, and in the sense of your necessities; and make it your delight to receive instructions from the holy Scripture, and praise God, and call upon his name through Christ. Dir. 17.

§. 18. Direct. 18. If you have any extraordinary impediments one day to hinder you in your duty to God and man, make it up by diligence the next; and if you have any extraordinary helps, make use of them, and let them not overslip you. As if it be a Lecture-day, or a Funeral Sermon, or you have opportunity of converse with Men of extraordinary worth; or if it be a day of humiliation or thanksgiving; it may be expected that you gather a double measure of strength by such extraordinary helps. Dir. 18.

§. 19. Direct. 19. Before you betake your selves to sleep, it is ordinarily a safe and needful course, to take a review of the Actions and Mercies of the past day; that you may be specially thankful for all special mercies, and humbled for your sins, and may renew your repentance and resolutions for obedience; and may examine your selves, whether your souls grow better or worse, and whether sin go down, and grace increase, and whether you are any better prepared for suffering and death. But yet waste not too much time in the ordinary accounts of your life, as those that neglect their duty while they are examining themselves how they perform it, and perplexing themselves with the long perusal of their ordinary Infirmities. But by- Dir. 19.

a general (yet ſincere) repentance, bewail your unavoidable daily failings, and have recourſe to Chriſt for a daily pardon and renewed grace; and in caſe of extraordinary ſins or mercies, be ſure to be extraordinarily humbled or thankful: Some think it beſt to keep a daily Catalogue or Diurnal of their ſins and mercies. If you do ſo, be not too particular in the enumeration of thoſe that are the matter of every days return; for it will be but a temptation to waſte your time, and neglect greater duty, and to make you grow cuſtomary and ſenſeleſs of ſuch ſins and mercies, when the ſame come to be recited over and over from day to day. But let the common mercies be more generally recorded, and the common ſins generally confeſſed (yet neither of them therefore ſlighted:) and let the extraordinary mercies, and greater ſins, have a more particular obſervation. And yet remember, that ſins and mercies, which it is not fit that others be acquainted with, are ſafelier committed to memory, than to writing: And methinks a well humbled and a thankful heart, ſhould not eaſily let the memory of them ſlip.

Dir. 20. §. 20. Direct. 20. When you compoſe your ſelves to ſleep, again commit your ſelves to God through Chriſt, and crave his protection, and cloſe up the day with ſome holy exerciſe of Faith and Love: And if you are perſons that muſt needs lie waking in the night, let your meditations be holy, and exerciſed upon that ſubject that is profitableſt to your ſouls. But I cannot give this as an ordinary Direction, becauſe that the Body muſt have ſleep, or elſe it will be unfit for labour, and all thoughts of holy things muſt be ſerious; and all ſerious thoughts will hinder ſleep, and thoſe that wake in the night, do wake unwillingly, and would not put themſelves out of hopes of ſleep, which ſuch ſerious meditations would do. Nor can I adviſe you (ordinarily) to riſe in the night to prayer, as the Papiſts Votaries do. For this is but to ſerve God with irrational and hurtful ceremony: (And it is a wonder how far ſuch men will go in Ceremony; that will not be drawn to a life of Love and ſpiritual Worſhip!) Unleſs Men did irrationally place the ſervice of God in praying this hour rather than another, they might ſee how improvidently and ſinfully they loſe their time; in twice dreſſing and undreſſing, and in the Intervals of their ſleep, when they might ſpare all that time, by ſitting up the longer, or riſing the earlier, for the ſame Employment. Beſides what tendency it hath to the deſtruction of health, by cold and interruption of neceſſary reſt; when God approveth not of the diſabling of the body, or deſtroying our health, or ſhortning life (no more than of murder or cruelty to others,) but only calleth us to deny our unneceſſary ſenſual Delights, and uſe the Body ſo as it may be moſt ſerviceable to the ſoul and him.

I have briefly laid together theſe twenty Directions for the right ſpending of every day, that thoſe that need them, and cannot remember the larger more particular Directions, may at leaſt get theſe few engraven on their minds, and make them the daily practice of their lives; which if you will ſincerely do, you cannot conceive how much it will conduce to the holineſs, fruitfulneſs and quietneſs of your lives, and to your peaceful and comfortable death.

CHAP. XVIII.

Tit. 1. Directions for the holy ſpending of the LORDS DAY in FAMILIES.

Dir. 1. Since the writing of this, I have publiſhed a Treatiſe of the Lords-day.

§. 1. Direct. 1. BE well reſolved againſt the Cavils of thoſe carnal Men, that would make you believe, that the holy ſpending of the Lords Day is a needleſs thing: For the Name whether it ſhall be called The Chriſtian Sabbath, is not much worth contending about: Undoubtedly the Name of The Lords Day, is that which was given it by the Spirit of God, Rev. 1. 10. and the antient Chriſtians, who ſometimes called it, The Sabbath, by alluſion, as they uſed the names, Sacrifice and Altar. The queſtion is not ſo much of the Name as the Thing; whether we ought to ſpend the day in holy exerciſes, without unneceſſary Divertiſements? And to ſettle your Conſciences in this, you have all theſe Evidences at hand.

§. 2. 1. By the confeſſion of all, you have the Law of Nature to tell you, that God muſt be openly worſhipped, and that ſome ſet time ſhould be appointed for his Worſhip; And, whether the fourth Commandment be formally in force or abrogated, yet it is commonly agreed on that the Parity of reaſon and general equity of it ſerveth to acquaint us, that it is the will of God, that one day in ſeven be the leaſt that we deſtinate to this uſe; this being then judged a meet proportion by God himſelf (even from the Creation, and on the account of commemorating the Creation) and Chriſtians being no leſs obliged to take as large a ſpace of time, who have both the Creation and Redemption to commemorate, and a more excellent manner of Worſhip to perform.

§. 3. 2. It is confeſſed by all Chriſtians, that Chriſt roſe on the firſt day of the Week, and appeared to his congregated Diſciples on that day, and poured out the Holy Ghoſt upon them on that day, and that the Apoſtles appointed, and the Chriſtian Churches obſerved their aſſemblies and communion ordinarily on that day; And that theſe Apoſtles were filled with the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, that they might infallibly acquaint the Church with the Doctrine and Will of Jeſus Chriſt, and leave it on record for ſucceeding ages; and ſo were entruſted by Office, and enabled by gifts, to ſettle the Orders of the Goſpel-Church, as Moſes did the matters of the Tabernacle and Worſhip then; and ſo that their Laws or Orders thus ſetled, were the Laws or Orders of the Holy Ghoſt, Joh. 20. 1. 19, 26. Act. 2. 1. Act. 20. 7. 1 Cor. 16. 1, 2. Rev. 1. 10. Matth. 28. 19, 20. Joh. 16. 13, 14, 15. Rom. 16. 16. 2 Theſ. 2. 15. Mark 16. 2, 9. Luke 24. 1.

§. 4. 3. It is alſo confeſſed, that the Univerſal Church from the days of the Apoſtles down till now hath conſtantly kept holy the Lords Day in the memorial of Chriſts Reſurrection, and that as by the will of Chriſt delivered to them by or from the Apoſtles; In ſo much that I remember not either any Orthodox Chriſtian, or Heretick, that ever oppoſed, queſtioned or ſcrupled it, till of late ages. And as a hiſtorical diſcovery of the matter of fact, this is a good evidence that indeed it was ſettled by the Apoſtles; and conſequently by Chriſt who gave them their Commiſſion, and inſpired them by the Holy Ghoſt.

§. 5. 4. It is confeſſed, that it is ſtill the practice of the Univerſal Church; and thoſe that take it to be but of Eccleſiaſtical appointment, ſome of them mean it of ſuch extraordinary Eccleſiaſticks as inſpired Apoſtles, and all of them take the appointment as obligatory to all the Members of the Church.

§. 6. 5. The Laws of the Land where we live command it, and the King by Proclamation urgeth the execution; and the Canons, and Homilies, and Liturgy ſhew that the holy obſervation of the Lords Day, is the Judgment and Will of the Governours of the Church. Read the Homilies for the Time and place of Worſhip. Yea, they require the People to ſay when the fourth Commandment is read [Lord have mercy upon us, and encline our hearts to keep this Law.] And the Command of Authority is not a contemptible Obligation.

§. 7. 6. It is granted by all, that more than this is due to God, and the life that is in every Christian telleth him, that it is a very great mercy to us; not only to servants, but even to all men, that one day in seven they may disburden themselves of all the cares and business of the world, which may hinder their holy communion with God and one another; and wholly apply themselves to learn the Will of God. And nature teacheth us to accept of mercy when it is offered to us, and not dispute against our happiness.

§. 8. 7. Common experience telleth us, That where the Lords day is more holily and carefully observed, Knowledge and Religion prosper best; and that more souls are converted on those days, than on all the other days besides; and that the people are accordingly more edified: And that where ever the Lords Day is ordinarily neglected, or mispent, Religion and Civility decay, and there is a visible lamentable difference between those places and families, and the other.

§. 9. 8. Reason and experience telleth us, that if men were left to themselves, what Time they should appoint for Gods publick Worship: in most places it would be so little, and disordered, and uncertain, that Religion would be for the most part banished out of the now Christian World. Therefore there being need of an Universal Law for it, it is probable that such a Law there is; And if so, it can be by none but God, the Creator, Redeemer and Holy Ghost, there being no other Universal Governour and Law giver to impose it.

§. 10. 9. All must confess, that it is more desirable for Unity and Concord sake, that all Christians hold their holy Assemblies on one and the same day, and that all at once thro' all the World do worship God and seek his Grace, than that they do it some on one day, and some on another.

§. 11. 10. And all that ever I have conversed with, confess, that if the holy spending of the Lords Day be not necessary, it is lawful; and therefore when there is so much to be said for the Necessity of it too, to keep it holy is the safest way; seeing this cannot be a sin, but the contrary may; and Licence is encouragement enough to accept so great a mercy. All this set together will satisfy a man, that hath any spiritual sense of the Concernments of his own and others souls.

Object. §. 12. Object. But you will say, That besides the name, it is yet a controversie whether the whole day should be spent in holy exercises, or only so much as is meet for the Publick Communion, it being not found in antiquity, that the Churches used any further to observe it.

Answ. Answ. No sober man denieth that works of necessity for the preservation of our own or other mens lives, or health, or goods may be done on the Lords Day: so that when we say that the whole day is to be spent holily, we exclude not eating and sleeping, nor the necessary actions about Worship; as the Priests in the Temple are said to break the Sabbath (that is, the external rest) and to be blameless. But otherwise, that it is the whole day is evident in the Arguments produced: The Antient Histories and Canons of the Church speak not of one part of the day only, but the whole: All confess, that when Labour or sinful sports are forbidden, it is on the whole day, and not only on a part. And for what is alledged of the custom of the antient Church, I answer, 1. The ancientest Churches spent almost all the day in publick Worship and Communion: They begun in the morning, and continued without parting till the evening: The first part of the day being spent in teaching the Catechumens, they were then dismissed, and the Church continued together in preaching and praying, but especially in those laudatory Eucharistical Offices which accompany the celebration of the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ. They did not then, (as Gluttons do now) account it fasting to forbear a Dinner, when they supped, yea, feasted at night: It being not usual among the Romans to eat any dinners at all. And they that spent all the day together in publick Worship and Communion, you may be sure spent not part of it in Dancing, nor Stage-plays, nor worldly businesses. 2. And Church History giveth us but little account what particular Persons did in private, nor can it be expected. 3. Who hath brought us any proof that ever the Church approved of spending any part of the Day in sports, or idleness, or unnecessary worldly business? Or that any Churches (or persons regardable) did actually so spend it? 4. Unless their proof be from those many Canons of our own and other Churches that command the holy observation of it, and forbid these Plays and Labours on it; which I confess doth intimate, that some there were that needed Laws to restrain them from the violation of it. 5. Again I say, that seeing few Men will have the faces to say that plays and games, or idleness are a duty on that day, it will suffice a holy thankful Christian, if he have but leave, to spend all the day for the good of his Soul and those about him; and if he may be reading and meditating on the Word of God, and Praying and Praising him, and instructing his Family, while others waste that time in vanity; especially to servants and poor men that have but little other leisure all the year, to seek for knowledge, or use any such helps for their salvation. As to a poor man that is kept hungry all the Week, a bare liberty of feasting with his Landlord on the Lords day, would satisfie him without a Law to constrain him to it; so is it here with a hungry soul.

§. 2. Direct. 2. Remember that the Work of the day is, in general, to keep up Knowledge and Religion in the World, and to own and honour our Creator, Redeemer and Regenerator openly before all; and to have communion with God thro' Christ in the Spirit, by receiving and Exercising his Grace, in order to our Communion with him in Glory. Let these therefore (well understood) be your Ends, and in these be you exercised all the day, and stick not hypocritically on bodily rest and outward duties. Remember that it is a day for heart-work, as well as for the Exercise of the tongue, and ear, and knees; and that your principal Business is with Heaven: Follow your hearts therefore all the day, and see that they be not idle while your Bodies are exercised: Nothing is done if the Heart do nothing. Dir. 2.

§. 3. Direct. 3. Remember that the special work of the day is to celebrate the memorial of Christs Resurrection, and of the whole Work of Mans Redemption by him: Labour therefore with all diligence in the sense of your natural sin and misery, to stir up the lively sense of the wonderful Love of God and our Redeemer, and to spend all the day in the special exercises of Faith and Love: And seeing it is the Christian weekly Festival, or day of Thanksgiving for the greatest mercy in the world, spend it as a day of Thanksgiving should be spent, especially in Joyful Praises of our Lord; and let the humbling and instructing exercises of the Day, be all subordinate to these laudatory exercises. I know that much time must be spent in teaching and warning the ignorant and ungodly, because their poverty and labours hinder them from other such opportunities, and we must speak to them then or not at all: But if it were not for their meer necessity, and if we could as well speak to them other days of the Week, the Churches should spend all the Lords Day in such praises and thanksgivings as are suitable to the Ends of the Institution. But seeing that cannot be expected, methinks it is desirable that the antient Custom of the Churches Dir. 3.

were

were more imitated, and the morning Sermon being ſuited to the ſtate of the more ignorant and unconverted, that the reſt of the Day were ſpent in the exerciſes of Thankſgiving to the Joy and Encouragement of believers, and in doctrine ſuited to their ſtate. And yet I muſt add, that a skilful Preacher will do both together, and ſo declare the Love and Grace of our Redeemer, as by a meet application may both draw in the ungodly, and comfort thoſe that are already ſanctified, and raiſe their hearts in praiſe to God.

Dir. 4. §. 4. Direct. 4. Remember that the Lords day is appointed ſpecially for publick worſhip, and perſonal Communion of the Churches therein: ſee therefore that you ſpend as much of the day as you can in this publick worſhip and Church-communion; eſpecially in the celebration of that Sacrament which is appointed for the Memorial of the Death of Chriſt until his coming, 1 Cor. 11. 25, 26. This Sacrament in the Primitive Church was celebrated every Lords day; yea and oftner; even ordinarily on every other day of the week when the Churches aſſembled for Communion. And it might be ſo now without any hinderance to Preaching or Prayer, if all things were ordered as they ſhould be; for thoſe Prayers, and inſtructions, and exhortations which are moſt ſuited to this Euchariſtical action, would be the moſt ſuitable Prayers and Sermons for the Church on the Lords days. In the mean time ſee that ſo much of the day as is ſpent in Church-communion and publick worſhip, be accordingly improved by you; and be not at that time about your ſecret or family ſervices, but take only thoſe hours for ſuch private duties, in which the Church is not aſſembled; and remember how much the Love of Saints is to be exerciſed in this Communion, and therefore labour to keep alive that Love, without which no Man can celebrate the Lords day according to the end of the inſtitution.

Dir. 5 §. 5. Direct. 5. Underſtand how great a mercy it is, that you have leave thus to wait upon God for the receiving and exerciſe of grace, and to caſt off the diſtracting thoughts and buſineſſes of the world, and what an opportunity is put into your hand, to get more in one day, than this World can afford you all your lives: And therefore come with gladneſs as to the receiving of ſo great a mercy, and with deſire after it, and with hope to ſpeed, and not with unwillingneſs as to an unpleaſant task, as carnal hearts that Love not God, or his Grace or Service, and are aweary of all they do, and glad when it is done, as the Ox that is unyoaked. Iſa. 58. 13, 14. If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleaſure on my holy day, and call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honourable; and ſhalt honour him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own Pleaſure, nor ſpeaking thine own words, then ſhalt thou delight thy ſelf in the Lord—— The affection that you have to the Lords day, much ſheweth the temper of the heart: A holy perſon is glad when it cometh, as loving it for the holy exerciſes of the day; A wicked carnal heart is glad of it only for his carnal eaſe, but weary of the ſpiritual duties.

Dir. 6. §. 6. Direct. 6. Avoid both the extreams of Prophaneneſs and Superſtition in the point of your external reſt: And to that end, Obſerve, 1. That the work is not for the day, but the day for the holy work: As Chriſt ſaith, Mark 2. 27. The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath. It is appointed for our good, and not for our hurt. 2. The outward reſt is not appointed for it ſelf, but as a means to the freedom of the mind for inward and ſpiritual employments: And therefore all thoſe outward and common Labours and Diſcourſes are unlawful, which any way diſtract the mind, and hinder either our outward or inward attendance upon God, and our edification. 3. And (whatever it was to the Jews) no common Words or Actions are unlawful, which are no hinderance to this communion and worſhip and ſpiritual edification. 4 Yea thoſe things that are neceſſary to the ſupport of nature, and the ſaving of the Life or health or eſtate and goods of our ſelves or our neighbours are needful duties on that day: Not all thoſe works which are truly charitable (for it may be a work of mercy to build Hoſpitals, or make Garments for the poor, or Till their ground) but ſuch works of mercy as cannot be put off to another Day, and ſuch as hinder not the Duties of the Day. 5. The ſame Word or action on the Lords day which is unlawful to one man, may be lawful to another; as being no hinderance, yea a duty to him: As Chriſt ſaith, The Prieſts in the Temple break or prophane the Sabbath (that is, the outward reſt, but not the command) and are blameleſs, Matth. 12. 15. And the Cook may lawfully be employed in dreſſing meat, when it were a ſin in another to do it voluntarily without need. 6. The Lords day being to be kept as a Day of Thankſgiving, the Dreſſing of ſuch Meat as is fit for a Day of Thankſgiving is not to be ſcrupled: The Primitive Chriſtians in the Apoſtles time, had their Love-feaſts conſtantly (with the Lords Supper or after) on the Evening of the day. And they could not feaſt without dreſſing meat. 7. Yet that which is lawful in it ſelf, muſt be ſo done as conſiſteth with care and compaſſion of the ſouls of ſervants that are employed about it, that they may be deprived of no more of their ſpiritual benefit than needs. 8. Alſo that which is lawful muſt ſometimes be forborn, when it may by ſcandal tempt others that are looſe or weak, to do that which is unlawful: not that the meer diſpleaſing of the erroneous ſhould put us out of the right way, but the ſcandal which is ſpoken againſt in Scripture, is the laying a Temptation before men that are weak to make them ſin. 9. Take heed of that hypocritical and cenſorious temper which turneth the holy obſervation of the day, into a Ceremonious abſtinence from lawful things; and cenſureth thoſe as ungodly that are not of the ſame mind, and forbear not ſuch things as well as they. Mark the difference between Chriſt and the Phariſees in this point: Much of their contention with him was about the outward obſervation of the Sabbath; becauſe his diſciples rubbed out Corn to eat on the Sabbath day, and becauſe he healed on the Sabbath, and bid the healed man, Take up his Bed and walk: And they ſaid, There are ſix days in which men ought to work; they might come and be healed on them. Luk. 6. 1, 5, 6. & 13. 12, 14, 15, 16. Joh. 5. 17, 18. Mark 1. 21, 24. & 2. 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28. & 3. 2, 3, 5. & 6. 2, 5. Luk. 14. 1, 3, 5, 6. Joh. 5. 9, 10, 16. & 7. 22, 23, 24. & 9. 14, 16. And a man that is of their ſpirit will think that the Phariſees were in the right: No doubt Chriſt might have choſen another Day to heal on; But he knew that the Works which moſt declared the Power of God, and honoured him before all, and confirmed the Goſpel, were fitteſt for the Sabbath-Day. Take heed therefore of the Phariſees Ceremoniouſneſs and Cenſoriouſneſs. If you ſee a Man walking abroad on the Lords day, cenſure him not till you know that he doth it from prophaneneſs or negligence: You know not but it may be neceſſary to his health, and he may improve it in holy meditation? If you hear ſome ſpeak a Word more than you think needful, of common things, or do more about meat and cloathing than you think meet; cenſure them not till you hear their reaſon. A ſcrupulouſneſs about ſuch outward obſervances, when the holy duties of the day are no whit hindred by that thing; and a cenſoriouſneſs towards thoſe that are not as ſcrupulous, is too Phariſaical and Ceremonious a Religion gion for ſpiritual charitable Chriſtians. And the extreams of ſome Godly People in this kind, have occaſioned the Quakers and Seekers to take and uſe all days alike, and the prophane to contemn the ſanctifying of the Lords day.

Tit. 2. More particular Directions for the order of holy Duties.

Dir. 1. §. 1. Direct. 1. REmember the Lords day before it cometh, and prepare for it, and prevent thoſe diſturbances that would hinder you and deprive you of the benefit: For Preparation: 1. Six days you muſt labour and do all that you have to do: Diſpatch all your buſineſs, that you may not have it then to hinder and diſturb you; and ſee that your Servants do the ſame. 2. Shake off the thoughts of worldly things, and clear your minds of worldly delights and cares. 3. Call to mind the doctrine taught you the laſt Lords day, (and if you have Servants, cauſe them to remember it) that you may be prepared to receive the next. 4. Go ſeaſonably to Bed, that you and your Servants may not be conſtrained to lie long the next morning, or be ſleepy on the Lords day. 5. Let your meditations be preparatory for the day. Repent of the ſins of the week paſt as particularly and ſeriouſly as you can; and ſeek for pardon and peace thro' Chriſt, that you come not with guilt or trouble upon your Conſciences before the Lord.

Dir. 2. §. 2. Direct. 2. Let your firſt thoughts be not only Holy, but ſuitable to the occaſions of the day. With gladneſs remember what a day of mercies you awake to, and how early your Redeemer roſe from the dead that day, and what excellent work you are to be employed in.

Dir. 3. §. 3. Direct. 3. Riſe full as early that day as you do on other days. Be not like the carnal generation, that ſanctifie the Lords day but as a Swine doth, by ſleeping, and idleneſs and fulneſs. Think not your worldly buſineſs more worthy of your early riſing, than your ſpiritual employment is.

Dir. 4. §. 4. Direct. 4. Let your dreſſing time be ſpent in ſome fruitful meditation, or conference, or hearing ſome one read a Chapter: And let it not be long to detain you from your duty.

Dir. 5. §. 5. Direct. 5. If you can have leiſure, go firſt to ſecret prayer: And if you are Servants or have any neceſſary buſineſs to do, diſpatch it quickly, that you may be free for better work.

Dir. 6. §. 6. Direct. 6. Let Family worſhip come next, and not be ſlubbered over ſlightly, but be ſerious and reverent, and ſuit all to the nature or end of the day. Eſpecially awaken your ſelves and Servants to conſider what you have to do in publick, and to go with prepared ſanctified hearts

Dir. 7. §. 7. Direct. 7. Enter the holy Aſſembly with reverence and joy, and compoſe your ſelves as thoſe that come thither to treat with the living God, about the matters of eternal life. And watch your hearts that they wander not, nor ſleep not, nor ſligth the ſacred matters which you are about. And guard your eyes, that they carry not away your hearts; and let not your hearts be a moment idle, but ſeriouſly employed all the time: And when hypocrites and diſtempered Chriſtians are quarrelling with the imperfections of the Speaker, or Congregation, or Mode of Worſhip, do you rather make it your diligent endeavour, to watch your hearts, and improve what you hear.

Dir. 8. §. 8. Direct. 8. As ſoon as you come home, while dinner is preparing, it will be a ſeaſonable time, either for ſecret prayer or meditation, to call over what you heard, and urge it on your hearts, and beg Gods help for the improvement of it, and pardon for your publick failings.

Dir. 9. §. 9. Direct. 9. Let your time at meat be ſpent in the chearful remembrance or mention of the Love of your Redeemer; or ſomewhat ſuitable to the company and the day.

Dir. 10. §. 10. Direct. 10. After dinner call your Families together, and ſing a Pſalm of Praiſe, and by examination or repetition, or both, cauſe them to remember what was publickly taught them.

Dir. 11. §. 11. Direct. 11. Then go again to the Congregation (to the beginning) and behave your ſelves as before.

Dir. 12. §. 12. Direct. 12. When you come home call your Families together, and firſt crave Gods aſſiſtance and acceptance; and then ſing a Pſalm of Praiſe; and then repeat the Sermon which you heard; or if there was none, read one out of ſome lively profitable Book; and then Pray and Praiſe God; and all with the holy ſerioufneſs and joy which is ſuitable to the work and day.

Dir. 13. §. 13. Direct. 13. Then while Supper is preparing, betake your ſelves to ſecret prayer and meditation; either in your Chambers or walking, as you find moſt profitable: Aud let your Servants, have no more to hinder them from the ſame priviledge, than what is of Neceſſity.

Dir. 14. §. 14. Direct. 14. At Supper ſpend the time as is aforeſaid (at Dinner:) Always remembring that tho' it be a day of Thankſgiving, it is not a day of gluttony, and that you muſt not uſe too full a diet, leſt it make you heavy, and drowſie, and unfit for holy duty.

Dir. 15. §. 15. Direct. 15. After Supper examine your Children and Servants what they have learnt all day, and ſing a Pſalm of praiſe, and conclude with prayer and thanksgiving.

Dir. 16. §. 16. Direct. 16. If there be time after, both you and they may in ſecret review the duties, and mercies, and failings of the day, and recommend your ſelves by Prayer into the hands of God for the night following: and ſo betake your ſelves to your reſt.

Dir. 17. §. 17. Direct. 17. And to ſhut up all, let your laſt thoughts be holy, in the thankful ſenſe of the mercy you have received, and the goodneſs of God revealed by our Mediator, and comfortably truſting your Souls and Bodies into his hands, and longing for your nearer approach unto his Glory, and the beholding and full enjoying of him for ever.

§. 18. I have briefly named this order of duties, for the memory of thoſe that have opportunity to obſerve it: But if any mans place and condition deny him opportunity for ſome of theſe, he muſt do what he can: but ſee, that carnal negligence cauſe not his omiſſion. And now I appeal to Reaſon, Conſcience and Experience, whether this employment be not more ſuitable to the principles, ends and hopes of a Chriſtian, than idleneſs, or vain talk, or Cards, or Dice, or Dancing, or Ale-houſe haunting, or worldly buſineſs or diſcourſe? And whether this would not exceedingly conduce to the increaſe of Knowledge, Holineſs and Honeſty? And whether there be ever a worldling or voluptuous ſenſualiſt of them all, that had not rather be found thus at death; or look back when time is paſt and gone, upon the Lords day thus ſpent, than as idle, fleſhly, and ungodly ſpend them?

CHAP. XIX.

Directions for profitable Hearing the WORD Preached.

OMitting thoſe Directions which concern the external modes of Worſhip (for the Reaſons mentioned Tom. 2. and known to all that know me and the time and place I live in) I ſhall give you ſuch Directions about the perſonal internal management of your duty, as I think moſt neceſſary to your Edification. And ſeeing that your Duty and benefit lieth in these four General points. 1. That you hear with understanding. 2. That you Remember what you hear. 3. That you be duly affected with it. 4. And that you sincerely practise it; I shall more particularly Direct you in order to all these ends and duties.

Tit. 1. Directions for the Understanding the Word which you hear.

Dir. 1. §. 1. Direct. 1. READ and Meditate on the Holy Scriptures much in private, and then you will be the better able to understand what is Preached on it in publick, and to try the doctrine whether it be of God. Whereas if you are unacquainted with the Scriptures, all that is treated of or alledged from them, will be so strange to you, that you will be but little edified by it, Psal. 1. 2. Psal. 119. Deut. 6. 11, 12.

Dir. 2. §. 2. Direct. 2. Live under the clearest, distinct, convincing teaching, that possibly you can procure. There is an unspeakable difference as to the edification of the hearers, between a judicious, clear, distinct, and skilful Preacher, and one that is ignorant, confused, general dry, and only scrapeth together a Cento or mingle-mangle of some undigested sayings to fill up the hour with. If in Philosophy, Physicks, Grammar, Law, and every Art and Science, there be so great a difference between one Teacher and another, it must needs be so in Divinity also. Ignorant Teachers that understand not what they say themselves, are unlike to make you men of understanding: as Erroneous Teachers are unlike to make you Orthodox and Sound.

Dir. 3. §. 3. Direct. 3. Come not to hear with a careless heart, as if you were to hear a matter that little concerned you, but come with a sense of the unspeakable weight, necessity and consequence of the holy word which you are to hear: and when you understand how much you are concerned in it, and truly Love it, as the word of Life, it will greatly help your Understanding of every particular truth. That which a man Loveth not, and perceiveth no necessity of, he will hear with so little regard and heed, that it will make no considerable impression on his mind. But a good understanding of the Excellency and Necessity, exciting Love and serious attention, would make the particulars easie to be understood; when else you will be like a stopt or narrow mouthed bottle, that keepeth out that which you desire to put in. I know that understanding must go before affections! But yet the understanding of the concernments and worth of your own Souls, must first procure such a serious care of your salvation, and a general regard to the Word of God, as is needful to your further understanding of the particular instructions, which you shall after hear.

Dir. 4. §. 4. Direct. 4. Suffer not vain thoughts or drowsie negligence to hinder your attention. If you mark not what is taught you, how should you understand and learn? Set your selves to it, as for your lives: Be as earnest and diligent in attending and learning, as you would have the Preacher be in Teaching. If a drowsie careless Preacher be bad, a drowsie careless hearer is not good. Saith Moses, Deut. 32. 46. Set your hearts to all the words which I testifie among you this day.— Verse 47. For it is not a vain thing for you, because it is your life— You would have God attentive to your prayers in your distresses; and why will you not then be attentive to his words? When the Prayers of him are abominable to God, that turneth away his ear from hearing the Law, Luke 19. 48. All the people were very attentive to hear Christ, Neh. 8. 3. When Ezra read the Law from morning till mid-day, the ears of all the people were attentive to it. When Paul continued his Lords day exercise, and speech until midnight, one young man that fell asleep, did fall down dead as a warning to them that will sleep, when they should hear the Message of Christ. Therefore you are excused that day from worldly business, that you may attend on the Lord without distraction, 1 Cor. 7. 35. Lydia's attending to the words of Paul, accompanied the opening of her heart and her Conversion, Acts 16. 14.

Prov. 4. 1, 20 & 5. 1. & 7. 24. Neh. 1. 6. 11. Psal. 130. Prov. 28. 9.

§. 5. Direct. 5. Mark specially the design and drift and principal doctrine of the Sermon. Both because that is the chief thing that the Preacher would have marked; and because the understanding of that will much help you to understand all the rest which dependeth on it, and relateth to it. Dir. 6.

§. 6. Direct. 6. Mark most those things which are of greatest weight and concernment to your souls. And do not fix upon some little sayings, and by discourses, or witty sentences, like Children that bring home some scraps and words which they do but play with. Dir. 7.

§. 7. Direct. 7. Learn first your Catechisms at home, and the great Essential points of Religion, contained in the Creed, the Lords Prayer, and the Ten Commandments. And in your hearing, first labour to get a clearer understanding of these; and then the lesser branches which grow out of these, will be the better understood. You can scarce bestow too much care and pains in learning these great essential points. It is the fruitfullest of all your studies. Two things further I here advise you to avoid. 1. The hasty climbing up to smaller points (which some call Higher) before you have well received these, and the receiving of those higher points, independently, without their due respect, to these which they depend upon. 2. The feeding upon dry and barren Controversies, and delighting in the chaff of jingling words, and impertinent unedifying things, or discourses about formalities and circumstances. Dir. 8.

§. 8. Direct. 8. Meditate on what you hear when you come home, till you better understand it, Psal. 1. 2.

§. 9. Direct. 9. Inquire where you doubt, of those that can resolve and teach you. It sheweth a careless mind, and a contempt of the Word of God, in most people and servants, that never come to ask the resolution of one doubt, from one weeks or years end to another, tho' they have Pastors or Masters that have ability, and leisure, and willingness to help them. Mat. 13. Mark 4. 10. When Christ was alone, they that were about him with the Twelve, asked him the meaning of his Parable. Dir. 9.

§. 10. Direct. 10. Read much those holy Books which treat best of the Doctrine which you would understand. Dir. 10.

§. 11. Direct. 11. Pray earnestly for wisdom, and the illumination of the Spirit, Eph. 1. 18. Acts 26. 18. Jam. 1. 5. Dir. 11.

§. 12. Direct. 12. Conscionable practising what you know, is an excellent help to understanding. John 12. 7. 17. Dir. 12.

Tit. 2. Directions for remembring what you Hear.

THat want of Memory, which cometh from Age and decay of Nature, is not to be cured: Nor should any Servant of Christ be overmuch troubled at it; seeing Christ will no more cast off his Servants for that, than he will for age or any sickness: But for that want of memory which is curable, and is a fault, I shall give you these Directions following.

§. 1. Direct. 1. It greatly helpeth Memory to have a full Understanding of the matter spoken, which you would remember. And Ignorance is one of the greatest hinderances to Memory. Common experience telleth you this, how easily you can remember any discourse discourse which you throughly understand (for your very knowledge by invention will revive your memory;) and how hard it is to remember any words which are insignificant, or which we understand not. Therefore labour most for a clear understanding according to the last Directions.

Dir. 2. §. 2. Direct. 2. A deep awakened affection is a very powerful help to memory. We easily remember any thing which our estates or lives lie on, when trifles are neglected and soon forgotten. Therefore labour to get all to your hearts, according to the next following Directions.

Dir. 3. §. 3. Direct. 3. Method is a very great help to memory. Therefore be acquainted with the Preachers method; and then you are put into a path or tract, which you cannot easily go out of. And therefore it is, that Ministers must not only be methodical, and avoid prolix, confused, and involved discourses, and that malicious pride of hiding their method, but must be as oft in the use of the same method, as the subject will bear, and chuse that method which is most easie to the hearers to understand and remember, and labour to make them perceive your tract.

Dir. 4. §. 4. Direct. 4. Numbers are a great help to memory. As if the Reasons, the Uses, the Motives, the Signs, the Directions, be six or seven or eight; when you know just the number, it helpeth you much to remember, which was the first, second, third, &c.

Dir. 5. §. 5. Direct. 5. Names also and signal words are a great help to memory. He may remember one word, that cannot remember all the sentence; and that one word may help him to remember much of the rest. Therefore Preachers should contrive the force of every Reason, Use, Direction, &c. as much as may be into some one emphatical word. (And some do very profitably contrive each of those words to begin with the same Letter, which is good for memory, so it be not too much strained, and put them not upon greater inconveniences:) as if I were to direct you to the chiefest helps to your Salvation, and should name: 1. Powerful Preaching. 2. Prayer. 3. Prudence. 4. Piety. 5. Painfulness. 6. Patience. 7. Perseverance. Though I opened every one of these at large, the very names would help the hearers memory. It is this that maketh Ministers that care more for their peoples Souls, than the pleasing of curious ears, to go in the common road of doctrine, Reasons, Uses, Motives, Helps, &c. and to give their Uses the same titles of Information, Reproof, Exhortation, &c. And yet when the Subject shall direct us to some other method, the hearers must not be offended with us. For one Method will not serve exactly for every Subject, and we must be loth to wrong the Text or Matter.

Dir. 6. §. 6. Direct. 6. It is a great help to memory, often in the time of hearing, to call over and repeat to your selves the names or heads which have been spoken. The mind of man can do two things at once: You may both hear what is said, and recal and repeat to your selves what is past: Not to stand long upon it, but oft and quickly to name over, e. g. The Reasons, Uses, Motives, &c. To me, this hath been (next to Understanding and Affection) the greatest help of any that I have used; for otherwise to hear a head but once, and think of it no more till the Sermon is done, would never serve my turn to keep it.

Dir. 7. §. 7. Direct. 7. Grasp not at more than you are able to hold, lest thereby you lose all. If there be more particulars than you can possibly remember, lay hold on some which most concern you, and let go the rest, perhaps another may rather take up those which you leave behind. Yet say not that it is the Preachers fault to name more than you can carry away: For, 1. Then he must leave out his inlargement much more, and the most of his Sermon, for it is like you leave the most behind. 2. Another may remember more than you. 3. All is not lost when the words are forgotten: For it may breed a habit of Understanding, and promote Resolution, Affection and Practice.

Dir. 8. §. 8. Direct. 8. Writing is an easie help for memory, to those that can use it. Some question whether they should use it, because it hindereth their affection. But that must be differently determined according to the difference of subjects, and of hearers. Some Sermons are all to work upon the affections at present, and the present advantage is to be preferred before the after perusal: But some must more profit us in after digestion and review. And some hearers can write much with ease, and little hinder their affection; and some write so little and are hindered so much, that it recompenceth not their loss. Some know so fully all that is said, that they need no notes; and some that are ignorant need them for perusal.

Dir. 9. §. 9. Direct. 9. Peruse what you remember, or write down, when you come home; and fix it speedily before it is lost; and hear others that can repeat it better. Pray it over, and confer of it with others.

§. 10. Direct. 10. If you forget the very words, yet remember the main drift of all; and get those Resolutions and Affections which they drive at. And then you have not lost the Sermon, though you have lost the words, as he hath not lost his food, that hath digested it, and turned it into Flesh and Blood.

Tit. 3. Directions for holy Resolutions and Affections in Hearing.

THe Understanding and Memory are but the passage to the Heart, and the Practice is but the Expression of the Heart: Therefore how to work upon the Heart is the principal business.

Dir. 1. §. 1. Direct. 1. Live under the most convincing lively serious Preacher that possibly you can. It is a matter of great concernment to all, but especially to dull and senseless hearts. Hearken not to that Earthly generation, that tell you, because God can bless the weakest, and because it is your own fault if you profit not by the weakest, that therefore you should make no difference, but sit down under an ignorant, dumb, or senseless man. Try first whether they had as willingly have a bad servant, or a bad Physician as a good one, because God can bless the labours of the weakest? Try whether they would not have their Children duly reproved or corrected, because it is their own faults that they need it? And whether they would not take Physick after a Surfeit? though it be their own fault that made them sick. It is true, that all our sin is our own fault; but the question is, What is the most effectual cure? What Man that is alive and awake, doth not feel a very great difference between a dead and a lively Preacher?

Dir. 2. §. 2. Direct. 2. Remember that Ministers are the Messengers of Christ, and come to you on his business and in his name. Hear them therefore as his Officers, and as men that have more to do with God himself than with the speaker. It is the phrase of the Holy Ghost, Heb. 4. 13. All things are naked and opened to the eyes of him with whom we have to do. It is God with whom you have to do, and therefore accordingly behave your selves. See Luk. 10. 16. 1 Thes. 4. 8. 1 Cor. 4. 1. 2 Cor. 5. 1

Dir. 3. §. 3. Direct. 3. Remember that this God is instructing you, and warning you, and treating with you about no less than the saving of your Souls. Come therefore to hear as for your Salvation. Can that heart be dull that well considereth, that it is Heaven and Hell that is the matter that God is treating with him about?

§. 4. Direct. 4. Remember that you have but a little time to hear in; and you know not, whether ever you shall hear again: Hear therefore as if it were your last. Think when you hear the Calls of God, and the offers of Grace, I know not but this may be my last: How would I hear if I were sure to die to morrow? I am sure it will be ere long, and may be to day for ought I know.

Dir. 5. §. 5. Direct. 5. Remember that all these Days and Sermons must be reviewed, and you must answer for all that your have heard, whether your heard it with love, or with unwillingness and weariness; with diligent attention or with carelesness; and the word which you hear shall judge you at the last day. Hear therefore as those that are going to judgment, to give account of their Hearing and Obeying. John 12. 48.

Dir. 6. § 6. Direct. 6. Make it your work with diligence to apply the Word as you are hearing it, and to work your own hearts to those suitable Resolutions and Affections which it bespeaketh. Cast not all upon the Minister, as those that will go no further than they are carried as by force: This is fitter for the dead than the living. You have work to do as well as the Preacher, and should all the while be as busie as he; as helpless as the Infant is, he must suck when the Mother offereth him the Brest: If you must be fed, yet you must open your mouths, and digest it, for an other cannot digest it for you; nor can the holiest, wisest, powerful Minister, convert or save you without your selves, nor deliver a people from sin and Hell, that will not stir for their own deliverance. Therefore be all the while at work, and abhor an idle heart in hearing, as well as an idle Minister.

Dir. 7. §. 7. Direct. 7. Chew the Cud, and call up all when you come home in secret, and by Meditation Preach it over to your selves. If it were coldly delivered by the Preacher, do you consider of the great weight of the matter, and Preach it more earnestly over to your own hearts. You should love your selves best, and best be acquainted with your own condition and necessities.

Dir. 8. §. 8. Direct. 8. Pray it over all to God, and there lament a hard heart, and put up your Complaints to Heaven against it: The name and presence of God hath a quickning and awaking power.

Dir. 9. §. 9. Direct. 9. Go to Christ by Faith, for the quickning of his Spirit. Your life is hid in him your Root and Head; and from him all must be conveyed: He that hath the Son, hath life; and because he liveth, we shall live also. Intreat him to glorify the power of his Resurrection, by raising the dead; and to open your hearts, and speak to you by his Spirit, that you may be taught of God, and your hearts may be his Epistles, and the Tables where the Everlasting Law is written. Col. 3. 3, 4. Joh. 15. 1. 2, 3. 4, 5. Joh. 11. 25. & 14. 19. Phil. 3. 7, 8. Acts 16. 14. Joh. 6. 45. 2 Cor. 3. 3, 6, 17, 18. Heb. 8. 10. & 10. 16. Jer. 31. 33.

Dir. 10. §. 10. Direct. 10. Make Conscience of Teaching and provoking others. Pity the souls of the ignorant about you. God often blesseth the Grace that is most improved in doing him service; and our Stock is like the Womans Oyl, which increased as long as she poured out, and was gone when she stopped. 1 King. 17. 12, 14, 16. Doing good is the best way for receiving good: He that in pity to a poor man that is almost starved, will but fall to rubbing him, shall get himself heat, and both be Gainers.

Tit. 4. Directions to bring what we Hear into Practice.

WIthout this the rest is vain or counterfeit, and therefore somewhat must be said to this.

Dir. 1. §. 1. Direct. 1. Be acquainted with the Failings of your hearts and lives, and come on purpose to get directions and help against those particular failings. You will not know what Medicine you need, much less how to use it, if you know not what aileth you. Know what Duties you omit or carelesly perform, and know what sins you are most guilty of, and say when you go out of doors, I go to Christ for Physick for my own disease. I hope to hear something before I come back, which may help me more against this sin, and fit me better for my duty, or provoke me more effectually. Are those men like to practise Christs Directions, that either know not their disease, or love it and would not have it cured?

Dir. 2. §. 2. Direct. 2. The three forementioned are still presupposed, viz. That the Word have first done its part upon your Understandings, Memory, and Hearts: For that Word cannot be practised, which is not understood, nor at all remembred, nor hath not procured Resolutions and Affections. It is the due work upon the Heart that must prevail for the Reformation of the Life.

Dir. 3. §. 3. Direct. 3. When you understand what it is in point of Practice that the Preacher driveth at, observe especially the Uses and Moving Reasons, and plead them with your own hearts; and let Conscience be preaching over all that the Minister preacheth to you. You take them to be Soul-murderers that silence able faithful Preachers, and also those Preachers that silence themselves, and feed not the flock committed to their care: And do you think it a small matter to silence your own Conscience, which must be the Preacher that must set home all, before it can come to Resolution or Practice? Keep Conscience all the while at work, Preaching over all that to your hearts, which you hear with your ears; and urge your selves to a speedy Resolution. Remember that the whole Body of Divinity is practical in its end and tendency; and therefore be not a meer notional hearer: But consider of every word you hear, what Practice it is that it tendeth to, and place that deepest in your Memory. If you forget all the Words of the Reasons and Motives which you hear, be sure to remember what Practice they were brought to urge you to. As if you heard a Sermon against Uncharitableness, Censoriousness, or hurting others, though you should forget all the Reasons and Motives in particular, yet still remember that you were convinced in the Hearing, that censorious and hurtful uncharitableness is a great sin, and that you heard Reason enough to make you resolve it. And let Conscience Preach out the Sermon to the end, and not let it die in bare conviction; but Resolve, and be past wavering before you stir: And above all the Sermon, remember the Directions and Helps for Practice, with which the truest method usually shuts up the Sermon.

Dir. 4. §. 4. Direct. 4. When you come home, let Conscience in secret also repeat the Sermon to you. Between God and your selves, consider what there was delivered to you in the Lords Message, that your Souls were most concerned in? What sin reproved which you are guilty of? What duty pressed which you omit? And there meditate seriously on the weight and Reasons of the thing; and resist not the light, but yet bring all to a fixed Resolution, if till then you were unresolved: not insnaring your selves with dangerous Vows about things doubtful, or peremptory Vows without dependance on Christ for strength: But firmly resolving and cautelously ingaging your selves to duty; not with carnal evasions and Reserves, but with humble Dependance upon Grace, without which of your selves you are able to do nothing.

Dir. 5. §. 5. Direct. 5. Hear the most Practical Preachers you can well get. Not those that have the finest Notions, or the cleanest stile, or neatest words; but those that are still urging you to Holiness of Heart and and life, and driving home every truth to Practice: Not that false doctrine will at all bear up a holy life, but true doctrine must not be left in the porch, or at the doors, but be brought home and used to its proper end, and seated in the Heart, and placed as the poise upon the Clock, where it may set all the Wheels in motion.

Dir. 6. §. 6. Direct. 6. Take heed especially of two sorts of false Teachers. ANTINOMIAN LIBERTINES, and AUTONOMIAN PHARISEES. The first would build their Sins on Christ; not pleading for sin it self, but taking down many of the chief helps against it, and disarming us of the weapons by which it should be destroyed, and reproaching the true Preachers of obedience as Legalists, that Preach up Works and call Men to doing, when they preach up obedience to Christ their King, upon the terms and by the Motives which are used by Christ himself, and his Apostles. Not understanding aright the true doctrine of Faith in Christ and Justification and Free grace, (which they think none else understand but they) they pervert it and make it an enemy to the Kingly Office of Christ, and to Sanctification, and the necessary duties of Obedience.

The other sort do make void the Commandments of God by their Traditions, and instead of the holy Practice of the Laws of Christ, they would drive the World with Fire and Sword to practice all their Superstitious Fopperies; so that the few plain and necessary Precepts of the Law of the Universal King, are drown'd in the greater Body of their Canon Law, and the Ceremonies of the Popes imposing are so many in comparison of the Institutions of Christ, that the Worship of God, and Work of Christianity is corrupted by it, and made as another thing. The Wheat is lost in a heap of Chaff, by them that will be Law-givers to themselves, and all the Church of Christ.

Dir. 7. §. 7. Direct. 7. Associate your selves with the most holy serious practical Christians. Not with the ungodly, nor with barren Opinionists, that talk of nothing but their Controversies, and the way or interest of their Sects (which they call the Church,) nor with outside formal Ceremonious Pharisees, that are pleading for the washing of Cups, and tithing of Mint, and the Tradition of their Fathers, while they hate and persecute Christ and his Disciples. But walk with the most holy, and blameless, and charitable, that live upon that truth which others talk of, and are seeking to please God by the wisdom which is first pure, and then peaceable and gentle, (Jam. 3. 17, 18.) When others are contending for their several Sects, or seeking to please Christ, by killing him, or censuring him, or slandering him in his servants, Joh. 16. 2, 3. Matth. 25. 40, 45.

Dir. 8. §. 8. Direct. 8. Keep a just account of your Practice, examine your selves in the end of every day and week, how you have spent your time, and practised what you were taught; and judge your selves before God according as you find it. Yea, you must call your selves to account every hour, what you are doing, and how you do it; whether you are upon Gods work, or not; and your hearts must be watched and followed like unfaithful servants, and like loitering Scholars, and driven on to every duty, like a dull or tired horse.

Dir. 9. §. 9. Direct. 9. Above all set your hearts to the deepest contemplations of the wonderful love of God in Christ, and the sweetness and excellency of a holy life, and the certain incomprehensible glory which it tendeth to, that your souls may be in love with your dear Redeemer, and all that is holy, and love and obedience may be as natural to you. And then the practice of holy Doctrine, will be easie to you, when it is your delight.

Dir. 10. §. 10. Direct. 10. Take heed that you receive not ungrounded, or unnecessary prejudices against the person of the Preacher. For that will turn away your heart, and lock it up against his Doctrine. And therefore abhor the spirit of uncharitableness, cruelty, and faction, which always hendereth to the suppressing or vilifying and disgracing all those, that are not of their way and for their interest: And be not so blind as not to observe, that the very design of the Devil, in raising up divisions among Christians is, that he may use the tongues or hands of one another to vilifie them all, and make them odious to one another, and to disable one another from hindring his Kingdom, and doing any considerable Service to Christ. So that when a Minister of Christ should be winning Souls, either he is forbidden, or he is despised, and the hearers are saying, [O he is such, or such a one] according to the names of reproach which the enemy of Christ and Love hath taught them.

CHAP. XX.

Directions for profitable Reading the Holy Scriptures.

§. 1. SEeing the Diversity of Mens Tempers and Understandings is so exceeding great, that it is impossible that any thing should be Pleasing and Suitable to some, which shall not be disliked and quarrelled with by others; and seeing in the Scriptures there are many things hard to be understood, which the unlearned and unstable wrest to their own Destruction, 2 Pet. 3. 16. And the Word is to some the savour of death unto death, 2 Cor. 2. 16. You have therefore need to be careful in Reading it. And as Christ saith, Luk. 8. 18. Take heed how you hear; so I say, Take heed how you read. Mar. 4. 24.

Dir. 1. §. 2. Direct. 1. Bring not an evil heart of unbelief. Open the Bible with holy reverence as the Book of God, indited by the Holy Ghost. Remember that the Doctrine of the New Testament was revealed by the Son of God, who was purposely sent from Heaven to be the Light of the World, and to make known to Men the Will of God, and the Matters of their Salvation. Bethink you well, if God should but send a Book or Letter to you by an Angel, how reverently you would receive it? How carefully you would peruse it; and regard it above all the Books in the World? And how much rather should you do so, by that Book which is indited by the Holy Ghost, and recordeth the Doctrine of Christ himself, whose authority is greater than all the Angels? Read it not therefore as a common Book, with a common and unreverent heart; but in the Dread and Love of God the Author. Read Chap. 3. Direct. 1. And against Unbelief, Tom. 1.

Dir. 2. §. 3. Direct. 2. Remember that it is the very Law of God which you must live by, and be judged by at last. And therefore read it with a full Resolution to obey what ever it commandeth, though flesh, and men, and devils contradict it. Let there be no secret exceptions in your heart, to baulk any of its Precepts, and shift off that part of obedience, which the flesh accounteth difficult or dear.

Dir. 3. §. 4. Direct. 3. Remember that it is the Will and Testament of your Lord, and the Covenant of most full and gracious Promises; which all your Comforts, and all your hopes of pardon and everlasting life are built upon. Read it therefore with love and great delight. Value it a thousand fold more than you would do the Letters of your deerest friend, or the Deeds by which you hold your Lands; or any thing else of low concernment. If the Law was sweeter to David than Honey, and better than thousands of Gold and Silver, and was his Delight and Meditation all the day. O what should the sweet and precious Gospel be to us?

Dir. 4. §. 5. Direct. 4. Remember that it is a Doctrine of unseen things, and of the greatest Mysteries; and therefore come not to it with Arrogance as a Judge, but with with Humility as a Learner or Diſciple; And if any thing ſeem difficult or improbable to you, ſuſpect your own unfurniſhed Underſtanding, and not the ſacred Word of God. If a Learner in any Art or Science, will ſuſpect his Teacher and his Books, when ever he is ſtailed, or meeteth with that which ſeemeth unlikely to him; his pride would keep poſſeſſion for his ignorance, and his folly were like to be uncurable.

Dir. 5. §. 6. Direct. 5. Remember that it is an Univerſal Law and Doctrine, written for the moſt ignorant as well as for the curious; and therefore muſt be ſuited in plainneſs to the capacity of the ſimple, and yet have matter to exerciſe the moſt ſubtle wits; and that God would have the ſtyle, to ſavour more of the innocent weakneſs of the Inſtruments, than the matter. Therefore be not offended or troubled when the ſtyle doth ſeem leſs polite, than you might think beſeemed the Holy Ghoſt; nor at the plainneſs of ſome parts, or the myſteriouſneſs of others: But adore the wiſdom and tender condeſcenſion of God to his poor Creatures.

Dir. 6. §. 7. Direct. 6. Bring not a carnal mind, which ſavoureth only fleſhly things, and is inſlaved to thoſe ſins which the Scripture doth condemn: For the carnal mind is enmity againſt God, and neither is, nor can be ſubject to his Law. Rom. 8. 7, 8. And the things of God are not diſcerned by the meer natural Man, for they are fooliſhneſs to him, and they muſt be ſpiritually diſcerned, 2 Cor. 2. 14. And Enmity is an ill Expoſitor. It will be quarrelling with all, and making faults in the Word which findeth ſo many faults in you. It will hate that Word which cometh to deprive you of your moſt ſweet and dear beloved ſin: Or, if you have ſuch a carnal mind and enmity, believe it not no more than a partial and wicked Enemy ſhould be believed againſt God himſelf; who better underſtandeth what he hath written, than any of his fooliſh Enemies.

Dir. 7. §. 8. Direct. 7. Compare one place of Scripture with another, and expound the darkeſt by the help of the plaineſt, and the fewer Expreſſions by the more frequent, and ordinary, and the doubtfuller points by thoſe which are moſt certain; and not on the contrary.

Dir. 8. 1 Cor. 14. 12. & 12. 8, 9, 10. §. 9. Direct. 8. Preſume not on the ſtrength of your own underſtanding, but humbly pray to God for light; and before and after you read the Scripture, pray earneſtly that the Spirit which did indite it, may expound it to you; and keep you from unbelief and error, and lead you into the Truth.

Dir. 9. §. 10. Direct. 9. Read ſome of the beſt Annotations or Expoſitors; who being better acquainted with the phraſe of the Scripture than your ſelves, may help to clear your Underſtanding. When Philip asked the Eunuch that read Iſa. 53. Underſtandeſt thou what thou readeſt? he ſaid, How can I expect ſome man ſhould guide me? Acts 8. 30, 31. Make uſe of your Guides, if you would not err.

Dir. 10. §. 11. Direct. 10. When you are ſtalled by any difficulty which over-matcheth you, note it down, and propound it to your Paſtor, and crave his help, or (if the Miniſter of that place be ignorant and unable) go to ſome one that God hath furniſhed for ſuch work. And if after all, ſome things remain ſtill dark and difficult, remember your imperfection, and wait on God for further Light, and thankfully make uſe of all the reſt of the Scripture which is plain. And do not think as the Papiſts, that men muſt forbear reading it for fear of erring, no more than that men muſt forbear eating for fear of poyſon, or than Subjects muſt be kept ignorant of the Laws of the King, for fear of miſunderſtanding or abuſing them.

CHAP. XXI.

Directions for Reading other BOOKS.

BEcauſe God hath made the excellent holy Writings of his Servants, the ſingular Bleſſing of this Land and Age; and many a one may have a Good Book, even any Day or Hour of the Week, that cannot at all have a good Preacher. I adviſe all Gods Servants to be thankful for ſo great a Mercy, and to make uſe of it, and be much in Reading: For Reading with moſt doth more conduce to Knowledge than Hearing doth, becauſe you may chuſe what Subjects and the excellenteſt Treatiſes you pleaſe; and may be often at it, and may peruſe it again and again what you forget, and may take time as you go to fix it on your mind: And with very many it doth more than Hearing alſo to move the Heart, tho' Hearing of it ſelf, in this hath the advantage: Becauſe lively Books may be eaſilier had, than lively Preachers; eſpecially theſe ſorts of Men ſhould be much in Reading. 1. Maſters of Families, that have more Souls to care for than their own. 2. People that live where there is no Preaching, or as bad or worſe than none. 3. Poor People, and Servants, and Children, that are forced on many Lords days to ſtay at home, whilſt others have the opportunity to hear. 4. And vacant perſons that have more leiſure than others have. To all theſe, but eſpecially Maſters of Families, I ſhall here give a few Directions.

Xenophon primus omnium quæ dicebantur, notis excepta in publicum edidit. Laert. in Xenoph

Dir. 1. §. 1. Direct. 1. I preſuppoſe that you keep the Devils Books out of your hands and Houſe. I mean Cards, and idle Tales, and Play-books, and Romances or Love-books, and falſe bewitching Stories, and the ſeducing Books of all falſe Teachers, and the railing or ſcorning Books which the Men of ſeveral Sects and Factions write againſt each other, on purpoſe to teach men to hate one another, and baniſh Love: For where theſe are ſuffered to corrupt the Mind, all grave and uſeful Writings are foreſtalled. And it is a wonder to ſee how powerfully theſe poyſon the minds of Children, and many other empty Heads: Alſo Books that are written by the ſons of Corah, to breed diſtaſtes and diſcontents in the minds of the People againſt their Governours, both Magiſtrates and Miniſters. For there is ſomething in the beſt Rulers, for the Tongues of Seditious Men to faſten on, and to aggravate in the Peoples ears; and there is ſomething even in godly people, which tempteth them too eaſily to take fire and be diſtempered before they are aware; and they foreſee not the evil to which it tendeth.

Dir. 2. §. 2. Direct. 2. When you read to your Family, or others, let it be ſeaſonably and gravely, when ſilence and attendance incourage you to expect ſucceſs; and not when Children are crying or talking, or Servants, buſling to diſturb you. Diſtraction is worſt in the greateſt buſineſſes.

Dir. 3. §. 3. Direct. 3. Chuſe ſuch Books as are moſt ſuitable to your ſtate, or to thoſe you read to. It is worſe than unprofitable to read Books for comforting troubled Minds, to thoſe thar are blockiſhly ſecure, and have hardned, obſtinate, unhumbled hearts. It is as bad as to give Medicines or Plaiſters contrary to the Patients need, and ſuch as cheriſh the diſeaſe: So is it to read Books of too high a ſtile or ſubject, to dull and ignorant hearers. We uſe to ſay, That which is one mans meat, is another Mans poyſon. It is not enough that the matter be good, but it muſt be agreeable to the caſe for which it is uſed.

Saith Ariſtippus (in Laert.) As they are not the healthfulleſt that eat moſt, ſo are they not the learnedſt that read moſt, but they that read that which is moſt neceſſary and profitable.

Dir. 4. §. 4. Direct. 4. To a common Family begin with thoſe Books, which at once inform the judgment about the Fundamentals, and awaken the affections to entertain tain them and improve them. Such as are Treatises of Regeneration, Conversion, or Repentance: To which purpose I have written my self, The Call to the Unconverted; The Treatise of Conversion; Directions for a sound Conversion; A Treatise of Judgment; A Sermon against making light of Christ; True Christianity; A Sermon of Repentance; Now or Never; A Saint or a Bruit, with others; which I mention not as equalling them with others, but as those which I am more accountable for. On this subject these are very excellent, Mr. R. Allens Works, Mr. Whateley on the New Birth, Mr Swinnock of Regeneration, Mr. Pinks his Five Sermons, most of Mr. Hookers Sermons, Mr. Jo. Rogers Doctrine of Faith. Mr. Dents Plain Mans Path way to Heaven, most of Mr. Perkins, and Mr. Boltons Works, and many the like.

Dir. 5. §. 5. Direct. 5. Next these, read over those Books which are most suited to the state of young Christians for their growth in Grace, and for their Exercise of Faith, and Love, and Obedience, and for the mortifying of selfishness, pride, sensuality, worldliness, and other the most dangerous sins. My own on this subject are, my Directions for weak Christians, my Saints Rest, a Treatise of Self-denial, another of the Mischiefs of Self ignorance, Life of Faith, of Crucifying the World, the Unreasonableness of Infidelity, of Right Rejoycing, &c. To this use these are excellent, Mr. Hilderhams Works, Dr. Prestons, Mr. Perkins, Mr. Boltons, Mr. Venners, Mr. Gurnals, Mr. Anthony Burgesses Sermons; Mr. Lockier on the Colossians, with abundance more that God hath blest us with.

Dir. 6. §. 6. Direct. 6. At the same time labour to methodize your knowledge, and to that end read first and learn some short Catechism, (and then some larger (as Master Balls, or the Assemblies, larger) and next some Body of Divinity, (as Amesius his Marrow of Divinity, and Cases of Conscience, which are Englished.) And let the Catechism be kept in memory while you live, and the rest be throughly understood.

Dir. 7. §. 7. Direct. 7. Next read (to your selves or Families) the larger Expositions of the Creed, Lords Prayer, and Ten Commandments. Such as Perkins, Bishop Andrews on the Commandments, and Dod, &c. That your understanding may be more full, particular and distinct; and your Families may not stop in Generals which are not understood.

Dir. 8. §. 8. Direct. 8. Read much those Books which direct you in a course of daily Communion with God, and ordering all your Conversations. As Master Reyners Directions, the Practice of Piety, Master Palmers, Mr. Scudders, Mr. Boltons Directions, and my Divine Life.

Dir. 9. §. 9. Direct. 9. For Peace, and Comfort, and increase of the Love of God. Read Mr. Symmonds Deserted Soul, &c. And his Life of Faith: All Doctor Sibbs Works, Master Harsnets Cordials, Bishop Halls Works, &c. My Method for Peace, and Saints Rest, &c.

Dir. 10. §. 10. Direct. 10. For the understanding of the Text of Scripture, keep at hand, either Deodates or the Assembly of Divines, or the Dutch Annotations; with Dr. Hammonds, or Dicksons and Hutchinsons brief Observations.

Dir. 11. §. 11. Direct. 11. For securing you against the Feavour of uncharitable Zeal and Schism, and contentious wranglings and cruelties for Religion sake. Read diligently Bishop Halls Peacemaker (and other of his Books) Mr. Burroughs Irenicon, Acontius Stratagems of Satan, and my Catholick Unity, Catholick Church, Universal Concord, &c.

Dir. 12. §. 12. Direct. 12. For establishing you against Popery, on the soundest Grounds, not running in the contrary extream. Read Dr. Challoners Credo Ecclesiam, &c. Chillingworth, Dr. Field of the Church, &c. And my True Catholick, and my Key for Catholicks, and my Safe Religion, and Winding-sheet for Popery, and Disputation with Mr. Johnson.

Dir. 13. §. 13. Direct. 13. For special preparation for affliction, sufferings, sickness, death. Read Mr. Hughs Rod, Mr. Laurence Christs power over sicknesses, Mr. S. Rutherfords Letters, &c. My Treatise of Self denial, the Believers last Work, the Last Enemy Death, and the Fourth Part of my Saints Rest. I will add no more, lest they seem too many.

CHAP. XXII.

Directions for the right Teaching of CHILDREN and SERVANTS so as may be most likely to have success.

HEre suppose them utterly untaught that you have to do with; and therefore shall direct you what to do, from the very first beginning of your teaching, and their learning. And I beseech you study this Chapter more than many of the rest, for it is an unspeakable loss that befals the Church, and the Souls of Men, for want of skill, and will, and diligence, in Parents and Masters in this matter.

Dir. 1. §. 1. Direct. 1. Cause your younger Children to learn the words, though they be not yet capable of understanding the matter. And do not think as some do, that this is but to make them Hypocrites, and to teach them to take Gods Name in vain. For it is neither vanity nor hypocrisie to help them first to understand the words and signs, in order to their early understanding of the matter and signification. Otherwise no man might teach them any language, nor teach them to read any words that be good, because they must first understand the words before the meaning. If a child learn to read in a Bible, it is not taking Gods Name or Word in vain, tho' he understand it not: For it is in order to his learning to understand it, and it is not vain which is to so good a use: If you leave them untaught till they come to be twenty years of age, they must then learn the words before they can understand the matter. Do not therefore leave them the children of darkness, for fear of making them Hypocrites. It will be an excellent way to redeem their time, to teach them first that which they are capable of learning: A child of five or six years old can learn the words of a Catechism or Scripture, before they are capable of understanding them. And then when they come to years of understanding, that part of their work is done, and they have nothing to do but to study the meaning and use of those words which they have learned already. Whereas if you leave them utterly untaught till then, they must then be wasting a long time to learn the same words which they might have learned before, and the loss of so much time is no small loss or sin.

Dir. 1. §. 2. Direct. 2. The most natural way of teaching Children the meaning of Gods Word, and the matters of their Salvation, is by familiar talk with them, suited to their capacities: Begin this betimes with them while they are on their Mothers laps, and use it frequently. For they are quickly capable of some understanding about greater matters as well as about less; and knowledge must come in by slow degrees: Stay not till their minds are prepossest with vanity and toys, Prov. 22. 6.

Dir. 2. §. 3. Direct. 3. By all means let your Children learn to read, though you be never so poor, whatever shift you make. And if you have Servants that cannot read, let them learn yet (at spare hours) if they be of any capacity and willingness. For it is a very great mercy to be able to read the holy Scripture, and any good Books themselves, and a very great misery to know nothing but what they hear from others. They may read almost at any time when they cannot hear.

Dir. 3. §. 4. Direct. 4. Let your Children when they are little ones read much the History of the Scriptures. For though though this, of it ſelf, is not ſufficient to breed in them any ſaving knowledge, yet it enticeth them to delight in reading the Bible, and then they will be often at it when they love it; ſo that all theſe benefits will follow. 1. It will make them love the Book (though it be but with a common love.) 2. It will make them ſpend their time in it, when elſe they would rather be at play. 3. It will acquaint them with Scripture Hiſtory, which will afterwards be very uſeful to them. 4. It will lead them up by degrees to the knowledge of the Doctrine, which is all along interwoven with the Hiſtory.

Dir. 5. §. 5. Direct. 5. Take heed that you turn not all your Family Inſtructions into a cuſtomary formal courſe; by bare readings and repeating Sermons from day to day, without familiar perſonal application. For it is ordinarily ſeen that they will grow as ſleepy, and ſenſeleſs, and cuſtomary under ſuch a dull and diſtant courſe of duty (tho' the matter be good) almoſt as if you had ſaid nothing to them. Your buſineſs therefore muſt be to get within them, and awaken their Conſciences to know that the matter doth moſt nearly concern them, and to force them to make application of it to themſelves.

Dir. 6. §. 6. Direct. 6. Let none effect a formal Preaching way to their Families, except they be Preachers themſelves, or Men that are able for the Miniſtry: But rather ſpend the time in reading to them the powerfulleſt Books, and ſpeaking to them more familiarly about the ſtate and matters of their Souls. Not that I think it unlawful for a Man to Preach to his Family in the ſame method that a Miniſter doth to his People; for no doubt he may teach them in the profitableſt manner he can. And that which is the beſt method for a ſet ſpeech in the Pulpit, is uſually the beſt method in a Family. But my Reaſons againſt this Preaching way ordinarily, are theſe. 1. Becauſe it is very few Maſters of Families that are able for it; (even among them that think they are;) and then they ignorantly abuſe the Scripture, ſo as tends much to Gods diſhonour. 2. Becauſe there is ſcarce any of them all, but may read at the ſame time, ſuch lively profitable Books to their Families, as handle thoſe things which they have moſt need to hear of, in a far more edifying manner than they themſelves are able, (except they be ſo poor that they can get no ſuch Books.) 3. Becauſe the familiar way is moſt edifying: And to talk ſeriouſly with Children and Servants about the great concernments of their Souls doth commonly more move them than Sermons or ſet Speeches. Yet becauſe there is a ſeaſon for both, you may ſometimes read ſome powerful Books to them, and ſometimes talk familiarly to them. 4. Becauſe it often comes from Pride, when Men put their Speech into a Preaching method to ſhew their parts, and as often nouriſheth Pride.

Dir. 7. §. 7. Direct. 7. Let the manner of your teaching them, be very often interlocutory, or by way of Queſtions. Though when you have ſo many or ſuch perſons preſent, as that ſuch Familiarity is not ſeaſonable, then Reading, Repeating, or ſet Speeches may do beſt; but at other times when the number or quality of the company hindereth not, you will find that Queſtions and familiar Diſcourſe is beſt: For, 1. It keepeth them awake and attentive, when they know they muſt make ſome anſwer to your Queſtions; which ſet Speeches, with the dull and ſluggiſh, will hardly do. 2. And it mightily helpeth them in the Application; ſo that they much more eaſily take it home, and perceive themſelves concerned in it.

Dir. 8. §. 8. Direct. 8. Yet prudently take heed that you ſpeak nothing to any in the preſence of others that tends to open their ignorance or ſin, or the ſecrets of their hearts, or that any way tendeth to ſhame them (except in the neceſſary reproof of the obſtinate.) If it be their common ignorance that will be opened by queſtioning them, you may do it before your Servants or Children themſelves, that are familiar with each other, but not when any Strangers are preſent. But if it be about the ſecret ſtate of their Souls that you examine them, you muſt do it ſingly, when the perſon is alone. Leſt ſhaming and troubling them make them hate inſtruction, and deprive them of all the benefit of it.

Dir. 9. §. 9. Direct. 9. When you come to teach them the Doctrine of Religion begin with the Baptiſmal Covenant, as the ſum of all that is eſſential to Chriſtianity: And here teach them briefly all the ſubſtance of this at once. For though ſuch general knowledge will be obſcure, and not diſtinct and ſatisfactory, yet it is neceſſary at firſt; becauſe they muſt ſee Truths ſet together: For they will underſtand nothing truly, if they underſtand it but independantly by broken parts. Therefore open to them the ſum of the Covenant or Chriſtian Religion all at once, though you ſay but little at firſt of the ſeveral parts. Help them to underſtand what it is to be Baptiſed into the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt: And here you muſt open it to them in this order. You muſt help them to know who are the Covenanters, GOD and MAN; and firſt the nature of Man is to be opened, becauſe he is firſt known, and God in him who is his Image. Familiarly tell them, 'That Man is not like a Beaſt that 'hath no Reaſon, nor Free-will, nor any Knowledge 'of another World, nor any other life to live but 'this: But he hath an underſtanding to know God, 'and a will to chuſe good and refuſe evil, and an 'immortal Soul that muſt live for ever; and that all 'inferior Creatures were made for his ſervice, as he 'was made for the ſervice of his Creator. Tell them 'that neither Man, nor any thing that we ſee, could 'make it ſelf, but God is the Maker, Preſerver, and 'Diſpoſer of all the World. That this God is infi-'nite in Power, and Wiſdom, and Goodneſs, and is 'the Owner, and Ruler, and Benefactor, Felicity, 'and End of Man. That Man was made to be 'wholly devoted and reſigned to God as his Owner, 'and to be wholly ruled by him as his Governour, 'and to be wholly given up to his love and praiſe 'as his Father, his Felicity, and End. That the 'Tempter having drawn Man from this bleſſed ſtate 'of life, in Adams fall the World fell under the 'Wrath of God, and had been loſt for ever, but 'that God of his mercy provided us a Redeemer; 'even the Eternal Son of God, who being One 'with the Father, was pleaſed to take the Nature of 'Man, and ſo is both God and Man in one Perſon; 'who being born of a Virgin, lived among Men, 'and fulfilled the Law of God, and overcame the 'Tempter and the World, and died as a Sacrifice 'for our ſins, to reconcile us unto God: That all 'Men being born with corrupted natures, and 'living in ſin till Chriſt recover them, there is now 'no hope of ſalvation but by him: That he hath 'paid our debt, and made ſatisfaction for our ſins, 'and riſen from the dead, and conquered death, 'and Satan, and is Aſcended and Glorified in Hea-'ven; and that he is the King and Teacher, and 'High Prieſt of the Church: That he hath made a 'new Covenant of Grace and Pardon, and offered 'it in the Scriptures, and by his Miniſters to the 'World; and that thoſe that are ſincere and faith-'ful in this Covenant ſhall be ſaved, and thoſe that 'are not ſhall remedileſly be damned; becauſe they 'reject this Chriſt and Grace, which is the laſt and 'only remedy. And here open to them the nature 'of this Covenant; that God doth offer to be our 'Reconciled God, and Father, and Felicity, and 'Chriſt to be our Saviour, to forgive our ſins, and 'reconcile us unto God, and renew us by his Spirit, 'and the holy Spirit to be our Sanctifier, to illumi-

'nate, and regenerate, and confirm us; and that 'all that is required on our part, is such an unfeigned 'consent as will appear in the performance in our 'serious endeavours. Even that we wholly give up 'our selves to be renewed by the holy Spirit, to be 'justified, taught and governed by Christ, and by 'him to be brought again to the Father, to love 'him as our God and End, and to live to him, and 'with him for ever. But whereas the Temptations 'of the Devil, and the allurements of this deceitful 'World, and the desires of the Flesh, are the great 'Enemies and hinderances in our way, we must also 'consent to renounce all these, and let them go, 'and deny our selves, and take up with God alone, 'and what he seeth meet to give us, and to take 'him in Heaven for all our portion: And he that 'consenteth unfeignedly to this Covenant, is a 'Member of Christ, a justified, reconciled Child 'of God, and an Heir of Heaven, and so continuing, 'shall be saved; and he that doth not shall be 'damned. This is the Covenant that in Baptism 'we solemnly entred into with God, the Father, 'Son, and Holy Ghost, as our Father, and Felicity, 'our Saviour, and our Sanctifier. This in some such brief Explication, you must familiarly open to them again and again.

Dir. 10. §. 10. Direct. 10. When you have opened the Baptismal Covenant to them, and the essentials of Christianity, cause them to learn the Creed, the Lords Prayer, and the Ten Commandments. And tell them the Uses of them; that Man having three powers of Soul, his Understanding, his Will, and his Obediential or Executive Power, all these must be sanctified, and therefore there must be a rule for each; and that accordingly the Creed is the summary Rule to tell us what our Understandings must believe; and the Lords Prayer is the summary Rule to direct us what our Wills must desire and our Tongues must ask; and the Ten Commandments is the summary Rule of our practice: And that the Holy Scripture, in general, is the more large and perfect Rule of all; and that all that will be taken for true Christians, must have a general implicite Belief of all the Holy Scriptures, and a particular explicite Belief, Desire, and sincere Practice, according to the Creeds, Lords Prayer, and Ten Commandments.

Dir. 11. §. 11. Direct. 11. Next teach them a short Catechism (by Memory) which openeth these a little more fully, and then a larger Catechism. The shorter and larger Catechism of the Assembly are very well fitted to this use: I have published a very brief one my self, which in Eight Articles or Answers containeth all the Essential Points of Belief, and in One answer, the Covenant-Consent, and in Four Articles or Answers more, containeth all the Substantial Parts of Christian Duty: The Answers are some of them long for Children. But if I knew of any other that had so much in few words, I would not offer this to you, because I am conscious of its imperfections. But there are very few Catechisms that differ in the substance: Which ever they learn, let them as they go have your help to understand it, and let them keep it in memory to the last.

It is in my Universal Concord, and by it self.

Dir. 12. §. 12. Direct. 12. Next open to them more distinctly the particular part of the Covenant and Catechism. And here I think this Method most profitable for a Family: 1. Read over to them the best Expositions that you can get on the Creed, the Lords Prayer and the Ten Commandments, which are not too large to confound them, nor too brief, so as to be hardly understood. For a Summary, Mr. Brinsleys True Watch is good; but thus to read them, such as Mr. Perkins on the Creed, and Dr. King on the Lords Prayer, and Dod on the Commandments, are fit; so that you may read One Article, one Petition, and one Commandment at a time: And read these over to them divers times. 2. Besides this in your familiar discourse with them, open to them plainly one Head or Article of Religion at a time, and another the next time, and so on till you come to the end. And here, 1. Open in one discourse the Nature of Man, and the Creation. 2. In another (or before it) the Nature and Attributes of God. 3. In another the fall of Man, and especially the Corruption of our Nature, as it consisteth in an inordinate inclination to earthly and fleshly things, and a backwardness, or averseness, or enmity to God and Holiness, and the Life to come; and the nature of sin; and the impossibility of being saved till this sin be pardoned, and these Natures renewed, and restored to the Love of God and Holiness, from this Love of the World and Fleshly pleasures. 4. In the next discourse, open to them the Doctrine of Redemption in general, and the Incarnation, and Natures, and Person of Christ, particularly. 5. In the next open the Life of Christ, his Fulfilling the Law, and his overcoming the Tempter, his humble Life, and contempt of the World, and the end of all, and how he is exemplary and imitable unto us. 6. In the next open the whole Humiliation, and Suffering of Christ, and the pretences of his Persecutors, and the ends and uses of his suffering, death, and burial. 7. In the next open his Resurrection, the proofs and the uses of it. 8. In the next open his Ascension, Glory, and Intercession for us, and the uses of all. 9. In the next open his Kingly, and Prophetical Offices in general, and his making the Covenant of Grace with Man, and the nature of that Covenant, and its effects. 10. In the next open the Works or Office of the Holy Ghost in general, as given by Christ to be his Agent in Men on Earth, and his great Witness to the World; and particulaly open the extraordinary gift of the Spirit to the Prophets and Apostles, to plant the Churches, and indite, and seal the holy Scriptures; and shew them the authority and use of the holy Scriptures. 11. In the next open to them the ordinary works of the Holy Ghost, as the Illuminator, Renewer, and Sanctifier of Souls, and in what order he doth all this, by the Ministry of the Word. 12. In the next open to them the office, and use, and duty of the ordinary Ministry, and their duty toward them, especially as Hearers, and the nature and use of publick Worship, and the nature and Communion of Saints and Churches. 13. In the next open to them the nature and use of Baptism, and the Lords Supper. 14. In the next open to them the shortness of life, and the state of Souls at death, and after death, and the day of Judgment, and the Justification of the Righteous, and the Condemnation of the Wicked at that day. 15. In the next open to them the Joys of Heaven, and the miseries of the damned. 16. In the next open to them the Vanity of all the pleasure, and profits, and honour of this World, and the method of Temptations, and how to overcome them. 17. In the next open to them the reason and use of suffering for Christ, and of Self-denial, and how to prepare for sickness and death. And after this go over also the Lords Prayer, and the Ten Commandments.

Dir. 13. §. 13. Direct. 13. After all your instructions make them briefly give you an account in their own words of what they understand and remember of all; or else the next time to give account of the former. And incourage them for all that is well done in their endeavours.

Dir. 14. §. 14. Direct. 14. Labour in all to keep up a wakened serious attention, and still to Print upon their hearts the greatest things. And to that end, for the Matter of your teaching and discourse, let nothing be so much in your mouths, as, 1. The Nature and Relations of God. 2. A Crucified and a Glorified Christ, with all his Grace and Priviledges. 3. The operations of the Spirit on the Soul. 4. The madness of Sinners, and the Vanity of the World

5. And endleſs Glory and Joy of Saints, and miſery of the ungodly after death. Let theſe five points be frequently urged, and be the life of all the reſt of your diſcourſe. And then for the Manner of your ſpeaking to them, let it be always with ſuch a mixture of familiarity and ſeriouſneſs that may carry along their ſerious attentions, whether they will or no. Speak to them as if they or you were dying, and as if you ſaw God, and Heaven, and Hell.

Dir. 15. §. 15. Direct. 15. Take each of them ſometime by themſelves, and there deſcribe to them the work of Renovation, and ask them whether ever ſuch a work was wrought upon them. Shew them the true marks of Grace, and help them to try themſelves: Urge them to tell you truly whether their love to God or the Creature, to Heaven or Earth, to holineſs or fleſh-pleaſing be more: And what it is that hath their hearts and care, and chief endeavour? And if you find them regenerate, help to ſtrengthen them. if you find them too much dejected help to comfort them; and if you find them unregenerate, help to convince them, and then to humble them, and then to ſhew them the remedy in Chriſt, and then ſhew them their duty that they may have part in Chriſt, and drive all home to the end that you deſire to ſee: But do all this with love, and gentleneſs, and privacy.

Dir. 11. §. 16. Direct. 16. Some pertinent Queſtions which by the anſwer will ingage them to teach themſelves, or to judge themſelves, will be ſometimes of very great uſe? As ſuch as theſe; 'Do you not know 'that you muſt ſhortly die? Do you not believe that 'immediately your Souls muſt enter upon an end-'leſs life of joy or miſery? Will worldly wealth 'and honours, or fleſhly pleaſures, be pleaſant to 'you then? Had you then rather be a Saint, or 'an ungodly Sinner? Had you not then rather be 'one of the holieſt that the World deſpiſed and 'abuſed, than one of the greateſt and richeſt of 'the Wicked? When Time is paſt, and you muſt 'give account of it, had you not then rather it had 'been ſpent in holineſs, and obedience, and diligent 'preparation for the life to come, than in pride and 'pleaſure, and pampering the fleſh? How could 'you make ſhift to forget your endleſs life ſo long? 'Or to ſleep quietly in an unregenerate ſtate? What 'if you had died before Converſion, what think 'you had become of you, and where had you now 'been? Do you think that any of thoſe in Hell are 'glad that they were ungodly? Or have now any 'pleaſure in their former merriments and ſin? 'What think you would they do, if it were all to 'do again? Do you think, if an Angel or Saint 'from Heaven, ſhould come to decide the Contro-'verſie between the Godly, and the Wicked, that 'he would ſpeak againſt a holy and heavenly life, or 'plead for a looſe and fleſhly life? Or which ſide 'think you he would take? Did not God know 'what he did when he made the Scriptures? Is he or 'an ungodly Scorner to be more regarded? Do you 'think every Man in the World, will not wiſh at 'laſt that he had been a Saint whatever it had coſt him? Such kind of Queſtions urge the Conſcience, and much convince.

Dir. 17. §. 17. Direct. 17. Cauſe them to learn ſome one moſt plain and pertinent Text, for every great and neceſſary duty, and againſt every great and dangerous ſin; and often to repeat them to you. As Luk. 13.3, 5. Except ye repent ye ſhall all periſh. John 3. 5. Except a man be born again of Water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. So Matth. 18. 3. Rom. 8. 9. Heb. 12. 14. Joh. 3. 16. Luk. 18. 1, &c. So againſt lying, ſwearing, taking Gods Name in vain, fleſh-pleaſing, gluttony, pride, the reſt.

§. 18. Direct. 18. Drive all your Convictions to a Reſolution of Endeavour and Amendment, and make them ſometime promiſe you to do that which you convinced them of; and ſometimes before witneſſes. But let it be done with theſe neceſſary Cautions. 1. That you urge not a promiſe in any doubtful point, or ſuch as you have not firſt convinc'd them of. 2. That you urge not a promiſe in things beyond their preſent ſtrength: As you muſt not bid them promiſe you to Believe, or to love God, or to be tender-hearted, or heavenly-minded; but to do thoſe duties which tend to theſe, as to hear the Word, or Read, or Pray, or Meditate, or keep good Company, or avoid Temptations, &c. 3. That you be not too often upon this, (or upon one and the ſame ſtrain in the other methods) leſt they take them but for words of courſe, and cuſtom teach them to contemn them. But ſeaſonably and prudently done, their promiſes will lay a great ingagement on them. Dir. 18

§. 19. Direct. 19. Teach them how to pray, by forms or without, as is moſt ſuitable to their caſe and parts: And either your ſelf or ſome that may inform you, ſhould hear them pray ſometime, that you may know their ſpirit, and how they profit. Dir. 19

§. 20. Direct. 20. Put ſuch Books into their hands as are meeteſt for them, and ingage them to read them when they are alone; and ask them what they underſtand and remember of them. And hold them not without neceſſity ſo hard to work, as to allow them no time for reading by themſelves: But drive them on to work the harder, that they may have ſome time when their work is done. Dir. 20

§. 21. Direct. 21. Cauſe them to teach one another when they are together. Let their talk be profitable. Let thoſe that read beſt, be reading ſometime to the reſt, and inſtructing them, and furthering their edification. Their familiarity might make them very uſeful to one another. Dir. 21.

§. 22. Direct. 22. Tire them not out with too much at once; but give it them as they can receive it. Narrow mouthed Bottles, muſt not be filled as wider Veſſels. Dir. 22.

§. 23. Direct. 23. Labour to make all ſweet and pleaſant to them: And to that end ſometime mix the reading of ſome profitable Hiſtory. As the Book of Martyrs, and Clarks Martyrology, and his Lives. Dir. 23.

§. 24. Direct. 24. Laſtly, Entice them with kindneſſes and rewards. Be kind to your Children when they do well, and be as liberal to your Servants as your condition will allow you. For this maketh your perſons acceptable firſt, and then your inſtructions will be much more acceptable. Nature teacheth them to love thoſe that love them, and do them good, and to hearken willingly to thoſe they love. A ſmall gift now and then, might ſignifie much to the further benefit of their Souls. Dir. 24.

§. 25. Direct. 25. If any ſhall ſay, that here is ſo much ado about theſe Directions, as that few can follow them. I intreat them to conſult with Chriſt that died for them, Whether Souls be not precious, and worth all this ado? And to conſider how ſmall a labour all this is, in compariſon of the Everlaſting End; and to remember, that all is gain and pleaſure, and a delight to thoſe that have holy Hearts; and to remember, that the effects to the Church and Kingdom, of ſuch holy Government of Families, would quite over-recompenſate all the pains. Dir. 25.

CHAP. XXIII.

Tit. 1. Directions for PRAYER in General.

§. 1. HE that handleth this Duty of Prayer as it deſerveth, muſt make it the Second Part in the Body of Divinity, and allow it a larger and exacter Tractate than I here intend: For

The Stoicks say, Orabit sapiens ac vota faciet bona à diis postulans. Laert. in Zenone. So that when Seneca saith, Cur deos precibus fatigatis, &c. He only intendeth to reprove the slothful, that think to have all done by Prayer alone, while they are idle and neglect the Means.

For I have before told you, that as we have three Natural Faculties, An Understanding Will, and Executive Power, so these are qualified in the Godly, with Faith, Love and Obedience; and have three particular Rules. The Creed, to shew us what we must Believe, and in what Order: The Lords Prayer, to shew us what, and in what order, we must desire and love: And the Decalogue, to tell us what, and in what order we must do; (though yet these are so near kin to one another, that the same actions in several respects belong to each of the Rules.) As the Commandments must be Believed and Loved as well as Obeyed, and the matter of the Lords Prayer must be believed to be good and necessary, as well as Loved and Desired; and Belief, and Love, and Desire, are commanded, and are part of our obedience, yet for all this, they are not formally the same, but divers. And as we say, that the Heart or Will is the Man, as being the commanding faculty; so Morally the Will, the Love or Desire is the Christian; and therefore the Rule of Desire or Prayer, is a Principal part of true Religion: The Internal part of this Duty, I partly touched before Tom. 1. Chap. 3. And the Church Part I told you, why I past by Tom. 2. it being not left by the Government where we live to Private Ministers Discussion (save only to perswade men to obey what is established and commanded.) Therefore because I have omitted the latter, and but a little touched upon the former, I shall be the larger on it in this place, to which (for several Reasons) I have reserved it.

Dir. 2. §. 2. Direct. 2. See that you understand what Prayer is. Even, The expressing or acting of our desires before another, to move or some way procure him to grant them. True Christian Prayer is, The believing and serious expressing or acting of our lawful desires before God, thro' Jesus our Mediator, by the help of the holy Spirit, as a means to procure of him, the grant of these desires. Here note, 1. That inward desire is the Soul of Prayer. 2. The expressions or inward actings of them, is as the Body of Prayer. 3. To Men it must be desire so expressed, as they may understand it; but to God the inward acting of desires is a Prayer, because he understandeth it. 4. But it is not the acting of desire, simply in it self, that is any Prayer: For he may have desires, that offereth them not up to God with Heart or Voice, but it is desires, as some way offered up to God, or represented or acted towards him, as a means to procure his blessing, that is Prayer indeed.

Plerumque hoc negotium plus gemitibus quàm Sermonibus agitur. August. Epist. 121.

Dir. 3. §. 3. Direct. 3. See that you understand the Ends and Use of Prayer. Some think that it is of no use, but only to move God to be willing of that which he was before unwilling of, and therefore because that God is immutable, they think that Prayer is a useless thing. But Prayer is useful, 1. As an act of obedience to Gods command. 2. As the performance of a condition, without which he hath not promised us his Mercy, and to which he hath promised it. 3. As a means to actuate and express, and increase, our own Humility, Dependance, Desire, Trust, and Hope in God, and so to make us capible and fit for mercy who else should be uncapable and unfit. 4. And so, though God be not changed by it in himself, yet the Real change that is made by it on our selves, doth infer a change in God by meer Relation or Extrinsical denomination, he being one that is, according to the tenour of his own established Law and Covenant, engaged to disown or punish the Unbelieving, Prayerless and Disobedient, and after engaged to own or pardon them that are faithfully desirous and obedient: And so this is a Relative, or at least a denominative change. So that in Prayer, Faith and Fervency, are so far from being useless, that they as much prevail for the thing desired by qualifying our selves for it, as if indeed they moved the mind of God to a real change: Even as he that is in a Boat and by his hook layeth hold of the bank, doth as truly by his labour get nearer the bank, as if he drew the bank to him.

§. 4. Direct. 4. Labour above all to know that God [illegible] to whom you pray. To know him as your Maker, your Redeemer, and your Regenerator, as your Governour, your Ruler, and your Father, Felicity and End; as All-sufficient for your relief, in the infiniteness of his Power, his Wisdom and his Goodness; and to know your own dependance on him; and to understand his Covenant or Promises, upon what terms he is engaged and resolved either to give his mercies, or to deny them. He that cometh to God, must believe that He is; and that He is the Rewarder of them that diligently seek him: Heb. 11. 6. He that calleth on the name of the Lord shall be saved: But how shall they call on him, on whom they have not believed, Rom. 10. 13, 14.

§. 5. Direct. 5. Labour when you are about to pray, [illegible] to stir up in your souls the most lively and serious belief of those unseen things that your Prayers have respect to, and to pray as if you saw them all the while: Even as if you saw God in his Glory, and saw Heaven and Hell, the glorified and the damned, and Jesus Christ your Mediator interceding for you in the Heavens. As you would pray if your eyes beheld all these, so strive to pray while you believe them: And say to your selves, Are they not as sure as if I saw them? Are they not made known by the Son and Spirit of God?

Dir. 6. §. 6. Direct. 6 Labour for a constant acquaintance with your selves, your sins and manifold wants and necessities, and also to take an actual special notice of your case, when you go to prayer. If you get not a former constant acquaintance with your own case, you cannot expect to know it aright upon a sudden as you go to pray: And yet if you do not actually survey your hearts and lives when you go to prayer, your souls will be unhumbled, and want that lively sense of your necessities, which must put life into your prayers. Know well what sin is, and what Gods wrath, and Hell, and Judgment is, and what sin you have committed, and what duty you have omitted, and failed in, and what wants and corruptions are yet within you, and what mercy and grace you stand in need of, and then all this will make you pray, and pray to purpose with all your hearts. But when men are wilful strangers to themselves, and never seriously look backwards or inwards to see what is amiss and wanting; nor look not forwards to see the danger that is before them, no wonder if their hearts be dead and dull, and if they are as unfit to pray, as a sleeping man to work.

Bias navigabat ali quando cum imis is, & quum navis semper [illegible] illique Deos invocarent; Silete in quit, ne vos hic illi navigare sentiant. Laert. p. 55.

Dir. 7. §. 7. Direct. 7. See that you hate hypocrisie, and let not your lips go against or without your hearts; but that your hearts be the spring of all your words. That you love not sin, and be not loth to leave it, when you seem to pray against it; and that you truly desire the grace which you ask, and ask not for that which you would not have: And that you be ready to use the lawful means to get the mercies which you ask, and be not like those lazy wishers, that will pray God to give them increase at harvest, when they lie in bed, and will neither plow or sow, or that pray him to save them from fire, or water, or danger, while they run into it, or will not be at the pains to go out of the way. O what abundance of wretches do offer up hypocritical mock prayers to God! blaspheming him thereby, as if he were an Idol, and knew not their hypocrisie, and searched not the hearts? Alas, how commonly do men pray in publick, that the rest of their lives hereafter may be pure and holy, that hate purity and holiness at the heart; and deride and oppose that which they seem to pray for? As Austin confesseth of himself before he was converted, that he prayed against his filthy sin, and yet was afraid lest God should grant his prayers. So many many pray againſt the ſins which they would not be delivered from, or would not uſe the means that is neceſſary to their conqueſt and deliverance. Let him that nameth the name of Chriſt depart from iniquity, 2 Tim. 2. 19. If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me, Pſal. 66. 18. See Ezek. 14. 3, 4, 14. Alas, how eaſy is it for an ungodly perſon to learn to ſay a few words by rote, and to run them over, without any ſence of what he ſpeaketh; while the tongue is a ſtranger to the heart, and ſpeaketh not according to its deſires.

Dir. 7. §. 8. Direct. 7. Search your hearts and watch them carefully, leſt ſome beloved Vanity alienate them from the work in hand, and turn away your thoughts, or prepoſſeſs our affections, ſo that you want them when you ſhould uſe them. If the mind be ſet on other matters, prayer will be a heartleſs, lifeleſs thing: Alas, what a dead and pitiful work, is the prayer of one that hath his heart enſnared in the Love of money, or in any ambitious or covetous deſign? The thoughts will eaſily follow the affections.

Dir. 8. §. 9. Direct. 8. Be ſure that you pray for nothing that is diſagreeable to the will of God, and that is not for the good of your ſelves or others, or for the honour of God; and therefore take heed, leſt an erring judgment, or carnal deſires or paſſions ſhould corrupt your prayers, and turn them into ſin. If men will ignorantly pray to God to do them hurt, it is a mercy to them if God will but pardon and deny ſuch prayers, and a judgment to grant them. And it is an eaſie thing for fleſhly Intereſt, or partiality, or paſſion to blind the judgment, and conſequently to corrupt mens prayers. An Ambitious or Covetous man will eaſily be drawn to pray for the grant of his ſinful deſires, and think it would be for his good. And there is ſcarce an heretical or erroneous perſon, but thinketh that it would be good that the world were all reduced to his opinion, and all the Oppoſers of it were born down: There are few zealous Antinomians, Anabaptiſts, or any other Dividers of the Church, but they put their Opinions uſually into their prayers, and plead with God for the intereſt of their Sects and Errors: And its like that the Jews that had a perſecuting Zeal for God, Rom. 10. 2. did pray according to that Zeal, as well as perſecute: as its like Paul himſelf pray'd againſt the Chriſtians, while he ignorantly perſecuted them. And they that think they do God ſervice by killing his ſervants, no doubt would pray againſt them, as the Papiſts and others do at this day. Be ſpecially careful therefore that your Judgments and Deſires be ſound and holy, before you offer them up to God in prayer. For it is a moſt vile abuſe of God, to beg of him to do the Devils work; and, as moſt malitious and erroneous perſons do, to call him to their help againſt himſelf, his ſervants and his cauſe.

§. 10. Direct. 9. Come always to God in the humility that beſeemeth a condemned ſinner, and in the faith and boldneſs that beſeemeth a Son, and a member of Chriſt: Do nothing in the leaſt conceit and confidence of a worthineſs in your ſelves; but be as confident in every lawful requeſt, as if you ſaw your Glorified Mediator interceding for you with his Father. Hope is the Life of Prayer and all Endeavour, and Chriſt is the Life of Hope. If you pray and think you ſhall be never the better for it, your prayers will have little life. And there is no hope of ſucceſs, but thro' our powerful Interceſſor. Therefore let both a Crucified and Glorified Chriſt, be always before your eyes in prayer; not in a Picture, but in the thoughts of a believing mind. Inſtead of a Crucifix, let ſome ſuch ſentence of holy Scripture, be written before you, where you uſe to pray, as Joh. 20. 17. GO TO MY BRETHREN and SAY UNTO THEM, I ASCEND UNTO MY FATHER and YOUR FATHER, TO MY GOD and YOUR GOD. Or Heb. 4. 14. We have a great High-Prieſt that is paſſed into the Heavens, Jeſus the Son of God: ver. 15, 16. that was in all points tempted as we are, yet without ſin: Let us therefore come boldly to the Throne of Grace, that we may obtain mercy, &c. Heb. 6. 9, 20. Which hope we have as an anchor of the ſoul both ſure and ſtedfaſt, and that entreth into that within the vail; whether the forerunner is for us entred, Heb. 7. 25. He is able to ſave to the uttermoſt them that come to God by him, ſeeing he ever liveth to make interceſſion for them, Joh. 14. 13, 14. If ye aſk any thing in my name, I will do it: Chriſt and the Promiſe muſt be the ground of all your confidence and hope. Dir. 9.

§. 11. Direct. 10. Labour hard with your hearts all the while to keep them in a reverent, ſerious, fervent frame, and ſuffer them not to grow remiſs and cold, to turn prayer into lip-labour, and lifeleſs formality, or into hypocritical, affected, ſeeming fervency, when the heart is ſenſeleſs, though the voice be earneſt. The heart will eaſily grow dull and cuſtomary and hypocritical if it be not carefully watcht, and diligently followed and ſtirred up. The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much, Jam. 5. 16. A cold prayer ſheweth a heart that is cold in deſiring that which is prayed for, and therefore is unfit to receive the mercy; God will make you know that his mercy is not contemptible, but worthy your moſt earneſt prayers. Dir. 10.

§. 12. Direct. 11. * For the matter and order of your Deſires and Prayers, take the Lords Prayer as your ſpecial Rule; and labour to underſtand it well. For thoſe that can make uſe of ſo Brief an Explication, I ſhall give a little help. Dir. 11.

A Brief

A Brief Explication of the Method of the LORDS-PRAYER.

The Lords Prayer containeth,

I. The Addreſs, or Preface. In which are deſcribed or implyed,

- I. To whom the Prayer is made:
  - 1. Who he is: GOD: Not Creatures, Saints, or Angels.
  - 2. How Related to us: He is OUR FATHER, which comprehendeth fundamentally, that he is
    - 1. Our Creator.
    - 2. Our Redeemer.
    - 3. Our Regenerater. (To the regenerate)

    And therefore
    - 1. Our Owner, or Abſolute Lord.
    - 2. Our Ruler, or Supream King.
    - 3. Our Benefactor, and chief Good, and ſo Our Felicity and Our End.
  - 3. What he is in his Attributes: WHICH ART IN HEAVEN. Which ſignifieth that therefore he is,
    - 1. Almighty; and Able to grant all that we ask, and to relieve and help us in every ſtrait.
    - 2. All-knowing: Our hearts, and wants, and all things being open to his ſight.
    - 3. Moſt Good; from whom, and by whom and to whom are all things; the Fountain, the Diſpoſer, and the End of all whoſe Bounty and Influence all ſubſiſt. And the preſent Tenſe [ART] doth intimate his Eternity.

    In this one word is not only implyed all theſe Attributes of God, but alſo our Hearts are directed Whither, to look for their Relief and Direction now, and their Felicity for ever; and called off from Earthly Dependencies, and Expectations of Happineſs and Reſt; and to look for all from Heaven, and at laſt in Heaven.
- II. Who are the Petitioners——— Who are
  - 1. Man: as to his Being.
  - 2. By Relation Gods Children.
    - 1. By Creation: So All are: And therefore All may thus far call him Father.
    - 2. By Redemption: As All are as to the ſufficient Price and Satisfaction.
    - 3. By Regeneration: And ſo only the Regenerate are Children.

    1. His Own;
    2. His Subjects;
    3. His Beloved, and Beneficiaries, that live upon Him, and to Him as their End.
  - 3. By Quality.
    - 1. Dependant on God:
    - 2. Neceſſitous.
    - 3. Sinners.

    Yet
    - 1. Loving God, as their Father,
    - 2. Loving themſelves, as Men,
    - 3. Loving others, as Brethren:

    All which is ſignified in the Word OUR———

II. The Prayer, or Petitions: In two Parts: Of which,

- I. The firſt Part is according to the Order of Eſtimation, Intention and Deſire; and is,
  - 1. For the End ſimply which is GOD; in the word [THY] repeated in every Petition.
  - 2. For the End reſpective in the Intereſt of GOD, and that is in
    - I. The Higheſt or Ultimate, that is, The Glory of God; [HALLOWED BE THY NAME.]
    - II. The Higheſt Means of his Glory [THY KINGDOM COME]; that is, let the World be ſubject to thee their Creator and Redeemer; the Univerſal King.
    - III. The next Means, being the Effect of this: [THY WILL BE DONE], that is, Let thy Laws be fulfilled, and thy Diſpoſals ſubmitted to.
  - 3. For the Lower End, even the Subject of theſe Means; which is the publick good of Mankind, the World and Church: [IN EARTH] that is, let the World be ſubjected to thee, and the Church obey thee: which will be the greateſt Bleſſing to them: Our ſelves, being included in the World. And the meaſure and Pattern is added [AS IT IS IN HEAVEN] that is, let the Earth be conformed as near as may be to the Heavenly Pattern. So that this part of the Lords Prayer, proceeding in the order of Excellency and Intention, directeth us, I. To make God our Ultimate Higheſt End; and to deſire his Intereſt firſt, and in this Order, 1. His Glory, 2. His Kingdom, 3. Obedience to his Laws. II. To make the publick good of the World and the Church, our next End as being the Nobleſt Means. III. To include our own Intereſt in and under this, as the leaſt of all; Profeſſing firſt our own conſent to that which we Deſire firſt for others.
- II. The Prayer, or Petitions: In two Parts: Of which,
  - II. The ſecond Part is according to the Order of Execution, and is for Our ſelves, beginning at the loweſt, and Aſcending, till the End firſt Intended, be laſt attained: And it is
    - I. For the Support of our Nature by Neceſſary Means: [GIVE US THIS DAY OUR DAILY BREAD]: This being Gods firſt Gift, preſuppoſed both to Grace and Glory. [GIVE] ſignifieth our Dependance on God for all. [US] our Charity, that we deſire Relief for our ſelves and others. [DAILY (or ſubſtantial) BREAD] our moderation; that we deſire not Unneceſſaries or Superfluities. [THIS DAY] the Conſtancy of our Dependance, and that we deſire not, or care not too much for the future, and promiſe not our ſelves long Life.
    - II. For clearing us from the guilt of all ſin paſt (Repentance and Faith being here preſuppoſed) where is 1. The Petition. [AND FORGIVE US OUR DEBTS (treſpaſſes or ſins)]. 2. The Motive from our Qualification for forgiveneſs [AS WE FORGIVE OUR DEBTORS]. Without which God will not forgive us.
    - III. For future preſervation: 1. From the Means [LEAD US NOT INTO TEMPTATION] that is, Though thou maiſt juſtly try us, yet pity our Frailty, and neither cauſe nor permit us ſo to be tryed, as may tempt us to ſin and ruine: 2. From the End [BUT DELIVER US FROM THE EVIL] that is, 1. The Evil One, Satan, (and his Inſtruments): 2. The Evil Thing: 1. Sin. 2. Miſery, which are Satans End. He that would be ſaved from Hell and Miſery, muſt be ſaved from Sin; and he that would be ſaved from both, muſt be ſaved from Satan and from Temptation. Queſt. But where are the Requeſts for poſitive Holineſs, Grace and Heaven? Anſw. 1. Repentance and Faith are ſuppoſed in the Petitioner, 2. What he wanteth is asked in the three Petitions of the firſt Part, that we with others may ſanctifie Gods Name, and be the Subjects of his Kingdom, and do his Will, &c. CHRIST and a State of Grace, are Finally in the firſt Petition, Formally in the ſecond, and Expreſly in the third.

III. The Concluſion, the reaſon & Termination of our Deſires in their Ultimate End: here Praiſed: Beginning at the Loweſt, and aſcending to the Higheſt: Containing,

- I. What we Praiſe; or the Matter; or Intereſt of God,
  - I. His Univerſal Reign [FOR THINE IS THE KINGDOM] adminiſtred variouſly agreeably to the Subjects: All owe this abſolute obedience: who commandeſt and executeſt what thou wilt.
  - II. His Own Perfections, [THE POWER]: both Right and All-ſufficiency: including his Omniſcience and Goodneſs as well as Omnipotence———
  - III. His incomprehenſible Excellency and Bleſſedneſs, as he is the Ultimate End of us and all things [AND THE GLORY] Rom. 11. 36. 1 Cor. 10. 31.
- II. Whom we Praiſe: GOD, in the Word [THINE]: In him: the firſt Efficient Cauſe of all things, we begin: His Help as the Dirigent Cauſe we ſeek: and in Him as the final Cauſe we terminate.
- III. The Duration: [FOR EVER AND EVER] To Eternity: And [AMEN] is the Expreſſion of our conſent. For of Him and through Him, and to Him are all things: To him be Glory for ever, Amen, Rom 9. 36.

So

So that it is apparent that the Method of the Lords Prayer is Circular, partly Analytically, and partly Synthetical: Beginning with GOD, and ending in God: Beginning with such Acknowledgments as are prerequisite to Petition, and Ending in those Praises which Petition and Grace-bestowed tend to: Beginning our Petitions for Gods Interest and the publick Good, according to the order of Estimation and Intention, till we come to the meer Means, and then beginning at the lowest and ascending according to the order of Execution. As the blood passing from the greater to the smaller numerous Vessels, is there received by the like, and repasseth to its fountain; such a circular Method hath Mercy and Duty, and consequently our Desires.

Tit. 2. Some Questions about Prayer answered.

THe rest of the general Directions about Prayer I think will be best contrived into the resolving of these following Doubts.

Qu. 1. §. 1. Quest. 1. Is the Lords Prayer a Directory only, or a Form of Words to be used by us in Prayer?

Answ. 1. It is principally the Rule to guide our inward Desires and outward Expressions of them; both for the Matter, what we must desire, and for the Order, which we must Desire first and most. 2. But this Rule is given in a Form of words, most apt to express the said Matter and Order. 3. And this form may fitly be used in due season by all, and more necessarily by some. 4. But it was never intended to be the only words which we must use, no more than the Creed is the only words that we must use to express the Doctrine of Faith, or the Decalogue the only words to express our Duty by.

Selden in Eutychii Alexandr. Orig. p. 42, 43. sheweth that before Ezra the Jews prayed without Forms, and that Ezra and the Elders with him, composed them a Form which had eighteen Benedictions and Petitions, that is, the three first and the three last for the Glorifying God, and the rest intermediate for personal and publick Benefits. And pag. 48. That they might omit none of these, but might add others.

Qu. 2. §. 2. Quest. 2. What need is there of any other words of Prayer, if the Lords Prayer be perfect?

Answ. Because it is only a perfect Summary, containing but the general Heads; And it is needful to be more particular in our desires; For Universals exist in particulars; And he that only nameth the General, and then another and another General, doth remember but few of the particulars; He that shall say, [I have sinned and broken all thy Commandments,] doth generally confess every sin; But it is not true Repentance, if it be not particular; for this, and that, and the other sin; at least as to the greater which may be remembred; He that shall say, [I believe all the word of God, or I believe in God the Father, Son and Holy Ghost], may know little what is in the word of God, or what these Generals signifie, and therefore our Faith must be more particular; So must Desires after Grace be particular also. Otherwise it were enough to ask for mercy in the general. If you say, that God knoweth what these general words signifie, though we do not; I answer, This is the Papists silly Argument for Latin Prayers; God knoweth our desires without any expressions or prayers at all, and he knoweth our wants without our desires. But it followeth not that prayers or desires are unnecessary. The exercise of our own Repentance and Desire doth make us persons fit to receive Forgiveness, and the Grace desired; when the Impenitent and those that desire it not are unfit; And it is no true Repentance when you say, [I am sorry that I have sinned,] but you know not, or remember not, Wherein you have sinned, nor what your sin is: and so repent not indeed of any one sin at all. And so it is no true Desire, that reacheth not to the particular necessary Graces, which we must desire; Though I know some few very quick comprehensive minds can in a moment think of many particulars when they use but general words; And I know that some smaller less necessary things, may be generally past over; and greater matters in a time of haste, or when we, besides those Generals, do also use particular requests.

Qu. 3. §. 3. Quest. 3. Is it lawful to pray in a set form of words?

Answ. Nothing but very great Ignorance can make you really doubt of it. Hath God any where forbid it? You will say, That its enough that he hath not commanded it: I answer, That in general he hath commanded it to all whose edification it tendeth to, when he commandeth you, that all be done to edification; but he hath given no particular command, nor prohibition; No more he hath not commanded you to pray in English, French, or Latin; nor to sing Psalms in this Tune or that; nor after this or that Version or Translation; nor to preach in this Method particularly or that; nor always to preach upon a Text; nor to use written Notes; nor to compose a form of words, and learn them, and preach them after they are composed, with a Hundred such like, which are undoubtedly lawful; yea, and needful to some, though not to others. If you make up all your prayer of Scripture-sentences, this is to pray in a form of prescribed words, and yet as lawful and fit as any of your own; The Psalms are most of them forms of Prayer or Praise which the Spirit of God indited for the use of the Church, and of particular Persons. It would be easie to fill many Pages with larger reasonings, and answers to all the fallacious Objections that are brought against this; But I will not so far weary the Reader and my self.

See Selden ubi supra, proving that the Jews had a form of Prayer since Ezra's time. Therefore it was in Christs time. Yet he and his Apostles join'd with them, and never contradicted or blamed them for forms.

Qu. 4. §. 4. Quest. 4. But are those Forms lawful which are prescribed by others, and not by God?

Answ. Yea; Or else it would be unlawful for a Child or Scholar to use a Form prescribed by his Parents or Master. And to think that a thing lawful doth presently become unlawful, because a Parent, Master, Pastor or Prince doth prescribe it or command it, is a conceit, that I will not wrong my Reader so far, as to suppose him guilty of. Indeed if an Usurper that hath no Authority over us in such matters do prescribe it, we are not bound to formal Obedience, that is, to do it therefore because he commandeth it; But yet I may be bound to it on some other Accounts; And though his Command do not bind me, yet it maketh not the thing it self unlawful.

Qu. 5. §. 5. Quest. 5. But is it lawful to pray ex tempore without a premeditated form of Words?

Answ. No Christian of competent understanding doubteth of it. We must premeditate on our wants and sins, and the graces and mercies we desire, and the God we speak to; and we must be able to express these things without any lothsome and unfit expressions. But whether the words are fore-contrived or not: is a thing that God hath no more bound you to by any Law, than whether the Speaker or Hearers shall use Sermon Notes, or whether your Bibles shall be Written or in Print.

Qu. 6. §. 6. Quest. 6. If both ways be lawful, which is better?

Answ. If you are to join with others in the Church, that is better to you, which the Pastor then useth: For it is his Office and not yours to word the prayers which he puts up to God; And if he choose a form (whether it be as most agreeable to his parts or to his people, or for concord with other Churches, or for obedience to Governours, or to avoid some greater inconvenience) you must join with him, or not joyn there at all. But if it be in private where you are the Speaker your self, you must take that way that that is most to your own edification (and to others if you have Auditors joining with you.) One man is so unused to prayer (being ignorantly bred) or of such unready memory or expression, that he cannot remember the tenth part so much of his particular wants, without the help of a form as with it; nor can he express it so affectingly for himself or others: nay, perhaps not in tolerable words: And a form to such a man may be a duty; as to a dim-sighted man to read by spectacles, or to an unready Preacher to use prepared words and Notes. And another man may have need of no such helps; Nay, when he is habituated in the understanding and feeling of his sins and Wants, and hath a Tongue that is used to express his mind even in these matters, with readiness and facility, it will greatly hinder the fervour of such a mans affections, to tie himself to premeditated words; To say the contrary, is to speak against the common sense and experience of such speakers and their hearers. And let them that yet deride this as uncertain and inconsiderate praying, but mark themselves, whether they cannot if they be hungry beg for bread, or ask help of their Physician, or Lawyer, or Landlord, or any other, as well without a learned or studied form, as with it? Who knoweth not that its true which the New Philosopher saith: Carte∫. de Paſſion. part. 1. art. 44. Et cum inter loquendum ſolum cogitamus de ſenſu illius rei, quam dicere volumus, id facit ut moveamus linguam & labra celerius & melius, quam ſi cogitaremus ea movere omnibus modis requiſitis ad proferenda eadem verba; Quia habitus quem acquiſivimus cum diſceremus loqui, &c. Turning the thoughts too solicitiously from the Matter to the Words, doth not only mortify the prayers of many, and turn them into a dead form, but also maketh them more dry and barren even as to the words themselves. The heavy charge and bitter scornful words which have been too common in this age, against praying without a set form by some, and against praying with a Book or Form by others, is so dishonourable a Symptom or Diagnostick of the Churches sickness, as must needs be matter of Shame and Sorrow to the sounder Understanding part; For it cannot be denied, but it proveth mens Understandings and Charity to be both exceeding low.

Three or four of these Cases as to Church-prayers are largelier answered afterward, Tom. 3. Part. 2. Socrates alius Cous deorum precationes, invocationesque conscripsit. Laert. in Socrate.

Qu. 7. §. 7. Quest. 7. Must we always pray according to the Method of the Lords Prayer, and is it a sin to do otherwise?

Answ. 1. The Lords Prayer is first a Rule for your Desires: And it is a sin, if your Desires follow not that Method: If you do not begin in your Desires with God, as your Ultimate End, and if you first Desire not his Glory, and then the flourishing of his Kingdom, and then the Obeying of his Laws, and herein the publick welfare of the world, before and above your particular benefit: And it is a sin if you desire not your Daily Bread (or necessary support of Nature) as a lower Mercy in order to your higher spiritual mercies; and if you desire not pardon of sin as a means to your future sanctity, duty and felicity; and if you desire not these, as a means to the glory of God; and take not his Praises as the highest part of your Prayers. But for the Expressing of these Desires, particular occasions may warrant you oft-times to begin in another order; As when you pray for the sick, or pray for directions, or a blessing before a Sermon or some particular work, you may begin and end with the subject that is before you, as the prayers of holy men in all ages have done. 2. You must distinguish also (as between Desires and Expressions) so between an Universal and a Particular Prayer. The one containeth all the parts of prayer, and the other is but about some one subject or part, or but some few; This last being but one or few particular Petitions cannot possibly be uttered in the Method of an Universal Prayer which hath all the parts. There is no one Petition in the Lords Prayer, but may be made a Prayer it self; and then it cannot have the other Petitions as parts. 3. And you must distinguish between the even and ordinary case of a Christian, and his extraordinary case, when some special reason, affection or accident calleth him to look most to some one particular. In his even and ordinary case, every universal prayer should be expressed in the Method of the Lords Prayer; But in cases of special reason and inducement it may be otherwise.

Qu. 8. §. 8. Quest. 8. Must we pray always when the Spirit moveth us, and only then, or as Reason guideth us?

Answ. There are two sorts of the Spirits motions; The one is by extraordinary inspiration or impulse, as he moved the Prophets and Apostles, to reveal new Laws or precepts or events, or to do some actions without respect to any other command than the Inspiration it self. This Christians are not now to expect, because experience telleth us that it is ceased; or if any should pretend to it as not yet ceased, in the prediction of Events, and Direction in some things otherwise indifferent, yet it is most certain that it is ceased as to Legislation; for the spirit it self hath already given us those Laws, which he hath declared to be perfect, and unchangeable till the end of the world: The other sort of the spirits working, is not to make new Laws or Duties, but to Guide and quicken us in the doing of that which is our Duty before by the Laws already made. And these are the motions that all true Christians must now expect. By which you may see, that the Spirit and Reason are not to be here disjoined, much less opposed; As Reason sufficeth not without the spirit, being dark and asleep; so the spirit worketh not on the Will but by the Reason; He moveth not a man as a beast or stone, to do a thing he knoweth not why; but by illumination giveth him the soundest Reason for the doing of it: And Duty is first Duty before we do it; And when by our own sin we forfeit the special motions or help of the spirit, duty doth not thereby cease to be duty, nor our omission to be sin. If the spirit of God teach you to discern the meetest season for prayer, by considering your Affairs, and when you are most free, this is not to be denied to be the work of the spirit, because it is rational (as phanatick enthusiasts imagine:) And if you are moved to pray in a crowd of business, or at any time when Reason can prove that it is not your duty but your sin, the same Reason proveth that it was not the spirit of God that moved you to it: For the spirit in the heart is not contrary to the spirit in the Scripture. Set upon the duty which the spirit in the Scripture commandeth you, and then you may be sure that you obey the spirit: otherwise you disobey it. Yea if your hearts be cold, prayer is a likelier means to warm them, than the Omission of it. To ask whether you may pray while your hearts are cold and backward, is as to ask whether you may labour or come to the fire before you are warm. Gods spirit is likelier to help you in Duty, than in the neglect of it.

Qu. 9. §. 9. Quest. 9. May a Man pray that hath no Desire at all of the Grace which he prayeth for?

Answ. No: because it is no prayer but Dissembling; and dissembling is no duty. He that asketh for that which he would not have, doth lye to God in his hypocrisie. But if a man have but cold and common desires (tho' they reach not to that which will prove them evidences of true grace,) he may pray and express those desires which he hath.

Qu. 10. §. 10. Quest. 10. May a Man pray that doubteth of his Interest in God, and dare not call him Father as his Child?

Answ. 1. There is a common Interest in God, which all mankind have, as he is Good to all, and as his mercy through Christ is offered to all: And thus those Psal. 42. 9. & 22. 1. Joh. 2. 4. Jer. 31. 9.

Luk. 15. 12, 17, 19. Mal. 2. 10. those that are not regenerate are his Children by Creation, and by participation of his mercy: and they may both call him Father and pray to himself, though yet they are unregenerate. 2. God hath an interest in you, when you have no special interest in him: Therefore his command must be obeyed which bids you pray. 3. Groundless doubts will not disoblige you from your duty; else men might free themselves from almost all their obedience.

Qu. 11. §. 11. Quest. 11. May a wicked or unregenerate man pray, and is he accepted? Or is not his prayer abominable to God?

Act. 15. 17. & 17. 27. & 8. 22. Isa. 55. 6. Psal. 14. 4. Answ. 1. A wicked man as a wicked man, can pray no how but wickedly, that is, he asketh only for things unlawful to be asked, or for lawful things to unlawful ends; and this is still abominable to God. 2. A wicked man may have in him some good that proceedeth from common grace; and this he may be obliged to exercise, and so by prayer to express his desires so far as they are good. 3. A wicked mans wicked prayers are never accepted, but a wicked mans prayers which are for good things, from common grace, are so far accepted as that they are some means conducing to his reformation, and though his person be still unjustified, and these Prayers sinful, yet the total omission of them is a greater sin. 4. A wicked man is bound at once to Repent and Pray, Acts 8. 22. Isa. 55. 6, 7. And when ever God bids him ask for grace, he bids him desire grace; And to bid him Pray, is to bid him Repent and be of a better mind: Therefore those that reprove Ministers for perswading wicked men to Pray, reprove them for perswading them to Repentance and good desires. But if they Pray without that Repentance which God and man exhort them to, the sin is theirs: But all their labour is not lost if their desires fall short of saving sincerity; they are under obligations to many duties, which tend to bring them nearer Christ, and which they may do without special saving grace.

Qu. 12. §. 12. Quest. 12. May a wicked man pray the Lords Prayer, or be exhorted to use it?

Heb. 11. 6. Rom. 10. 14. Answ. 1. The Lords Prayer in its full and proper sense, must be spoken by a Penitent, believing, justified person; For in the full sense no one else can call him Our Father (though in a limited sense the wicked may:) And they cannot desire the Glory of God, and the coming of his Kingdom, nor the doing of his will on Earth as it is in Heaven, and this sincerely, without true grace: (especially those enemies of holiness, that think it too much strictness to do Gods will on Earth, ten thousand degrees lower than it is done in Heaven.) Nor can they put up one Petition of that Prayer sincerely according to the proper sense; no not to pray for their Daily Bread, as a means of their support while they are doing the will of God, and seeking first his Glory and his Kingdom. But yet its pollible for them to speak these words from such common desires as are not so bad as none at all.

Qu. 13. §. 13. Quest. 13. Is it Idolatry to Pray to Saints or Angels? Or is it always sinful?

Psal. 65. 2. Isa. 63. 16. Psal. 145. 18. 1 King. 8. 39. Act. 1. 24. Rom. 8. 27. & 10. 14. Psal. 62. 8. Mat. 4. 9. Answ. I love not to be too quarrelsome with other mens devotions; But 1. I see not how Praying to an Angel or a departed Saint can be excused from sin: Because it supposeth them to be every where present, or to be Omniscient, and to know the heart, yea, to know at once the hearts of all men; or else the speaker pretendeth to know when the Saint or Angel is present and heareth him, and when not: And because the Scripture doth no where signifie that God would have us pray to any such Saints or Angels, but signifieth enough to satisfie us of the contrary. 2. But all prayer to them is not Idolatry, but some is, and therefore we must distinguish, if we will judge righteously. 1. To pray to Saints or Angels as supposed Omnipresent, Omniscient or Omnipotent, is flat Idolatry. 2. To pray to them to Forgive us our sins against God, or to Justifie, or Sanctifie, or Redeem or save us from Hell, or any thing which belongeth to God only to do, is no better than Idolatry. 3. But to pray to them only to do that which belongeth to the guardian, or charitable office that is committed to them, and to think that though they are not Omnipresent nor Omniscient, nor you know not whether they hear you at this time or not, yet you will venture your prayers at uncertainty, it being but so much labour lost, this I take to be sinfully superstitious, but not Idolatry. 4. But to pray to living Saints or Sinners, for that which belongeth to them to give, is no sin at all. Rev. 22. 8, 9. Col. 2. 18.

Qu. 14. §. 14. Quest. 14. Is a man bound to pray ordinarily in his family?

Answ. I have answered this affirmatively before, and proved it: One grain of grace would answer it better than Arguments can do.

Qu. 15. §. 15. Quest. 15. Must the same man pray secretly that hath prayed in his family or with others?

Answ. 1. Distinguish between those that were the Speakers, and those that were not; and 2. Between those that have leisure from greater or more urgent duties, and those that have not. And so, 1. Those that are free from the urgency of all other duties, which at that time are greater, should pray both in the family and in secret; especially if they were not themselves the speakers, usually they will have the more need of secret Prayer, because their hearts in publick may easilier flag, and much of their case may be omitted. 2. But those that have more urgent greater duties, may take up * at that time with family prayer alone, (with secret ejaculations, especially if they were the Speakers:) having there put up the same requests as they would do in secret. * Mark that I say but [At that time.]

Qu. 16. §. 16. Quest. 16. Is it best to keep set hours for Prayer, or to take the time which is fittest at present?

Answ. Ordinarily set times will prove the fittest times, and to leave the time undetermined and uncertain, will put all out of order, and multiply impediments, and hinder duty. But yet when extraordinary cases make the ordinary time unfit, a fitter time must be taken.

Qu. 17. §. 17. Quest. 17. Is it lawful to joyn in family (or Church) Prayers with ungodly men?

Answ. I joyn both together, because the cases little differ; For the Pastor hath the Government of the people in Church-worship, as the Master of the family hath in family-worship: You may choose at first whether you will be a member of the Church or family (if you were not born to it as your priviledge.) But when you are a member of either, you must be Governed as members. And to the case, 1. You must distinguish between Professed wicked men, and those that sin against their profession. 2. And between a family (or Church) that is totally wicked, and that which is mixt of good and bad. 3. And between those wicked men whose presence is your sin, because you have power to remove them, and those whose presence is not your sin, nor the matter in your power. 4. And between one that may yet choose of what family he will be, and one that may not. And so I answer, 1. If it be the fault of the Master of the family (or the Pastors of the Church) that such wicked men are there, and not cast out, then it is their sin to joyn with them, because it is their duty to remove them; But that is not the case of the fellow-servants (or people) that have no power. 2. If that wicked men profess their wickedness, after sufficient admonition, you must professedly disown communion with them; and then you are morally separated and discharged, and when you have no power locally to separate. 3. It is your sin to fly from your duty, because a wicked man is there, whom you have no power to remove. 4. There are many prayers that a wicked man is bound to put up to God; and you must not omit your duty, because he performeth his, tho' faultily: Methinks you should more scruple joyning or conversing with one that forsaketh Prayer (which is the greater sin) than with one that prayeth. 5. But if you are free to choose you are to be blamed if you will not choose a better Family (or Church,) (other things being equal:) especially if all the company be wicked.

Qu. 18. §. 18. Quest. 18. But what if the Master of the Family (or Pastor) be a Heretick or ungodly?

Answ. You must distinguish between his personal Faults, and the Faults of his performance or worship. His personal Faults (such as swearing or drunkenness, &c.) you must disown, and must not choose a Master (or Pastor) that is such, while you have your choice, and may have better: But otherwise it is lawful to joyn with him in doing good, though not in evil. But if the fault of his Duty it self be intolerable you must not joyn with him: Now it is intolerable in these cases. 1. In case he be utterly unable to express a prayer, and so make it no prayer. 2. In case he bend his prayers against Godliness, and known Truth, and Charity and Peace, and so make his prayers but the Instruments of mischief, to vent heresie, or malice, and do more hurt than good to others.

Qu. 19. §. 19. Quest. 19. May we pray Absolutely for outward mercies, or only Conditionally?

Answ. You must distinguish 1. Between a condition spoken of the subject, when we are uncertain whether it be a mercy or not, and an extrinsick condition of the grant. 2. Between a condition of prayer, and a condition of expectation. 3. Between submission to Gods will, and a conditional desire or prayer. And so I answer, 1. It is necessary when we are uncertain whether the thing it self be Good or not, that we pray with a subjective conditionality: [Grant this if it be good:] or [If it be not good I do not pray for it.] For it is presupposed in prayer that we know the thing prayed for to be good. 2. But when we know the thing to be a mercy and good, we may pray for it absolutely. 3. But we may not believe that we shall receive all with an absolute expectation, which we absolutely Pray for. For Prayer being the expression of desire, that which may be absolutely desired, tho' not absolutely promised, may be absolutely prayed for. (As our increase or strength of Grace, or the Conversion of our Relations, &c.) 4. But yet all such must be asked with a submission to the will of God: But that maketh it not properly a conditional form of praying; For when the nature of Prayer is as it were to move the will of God, it is not so proper to say, [Lord do this if it be thy will already;] or [Lord be pleased to do this if it be thy pleasure] as to say [Lord grant this mercy; But if thou deny it, it is my duty to submit.] So Christ mentioneth both the subjective conditionality and the submission of his will, Matth. 26. 39. If it be possible let this cup pass from me: Nevertheless not as I will, but as thou wilt: As if he had said, Nature requireth me with a simple nolition to be unwilling of the suffering, and if it be consistent with the desired ends of my Mediatorship to be desirous to avoid it: But seeing that it cannot be, my comparing will commandeth this simple will of self-preservation to submit to thy most perfect will But if any call this [submission] a condition, the matter is not great.

Qu. 20. §. 20. Quest. 20. May we pray for all that we may lawfully desire?

Answ. No: for prayer is not only an expression of Desire; but also a means to attain the thing desired. And some things may be lawfully desired (at least with a simple velleity,) which may not be sought, because they must not be hoped for, where God hath said that he will not grant them. For it is vain to seek that which you have no hope to find: As to desire to see the Conversion of the whole world, or to pass to Heaven as Enoch without dying, are lawful (by a simple velleity:) But all things compared it is not lawful peremptorily to desire it without submission; and therefore not to ask it. It is the expression of a comparate, determinate desire, which is properly called prayer, being the use of means for the obtaining of that desire; and whatsoever I may so desire, I may pray for; for if there be no hope of it, I may not so desire it. But the desire by way of simple velleity may not be put into a proper prayer, when there is no hope. I must have a simple desire (with submission) to attain a sinless perfection here, even this hour; but because there is no hope, I may not let it proceed to a determinate peremptory desire upon a comparing judgment, nor into a proper prayer. And yet these velleities may be expressed in prayer, tho' they have not the full nature of a prayer. Object. But was not Christs a prayer, Mat. 26. 39. Answ. Either Christ as man was certain that the Cup must not pass from him, or uncertain. If you could prove him uncertain, then it is a proper prayer (with submission to his Fathers will;) But if he was certain that it was not to pass from him, then it was analogically only a Prayer, it being but a representing of his velleity, to his Father, and not of his determinate will, nor was any means to attain that end: And indeed such it was, As if he had said, Father if it had stood with the ends of my office and thy will, I would have asked this of thee; but because it doth not, I submit. And this much we may do.

§. 21. Quest. 21. How then can we pray for the salvation of all the world? must it be for all men collectively? or only for some, excluding no numerical denominate person? Qu. 21.

Answ. Just as Christ prayed here in this Text, we must express our simple velleity of it to God, as a thing that in it self is most desirable (as the passing of the Cup was unto Christ:) But we cannot express a determinate volition, by a full prayer, such as hath any tendency as a means to attain that end; because we are certain that Gods will is against it, or that it will not be.

§. 22. Quest. 22. May we pray for the Conversion of all the Nations of the World to Christianity, with a hopeful prayer? Qu. 22.

Answ. Yes: For we are not certain that every Nation shall not be so converted, though it be improbable.

§. 23. Quest. 23. May we pray in hope with a proper prayer (as a means to obtain it) that a whole Kingdom may be all truly converted and saved? Qu. 23.

Answ. Yes: For God hath no way told us that it shall not be; Tho' it be a thing improbable, it is not impossible; And therefore being greatly desirable may be prayed for. Tho' Christ hath told us that his flock is little, and few find the way of life, yet that may stand with the salvation of a Kingdom.

§. 24. Quest. 24. May we pray for the destruction of the enemies of Christ, or of the Gospel, or of the King? Qu. 24.

Answ. Not with respect to that which is called Gods antecedent will, for so we ought first to pray for their Conversion, (and restraint till then;) But with respect to that called his Consequent will we may; that is, we must first pray that they may be restrained and converted, and secondly that, if not, they may be destroyed.

§. 25. Quest. 25. What is to be thought of that which some call a particular faith in prayer? If I can firmly believe that a lawful prayer shall be granted in kind, may I not be sure by a divine faith that it shall be so? Qu. 25.

Answ. Belief hath relation to a Testimony or Revelation; Prayer may be warranted as lawful, if the thing be desirable, and there be any possibility of obtaining it, though there be no certainty, or flat promise; But faith or expectation must be warranted by the Promise. If God have promised you the thing prayed for, you may believe that you shall receive it; Otherwise your particular faith is a fancy or a believing of your selves, and not a believing God that never promised you the thing. Object. Mat. 21. 22. And all things whatsoever you ask in prayer, believing, Mark 11. 23, 24. ye shall receive. Answ. There are two sorts of Faith; the one a Belief that is ordinary, having respect to ordinary promises and mercies: The Text can be understood of this in no other sense than this. [All things which I have promised you, you shall receive, if you ask them believingly.] But this is nothing to that which is not promised. The other faith was extraordinary, in order to the working of Miracles; And this faith was a potent inward confidence, which was not in the power of the person when he pleased, but was given like an Inspiration by the Spirit of God, when a Miracle was to be wrought; and this seemeth to be it that is spoken of in the Text. And this was built on this extraordinary promise, which was made not to all men in all ages, but to those times when the Gospel was to be sealed and delivered by Miracles; and specially to the Apostles. So that in these times, there is neither such a promise of our working Miracles as they had to believe, nor yet a power to exercise that sort of extraordinary faith. Therefore a strong conceit (though it come in a fervent prayer) that any thing shall come to pass, which we cannot prove by any promise or prophecy, it is not to be called any act of Divine faith at all, nor to be trusted to.

Qu. 26. §. 26. Quest. 26. But must we not believe that every lawful prayer is accepted and heard of God?

Answ. Yes: but not that it should be granted in the very thing, unless so promised: But you may believe that your prayer is not lost, and that it shall be a means of that which tendeth to your good. Rom. 8. 28. Isa. 45. 19.

Qu. 27. §. 27. Quest. 27. With what faith must I pray for the Souls or Bodies of other men; for their conversion, or their lives?

Answ. A godly man may pray for wicked Relations or others, with more hope than they can pray for themselves, while they remain ungodly: But yet not with any certainty of prevailing for the thing he asketh, for it is not peremptorily promised him. Otherwise Samuel had prevailed for Saul, and Isaac for Esau, and David for Absolom, and the good People for all the wicked; and then no godly Parents would have their Children lost; no nor any in the World would perish, for godly persons pray for them all. But those prayers are not lost to him that puts them up.

Qu. 28. §. 28. Quest. 28. With what faith may we pray for the continuance of the Church and Gospel to any Nation.

Answ. The former answer serveth to this; Our hope may be according to the degrees of probability: But we cannot believe it as a certainty by Divine faith, because it is not promised by God.

Qu. 29. §. 29. Quest. 29. How may we know when our prayers are heard of God, and when not?

Answ. Two ways: Sometimes by experience, when the thing it self is actually given us; and always by the Promise: When we ask for that which God commandeth us to ask, or promiseth to grant; For we are sure Gods promises are all fulfilled. If we ask for the objects of sense (as food or rayment, or health, &c.) sense will tell us whether our prayers be granted in the same kind that we asked for; But if the questions be of the objects of Faith, it is faith that must tell you that your prayers are granted; But yet Faith and Reason make use of Evidences or Signs. As if I pray for pardon of sin, and salvation, the promise assureth me, that this prayer is granted, if I be a penitent, believing, regenerate person, otherwise not; Therefore faith only assureth me that such prayers are granted supposing that I discern the Evidence of my regeneration, repentance and faith in Christ: So if the question be whether my prayer for others, or for temporal mercies, be answered in some other kind, and conduce to my good some other way, faith only must tell you this from the promise, by the help of evidences. There are millions of prayers that will all be found answered at death and judgment, which we knew not to be answered any way but by believing it.

§ 30. Quest. 30. What should a Christian of weak parts do, that is dry and barren of matter, and can scarce tell what to say in prayer; but is ready to rise off his knees almost as soon as he hath begun? Qu. 30.

Answ. 1. He must not be stranger to himself, but study well his heart and life: and then he will find such a multitude of inward corruptions to lament, and such a multitude of wants be supplied, and weaknesses to be strengthened, and disorders to be rectified, and actual sins to be forgiven, that may find him work enough for confessions, complaints and petitions many days together, if expression be but as ready as matter. How to have constant supply of matter. 2. Let him study God, and get the knowledge of his Nature, Attributes and Works: And then he will find matter enough to aggravate his sin, and to furnish him with the holy Praise of God from day to day. As he that is acquainted with all that is in any Book, can copiously discourse of it, when he that knoweth not what is in it, hath little to say of it: So he that knoweth God and his works (and himself, and his sins and wants) is acquainted with the best Prayer Book; and hath always a full heap of matter before him, whenever he cometh to speak to God. 3. Let him study the Mystery of Mans Redemption, and the Person, and Office, and Covenant and Grace of Christ; and he need not want matter for prayer or praise: A very Child if he see but a Pedlars pack opened, where there are abundance of things which he desireth, will learn without-book to say, [O Father buy me this, and give me that, &c.] So will the Soul that seeth the Rev. 3. 17, 18. Treasuries and Riches of Christ. 4. Let him know the extent of the Law of God, and the meaning of the Ten Commandments: If he know but what sins are forbidden in each Commandment, and what duties are required, he may find matter enough for Confession and Petition: And therefore the view of such a brief Exposition of the Commandments, as you may find in Mr. Brinsley's True-watch, and in Dr. Downams and Mr. Whateleys Tables, will be a present furniture for such a use, especially in days of Humiliation. So it will also to have a particular understanding of the Creed and the Lords Prayer; which will furnish you with much matter. 5. Study well the Temptations which you carry about you in your Flesh, and meet with in the World, and are suggested by the Tempter; and think of the many Duties you have to do, and the many Dangers and sufferings to undergo, and you will never be unfurnished for matter for your prayers. 6. Observe the daily passages of Providence; to your selves and others: Mark how things go with your Souls every day, and hearken how it goeth with the Church of God, and mark also how it goeth with your Neighbours, and sure you will find matter enough for prayer. 7. Think of the Heavenly joys that you are going to, and the Streets of the New Jerusalem will be large enough for Faith to walk in. 8. For words be acquainted with the phrase of Scripture, and you will find provisions for all occasions. Read Dr. Wilkins Book called The Gift of Prayer, or Mr. Brinsley's Brinſley's Watch, or Mr. El. Par's Abba Father: 9. Keep up the heart in a reverend ſerious lively frame, and it will be a contiual ſpring to furniſh you with Matter. When a dead and barren heart hath a dry and ſleepy Tongue. 10. Joyn as oft as you can with thoſe that are full and copious in prayer: For example and uſe will be very great helps. 11. Quench not the Spirit of God that muſt aſſiſt you. 12. In caſe of neceſſity, uſe thoſe Books or Forms which are more full than you can be your ſelves till you come to ability to do better without them. Qu. 31. How to keep up fervency in prayer.

§. 31. Queſt. 31. How ſhould a Chriſtian keep up an ordinary fervency in prayer?

Anſw. 1. See that Knowledge and Faith provide you Matter: For as the Fire will go out if there be not fewel, ſo fervency will decay, when you are dry, and ſcarce know what to ſay; or do not well believe what you underſtand. 2. Clog not the Body either with overmuch Eating and Drinking, or over-tiring Labours: For an active Body helpeth much the activity of the mind: And the holieſt perſon will be able but poorly to exerciſe his fervency, under a dull or languiſhing Body. 3. Ruſh not ſuddenly upon prayer, out of a crowd of other buſineſſes, or before your laſt worldly cares or diſcourſes be waſhed clean out of your minds. In Study and Prayer how certain a truth is it, that Non bene fit quod occupato animo fit (Hieron. Epiſt. 143. ad Paulin.) That work is not well done, which is done with a mind that is prepoſſeſſed, or buſied about other matters: That mind muſt be wholly free from all other preſent thoughts or buſineſs, that will either Pray or Study well. 4. Keep a tender heart and conſcience that is not ſenſeleſs of your own concernments; For all your prayers muſt needs be ſleepy, if the heart and Conſcience be once hardned, ſeared or fallen aſleep. 5. Take more pains with your hearts than with your tongues. Remember that the ſucceſs of your work lyeth moſt on them. Bear not with their ſluggiſhneſs; Do by them as you would do by your Child or Servant that ſleepeth by you at prayer, you will not let them ſnort on, but jog them till you have awakened them. So do by your hearts when you find them dull. 6. Live as in the continual preſence of God; but labour to apprehend his ſpecial preſence when you are about to ſpeak to him; Ask your hearts how they would behave themſelves, if they ſaw the Lord, or but the loweſt of his holy Angels? 7. Let faith be called up to ſee Heaven and Hell as open all the while before you; and ſuch a ſight will ſurely keep you ſerious. 8. Keep death and judgment in your continual remembrance and expectation; Remember how all your prayers will be lookt back upon. Look not for long life; Remember that this prayer for ought you know may be your laſt, but certainly you have not long to pray. Pray therefore as a dying man ſhould do. 9. Study well the unſpeakable neceſſity of your ſouls. If you prevail not for pardon, and grace, and preſervation, you are undone and loſt for ever. Remember that neceſſity is upon you, and Heaven or Hell are at the end, and you are praying for more than a thouſand lives. 10. Study well the unſpeakable excellency of thoſe mercies which you pray for; O think how bleſſed a life it would be, if you could know God more, and love him more, and live a blameleſs heavenly life, and then live with Chriſt in Heaven for ever? Study theſe mercies till the flames of Love put life into your prayers. 11. Study well the exceeding encouragements that you have to Pray and Hope; If your Hope decay your fervour will decay. Think of the unconceivable Love of God, the aſtoniſhing mercy ſhewed to you in your Redeemer, and in the helps of the Holy Spirit, and how Chriſt is now interceeding for you; Think of theſe till faith make glad your heart; And in this gladneſs let Praiſe and Thanksgiving have ordinarily no ſmall ſhare in your prayers; for it will tire out the heart to be always poring on its own diſtempers, and diſcourage it to look on nothing but its infirmities: And then a ſad diſcouraged temper will not be ſo lively a temper, as a thankful, praiſeful, joyful temper is; For Lætitia loquax res eſt, atq; oſtentatrix ſui: Gladneſs is a very expreſſive thing, and apt to ſhew it ſelf. But triſtes non eloquentes ſunt, maxime ſi ad ægritudinem animi accedat corporis ægritudo. Hieron. Epiſt. 31. ad Theoph. Alexand. Sad men are ſeldom eloquent: eſpecially if the body be ſick as well as the mind. Symmach. Epiſt. 31. l. 1. ad Auſon. 12. Let the Image of a praying and bleeding Chriſt, and of his praying Saints be (not on a wall before your eyes, but) engraven on your minds; Is it not deſirable to be conformed to them? Had they more need to pray importunately than you? 13. Be very cautelous in the uſe of forms, leſt you grow dull and cuſtomary, and before you are aware your tongues uſe to go without your hearts. The heart is apt to take its eaſe when it feeleth not ſome urgent inſtigation. And though the preſence of God ſhould ſerve turn without the regard of man, yet with imperfect men, the heart is beſt held to its duty when both concur. And therefore moſt are more cautelous of their words, than of their thoughts: As children will learn their Leſſon better, when they know their Maſters will hear them it, than when they think he will not. Now in the uſe of a form of Prayer, a ſleepy heart is not at all diſcerned by man, but by God only; For the words are all brought to your hand, and may be ſaid by the moſt dull and careleſs mind; But when you are put to expreſs your own deſire, without ſuch helps, you are neceſſitated to be ſo mindful of what you do, as to form your deſires into apt expreſſions, or elſe your dulneſs or inattentiveneſs will be obſerved even by men; and you will be like one that hath his Coach, or Horſe, or Crutches taken off him, that if he have legs muſt uſe them, or elſe lye ſtill. And to them that are able, it is often a great benefit, to be neceſſitated to uſe the ability they have; Though to others it is a loſs to be deprived of their helps. I ſpeak not this againſt the lawfulneſs of a form of prayer; but to warn you of the temptations which are in that way. 14. Joyn oft with the moſt ſerious fervent Chriſtians; For their fervour will help your hearts to burn, and carry you along with them. 15. Deſtroy not fervency by adulterating it, and turning it into an affected earneſtneſs of ſpeech, and lowdneſs of voice, when it is but an hypocritical cover for a frozen empty heart.

See Mr. Mayo's Directions on this caſe.

Qu. 32.

§. 32. Queſt. 32. May we look to ſpeed ever the better for any thing in our ſelves, or in our prayers? Is not that to truſt in them, when we ſhould truſt on Chriſt alone?

Anſw. We muſt not truſt in them for any thing that is Chriſts part and not theirs: But for their own part it is a duty to truſt in them (however quarrelſom perſons may abuſe or cavil at the words:) And he that diſtruſteth Prayer in that which is its proper office, will pray to little purpoſe: And he that thinks that faithful, fervent, importunate, underſtanding prayer, is no more effectual with God for mercy, than the babling of the hypocrite, or the ignorant, careleſs, unbelieving, ſleepy prayers of the negligent, will either not care how he prayeth, or whether he prayeth at all or not. Though our perſons and prayers have nothing that is meritorious with God, in point of Commutative Juſtice, nor as his co-ordinate with the merits of Chriſt, yet have they conditions without which God will not accept them, and are meritorious in ſubordination to the Merit of Chriſt, in point of paternal Governing Juſtice, according to the Covenant of Grace; as an obedient Child deſerveth more Love and Praiſe, and Reward from his Father at large.

his Father than the disobedient: as the antient Fathers commonly used the word Merit.

Qu. 33. §. 32. Quest. 33. How must that person and prayer be qualified that shall be accepted of God?

Answ. There are several degrees of Gods acceptance. I. That which is but from common Grace, may be accepted as better than none at all. II. That which hath a promise of some success, especially as to Pardon and Salvation must be, 1. From a penitent believing holy person, 2. It must proceed from true Desire, and be sincere; and have renewed faith and repentance in some measure. 3. It must be put up in confidence on the merit and intercession of Christ. 4. It must be only for things lawful. 5. And to a lawful end. III. That which is extraordinarily accepted and successful, must be extraordinary in all these respects; in the persons holiness, and in renewed faith and fervent importunity, and holy Love.

Tit. 3. Special Directions for Family Prayer.

Dir. 1 §. 1. Direct. 1. Let it be done rather by the Master of the Family himself than any other, if he be competently able, tho' others be more able: But if he be utterly unfit, let it rather be done by another than not at all. And by such a one as is most acceptable to the rest, and like to do most good.

Dir. 2. §. 2. Direct. 2. Let prayer be suited to the case of those that join in it, and to the condition of the family: And not a few general words spoken by rote, that serve all times and persons alike.

Dir. 3. §. 3. Direct. 3. Let it neither be so short as to end before their hearts can be warm and their wants expressed, (as if you had an unwilling task to slubber over, and would fain have done); nor yet so tedious as to make it an ungrateful burden to the family.

Dir. 4. §. 4. Direct. 4. Let not the coldness and dulness of the speaker rock the family asleep: But keep and waken your own heart, that you may keep the rest awake, and force them to attention.

Dir. 5. §. 5. Direct. 5. Pray at such hours as the Family may be least distracted, sleepy, tired, or out of the way.

Dir. 6. §. 6. Direct. 6. Let other Duties concur as oft as may be to assist in prayer: As Reading and Singing Psalms.

Dir. 7. §. 7. Direct. 7. Do all with the greatest reverence of God that possibly you can; Not seeming Reverence, but Real; that so more of God than of Man may appear in every word you speak.

Dir. 8. §. 8. Direct. 8. The more the hearers are concerned in it, the more regard you must have to the fitness of your expressions: For before others, words must be regarded, lest they be scandalized, and God and Prayer be dishonoured. And if you cannot do it competently without, use a well composed form.

Dir. 9. §. 9. Direct. 9. Let not family Prayer be used at the time of publick prayer in the Church, nor preferred before it, but prefer publick prayer, tho' the manner were more imperfect than your own.

Dir. 10. §. 10. Direct. 10. Teach your Children and Servants how to pray themselves, that they may not be prayerless when they come among those that cannot pray. John and Christ taught their Disciples to pray.

Tit. 4. Special Directions for secret Prayer.

§. 1. Direct. 1. Let it be in as secret a place as conveniently you can; that you may not be disturbed. Let it be done so that others may not be witnesses of it, if you can avoid it; and yet take it not for your duty, to keep it unknown that you pray secretly at all: for that will be a snare and scandal to them.

§. 2. Direct. 2. Let your voice be suited to your own help and benefit, if none else hear you: If it be needful to the orderly proceeding of your own thoughts, or to the warming of your own affections, you may use a voice; But if others be within hearing, it is very unfit.

§. 3. Direct. 3. In secret let the matter of your prayers be that which is most peculiarly your own concernment, or those secret things that are not fit for publick prayer, or are there passed by; Yet never forgetting the highest interest of Christ, and the Gospel and the World and Church. Dir. 3.

§. 4. Direct. 4. Be less solicitous about Words in secret than with others, and lay out your care about the heart. For that's it that God most esteemeth in your prayers. Dir. 4.

§. 5. Direct. 5. Do not through carnal unwillingness grow into a neglect of secret prayer, when you have time: Nor yet do you superstitiously tie your selves to just so long time, whether you are fit, or at leisure from greater duties or not. But be the longer when you are most fit and vacant, and the shorter when you are not. To give way to every carnal backwardness, is the sin on one side; and to resolve to spend so long time, when you do but tire your selves, and sleep or business or distemper maketh it a lifeless thing, is a sin on the other side. Avoid them both. Dir. 5.

§. 6. Direct. 6. A melancholy Person who is unfit for much Solitariness and Heart-searchings, must be much short, if not also seldomer in secret prayers, than other Christians that are capable of bearing it: And they must instead of that which they cannot do, be the more in that which they can do; As in joyning with others, and in shorter Ejaculations, besides other Duties; but not abating their Piety in the main upon any pretence of curing melancholy. Dir. 6.

CHAP. XXIV.

Brief Directions for Families, about the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of CHRIST.

OMitting those things which concern the Publick Administration of this Sacrament (for the Reasons before intimated, Tom. 2.) I shall here only give you some brief Directions for your private duty herein.

§. 1. Direct. 1. Understand well the proper ends, to which this Sacrament was instituted by Christ; and take heed that you use it not to ends, for which it never was appointed. The true ends are these, 1. To be a solemn Commemoration of the Death and Passion of Jesus Christ, to keep it, as it were, in the eye of the Church, in his bodily absence till he come, 1 Cor. 11. 24, 25, 26. 2. To be a solemn renewing of the holy Covenant which was first entred in Baptism, between Christ and the Receiver; and in that Covenant it is on Christs part, a solemn delivery of himself first, and with himself the benefits of Pardon, Reconciliation, Adoption, and right to Life Eternal. And on Mans part, it is our solemn acceptance of Christ with his Benefits, upon his terms, and a delivering up our selves to him, as his Redeemed ones, even to the Father as our Reconciled Father, and to the Son as our Lord and Saviour, and to the holy Spirit as our Sanctifier, with Professed Thankfulness for so great a benefit. 3. It is appointed to be a lively objective means, by which, the Spirit of Christ should work to stir up, and exercise, and increase the Repentance, Faith, Desire, Love, Hope, Joy, Thankfulness, and New-Obedience of Believers; by a lively Representation of the evil of sin, the infinite love of God in Christ, the firmness of the Covenant or Promise, the greatness and sureness of the Mercy given, and the Blessedness purchased and promised to us, and the great Obligations that are laid upon us. And that herein Believers might be solemnly called out to the most serious exercise of all these Graces, and might be provoked and assisted to stir up themselves to this Communion with God in Christ, and to pray for more as through a sacrificed Christ. 4. It is appointed to be the solemn Profession of Believers, of their

Dir. 1. Quest. What are the Ends of the Sacrament? Matth. 26. 26. Mark 14. 24. Luke 22. 20. 1 Cor. 11. 25. Heb. 9. 15, 16, 17, 18. 1 Cor. 10. 16, 24. Joh. 6. 32, 35, 51, 58. 1 Cor. 11. 27, 28, 29, 31. 1 Cor. 10. 16, 17, 21. 1 Cor. 11. 25, 26. 1 Cor. 6. 14. Acts 2. 42, 46. & 20. 17.

their Faith, and Love, and Gratitude, and Obedience to God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, and of continuing firm in the Christian Religion. And a Badge of the Church before the World. 5. And it is appointed to be a sign and means of the Unity, Love, and Communion of Saints, and their readiness to communicate to each other.

§. 2. The false mistaken Ends, which you must avoid are these. 1. You must not with the Papists, think that the end of it is to turn Bread into no Bread, and Wine into no Wine, and to make them really the true Body and Blood of Jesus Christ. For if sense (which telleth all Men that it is still Bread and Wine) be not to be believed, then we cannot believe that ever there was a Gospel, or an Apostle, or a Pope, or a Man, or any thing in the World. And the Apostle expressly calleth it Bread three times, in three Verses together, after the Consecration, 1 Cor. 11. 26, 27, 28. And he telleth us, that the use of it is (not to make the Lords Body really present, but) to shew the Lords death till he come; that is, As a visible representing and commemorating sign, to be instead of his bodily presence till he come.

§. 3. 2. Nor must you with the Papists use this Sacrament to sacrifice Christ again really unto the Father, to propitiate him for the quick and dead, and ease Souls in Purgatory, and deliver them out of it. For Christ having died once dieth no more, and without killing him, there is no sacrificing him: By once offering up himself, he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified; and now there remaineth no more sacrifice for sin: Having finished the sacrificing work on earth, he is now passed into the Heavens, to appear before God for his Redeemed ones.

Rom. 6. 9. 1 Cor. 15. 3. 2 Cor. 5. 14, 15. Heb. 2. 15. & 10. 12, 16. & 9. 24.

§. 4. 3. Nor is it any better than odious impiety to receive the Sacrament, to confirm some Confederacies or Oaths of Secresie, for rebellions or other unlawful designs; as the Powder-Plotters in England did.

§. 5. 4. Nor is it any other than impious profanation of these sacred Mysteries for the Priest to constrain or suffer notoriously ignorant, and ungodly persons, to receive them, either to make themselves believe that they are indeed the Children of God, or to be a means which ungodly men should use to make them godly; or, which Infidels or Impenitent persons must use to help them to Repentance and Faith in Christ. For tho' there is that in it which may become a Means of their Conversion, (as a Thief that stealeth a Bible or Sermon Book, may be converted by it,) yet is it not to be used by the Receiver to that end. For that were to tell God a lie, as the means of their Conversion; for whosoever cometh to receive a sealed pardon, doth thereby profess repentance, as also by the words adjoyned he must do; and whosoever taketh, and eateth, and drinketh the Bread and Wine, doth actually profess thereby, that he taketh and applieth Christ himself by Faith: And therefore, if he do neither of these, he lieth openly to God; and lies and false Covenants are not the appointed means of Conversion. Not that the Minister is a lier in his delivery of it: For he doth but conditionally seal and deliver Gods Covenant and Benefits to the Receiver, to be his; if he truly Repent and Believe: But the Receiver himself lieth, if he do not actually Repent and Believe, as he there professeth to do.

Non absque probatione & examine panem illum præbendum esse neque nostis neque veteribus Christianis: Quod siquis esset fornicator, aut sacrilegus, aut idolis serviens, cum ejusmodi etiam communem cibum capere vetat Apostolus, reddum cœlesti mensa communicare, saith a Jesuite Acosta, l. 6. c. 10. And after, Neque enim ubi perfecta est superstitionis antiquæ ebrositatis, aut fœdæ consuetudinis macula, ad altare Indus de hoc admitti, nisi contraria opera illum manifeste & diligenter eluerit.——Christianis concedatur; sed Non-Christiano, dignus moribus subtrahatur. Pag. 549.

§. 6. 5. Also it is an impious prophanation of the Sacrament, if any Priest for the love of filthy lucre, shall give it to those that ought not to receive it, that he may have his Fees or Offerings; or, that the Priest may have so much Money that is bequeathed for saying a Mass for such or such a Soul.

§. 7. 6. And it is an odious prophanation of the Sacrament, to use it as a League or Bond of Faction to gather persons in to the party, and tie them fast to it, that they may depend upon the Priest, and his Faction and Interest may thereby be strengthned, and he may seem to have many Followers.

§. 8. 7. And it is a dangerous abuse of it, to receive it, that you may be pardoned, or sanctified, or saved, barely by the work done, or by the outward exercise alone. As if God were there obliged to give you Grace, while you strive not with your own Hearts, to stir them up to love, or desire, or faith, or obedience, by the means that are before you; or, as if God would pardon and save you for eating so much Bread and drinking so much Wine, when the Canon biddeth you; or, as if the Sacrament conveyed Grace, like as Charms are supposed to work, by saying over so many words.

§. 9. 8. Lastly, It is no appointed End of this Sacrament, that the Receiver thereby profess himself certain, of the sincerity of his own Repentance and Faith: (For it is not managed on the ground of such certainty only by the Receiver; much less by the Minister that delivereth it.) But only he professeth that as far as he can discern by observing his own heart, he is truly willing to have Christ, and his benefits on the terms that they are offered; and that he doth consent to the Covenant which he is there to renew. Think not therefore, that the Sacrament is instituted for any of these (mistaken) ends.

§. 10. Direct. 2. Distinctly understand the parts of the Sacrament, that you may distinctly use them, and not do, you know not what. This Sacrament containeth these three parts. 1. The Consecration of the Bread and Wine, which maketh it the Representative Body and Blood of Christ. 2. The Representation and Commemoration of the Sacrifice of Christ. 3. The Communion: Or, Communication by Christ, and Reception by the People. Dir. 2. & Wh. are the parts of the Sacrament?

§. 11. 1. In the Consecration, the Church doth first offer the Creatures of Bread and Wine, to be accepted of God, to this sacred use: And God accepteth them, and blesseth them to this use; which he signifieth both by the Words of his own Institution, and by the Action of his Ministers, and their Benediction. They being the Agents of God to the people, in this Accepting and Blessing, as they are the Agents of the People to God, in offering or dedicating the Creatures to this use.

§. 12. This Consecration having a special respect to God the Father, in it we acknowledge his three grand Relations. 1. That he is the Creator, and so the Owner of all the Creatures; for we offer them to him as his own. 2. That he is our righteous Governor, whose Law it was, that Adam and we have broken, and who required satisfaction, and hath received the Sacrifice and Atonement, and hath dispensed with the strict and proper execution of that Law; and will rule us hereafter by the Law of Grace. 3. That he is our Father or Benefactor, who hath freely given us a Redeemer, and the Covenant of Grace, whose Love and Favour we have forfeited by sin, but desire and hope to be reconciled by Christ.

§. 13. As Christ himself was Incarnate and true Christ, before he was sacrificed to God, and was sacrificed to God, before that sacrifice be communicated for life and nourishment to Souls: So in the Sacrament, Consecration must first make the Creature to be the Flesh and Blood of Christ representative; and then the sacrificing of that flesh and blood must be represented and commemorated; and then the sacrificed flesh and blood communicated to the Receivers for their Spiritual life.

§. 14. II. The Commemoration chiefly (but not only) respecteth God the Son: For he hath ordained, that these consecrated Representations should in their man-manner and measure, supply the room of his Bodily presence, while his Body is in Heaven: And that thus as it were in effigy, in representation, he might be still Crucified before the Churches eyes, and they might be affected, as if they had seen him on the Cross. And that by Faith and Prayer, they might, as it were, offer him up to God, that is, Might shew the Father that Sacrifice once made for sin, in which they trust; and for which it is, that they expect all the acceptance of their persons with God, and hope for audience when they beg for mercy, and offer up prayer or praises to him.

Joh. 3. 5. 1 Cor. 12. 12, 13. & 15. 45. Gal. 3. 14. & 4. 6. Eph. 2. 22.

§. 15. III. In the Communication, though the Sacrament have respect to the Father, as the principle Giver, and to the Son, as both the Gift and Giver, yet hath it a special respect to the Holy Ghost, as being that Spirit given in the Flesh and Blood, which quickneth Souls; without which, the Flesh will profit nothing: And whose operations must convey and apply Christs saving benefits to us, John 6. 63. & 7. 39.

§. 16. These three being the parts of the Sacrament in whole, as comprehending that sacred Action and participation which is essential to it. The Material Parts, called the Relate and Correlate, are, 1. Substantial and Qualitative. 2. Active and Passive. 1. The first are the Bread and Wine as signs, and the Body and Blood of Christ, with his Graces and Benefits, as the things signified and given. The second are the Actions of Breaking, Pouring out, and Delivering on the Ministers part, (after the Consecration) and the Taking, Eating, and Drinking, by the Receivers as the sign: And the thing signified is, the Crucifying or Sacrificing of Christ, and the Delivering Himself with his Benefits to the Beliver, and the Receivers thankful Accepting, and using the said gift. To these add the Relative Form, and the Ends, and you have the definition of this Sacrament. Of which see more in my Univers. Concord. p. 46, &c.

Dir. 3.

§. 17. Direct. 3. Look upon the Minister as the Agent or Officer of Christ, who is commissioned by him to seal and deliver to you the Covenant and its benefits. And take the Bread and Wine, as if you heard Christ himself saying to you, Take my Body and Blood, and the Pardon and Grace which is thereby purchased. It is a great help in the Application, to have Mercy and Pardon brought us by the hand of a Commissioned Officer of Christ.

Dir. 4. Quinam autem in digni, recipitve sint, quibus Angelorum panis prabetur, facerdotum ipso audita confessione, sacrique peracta precatione judicium esto. Acosta lib. 6. c. 20. pag. 549.

§. 18. Direct. 4. In your preparation beforehand, take heed of these two extreams. 1. That you come not prophanely and carelesly, with common hearts, as to a common work: For God will be sanctified in them that draw near him, Levit. 10. 3. And they that eat and drink unworthily, not discerning the Lords Body from common Bread, but eating as if it were a common meal, do eat death to themselves, instead of life. 2. Take heed lest your mistakes of the nature of this Sacrament should possess you with such fears of unworthy receiving and the following dangers, as may quite distemper, and unfit your Souls for the joyful exercises of Faith, and Love, and Praise, and Thanksgiving, to which you are invited. Many that are scrupulous of receiving it in any, save a feasting gesture, are too little careful and scrupulous of receiving it in any, save a feasting frame of mind.

The first extream is caused by prophaneness and negligence, or by gross nature of the ignorance of the Sacramental work. The latter extream is frequently caused as followeth: 1. By setting this Sacrament at a greater distance from other parts of Gods worship, than there is cause. So that the excess of Reverence doth overwhelm the minds of some with terrors. 2. By studying more the terrible words of eating and drinking damnation to themselves, if they do it unworthily, than all the expressions of Love and Mercy, which that Blessed Feast is furnished with. So that when the views of infinite Love should ravish them, they are studying wrath and vengeance to terrifie them, as if they came to Moses, and not to Christ. 3. By not understanding what maketh a Receiver worthy or unworthy, but taking their unwilling infirmities for condemning unworthiness. 4. By receiving it so seldom, as to make it strange to them, and increase their fear, whereas, if it were administred every Lords day, as it was in the Primitive Churches, it would better acquaint them with it, and cure that fear that cometh from strangeness. 5. By imagining, that none that want assurance of their own sincerity, can receive in Faith. 6. By contracting an ill habit of mistaken Religiousness, placing it all in poring on themselves, and mourning for their corruptions, and not in studying the love of God in Christ, and living in the daily praises of his Name, and joyful thanksgiving for his exceeding Mercies. 7. And if besides all these the Body contract a weak or timerous melancholy distemper, it will leave the mind capable of almost nothing, but fear and trouble, even in the sweetest works. From many such causes it cometh to pass, that the Sacrament of the Lords Supper is become more terrible and uncomfortable to abundance of such distempered Christians, than any other Ordinance of God, and that which should most comfort them doth trouble them most.

Qu. 1.

§. 19. Quest. 1. But is not this Sacrament more holy and dreadful, and should it not have more preparation than other parts of worship?

Answ. For the degree indeed, it should have very careful preparation: And we cannot well compare it with other parts of worship; as Praise, Thanksgiving, Covenanting with God, Prayer, &c. Because that all these other parts are here comprised and performed. But doubtless, God must also be sanctified in all his other worship, and his Name must not be taken in vain. And when this Sacrament was received every Lords day, and often in the week besides, Christians were supposed to live continually in a state of general preparation, and not to be so far from a due particular preparation, as many poor Christians think they are.

Qu. 2.

§. 20. Quest. 2. How often should the Sacrament be now administred, that it neither grow into contempt nor strangeness?

Answ. Ordinarily in well disciplined Churches it should be still every Lords day. For, 1. We have no reason to prove, that the Apostles example and appointment in this case, was proper to those times, any more than that praise and thanksgiving daily is proper to them: And we may as well deny the obligation of other Institutions or Apostolical Orders as that. 2. It is a part of the setled order for the Lords days worship; and omitting it, maimeth and altereth the worship of the day; and occasioneth the omission of the thanksgiving and praise, and lively commemorations of Christ, which should be then most performed: And so Christians by use, grow habited to sadness, and a mourning melancholy Religion, and grow unacquainted with much of the Worship and Spirit of the Gospel. 3. Hereby the Papists lamentable corruptions of this ordinance have grown up, even by an excess of reverence and fear, which seldom receiving doth increase; till they are come to worship Bread as their God. 4. By seldom communicating, Men are seduced to think all proper Communion of Churches lieth in that Sacrament, and to be more prophanely bold in abusing many other parts of worship. 5. There are better means (by teaching and discipline) to keep the Sacrament from contempt, than the omitting or displacing of it. 6. Every Lords day is no oftner then Christians need it. 7. The frequency will teach them to live prepared, and not only to make much ado once a Month or Quarter, when the same work is neglected all the year beside, even as one that liveth in continual expectation of death, will live in continual preparation:

on: When he that expecteth it, but in ſome grievous ſickneſs, will then be frighted into ſome ſeeming preparations, which are not the habit of his ſoul, but laid by again when the diſeaſe is over.

2. But yet I muſt add, that in ſome undiſciplined Churches, and upon ſome occaſions it may be longer omitted, or ſeldomer uſed; no duty is a duty at all times: And therefore extraordinary caſes may raiſe ſuch impediments, as may hinder us a long time from this, and many other priviledges. But the ordinary faultineſs of our imperfect hearts, that are apt to grow cuſtomary and dull, is no good reaſon why it ſhould be ſeldom; any more than why other ſpecial duties of Worſhip and Church Communion ſhould be ſeldom. Read well the Epiſtles of Paul to the Corinthians, and you will find that they were then as bad as the true Chriſtians are now, and that even in this Sacrament they were very culpable, and yet Paul ſeeketh not to cure them by their ſeldomer communicating.

Qu. 3. §. 21. Q. 3. Are all the Members of the viſible Church to be admitted to this Sacrament? or Communicate?

Anſw. All are not to ſeek it, or to take it, becauſe many may know their own unfitneſs, when the Church or Paſtors know it not: But all that come and ſeek it, are to be admitted by the Paſtors, except ſuch Children, Ideots, ignorant perſons, or Hereticks as know not what they are to receive and do, and ſuch as are notoriouſly wicked or ſcandalous, and have not manifeſted their repentance. But then it is preſuppoſed, that none ſhould be numbred with the adult members of the Church, but thoſe that have perſonally owned their Baptiſmal Covenant, by a Credible Profeſſion of true Chriſtianity.

Qu. 4. §. 22. Queſt. 4. May a Man that hath knowledge and civility, and common gifts, come and take this Sacrament, if he know that he is yet void of true Repentance and other ſaving Grace?

Anſw. No; for he then knoweth himſelf to be one that is uncapable of it in his preſent ſtate.

Qu. 5. §. 23. Queſt. 5. May an ungodly Man receive this Sacrament, who knoweth not himſelf to be ungodly?

Anſw. No; for he ought to know it, and his ſinful ignorance of his own condition, will not make his ſin to be his duty; nor excuſe his other faults before God.

Qu. 6. §. 24. Queſt. 6. Muſt a ſincere Chriſtian receive, that is uncertain of his ſincerity, and in continual doubting?

Anſw. Two preparations are neceſſary to this Sacrament; the general preparation which is a ſtate of Grace, and this the doubting Chriſtian hath; and the particular preparation, which conſiſteth in his preſent actual fitneſs: And all the queſtion is of this. And to know this, you muſt further diſtinguiſh between immediate duty and more remote, and between the degrees of doubtfulneſs in Chriſtians. 1. The neareſt immediate duty of the doubting Chriſtian is, to uſe the means to have his doubts reſolved, till he know his caſe, and then his next duty is, to receive the Sacrament; and both theſe ſtill remain his duty, to be performed in this order. And if he ſay, I cannot be reſolved, when I have done my beſt. Yet certainly it is ſome ſin of his own, that keepeth him in the dark, and hindereth his aſſurance; and therefore duty ceaſeth not to be duty: The Law of Chriſt ſtill obligeth him, both to get aſſurance and to receive; and the want both of the knowledge of his ſtate, and of Receiving the Sacrament, are his continual ſin, if he lie in it never ſo long, through theſe ſcruples, though it be an infirmity that God will not condemn him for. (For he is ſuppoſed to be in a ſtate of Grace.) But you will ſay, What if ſtill he cannot be reſolved whether he have true faith and repentance, or not? what ſhould he do while he is in doubt? I anſwer, it is one thing to ask, what is his duty in this caſe, and another thing to ask, Which is the ſmaller or leſs dangerous ſin? Still his duty is both to get the knowledge of his heart, and to communicate: But while he ſinneth (through infirmity) in failing of the firſt, were he better alſo omit the other, or not? To be well reſolved of that, you muſt diſcern, 1. Whether his judgment of himſelf, do rather incline to think and hope that he is ſincere in his Repentance and Faith, or that he is not? 2. And whether the conſequents are like to be good or bad to him. If his hopes that he is ſincere, be as great or greater than his fears of the contrary, then there is no ſuch ill conſequent to be feared as may hinder his communicating; but it is his beſt way to do it, and wait on God in the uſe of his Ordinance. But if the perſwaſion of his graceleſneſs be greater than the hopes of his ſincerity, then he muſt obſerve how he is like to be affected, if he do communicate. If he find that it is like to clear up his mind, and increaſe his hopes by the actuating of his Grace, he is yet beſt to go: But if he find that his heart is like to be overwhelmed with horror and ſunk into deſpair, by running into the ſuppoſed guilt of unworthy receiving, then it will be worſe to do it, than to omit it. Many ſuch fearful Chriſtians I have known, that are fain many years to abſent themſelves from the Sacrament; becauſe if they ſhould receive it while they are perſwaded of their utter unworthineſs, they would be ſwallowed up of deſperation, and think that they had taken their own damnation (as the Twenty fifth Article of the Church of England ſaith, the unworthy receivers do.) So that the chief ſin of ſuch a doubting receiver, is not that he receiveth, though he doubt; for doubting will not excuſe us for the ſinful omiſſion of a duty (no more of this than of Prayer or Thankſgiving:) But only Prudence requireth ſuch a one to forbear that, which through his own diſtemper would be a means of his deſpair and ruin: As that Phyſick or Food (how good ſoever) is not to be taken which would kill the taker: Gods Ordinances are not appointed for our deſtruction, but for our edification; and ſo muſt be uſed as tendeth thereunto. Yet to thoſe Chriſtians, who are in this caſe, and dare not communicate, I muſt put this Queſtion, How dare you ſo long refuſe it? He that conſenteth to the Covenant, may boldly come and ſignifie his conſent, and receive the ſealed Covenant of God; for conſent is your preparation, or the neceſſary condition of your Right: If you conſent not, you refuſe all the Mercy of the Covenant. And dare you live in ſuch a ſtate? Suppoſe a Pardon be offered to a condemned Thief, but ſo, that if he after caſt it in the dirt, or turn Traytor, he ſhall die a forer death; will he rather chuſe to die than take it, and ſay I am afraid I ſhall abuſe it? To refuſe Gods Covenant is certain death; but to conſent is your preparation and your life.

Qu. 7. §. 25. Queſt. 7. But what if Superiours compel ſuch a Chriſtian to communicate, or elſe they will excommunicate and impriſon him: What then ſhould he chuſe?

Anſw. If he could do it without his own Souls hurt, he ſhould obey them (ſuppoſing that it is nothing but that which in it ſelf is good that they command him.) But they have their power to edification, and not to deſtruction, and he muſt value his Soul above his Body; and therefore it is paſt queſtion, that it is a ſmaller hurt to be excommunicated, and lie, and die in Priſon, than to caſt his Soul into deſpair, by doing that which he thinketh is a grievous ſin, and would be his damnation. But all means muſt be uſed to cure the miſtake of his own underſtanding. 2 Cor. 13. 13. Matth. 18. 28.

Qu. 8. §. 26. Queſt. 8. Is not the caſe of an Hypocrite that knoweth not himſelf to be an Hypocrite, and of a ſincere Chriſtian that knoweth not himſelf to be ſincere, all one as to communicating; when both are equally in doubt?

Anſw.

Answ. No: For Being and Seeing are things that must be distinguished. The one hath Grace in Being, though he see it not; and therefore hath a Right to the Blessings of the Covenant; and therefore at once remaineth obliged both to discern his Title, and to come and take it: And therefore if he come doubtingly, his sin is not that he receiveth, but in the manner of receiving, that he doth it doubtingly; and therefore it will be a greater sin not to receive at all, unless in the last mentioned case, wherein the consequents are like to be worse to him. But the other hath no true Repentance or Faith, or Love in Being; and therefore hath no Right to the Blessings of the Covenant; and therefore, at present, is obliged to discern that he is graceless, and to repent of it: And it is not his sin that he doubteth of his Title, but that he demandeth and taketh what he hath no Title to; and therefore it is a greater sin in him to take it, than to delay in order to his recovery and preparation. Yet, even in point of Comfort, there is some disparity: For tho' the true Christian hath far greater terror than hypocrites, when he taketh himself to be an unworthy Receiver (as being more sensible and regardful of the weight of the matter) yet usually in the midst of all his fears, there are some secret testimonies in his heart of the Love of God, which are a Cordial of Hope that keep him from sinking into despair, and have more life and power in them, than all the Hypocrites false perswasions of his own sincerity.

Qu. 9. §. 27. Quest. 9. Wherein lieth the sin of an Hypocrite, and ungodly person, if he do receive?

Answ. His sin is, 1. In lying and hypocrisie; in that he professeth to Repent unfeignedly of his sin, and to be resolved for a holy life, and to believe in Christ, and to accept him on his Covenant terms, and to give up himself to God, as his Father, his Saviour and his Sanctifier, and to forsake the Flesh, the World and the Devil; when indeed he never did any of this, but secretly abhorreth it at his heart, and will not be perswaded to it: And so all this Profession, and his very Covenanting it self, and his Receiving, as it is a Professing covenanting sign, is nothing but a very lie. And what it is to lie to the Holy Ghost, the case of Ananias and Sapphira telleth us. 2. It is usurpation to come and lay claim to those Benefits, which he hath no title to. 3. It is a prophanation of these holy Mysteries, to be thus used, and it is a taking of Gods Name in vain, who is a jealous God, and will be sanctified of all that draw near unto him. 4. And it is a wrong to the Church of God, and the Communion of Saints, and the honour of the Christian Religion, that such ungodly Hypocrites intrude as Members: As it is to the Kings Army, when the Enemies Spies creep in amongst them; or to his Marriage feast, to have a guest in rags, Matth. 22. 11, 12.

Command-ment 2 & 3. Levit. 10. 2, 3.

Object. But it is no lie, because they think they say true in their Profession?

Answ. That is through their sinful negligence, and self deceit: And he is a liar that speaks a falsehood, which he may and ought to know to be a falsehood, though he do not know it. There is a lier in rashness and negligence, as well as of set purpose.

Qu. 10. 1 Cor. 11. 28, 29. §. 28. Quest. 10. Doth all unworthy receiving make a man liable to damnation? Or, what unworthiness is it that is so threatned?

Answ. There are three sorts of unworthiness (or unfitness) and three sorts of judgment answerably to be feared. 1. There is the utter unworthiness of an Infidel, or impenitent, ungodly Hypocrite. And damnation to Hell fire, is the punishment that such must expect, if Conversion prevent it not. 2. There is an unworthiness through some great and scandalous crime, which a regenerate person falleth into; and this should stop him from the Sacrament for a time, till he have repented and cast away his sin. And if he come before he rise from his fall by a particular repentance (as the Corinthians that sinned in the very use of the Sacrament it self) they may expect some notable temporal judgment at the present (and if Repentance did not prevent it, they might fear eternal punishment.) 3. There is that measure of unworthiness which consisteth in the ordinary infirmities of a Saint; and this should not at all deter them from the Sacrament, because it is accompanied with a greater worthiness; yea, tho' their weakness appear in the time and manner of their receiving: But yet ordinary corrections may follow these ordinary infirmities. (The grosser abuse of the Sacrament it self, I joyn under the second rank.)

Vid. Synod. Dortdrac. Suffrag. Theol. Brittan. in Artic. 5.

Quest. 11. What is the particular preparation needful to a fit Communicant? Qu. 11.

Answ. This bringeth me up to the next Direction.

§. 29. Direct. 5. Let your preparation to this Sacrament consist of these particulars following. 1. In your duty with your own consciences and hearts. 2. In your duty towards God. 3. And in your duty towards your Neighbor. Dir. 5.

§. 30. I. Your duty with your hearts consisteth in these particulars. 1. That you do your best in the close examination of your hearts about your states, and the sincerity of your Faith, Repentance, and Obedience: To know whether your hearts are true to God, in the Covenant which you are to renew and seal. Which may be done by these inquiries, and discerned by these Signs. 1. Whether you truly loath your selves for all the sins of your hearts and lives, and are a greater offence and burden to your selves, because of your imperfections and corruptions, than all the World beside is, Ezek. 6. 9. & 20. 43. & 36. 31. Rom. 7. 24. 2. Whether you have no sin but what you are truly desirous to know, and no known sin, but what you are truly desirous to be rid of, and so desirous, as that you had rather be perfectly freed from sin, than from any affliction in the world, Rom. 7. 22. 18, 24. & 8. 18. 3. Whether you love the searching and reforming Light, even the most searching parts of the Word of God, and the most searching Books, and searching Sermons, that by them you may be brought to know your selves, in order to your settled peace and reformation, Job. 3. 19, 20, 21. 4. Whether you truly love that degree of holiness in others which you have not yet attained your selves, and love Christ in his children, with such an unfeigned love, as will cause you to relieve them according to your abilities, and suffer for their sakes, when it is your duty, 1 Joh. 3. 14, 16. 1 Pet. 1. 22. & 3. 8. Jam. 2. 12, 13, 14, 15. Matth. 25. 40, &c. 5. Whether you can truly say, that there is no degree of holiness so high, but you desire it, and had rather be perfect in the love of God, and the obedience of his Will, than have all the riches and pleasures of this World, Rom. 7. 18, 21, 24. Psal. 119. 5. Matth. 5. 6. And had rather be one of the holiest Saints, than most of the renowned prosperous Princes upon Earth, Psal. 15. 4. & 16. 2. Psal. 84. 10. & 65. 4. 6. Whether you have so far laid up your treasure, and your hopes in Heaven, as that you are resolved to take that only for your portion, and that the hopes of Heaven, and interest of your souls, hath the preheminence in your hearts against all that stands in competition with it, Col. 3. 1, 3, 4. Matth. 6. 20, 21. 7. Whether the chiefest care of your hearts, and indeavour of your lives, be to serve and please God, and to injoy him for ever, rather than for any worldly thing, Matth. 6. 23. Joh. 5. 26. 2 Cor. 5. 1, 6, 7, 8, 9. 8. Whether it be your daily desire and indeavour to mortifie the flesh, and master its rebellious opposition to the Spirit; and you so far prevail, as not to live, and walk, and be led by the flesh, but that the course and drift of your life is spiritual,

Whether the World, and all its Honour, Wealth, and Pleaſure appear to you ſo ſmall and contemptible a thing, as that you eſteem it as dung, and nothing in compariſon of Chriſt, and the love of God and Glory? and are reſolved, that you will rather let go all, than your part in Chriſt? And, which uſeth to carry it in the time of trial, in your deliberate choice? Phil. 3. 7, 8, 9, 13, 14, 18, 19, 20. 1 Joh. 2. 15. Luk. 14. 26, 30, 33. Mat. 13. 19, 21. 10. Whether you are reſolved upon a courſe of holineſs and obedience, and to uſe thoſe means which God doth make known to you, to be the way to pleaſe him, and to ſubdue your corruption; and yet feeling the frailties of your hearts, and the burden of your ſins, do truſt in Chriſt as your Righteouſneſs before God, and in the Holy Ghoſt, whoſe Grace alone can illuminate, ſanctifie, and confirm you, Act. 11. 23. Pſ. 119 57, 63, 69, 106. 1 Cor. 1. 30. Rom. 8. 9. Joh. 15. 5. 2 Cor. 12. 9. By theſe Signs you may ſafely try your ſtates.

§. 31. 2. When this is done, you are alſo to try the ſtrength and meaſure of your Grace; that you may perceive your weakneſs, and know for what help you ſhould ſeek to Chriſt. And to find out what inward corruptions and ſinful inclinations are yet ſtrongeſt in you, that you may know what to lament, and to ask forgiveneſs of, and help againſt. My Book called Directions for weak Chriſtians, will give you fuller advice in this.

§. 32. 3. You are alſo to take a ſtrict account of your lives; and to look over your dealings with God and Men, in ſecret and publick, eſpecially of late, ſince the laſt renual of your Covenant with God, and to hear what God and Conſcience have to ſay about your ſins, and all their aggravations, Pſal. 139. 23. 1 Cor. 11. 28. Pſal. 4. 4, 5, 6.

§. 33. 4. And you muſt labour to get your hearts affected with your condition, as you do diſcover it. To be humbled for what is ſinful, and to be deſirous of help againſt your weakneſs, and thankful for the Grace which you diſcern.

§. 34. 5. Laſtly, you muſt conſider of all the work that you are to do, and all the mercies which you are going to receive, and what Graces are neceſſary to all this, and how they muſt be uſed; and accordingly look up all thoſe Graces, and prepare them for the exerciſe to which they are to be called out. I ſhall name you the particulars anon.

§. 35. II. Your duty towards God in your preparation for this Sacrament, is, 1. To caſt down your ſelves before him in humble penitent confeſſion, and lamentation of all the ſins which you diſcover; and to beg his pardon in ſecret, before you come to have it publickly ſealed and delivered. 2. To look up to him with that Thankfulneſs, Love, and Joy, as becomes one that is going to receive ſo great a mercy from him; and humbly to beg that Grace which may prepare you, and quicken you to, and in the work.

§. 36. III. Your duty towards others in this your preparation, is, 1. To forgive thoſe that have done you wrong, and to confeſs your fault to thoſe whom you have wronged, and ask them forgiveneſs, and make them amends and reſtitution ſo far as is in your power; and to be reconciled to thoſe with whom you are faln out; and to ſee, that you love your Neighbours as your ſelves, Mat. 5. 23, 24, 25, 26, 44. Jam. 5. 16. 2. That you ſeek advice of your Paſtors, or ſome fit perſons, in caſes that are too hard for your ſelves to reſolve, and where you need their ſpecial help. 3. That you lovingly admoniſh them that you know do intend to communicate unworthily, and to come thither in their ungodlineſs, and groſs ſin unrepented of: That you ſhew not ſuch hatred of your Brother, as to ſuffer ſin upon him, Levit. 19. 17. But tell him his faults, as Chriſt hath directed you, Mat. 18. 15, 16, 17. And do your parts to promote Chriſts Diſcipline, and keep pure the Church. See 1 Cor. 5. throughout.

§. 37. Direct. 6. When you come to the holy Communion, let not the over-ſcrupulous regard of the perſon of the Miniſter, or the company, or the imperfections of the miniſtration, diſturb your meditations, nor call away your minds from the high and ſerious imployment of the day. Hypocrites who place their Religion in bodily exerciſes, have taught many weak Chriſtians to take up unneceſſary ſcruples, and to turn their eye and obſervation too much to things without them. Dir. 6

Queſt. But ſhould we have no regard to the due celebration of theſe ſacred Myſteries, and to the Miniſter, and Communicants, and manner of Adminiſtration?

Anſw. Yes: You ſhould have ſo much regard to them. 1. As to ſee that nothing be amiſs through your default, which is in your power to amend. 2. And that you joyn not in the comitting of any known ſin. But, 1. Take not every ſin of another for your ſin, and think not that you are guilty of that in others, which you cannot amend; or, that you muſt forſake the Church and Worſhip of God, for theſe corruptions which you are not guilty of, or deny your own mercies, becauſe others uſurp them or abuſe them. 2. If you ſuſpect any thing impoſed upon you to be ſinful to you, try it before you come thither; and leave not your minds open to diſturbance, when they ſhould be wholly imployed with Chriſt.

§. 38. Queſt. 1. May we lawfully receive this Sacrament from an ungodly and unworthy Miniſter? Queſt. 1 May we receive from an unworthy Miniſter?

Anſw. Whoever you may lawfully commit the guidance of your Souls to as your Paſtor, you may lawfully receive the Sacrament from, yea, and in ſome caſes from ſome others: For in caſe you come into a Church that you are no member of, you may lawfully joyn in Communion with that Church, for that preſent, as a Stranger, tho' they have a Paſtor ſo faulty, as you might not lawfully commit the ordinary conduct of your Soul to, for it is their fault and not yours, that they choſe no better; and (in ſome caſes) ſuch a fault as will not warrant you to avoid communion with them. But you may not receive, if you know it from a Heretick, that teacheth any error againſt the Eſſence of Chriſtianity. 2. Nor from a man ſo utterly ignorant of the Chriſtian Faith or Duty, or ſo utterly unable to teach it to others, as to be notoriouſly uncapable of the Miniſtry. 3. Nor from a man profeſſedly ungodly, or that ſetteth himſelf to Preach down godlineſs it ſelf. Theſe you muſt never own as Miniſters of Chriſt, that are utterly uncapable of it. But ſee that you take none for ſuch that are not ſuch. And there are three ſorts more, which you may not receive from, when you have your choice, nor take them for your Paſtors: But in caſe of neceſſity impoſed on you by others, it is lawful and your duty. And that is, 1. Uſurpers that make themſelves your Paſtors without a lawful Call, and perhaps do forcibly thruſt out the Lawful Paſtors of the Church. 2. Weak, ignorant, cold, and lifeleſs Preachers, that are tolerable in caſe of neceſſity, but not to be compared with worthier men. 3. Miniſters of ſcandalous vicious lives: It is a ſin in you to prefer any one of theſe before a better, and to chuſe them when you have your choice; but it is a ſin on the other ſide, if you rather ſubmit not to one of theſe, than be quite without, and have none at all. You own not their faults in ſuch a caſe, by ſubmitting to their Miniſtry.

§. 29. Queſt. 2. May we communicate with unworthy perſons, or in an undiſciplined Church? Queſt. 2 Gildas de Excid. Britt. ſpeaketh thus to the better ſort of Paſtors then. Quis peroſus eſt conſilium malignantium? & cum impiis non ſedit? Quis eorum ſanctari in arca hoc eſt, nunc Eccleſia, adverſantium ut Noe diluvii tempore, non admiſit? ut perſpicue manifeſtet non niſi innoxios vel pœnitentes egregios, in dominica domo eſſe debere?

Anſw. You muſt here diſtinguiſh if you will not err: And that, 1. Between perſons ſo unworthy as to be no Chriſtians, and thoſe that are culpable ſcandalous Christians. 2. Between a few Members, and the whole Society, or the denominating part. 3. Between sin professed and owned, and sin disowned by a seeming penitence. 4. And between a Case of Liberty, when I have my choice of a better Society; and a Case of Necessity when I must communicate with the worser Society, or with none: And so I answer,

1. You ought not to communicate at all in this Sacrament with a Society that professeth not Christianity: If the whole Body, or denominating part be such; that is, 1. With such as never made Profession of Christianity at all. 2. Or have Apostatized from it. 3. Or, that openly own any Heresie, inconsistent with the Essential Faith or Duty of a Christian. 4. Or that are notoriously ignorant what Christianity is.

2. It is the duty of the Pastors and Governors of the Church, to keep away notorious scandalous Offendors, till they shew Repentance; and the Peoples Duty to assist them by private reproof, and informing the Church, when there is cause. Therefore, if it be thro' the neglect of your Duty, that the Church is corrupted and undisciplined, the sin is yours, whether you receive with them, or not.

3. If you rather chuse a corrupted undisciplined Church to communicate with, when you have your choice of a better (cæteris paribus) it is your fault.

But on the contrary, It is not your sin, but your duty to communicate with that Church, which hath a true Pastor, and where the Denominating part of the Members are capable of Church Communion, tho' there may some Infidels or Heathens, or uncapable persons violently intrude, or scandalous persons are admitted through the neglect of Discipline; in case you have not your choice to hold personal communion with a better Church, and in case also you be not guilty of the corruption, but by seasonable and modest professing your dissent, do clear your self of the guilt of such intrusion and corruption. For here the Reasons and Ends of a lawful Separation are remov'd; Because it tendeth not to Gods honor, or their Reformation, or your benefit: For all these are more crossed by holding communion with no Church, than with such a corrupted Church. And this is to be preferred before none, as much as a better before this.

Quest. 3. §. 40. Quest. 3. But what if I cannot communicate unless I conform to an imposed gesture, as kneeling or sitting?

Answ. 1. For sitting or standing, no doubt, it is lawful in it self: For else Authority were not to be obeyed, if they should command it: And else the Church had sinned in forbearing kneeling in the act of Receiving so many Hundred Years after Christ; as is plain they did, by the Canons of General Councils (Nic. 1. & Trull.) that universally forbad to adore kneeling any Lord-day in the year, and any Week-day between Easter and Whitsuntide, and by the Fathers, Tertullian, Epiphanius, &c. that make this an Apostolical or Universal Tradition.

Mr. Paybodies Book, I think unanswerable. 2. And for kneeling I never yet heard any thing to prove it unlawful; If there be any thing, it must be either some Word of God, or the Nature of the Ordinance, which is supposed to be contradicted. But 1. There is no Word of God for any gesture, nor against any gesture: Christs example can never be proved to be intended to oblige us more in this than in many other circumstances that are confessed not obligatory: As he that delivered it but to Ministers, and but to a Family, to Twelve, and after Supper, and on a Thursday Night, and in an upper Room, &c. And his gesture was not such a sitting as ours. 2. And for the Nature of the Ordinance it is mixt: And if it be lawful to take a pardon from the King upon our knees, I know not what can make it unlawful to take a sealed Pardon from Christ (by his Embassador,) upon our knees.

§. 41. Quest. 4. But what if I cannot receive it, but according to the administration of the Common-Prayer-book? or some other imposed form of Prayer? Is it lawful so to take it? Quest. 4.

Answ. If it be unlawful to receive it, when it is administred with the Common-Prayer-book, it is either, 1. Because it is a form of prayer; 2. Or because that form hath some forbidden matter in it; 3. Or because that form is imposed; 4. Or because it is imposed to some evil end and consequent. 1. That it is not unlawful, because a form is proved before, and indeed needs no proof with any that is judicious. 2. Nor yet for any evil in this particular form: For in this part the Common-Prayer is generally approved. 3. Nor yet, because it is imposed: For a Command maketh not that unlawful to us, which is lawful before: but it maketh many things lawful and Duties, that else would have been unlawful accidentally. 4. And the intentions of the Commanders, we have little to do with; and for the consequents they must be weighed on both sides; and the consequents of our refusal will not be found light.

§. 42. In the General, I must here tell all the people of God, in the bitter sorrow of my Soul, that at last it is time for them to discern that Temptation, that hath in all ages of the Church almost, made this Sacrament of our Union, to be the grand occasion or instrument of our Divisions: And that true humility, and acquaintance with our selves, and sincere Love to Christ and one another, would shew some men, that it was but their pride and prejudice, and ignorance, that made them think so heinously of other mens manner of Worship: And that on all sides among true Christians, the manner of their Worship is not so odious, as prejudice, and faction, and partiality representeth it: and that God accepteth that which they reject. And they should see how the Devil hath undone the common people by this means; by teaching them every one to expect salvation for being of that party which he taketh to be the right Church, and for worshipping in that Manner which he and his party thinketh best: And so wonderful a thing is prejudice, that every party by this is brought to account that ridiculous and vile, which the other party accounteth best.

§. 43. Quest. 5. But what if my Conscience be not satisfied, but I am still in doubt, must I not forbear? Seeing he that doubteth is condemned if he eat, because he eateth not in Faith; for whatsoever is not of Faith is sin? Quest. 5.

Answ. The Apostle there speaketh not of eating in the Sacrament, but of eating meats which he doubteth of whether they are lawful, but is sure that it is lawful to forbear them. And in case of doubting about things indifferent, the surer side is to forbear them, because there may be sin in doing; but there can be none on the other side in forbearing. But in case of Duties, your doubting will not disoblige you; else men might give over praying, and hearing Gods Word, and believing, and obeying their Rulers, and maintaining their Families, when they are but blind enough to doubt of it. 2. Your erring Conscience is not a Law-maker, and cannot make it your duty to obey it. For God is your King, and the Office of Conscience is to discern his Law; and urge you to obedience, and not to make you Laws, of its own: So that if it speak falsly, it doth not oblige you, but deceive you. It doth only ligare, or infnare you, but not obligare, or make a sin a duty. It casteth you into a necessity of sinning more or less, till you relinquish the error: But in the case of such duties as these, it is a sin to do them with a doubting Conscience, but (ordinarily) it is a greater sin to forbear.

§. 44. Object.

§. 44. Object. But ſome Divines write, that Conſcience being Gods Officer, when it erreth, God himſelf doth bind me by it to follow that error, and the evil which is required becometh my duty.

Anſw. A dangerous error tendeth to the ſubverſion of Souls and Kingdoms, and highly diſhonorable to God. God hath made it your duty to know his Will, and do it. And if you ignorantly miſtake him, will you lay the blame on him, and draw him into participation of your ſin, when he forbiddeth you both the error and the ſin? And doth he at once forbid and command the ſame thing? At that very moment, God is ſo far from obliging you to follow your error, that he ſtill obligeth you to lay it by, and do the contrary. If you ſay, You cannot. I anſwer, Your impotency, is a ſinful impotency, and you can uſe the means, in which his Grace can help you, and he will not change his Law, nor make you Kings and Rulers of your ſelves inſtead of him, becauſe you are ignorant or impotent?

§. 25. Direct. 7. In the time of the adminiſtration, go along with the Miniſter throughout the work, and keep your hearts cloſe to Jeſus Chriſt, in the exerciſe of all thoſe Graces, which are ſuited to the ſeveral parts of the adminiſtration. Think not that all the work muſt be the Miniſters. It ſhould be a buſie day with you, and your hearts ſhould be taken up with as much diligence, as your hands be in your common labor, but not in a toilſome weary diligence, but in ſuch delightful buſineſs as becometh the gueſts of the God of Heaven, at ſo ſweet a feaſt, and in the receiving of ſuch unvaluable gifts.

§. 46. Here I ſhould diſtinctly ſhew you, I. What Graces they be that you muſt there exerciſe. II. What there is objectively preſented before you in the Sacrament, to exerciſe all theſe Graces. III. At what ſeaſons in the adminiſtration each of theſe inward works are to be done.

§. 47. I. The Graces to be exerciſed are theſe (beſides that holy fear and reverence common to all Worſhip.) 1. A humble ſenſe of the odiouſneſs of ſin, and of our undone condition as in our ſelves, and a diſpleaſure againſt our ſelves, and loathing of our ſelves, and melting Repentance for the ſins we have committed, as againſt our Creator, and as againſt the Love and Mercy of a Redeemer, and againſt the holy Spirit of Grace. 2. A hungring and thirſting deſire after the Lord Jeſus, and his Grace, and the favour of God and communion with him, which are there repreſented and offered to the ſoul. 3. A lively faith in our Redeemer, his death, reſurrection and interceſſion, and a truſting our miſerable ſouls upon him, as our ſufficient Saviour and help; And a hearty acceptance of him and his benefits upon his offered terms. 4. A joy and gladneſs in the ſenſe of that unſpeakable mercy which is here offered us. 5. A thankful heart towards him from whom we do receive it. 6. A fervent Love to him that by ſuch Love doth ſeek our Love. 7. A triumphant Hope of life eternal, which is purchaſed for us, and ſealed to us. 8. A willingneſs and reſolution to deny our ſelves, and all this world, and ſuffer for him that hath ſuffered for our Redemption. 9. A Love to our Brethren, our Neighbours and our Enemies, with a readineſs to relieve them, and to forgive them, when they do us wrong. 10. And a firm reſolution for future obedience, to our Creator, and Redeemer, and Sanctifier, according to our Covenant.

§. 48. II. In the naming of theſe Graces, I have named their Objects, which you ſhould obſerve as diſtinctly as you can that they may be operative. 1. To help your Humiliation and Repentance, you bring thither a loaden miſerable ſoul, to receive a pardon and relief: And you ſee before you the Sacrificed Son of God, who made his ſoul an offering for ſin, and became a Curſe for us to ſave us who were accurſed. 2. To draw out your deſires you have the moſt excellent gifts and the moſt needful mercies preſented to you that this world is capable of: Even the pardon of ſin, the Love of God, the Spirit of Grace, and the hopes of Glory, and Chriſt himſelf with whom all this is given. 3. To exerciſe your Faith you have Chriſt here firſt repreſented as crucified before your eyes, and then with his benefits, freely given you, and offered to your acceptance, with a Command that you refuſe him not. 4. To exerciſe your delight and gladneſs, you have this Saviour and this Salvation tendered to you; and all that your ſouls can well deſire ſet before you. 5. To exerciſe your Thankfulneſs, what could do more than ſo great a Gift, ſo dearly purchaſed, ſo ſurely ſealed, and ſo freely offered? 6. To exerciſe your Love to God in Chriſt, you have the fulleſt manifeſtation of his attractive Love, even offered to your eyes, and taſte, and heart, that a ſoul on earth can reaſonably expect, in ſuch wonderful condeſcenſion, that the greatneſs and ſtrangeneſs of it ſurpaſſeth a natural mans belief. 7. To exerciſe your hopes of life eternal, you have the price of it here ſet before you; you have the Gift of it here ſealed to you; and you have that Saviour repreſented to you in his ſuffering, who is now there reigning, that you may remember him as expectants of his Glorious coming to judge the world, and glorifie you with himſelf. 8. To exerciſe your ſelf-denyal and reſolution for ſuffering, and contempt of the world and fleſhly pleaſures, you have before you both the greateſt example and obligation, that ever could be offered to the world; when you ſee and receive a Crucified Chriſt, that ſo ſtrangly denyed himſelf for you, and ſet ſo little by the world and fleſh. 9. To exerciſe your Love to Brethren, yea, and enemies, you have his example before your eyes, that loved you to the death when you were enemies: And you have his holy ſervants before your eyes, who are amiable in him through the workings of his Spirit, and on whom he will have you ſhew your love to himſelf. 10. And to excite your Reſolution for future obedience, you ſee his double Title to the Government of you, as Creator and as Redeemer, and you feel the obligations of Mercy and Gratitude; and you are to renew a Covenant with him to that end, even openly where all the Church are witneſſes. So that you ſee here are powerful objects before you to draw out all theſe Graces, and that they are all but ſuch as the work requireth you then to exerciſe.

§. 49. III. But that you may be the readier when it cometh to practice, I ſhall as it were lead you by the hand, thro' all the parts of the Adminiſtration, and tell you when and how to exerciſe every grace, and thoſe that are to be joyned together, I ſhall take together, that needleſs diſtinctneſs do not trouble you.

1. When you are called up and going to the Table of the Lord, exerciſe your Humility, Deſire and Thankfulneſs, and ſay in your hearts, What Lord, doſt thou call ſuch a Wretch as I? What! me that have ſo oft deſpiſed thy mercy? and wilfully offended thee, and preferred the filth of this world and the pleaſures of the fleſh before thee? Alas, it is thy wrath in Hell that is my due: But if love will chooſe ſuch an unworthy gueſt, and Mercy will be honoured upon ſuch ſin and miſery, I come Lord at thy call: I gladly come: Let thy will be done, and let that mercy which inviteth me, make me acceptable, and graciouſly entertain me; and let me not come without the wedding Garment, nor unreverently ruſh on holy things, nor turn thy mercies to my bane!

§. 50. 2. When the Miniſter is confeſſing ſin, proſtrate your very ſouls in the ſenſe of your unworthineſs, and let your particular ſins be in your eye, with their heinous aggravations; The whole need not the Physician, but the sick. But here I need not put words into your mouths or minds, because the Minister goeth before you, and your hearts must concur with his Confessions, and put in also the secret sins which he omitteth.

§. 51. 3. When you look on the Bread and Wine which is provided and offered for this holy use, remember that it is the Creator of all things, on whom you live, whose Laws you did offend; and say in your hearts, O Lord, how great is my offence? who have broken the Laws of him that made me, and on whom the whole Creation doth depend? I had my Being from thee, and my daily Bread; and should I have requited thee with disobedience? Father, I have sinned against Heaven and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy Son.

§. 52. 4. When the words of the Institution are read, and the Bread and Wine are solemnly consecrated, by separating them to that sacred use, and the acceptance and blessing of God is desired, admire the mercy that prepared us a Redeemer, and say, O God how wonderful is thy Wisdom and thy Love? How strangely dost thou glorifie thy mercy over those sins that gave thee advantage to glorifie thy justice? Even thou our God whom we have offended, hast out of thy own Treasury satisfied thy own justice, and given us a Saviour by such a Miracle of Wisdom, Love, and Condescention, as men or Angels shall never be able fully to comprehend: so didst thou love the sinful world, as to give thy Son, that whosoever believeth in him, should not perish, but have everlasting life. O thou that hast prepared us so full a remedy, and so pretious a gift, sanctify these Creatures to be the Representative Body and Blood of Christ, and prepare my heart for so great a gift, and so high and holy and honourable a work.

§. 53. 5. When you behold the Consecrated Bread and Wine, discern the Lords body, and reverence it as the Representative Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, and take heed of Prophaning it, by looking on it as common Bread and Wine; Tho' it be not Transubstantiate, but still is very Bread and Wine in its Natural being, yet it is Christs Body and Blood in representation and effect. Look on it as the consecrated Bread of life, which with the quickning Spirit must nourish you to life eternal.

§. 54. 6. When you see the Breaking of the Bread, and the Pouring out of the Wine, let Repentance, and Love, and Desire, and Thankfulness, thus work within you, O wondrous Love! O hateful sin! How merciful, Lord, hast thou been to sinners? and how cruel have we been to our selves and thee? Could Love stoop lower? Could God be merciful at a dearer rate? Could my sin have done a more horrid deed, than put to death the Son of God? How small a matter hath tempted me to that, which must cost so dear before it was forgiven? How dear payed my Saviour for that, which I might have avoided at a very cheap rate? At how low a price have I valued his blood, when I have sinned and sinned again for nothing! This is my doing! My sins were the Thorns, the Nails, the Spear! Can a Murderer of Christ be a small Offender? O dreadful justice! It was I and such other sinners that deserved to bear the punishment who were guilty of the sin; and to have been fewel for the unquenchable flames for ever. O pretious Sacrifice! O hateful sin! O gracious Saviour! How can mans dull and narrow heart, be duly affected with such transcendent things? or Heaven make its due impression upon an inch of Flesh! Shall I ever again have a dull apprehension of such Love? Or ever have a favourable thought of sin? Or ever have a fearless thought of Justice? O break or melt this hardned heart, that it may be somewhat conformed to my crucified Lord! The Tears of Love and true Repentance are easier than the flames from which I am redeemed. O hide me in these wounds, and wash me in this pretious blood! This is the Sacrifice in which I trust: This is the Righteousness by which I must be justified, and saved from the curse of thy violated Law! As thou hast accepted this, O Father, for the world, upon the Cross, Behold it still on the behalf of sinners; and bear his Blood that cryeth unto thee for mercy to the miserable, and pardon us, and accept us as thy Reconciled Children for the sake of this Crucified Christ alone? We can offer thee no other Sacrifice for sin; and we need no other.

§. 55. 7. When the Minister applyeth himself to God by Prayer, for the efficacy of this Sacrament, that in it he will give us Christ and his Benefits, and pardon, and justifie us, and accept us as his reconciled Children, joyn heartily and earnestly in these Requests, as one that knoweth the need and worth of such a mercy.

§. 56. 8. When the Minister delivereth you the consecrated Bread and Wine, look upon him as the messenger of Christ, and hear him as if Christ by him said to you, Take this my broken body and blood, and feed on it to everlasting life: and take with it my sealed Covenant, and therein the sealed testimony of my love, and the sealed pardon of your sins, and a sealed gift of life eternal; so be it, you unfeignedly consent unto my Covenant, and give up your selves to me as my Redeemed ones. Even as in delivering the possession of House or Lands, the deliverer giveth a Key, and a Twig and a Turf, and saith, I deliver you this house, and I deliver you this land: so doth the Minister by Christs Authority deliver you Christ and pardon and title to eternal life. Here is an Image of a sacrificed Christ of Gods own appointing, which you may lawfully use: And more than an Image; even an investing Instrument, by which these highest mercies are solemnly delivered to you in the name of Christ. Let your Hearts therefore say with Joy and Thankfulness, with Faith and Love, O matchless bounty of the eternal God! what a gift is this! and unto what unworthy sinners! And will God stoop so low to man? and come so near him? and thus reconcile his worthless enemies? Will he freely pardon all that I have done? and take me into his family and love, and feed me with the flesh and blood of Christ? I believe; Lord help mine unbelief. I humbly and thankfully accept thy gifts! Open thou my heart, that I may yet more joyfully and thankfully accept them: Seeing God will glorify his love and mercy by such incomprehensible gifts as these, behold, Lord, a wretch that needeth all this mercy! And seeing it is the offer of thy Grace and Covenant, my soul doth gladly take thee for my God and Father, for my Saviour and my Sanctifier: And here I give up my self unto thee, as thy Created Redeemer and (I hope) Regenerate one; as thy Own, thy Subject and thy Child, to be saved and sanctified by thee, to be beloved by thee, and to Love thee to everlasting: O seal up this Covenant and pardon, by thy Spirit, which thou sealest and delivered to me in thy Sacrament: that, without reserve, I may be entirely and for ever thine!

§. 57. 9. When you see the Communicants receiving with you, let your very hearts be united to the Saints in Love, and say, How goodly are thy Tents O Jacob! How amiable is the family of the Lord! How good and pleasant is the Unity of Brethren? How dear to me are the pretious Numbers of my Lord! though they have yet all their Spots and Weaknesses, which he pardoneth, and so must we. My goodness O Lord extendeth not unto thee; but unto thy Saints, the excellent ones on earth, in whom is my delight. What portion of my estate thou requirest I willingly give unto the poor, and if I have wronged any Man, I am willing to restore it: And seeing thou hast loved me an enemy, and forgiven me so great a debt, I heartily forgive those that have done me wrong, and love my enemies. O keep me in thy family all my days, for a day in thy Court is better than a Thousand, and the door-keepers in thy House are happier than the most prosperous of the wicked.

Numb. 24. 5. Psal. 133. & 15. 4. & 16. 2, 3. Luk. 19. 8. Psal. 84. 10.

§. 58. 10. When the Minister returneth Thanks and Praise to God, stir up your souls to the greatest alacrity; and suppose you saw the Heavenly Hosts of Saints and Angels praising the same God in the presence of his Glory; and think with your selves, that you belong to the same family and society as they, and are learning their work, and must shortly arrive at their perfection: Strive therefore to imitate them in Love and Joy; and let your very souls be poured out in Praises and Thanksgiving: And when you have the next leisure for your private thoughts (as when the Minister is exhorting you to your Duty) exercise your Love and Thanks and Faith and hope and self-denial and Resolution for future obedience, in some such Breathings of your Souls as these: O my gracious God, thou hast surpassed all humane comprehension in thy Love! Is this thy usage of unworthy prodigals! I feared lest thy wrath as a consuming fire would have devoured such a guilty Soul; and thou wouldst have charged upon me all my folly: But while I condemned my self, thou hast forgiven and justified me; and surprized me with the sweetest embracements of thy love! I see now that thy Thoughts are above our thoughts, and thy ways above our ways, and thy love excelleth the love of man, even more than the Heavens are above the earth. With how dear a price hast thou redeemed a wretch that deserved thy everlasting vengeance! with how pretious and sweet a Feast hast thou entertained me, who deserved to be cast out with the workers of iniquity! Shall I ever more slight such Love as this? shall it not overcome my rebelliousness; and melt down my cold and hardened Heart? shall I be saved from Hell and not be thankful? Angels are admiring these Miracles of Love? and shall not I admire them? Their Love to us doth cause them to rejoyce, while they stand by and see our Heavenly feast? And should it not be sweeter to us that are the guests that feed upon it? my God how dearly hast thou purchased my love? How strangely hast thou deserved and sought it? Nothing is so much my grief and shame, as that I can answer such Love, with no more fervent fruitful Love. O what an Addition would it be to all this pretious Mercy, if thou wouldst give me a heart to answer these thine Invitations, That thy Love thus poured out, might draw forth mine, and my soul might flame by its approaching unto these thy flames? and that love drawn out by the sense of Love, might be all my life? O that I could love thee as much as I would love thee? Yea as much as thou wouldst have me love thee? But this is too great a happiness for earth? But thou hast shewed me the place where I may attain it! My Lord is there, in full possession: who hath left me these pledges, till he come and fetch us to himself, and feast us there in our Masters joy; O blessed place! O happy company that see his Glory, and are filled with the streams of those Rivers of consolation! yea happy we whom thou hast called from our dark and miserable state, and made us heirs of that felicity, and passengers to it, and expectants of it, under the conduct of so sure a guide! O then we shall love thee without these sinful pauses and defects! in another measure, and another manner than now we do: when thou shalt reveal and communicate thy attractive Love, in another measure and manner than now! Till then, my God, I am devoted to thee; By Right and Covenant I am thine! My Soul here beareth witness against my self, that my defects of Love have no excuse; Thou deservest all, if I had the love of all the Saints in Heaven and Earth to give thee. What hath this world to do with my affections? And what is this forddid corruptible flesh, that its desires and pleasures should call down my soul, and tempt it to neglect my God? What is there in all the Sufferings that Man can lay upon me, that I should not joyfully accept them for his sake, that hath redeemed me from Hell, by such unmatched voluntary Sufferings? Lord seeing thou regardest, and so regardest, so vile a worm, my heart, my tongue, my hand confess, that I am sick of love. O let me live to none but thee, and to thy service, and thy Saints on earth! And O let me no more return unto iniquity! nor venture on that sin that killed my Lord! And now thou hast chosen so low a dwelling, O be not strange to the Heart that thou hast so freely chosen! O make it the daily residence of thy spirit! Quicken it by thy grace; adorn it with thy gifts; employ it in thy Love, delight in its attendance on thee; refresh it with thy joys and the light of thy countenance, and destroy this carnality, selfishness and unbelief; And let the World see that God will make a Palace of the lowest heart, when he chooseth it for the place of his own abode.

§. 59. Direct. 8. When you come home, review the mercy which you have received, and the duty which you have done, and the Covenant you have made: And, 1. Betake your selves to God in Praise and Prayer for the perfecting of his work: And, 2. Take heed to your hearts that they grow not cold, and that worldly things or diverting trifles, do not blot out the sacred impressions, which Christ hath made, and that they cool not quickly into their former dull and sleepy frame. 3. And see that your Lives be actuated by the Grace that you have here received, that even they that you converse with may perceive that you have been with God. Especially when Temptations would draw you again to sin; and when the injuries of friends or enemies would provoke you, and when you are called to testifie your love to Christ, by any costly work or suffering; remember then what was so lately before your eyes, and upon your heart; and what you resolved on, and what a Covenant you made with God. Yet judge not of the fruit of your Receiving, so much by feeling, as by faith: for more is promised than you yet possess.

CHAP. XXV.

Directions for fearful troubled Christians that are perplexed with doubts of their Sincerity and Justification.

§. 1. HAving Directed Families in the Duties of their Relations, and in the right Worshipping of God, I shall speak something of the special Duties of some Christians, who in regard of their state of Soul and Body, have special need of Help and counsel. As, 1. The Doubting troubled Christian. 2. The Declining, or Backsliding Christian. 3. The Poor. 4. The Aged. 5. The Sick. 6. And those that are about the Sick and Dying. Though these might seem to belong rather to the first Tome, yet becaus I would have those Directions lye here together, which the several sorts of Persons in Families most need, I have chosen to reserve them rather to this place. The special Duties of the Strong, the Rich, and the Youthful and Healthful, I omit, because I find the Book grow big, and you may gather them from what is said before, on several such Subjects. And the Directions which I shall first give to Doubting Christians, shall be but a few brief Memorials, because I have done that Work already, in my Directions or Method for Peace of Conscience and Spiritual Comfort; And much is here said before, in the Directions against Melancholy and Despair. See Tom. 2. Ch. 7. Tit. 10. Of Despair.

§. 2. Direct. 1. Find out the special Cause of your Doubts and Troubles, and bend most of your Endeavours to remove that cause. The same Cure will not serve for every doubting soul, no nor for every one that hath the very same doubts: For the causes may be various, though the doubts should be the same; and the Doubts will be continued while the Cause remaineth. Dir. 1.

§. 3. 1. In some persons the chief cause is a timerous, weak and passionate temper of Body and Mind; which in some (especially of the weaker Sex) is so Natural a Disease, that there is no hope of a total cure; Tho' yet we must direct and support such as well as we are able. These persons have so weak a Head, and such powerful Passions, that passion is their life; and according to passion they judge of themselves, and of all their duties. They are ordinarily very high or very low: full of joy, or sinking in despair; But usually Fear is their predominant passion. And what an enemy to quietness and peace strong fears are, is easily observed in all that have them. Assuring evidence will not quiet such fearful minds, nor any Reason satisfy them. The Directions for these Persons must be the same which I have before given against Melancholy and Despair. Especially that the Preaching and Books and Means which they make use of, be rather such as tend to inform the judgment, and settle the Will and guide the life, than such as by the greatest fervency tend to awaken them to such Passions or affections which they are unable to manage.

§. 4. 2. With others the cause of their Troubles is Melancholy, which I have long observed to be the commonest cause, with those godly people that remain in long and grievous doubts; Where this is the cause, till it be removed, other remedies do but little; But of this I have spoken at large before.

§. 5. 3. In others the cause is a habit of discontent and peevishness and impatiency; because of some Wants or Crosses in the World: because they have not what they would have, their minds grow ulcerated, like a Body that is sick or sore, that carrieth about with them the pain and smart; And they are still complaining of the pain which they feel; but not of that which maketh the sore, and causeth the pain. The cure of these is either in pleasing them that they may have their will in all things (as you rock children and give them that which they cry for to quiet them); or rather to help to cure their impatiency, and settle their minds against their childish sinful discontents (of which before).

§. 6. 4. In others the Cause is errour or great ignorance about the tenour of the Covenant of Grace, and the Redemption wrought by Jesus Christ, and the work of Sanctification, and evidences thereof; They know not on what terms Christ dealeth with sinners in the pardoning of sin, nor what are the infallible signs of Sanctification: It is sound Teaching, and diligent Learning that must be the cure of these.

§. 7. 5. In others the cause is a careless life or frequent sinning, and keeping the Wounds of Conscience still bleeding: They are still fretting the sore, and will not suffer it to skin: either they live in railing and contention, or malice, or some secret lust, or fraud, or some way stretch and wrong their Consciences: And God will not give his peace and comfort to them till they reform. It is a mercy that they are disquieted and not given over to a seared Conscience, which is past feeling.

§. 8. 6. In others the Cause of their Doubts, is, Placing their Religion too much in humiliation, and in a continual poreing on their hearts, and overlooking or neglecting the high and chiefest parts of Religion, even the daily studies of the Love of God, and the riches of Grace in Jesus Christ, and hereby stirring up the soul to Love and Delight in God. When they make this more of their Religion and Business, it will bring their souls into a sweeter relish.

§. 9. 7. In others the cause is such weakness of parts and confusion of thoughts, and darkness of mind, that they are not able to examine themselves, nor to know what is in them; when they ask themselves any question, about their Repentance or Love to God, or any grace, they are fain to answer like strangers, and say, they cannot tell whether they do it or not. These persons must make more use than others, of the judgment of some able faithful guide.

§. 10. 8. But of all others, the commonest cause of uncertainty, is the weakness or littleness of grace; When it is so little as to be next to none at all, no wonder if it be hardly and seldome discerned: Therefore,

§. 11. Direct. 2. Be not Neglecters of Self examination, but labour for skill to manage aright so great a work; But yet let your Care and Diligence be much greater to get grace and use it, and increase it, than to try whether you have it already or not. For in examination, when you have once taken a right course to be resolved, and yet are in doubt as much as before, your over-much poreing upon these trying questions, will do you but little good, and make you but little the better, but the time and labour may be almost lost: whereas all the labour which you bestow in getting, and using and increasing grace, is bestowed profitably to good purpose; and tendeth first to your safety and salvation, and next that, to your easier certainty and comfort. There is no such way in the world to be certain that you have grace, as to get so much as is easily discerned and will shew it self, and to exercise it much that it may come forth into observation: When you have a strong belief you will easily be sure that you believe: When you have a fervent love to Christ and Holiness, and to the Word and Ways and Servants of God, you will easily be assured that you love them. When you strongly hate sin, and live in universal constant obedience, you will easily discern your Repentance and obedience. But weak grace will have but weak assurance and little consolation. Dir. 2.

§. 12. Direct. 3. Set your selves with all your skill and diligence to destroy every sin of heart and life, and make it your principal care and business to do your duty, and please, and honour God in your place, and to do all the good you can in the world: and trust God with your souls, as long as you wait upon him in his way. If you live in wilful sin and negligence, be not unwilling to be reproved and delivered! If you cherish your sensual fleshly lusts, and set your Hearts too eagerly on the world, or defend your unpeaceableness and passion, or neglect your own duty to God or man, and make no Conscience of a true Reformation, it is not any enquiries after signs of grace, that will help you to assurance. You may complain long enough before you have ease, while such a thorn is in your foot. Conscience must be better used before it will speak a word of sound well grounded peace to you. But when you set your selves with all your Care and Skill to do your Duties, and please your Lord, he will not let your Labour be in vain: He will take care of your peace and comfort, while you take care of your duty: And in this way you may boldly trust him: Only think not hardly and falsly of the goodness of that God whom you study to serve and please. Dir. 3.

§. 13. Direct. 4. Be sure whatever Condition you are in, that you understand and hold fast, and improve the general grounds of comfort, which are common to mankind, so far as they are made known to them: and they are three (which are the foundation of all our comfort). 1. The goodness and mercifulness of God in his very Nature. 2. The sufficiency of the satisfaction or sacrifice of Christ. 3. The universality and freeness and sureness of the Covenant or promise of pardon and salvation to all, that by final impenitence and unbelief do not continue obstinately to reject it: (or to all that unfeignedly Repent and Believe.) 1. Think not meanly and poorly of the infinite Goodness of God: Even to Moses he proclaimeth his Name at the second delivery of the Law, [The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long suffering and abundant in Goodness and Truth, keeping Mercy for Thousands, forgiving iniquity and Transgression and sin——] Exod. 34. 6, 7. His mercy is over all his works; It is great and reacheth to the Heavens; It is firm and endureth for ever; And Dir. 4. Psal. 103. 8, 11, 17. & 89. 2. & 86. 5, 15. & 25. 10. & 119. 64. & 138. 8. & 126. 5.

he hath pleasure in those that hope in his mercy, Psal. 147. 11. & 100. 5. & 33. 18. & 57. 10. & 108. 4. 2. Extenuate not the Merits and Sacrifice of Christ, but know that never man was damned for want of a Christ to dye and be a Sacrifice for his sin, but only for want of Repentance and Faith in him, Joh. 3. 16. 3. Deny not the universality of the conditional promise of pardon and salvation, to all that is offered to, and will accept it on the offerers terms. And if you do but feel these three foundations firm and stedfast under you, it will encourage every willing soul. The love of God was the cause of our Redemption by Christ: Redemption was the foundation of the Promise or New Covenant: And he that buildeth on this threefold foundation is safe.

Dir. 5. For more particular Marks, see those before mentioned in preparation for the Sacrament.

§. 14. Direct. 5. When you come to try your particular Title to the Blessings of the Covenant, be sure that you well understand the condition of the Covenant, and look for the performance of that condition in your selves, as the infallible evidence of your title; and know that the condition is nothing but an unfeigned Consent unto the Covenant. Or such a Belief of the Gospel, as maketh you truly willing of all the mercies offered in the Gospel, and of the Duties required in order to those mercies. And That nothing depriveth any man that heareth the Gospel of Christ, and pardon and salvation, but obstinate unwillingness or refusal of the mercy, and the necessary annexed duties. Understand this well, and then peruse the Covenant of Grace (which is, but to take God for your God and happiness, your Father, your Saviour and your Sanctifier) and then ask your hearts, whether here be any thing that you are unwilling of; and unwilling of in a prevailing degree (when it is greater than your willingness:) And if truly you are willing to be in Covenant with your God, and Saviour, and Sanctifier upon these terms, know that your Consent, or Willingness, or Acceptance of the mercy offered you, is your true performance of the condition of your title, and consequently the infallible evidence of your title: even as Marriage consent is a title-condition to the person and priviledges: And therefore if you find this, your doubts are answered: You have found as good an evidence as Scripture doth acquaint us with; And if this will not quiet and satisfie you, you understand not the business; nor is it Reason or Evidence that can satisfie you, till you are better prepared to understand them. But if really you are unwilling, and will not consent to the terms of the Covenant, then instead of doubting, be past doubt that you are yet unsanctified: And your work is presently to consider better of the terms and benefits, and of those unreasonable reasons that make you unwilling? till you see that your happiness lyeth upon the business, and that you have all the reason in the world to make you willing, and no true reason for the with-holding of your consent: And when the light of these considerations hath prevailed for your consent, the match is made, and your Evidence is sure.

Dir. 6.

§. 15. Direct. 6. Judge not of your hearts and Evidences upon every sudden glance or feeling, but upon a sober deliberate examination, when your minds are in a clear composed frame: And as then you find your selves, record the judgment or discovery: and believe not every sudden inconsiderate appearance, or passionate fear against that Record. Otherwise you will never be quiet or resolved; but carried up and down by present sense. The case is weighty, and not to be decided by a sudden aspect, nor by a scattered or a discomposed mind; If you call your unprovided or your distempered understandings suddenly to so great a work, no wonder if you are deceived. You must not judge of colours when your eye is blood-shotten, or when you look through a coloured Glass, or when the object is far off. It is like casting up a long and difficult account, which must be done deliberately as a work of time; and when it is so done, and the sums subscribed, if afterwards you will question that account again, you must take as full a time to do it, and that when you are as calm and vacant as before, and not unsettle an exact account upon a sudden view, or a thought of some one particular. Thus must you trust to no examinations and decisions about the state of your souls, but those that in long and calm deliberation, have brought it to an issue.

§. 16. Direct. 7. And in doing this, neglect not to make use of the assistance of an able faithful Guide, so far as your own weakness makes it necessary. Your doubting sheweth that you are not sufficient to dispatch it satisfactorily your selves: The Question then is, What help a wiser man can give you? Why, he can clearlier open to you the true nature of Grace, and the marks that are infallible, and the extent of the Grace and tenour of the Covenant; and he can help you how to trace your hearts, and observe the discoveries of good or evil in them; he can shew you your mistakes, and help you in the application, and tell you much of his own and others experiences; And he can pass a strong conjecture upon your own case in particular, if he be one that knoweth the course of your lives, and is intimately acquainted with you; For Sin and Grace are both expressive operative things, like fire that ordinarily will stir, or fire that will be seen; Though their judgment cannot be infallible of you, and though for a while Hypocrisie may hide you from the knowledge of another, yet (ficta non diu, &c.) ordinarily Nature will be seen, and that which is within you will shew it self, so that your familiar acquaintance that see your lives in private and in publick, may pass a very strong conjecture at your state, whether you set your selves indeed to please God in sincerity or no. Therefore, if possible, choose such a man to help you, as is 1. Able, 2. Faithful, and 3. Well acquainted with you; and undervalue not his judgment. Dir. 7.

Dir. 8.

§. 17. Direct. 8. When you cannot attain to a certainty of your case, undervalue not and neglect not the Comforts which a bare probability may afford you: I know that a certainty in so weighty a case, should be earnestly desired, and endeavoured to the uttermost. But yet it is no small comfort which a likelihood or hopefulness may yield to. Husband and Wife are uncertain every day, whether one of them may kill the other, and yet they can live comfortably together, because it is an unlikely thing, and though it be possible, it is not much to be feared; All the comforts of Christians dependeth not on their assurance; It is but few Christians in the world that reach to clear assurance; For all the Papists, Lutherans and Arminians are without any certainty of their Salvation; because they think it cannot be had; and all those Jansenists, or Protestants that are of Augustine's judgment are without assurance of Salvation, tho' they may have assurance of their Justification and Sanctification; Because their judgment is, that the Justified and Sanctified (tho' not the Elect) may fall away. And of those that hold the doctrine of Perseverance, how few do we find, that can say, they are certain of their sincerity and salvation. Alas, not one of very many. And yet many Thousands of these do live in some peace of Conscience, and quietness, and comfort, in the hopefulness and probabilities to which they have attained.

Dir. 9.

§. 18. Direct. 9. Resolve to be much in the great delightful duties of Thanksgiving and the Praise of God; and to spend a considerable part (ordinarily) of all your prayers herein: especially to spend the Lords Day principally in these. And thus you will have three great advantages; 1. The very actings of Love, and Thanks, and Joy, will help you to comfort in a nearer way, than arguments and self-examination will do; even in a way of feeling, as the fire maketh you warm. 2. The customs of exercising those sweetest graces, will habituate your souls to it, and in time wear out the sadder impression. 3. God will most own you in those highest duties.

§. 19. Direct. 10. Mark well how far your doubtings do help or hinder you in your Sanctification: So far as they turn your heart from God, and from the love and sweetness of a holy life, and unfit you for thankfulness and chearful obedience; so far you may be sure, that Satan is gratified by them, and God displeased, and therefore they should be resisted: But so far, as they keep you humble and obedient, and make you more tenderly afraid of sin, and quicken your desires of Christ and Grace; so far God useth them for your benefit. And therefore be not too impatient under them, but wait on God in the use of his means, and he will give his comforts in the fittest season. Many an one hath sweet assurance at his death, or in his sufferings for Christ when he needed it most, that was fain to live long before without it. Especially take care, 1. That you miss not of Assurance, through your own neglect. 2. And that your doubtings work no ill effects, in turning away your hearts from God, or discouraging you in his service, and then you may take them as a tryal of your Patience, and they will certainly have a happy end.

CHAP. XXVI.

Directions for Declining or Backsliding CHRISTIANS: And about Perseverance.

THe case of Backsliders is so terrible, and yet the mistakes of many Christians so common in thinking unjustly, that they are Backsliders, that this subject must be handled with the greater care. And when I have first given some Directions for the Cure, I shall next give some to others for Prevention, of so sad a state.

§. 1. Direct. 1. Understand well wherein Backsliding doth consist, the sorts, and the degrees of it, that so you may the more certainly and exactly discern, whether it be indeed your case, or not. To this end, I shall here open to you. I. The several sorts of Backsliders. II. The several steps or degrees of backsliding. III. The signs of it.

§. 2. I. There are in general three sorts of Backsliders. 1. Such as decline from the Truth by the error of their Understanding. 2 Such as turn from the goodness of God and Holiness, by the corruption of their Will and Affections. 3. Such as turn from the Obedience of God, and an upright conversation, by the sinfulness of their lives.

The first sort containeth in it, 1. Such as decline to Infidelity from Faith, and doubt of the Truth of the Word of God. 2. Such as decline only to error, about the meaning of the Scriptures, though they doubt not of the truth of them. This corrupted Judgment will presently corrupt both Heart and Life.

§. 3. The second sort (Backsliders in Heart) containeth. 1. Such as only lose their Affections to Good; their complacency and desire; and lose their averseness and zeal against sin. 2. And such as lose the very Resolution of the Will also, and grow unresolved what to do, if not resolved to do evil, and to omit that which it good.

§. 4. The third sort (Backsliders in Life) comprehendeth, 1. Those that fall from Duty, towards God or Man. 2. And those that fall into positive sins, and turn to sensuality, in voluptuousness, worldliness, or pride.

§. 5. II. 1. Backsliders in Judgment, do sometimes fall by slow degrees, and sometimes suddenly at once. Those that fall by degrees, do some of them begin in the failing of the understanding, but most of them begin at the failing or falsness of the Heart, and the corrupted Will corrupteth the Understanding.

§. 6. 1. Those that fall by degrees through the failing of the Understanding, are those simple Souls that never were well grounded in the truth: And some of them reason themselves into error or unbelief; and others of them (which is most usual) are led into it by the cunning and diligence of Seducers. And for the degrees, they grow first to doubt of some Arguments which formerly seemed valid to them, and then they doubt of the truth it self; or else they hear some Argument from a Seducer, which (through their own weakness) they are unable to answer: And then they yield to it, as thinking that it is right, because they see not what is to be said against it, and know not what others know to the contrary, nor how easily another can confute it. And when once they are brought into a suspition of one point, which they formerly held, they quickly suspect all the rest; and grow into a suspition and disaffection to the persons whom they did before most highly value. And then they grow into a high esteem of the persons and party that seduced them; and think that they that are wiser in one thing, are wiser in the rest: And so are prepared to receive all the errors which follow that one, which they first received: And next they imbody with the Sect that seduced them; and separate from the sober united part of the Church: And so they grow to a zealous importunity for the increase of their party, and to lose their charity to those that are against their way, and to corrupt their Morals, in thinking all dishonesty lawful, which seemeth necessary to promote the interest of their Sect, which they think is the interest of the truth, and of God, and at last it is like they will grow weary of that Sect, and hearken to another, and another, till in the end, they come to one of these periods, either to settle in Popery, as the easiest Religion: And being taken with their pretence of Antiquity, Stability, Unity, and Universality, or else to turn to Atheism or Infidelity, and take all Religion for a meer deceit; or else (if they retained an honest heart in their former wanderings) God sheweth them their folly, and bringeth them back to Unity and Charity, and maketh them see the vanity of those Reasonings which before seduced them, and which once they thought were some Spiritual celestial light. This is the common course of Error; when the Understanding is the most notable cause. But sometimes a deceiver prevaileth with them on a sudden, by such false appearances of truth which they are unable to confute. But still an ill-prepared unfurnished Mind is the chiefest cause.

The method of falling into Heresie or Sects.

§. 7. 2. But those whose Judgments are conquered by the perverse inclination of their Wills, are usually carnal worldly Hypocrites, who never conquered the fleshly mind and interest, nor overcame the world, nor ever were unacquainted with the Heavenly Nature and Life, nor with the power of Divine Love; And these having made a change of their Profession, through the meer conviction of their Understandings, and benefit of Education or Government, or the advantages of Religion in the Country where they live, without a renewed holy Heart, the biass of their hearts doth easily prevail against the Light of their Understandings: And because they would fain have those Doctrines to be true, which save them from sufferings, or give them liberty for a fleshly, ambitious, worldly life, therefore they do by degrees prevail with their Understandings to receive them.

§. 8. 2. Blacksliders in Heart, do fall by divers degrees and means: For Satans Methods are not always ways the ſame. Some of them fall thro' the corruption of their Judgments; for every error hath much influence on the heart. Some are tempted ſuddenly into ſome groſs or ſenſual ſin; and ſo the errors of their lives call away their hearts from God. Not but that ſome ſin of the Heart or Will, doth ſtill go firſt, but yet the extraordinary declenſion and pravity of the heart, may ſometimes be cauſed by the Errors of the Judgment, or the Life. But ſometimes the beginning and progreſs is almoſt obſervable in the appetite and will it ſelf: And here the inclining to evil, (that is, to ſenſual or carnal good) and the declining from true ſpiritual good, do almoſt always go together. And it is moſt uſually by this method, and by theſe degrees.
